TERMS WITH THE GREEKS

Cordial Relations Established Between Greece and Allies

THE COMMERCIAL BLOCKADE IS BROUGHT TO FINISH.

Interest Now Centers in Russian Army Concentrated on the Border of Rumania.

London—Cordial relations between Greece and the entente powers have been established with the Greek government's assurance that no attempt will be made to interfere with the allied troops should they, under any contingency, be forced to cross the Greek frontiers, and that, as heretofore, railway and other facilities will be afforded them.

That the assurance and the guarantees are satisfactory to the allies is shown in the fact that Greek grain ships which had been held up at Malta have been allowed to proceed to their destinations, relieving what would have been a serious shortage of bread supplies if their detention had been prolonged.

It is understood that the allies have also promised Greece a monetary indemnity after the war for any damage which might be done through the occupation of Greek territory.

With this thorny question out of the way, the British public press has centered its interest upon the attitude of Rumania and the intervention of Russia. It is well established that Russia has concentrated a great army near the Rumanian frontier, and dispatches state a large number of guns have arrived at Odessa from Japan for its use. However, the direction in which this army will move will be dictated by the policy the Rumanian government adopts.

Berlin shows some uneasiness, but beyond that and the statement of the Rumanian premier, M. Bratiano, that the relations were never better, there is nothing to go on.

CAPT. HOBSON DRAWS CROWD

Hero of Merrimac on National Prohibition.

A LIVE WIRE BUT NOT A FANATIC ON TEMPERANCE

Reviews the Problems of the Prohibition Forces—Does not Minimize Cost of Fight.

Captain Richmond Pierson Hobson, of Merrimac fame and kissable eligibility, was the principal speaker at the big temperance rally held at the high school auditorium last night. Despite the rain and other entertainments which conflicted a large crowd gathered to listen to the man who has done so much for National Prohibition.

Captain Hobson after a brief introduction by Senator Sweeley, began one of the sanest and most logical addresses on the Prohibition movement that has been the privilege of Twin Falls people to hear in a long time. Mr. Hobson went into the history of the national movement. Gave some of the inside secrets which have stopped the enactment of national laws. In no way did Hobson minimize the strength of the opposition while optimistic over the future. The millions of funds and the deep entrenchment of the liquor forces were shown up in an amazing fashion and were probably unknown to most of his audience.

Dr. Edward I. Stearns, of New York City, followed Mr. Hobson, taking for his topic "How to win National Prohibition." Mr. Stearns is a convincing speaker and in his subject directed attention to the great necessity of co-operation among the states for the National Movement. It was his contention that National Prohibition while solving the question nationally could not even become a fact until the Prohibition sentiment of the states became so overpoweringly strong that National legislation would be forced. Both speakers were greeted with hearty encores which showed the sympathy of their audience.

tional Liberal party declares * * * that the results of the present war can only be a peace which (by means of extensions of our borders on the east, west and overseas, safeguards us from renewed attacks, either military, political, or economic and repays the enormous sacrifices which the German people have made heretofore and are determined to make until the victorious end comes * * *

"The Central Committee will stand solidly with the entire party against any government that does not pursue this end with rigid firmness."

The Imperial Chancellor is taken severely to task by the Hamburger Fremdenblatt for not defining more explicitly the objects for which Germany is fighting. It says:

"The attitude of the Imperial Chancellor toward the goal in this war is a matter of solicitude—solicitude that the highest imperial official does not find himself on this question so vital to the German people, in agreement with the overwhelming majority of the nation. This solicitude of the Imperial Chancellor in which he asserted that Germany was fighting for a peace that would insure for her and her allies that firm safeguard that Germany needs for a lasting peace and for the development of her national destiny. Under those words one may have in mind very different things, for in the last analysis the ideas of what is necessary for our national future differ widely. * * *

"Today we may, without going into details, express in all calmness the fact that we are striving for an extension of our borders."

This request for the definition of peace-terms is supported by the Hamburger Nachrichten, which says that the people now demand the right "to know for what they are making such gigantic sacrifices." Nor is this confined to the National Liberal party, for we find the Catholics of Germany issuing through the Central Committee of the powerful Center party, exactly the same inquiry. According to the Berlin Germania, the Center party's resolution runs in part:

"The terrible sacrifices which the war has imposed upon our people demand increased protection of our territory in the East and West which will make it impossible for a foreign enemy to fall upon us again, and which for all time will secure the economic necessities of our increasing population."

From The Hague comes a rumor of what Germany's peace-terms are to be, as Reuter's agency reports:

"At a recent conference in Amsterdam, which was attended by several members of the Reichstag, one of the members stated that Dr. von Bethmann-Hollweg, the Imperial Chancellor, had declared that Germany was inclined to conclude peace on the basis of the cession to Germany of Belgium and the Meuse line, the cession of Courland and the payment of an indemnity of 30,000,000,000 marks ($7,500,000,000)."

These terms are promptly denied by the official Norddeutsche Allgemeine Zeitung, which says:

"We do not know where The Hague Correspondence Bureau may have obtained its information, but must state that it is absolutely without foundation. The Chancellor has made no statements. It would have been premature, anyway, to talk of peace-conditions now.

"If, despite our repeated denials, such reports that Germany feels the inclination or need to make peace continue to be strewn abroad, it leads to the conclusion that our enemies are making obvious and stupid attempts to raise courage in their own countries by representing Germany as yearning for peace."—Literary Digest.

THINK ABOUT IT

Twin Falls Commercial Club

DO IT NOW

Probably every person in this city who can, expects to help in caring for the poor people by a contribution to the local Associated Charities. But a great many have probably so far overlooked the matter of that donation. If you have so far forgotten, do not wait another day. Do it now. Send a check to Superintendent Duo or if you have cast off but clean and whole clothing, send them to W. J. Young. Despite the fact that this has been a prosperous year there will be some people who will suffer as soon as the working season shuts down. Don't make a mistake of figuring that what you forget to do, some one else will fill the want. Most times the want is not filled. Make that donation just a little larger than usual in proportion to the prosperity that has come to you.

From the revelations made in the conspiracy to destroy the ammunition plants in this country, there is need for a house cleaning of a large number of undesirable residents. It is no time dallying with a class of men who bring nothing but trouble to this country. They should be put in federal prisons or else turned over to the allies whom they are fighting by their actions in this country.

The danger to this country cannot be overestimated in its lax methods of dealing with foreign political offenders. No other nation allows as much liberty as the United States. It is time to increase the restrictions.

Another feature of the recent conspiracy is the supposed participation in the affairs by naturalized American citizens, who cannot forget their former allegiance. The naturalized American who aids another country in violation of the neutrality of the United States is a traitor and should be given the option of being turned over to the trenches of the country it is aiding or made to face a firing squad in this country.

GERMANS ASK WHAT THEY ARE FIGHTING FOR

The persistent peace-talk in the German papers and the equally persistent official and semi-official denials that Germany has any desire to open negotiations present a curious contradiction. What does it mean? Some editors infer that Wilhelmstrasse regards the present as a favorable moment for the conclusion of hostilities if advantageous terms could be secured, the successive peace-hints and denials being intended to elicit counter-proposals from the Allies. They point out that so far Germany is in the position of a victor who could offer something as a basis of negotiation, having in her possession almost the whole of Belgium and Poland, and valuable tracts of land in Russia, France and Servia. One editor, who is not altogether friendly to Germany, has described her as being in the position of a poker-player who after a run of luck is anxious to get out of the game while the majority of the chips on the table lie before him. It is, however, significant that possible conditions of peace form a subject of discussion in the German press and are debated among members of the various political parties, even to the extent of breaking the political truce which has prevailed since the war began. So much so has this been the case that, we learn from the Berliner Tageblatt, the Imperial Chancellor has been attacked by his own party for not formulating the terms of peace that Germany will demand. The National Liberal party has passed a resolution stating what it intends to work for in this direction, which, according to the Tageblatt, runs:

"The Central Committee of the Na-

RESOLUTION OF SYMPATHY

Albion, Ida., Nov. 19, 1915.

At a regular meeting of Naomi Chapter No. 4, O. E. S., held on the above date, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted: Whereas, in view of the loss we have sustained by the decease of our sister and associate, Mrs. Mattie Hansen, and of the still heavier loss sustained by those who were nearest and dearest to her,

THEREFORE, be it resolved that it is but a just tribute to the memory of the departed to say that in regretting her removal from our midst we mourn for one who was in every way worthy of our respect and regard, and for a sister whose utmost endeavors were exerted for the welfare and prosperity of the community in which she lived; a friend and companion who was dear to us all; a sister whose upright and noble life was a standard of emulation to all who knew her.

RESOLVED, that the heartfelt sympathy of this Chapter be extended to her family in their affliction.

Resolved, further, that a copy of these resolutions be spread upon the records of the Chapter and a copy be transmitted to the family of our deceased sister and to each of the newspapers.

SUGAR FARMING IN KANSAS

A Manufacturing Success Built on Raising Live Stock.

By H. R. Palmer.

"That which comes out of the soil must be put back into the soil." There you have the basic law of agriculture, written into the code of the farmer of today by centuries of husbandry. A few years ago a group of copper mining men of Colorado recognized the infallibility of that principle and decided to work it out on a big scale to their profit. They picked out the sister state of Kansas for their demonstration and bet 4 million dollars on the result. They are winning the bet.

It took vision and nerve to stake 4 million dollars on the sandy soil of the Arkansas Valley in Western Kansas, near the Colorado line, far removed from the rain belt. And, as "faith without works is dead," there was careful planning and prospecting before the land was bought and the big project started. But underlying every stage of the development of the enterprise, there was always that fundamental truth of enduring agriculture—the fertility of the soil must be preserved. Today the thousands of acres of sugar beets, wheat, alfalfa, maize, Kafir, oats, barley; the thousands of cattle, hogs and horses; tons of machinery; farm and factory buildings; wells, irrigation ditches—all are letters spelling the motto of the Garden City Sugar and Land company, "give back to the soil what you take out and let dollars be the by-product."

The theory is simply worked out in obedience to natural laws. Each activity forms a link in the chain of the evolution back to the soil. The process is not unlike the old nursery verse, "This is the House that Jack Built." It goes like this, without the rhyme, if you don't mind:

This is the sugar that sells.

This is the beet that makes the sugar that sells.

This is the wheat (it sells, too,) and alfalfa that rotates to prepare the soil for the beet that makes the sugar that sells.

These are the cattle that drop riches on the soil for the wheat and alfalfa that rotate for the beet that makes the sugar that sells.

This is the maize and Kafir and oats and barley that (together with alfalfa and by-products of the sugar refining process) feed the cattle that enrich the soil for the wheat and alfalfa that rotate for the beet that makes the sugar that sells.

These are the wells and pumps and ditches that water the grain that feeds the cattle that enrich the soil for the crops that rotate for the beet that makes the sugar that sells.

No one crop or part of the plan is maintained for its single individual value, but only in its necessary relation to the others and because of the collective ability of all to produce the final result.

The Garden City Sugar and Land Company is not primarily in the cattle raising business. The cattle are given a place in the plan for the fertilizer they produce. The cattle holdings comprise a breeding herd of two thousand. In addition, fifteen hundred feeders are bought, fattened and sold annually. There also are seventy-five dairy cows whose product forms a subsidiary profit.

Feed is grown only in sufficient quantities to absorb other products in a stock-feeding mixture. This mixture consists of one-fourth dried beet pulp and one-fourth molasses (both by-products of sugar making), one-fourth crushed grain and one-fourth alfalfa meal. The cattle are on a diet of this mixture and alfalfa hay and are handled in small units of two hundred, a foreman to every unit. The small unit saves long hay and manure hauls. The surplus feed is marketed.

A drove of 1,500 hogs is maintained to offset the overhead expense of foremen who have to be employed the year around. The "campaign" (sugar makers' term for the harvesting of the beets and refining the product), comes only once a year, in the late fall and early winter, and lasts only about one hundred days. The rest of the year the sugar plant is idle.

But the hogs are allowed to follow the cattle. They are pastured on alfalfa and are given a feed mixture. They also run in the beet fields after the harvest and pick up many a pound from beet tops and the beets the harvesters missed.

Last spring the Garden City Sugar and Land company topped the Kansas City Market with [illegible] head of hogs. After running in beet fields they were given a two weeks' fattening feed of three-fourths ground maize and one-fourth dried beet pulp.

Of its forty thousand acres of holdings, the company has about twenty-one thousand in cultivation. There are five thousand acres in beets, seventy-five hundred in alfalfa, thirty-three hundred in wheat. The rest is in feed grains and pasture land.

The 1915 crop of beets is ready for harvest now. In 1914 the crop averaged twelve and fraction tons to the acre. A good deal of the beet land is operated by tenants. The beet land cultivated by the company averaged more than fourteen tons to the acre, but the tenant land results pulled the general average down to twelve and a fraction. The company has taught itself a lesson in labor efficiency that it is not likely to forget. At the start it imported Russian farmers and put them on [illegible]. It was a mistake. The company [illegible] by employing American farm workers [illegible] [illegible] four or five years. Wheat planted in the fall, alfalfa in the spring, wheat cut in July above the growing alfalfa, two cuttings of hay to follow.)

From wheat and alfalfa to wheat, one year.

What to beets, five years. (With proper fertilization.)

The wheat that is raised becomes something more than a by-product. It forms a big selling product along with the sugar. Most of this year's crop is still in the shock. Some that has been threshed ran fifty-one bushels to the acre.

"That is not a guess and not an estimate," J. P. Nolan, the farm manager, said. "It is accurate, actual computation. The land was measured by chain. We have to be exact because we have to show our books to the stockholders. This wheat was raised on old beet land, properly irrigated. The crop had water whenever it needed it and in proper quantities."

Mr. Nolan has an exceedingly firm and polite doubt of any rain belt farmer achieving as much as fifty bushels of wheat to the acre.

The water supply apparently is inexhaustible. Twelve feet below the surface the prospectors found water for irrigation purposes. But the well drillers went on down through a strata of solid, blue clay, forty to eighty feet thick and beneath that found a vast supply of unusually pure water.

The irrigating machinery consists of an electrical power plant, a reservoir, ditches and forty wells. A considerable surplus of electrical energy provides marketable commercial power which is sold to outside consumers. The pumping operations also supply power for light and grinding at most of the farms.

At least one hundred thousand acres of land, tributary to the plant and capable of irrigation furnishes an opportunity for expansion.

The sugar refinery is a gigantic structure of brick and concrete that cost 1¼ million dollars. It was finished and put in operation in 1906. It has a capacity of ¼ million 100-pound sacks of beet sugar a year. Last year it produced 130,000 sacks, for which it found a ready market.

DOUBLE BILL AT ORPHEUM

A Bill Which Will Please all for the Last Three Nights of the Week.

For the last three nights of the week, with Saturday matinee, the Orpheum theatre is putting on a first class bill. The vaudeville is a double number. Dawson and Lawson will be seen in hand balancing and an acrobatic act out of the ordinary.

Dreans and Goodwin will be seen in clever comedy entertaining, singing, talking and dancing.

In motion pictures "The Warning" is a powerful story in two parts, featuring E. Forrest Taylor, an actor of merit, well known in southern Idaho. This is a vivid story of homesteading in the far southwest and has many thrilling and romantic parts.

The Mutual program for this week is better than ever before, showing the Astor Cup Races, the World Series Baseball champions, President Wilson and his intended, the latest Paris Fashions and other up to the minute events the world over.

Last but not least is one of the Keystone comedies, featuring Chas. Chaplin and Mabel Normand in "Mabel's Married Life." This is a picture that will surely drive away dull care.

LAVERING OFFERS VARIETY

Four Acts of Vaudeville and Pictures Friday and Saturday.

The first Hippodrome vaudeville show, directed by the western representatives of the Sullivan-Considine circuit, will be offered at the Lavering Friday and Saturday, with special bargain matinee Saturday at 2:30 with admission for children of 5 cents and adults 15 cents. Four acts of Vaudeville, headed by Betty Barrows & Co., will be offered in addition to the usual splendid photoplay program which includes "Neal of the Navy."

The next Paramount attraction is on Monday at which time the eminent actor, H. B. Warner, will be offered in his great stage success, "The Ghost Breaker."

MUTT & JEFF IN A NEW FROLIC

Bud Fisher's Pets Will be In College Next Week at Lavering.

"A little nonsense now and then is relished by the best of men." and women, too—The old adage is proven over and over again by the continued and most extraordinary success of Gus Hill's production of "Mutt and Jeff." New York's best citizens, butchers, bakers and takers all turn to the funny pictures in the morning newspapers to see what those two funny fellows Mutt and Jeff are up to. Nor is the habit confined to any class, creed or status of life's success. The banker, the lawyer and the judge enjoy the daily cartoons as well as his less fortunate brothers and applaud Bud Fisher's satirical humor. Millions of the best people in America have laughed at Gus Hill's company presenting Mutt and Jeff in their various plays and will continue to laugh at them as long as Bud Fisher and Gus Hill can keep the pace up. Mutt and Jeff have made four complete tours of the United States and Canada, with absolutely no sign of diminishing popularity and will continue to do so for years innumerable. Mutt and Jeff in College will not only live up to the past records of phenomenal fullness but will prove to be the crowning triumph of Mr. Hill's long career. All known box office records have been hopelessly shattered by the enormous popularity of this three act farce and has been known by managers and theatre owners. Mutt and Jeff in College will come to the Lavering next Tuesday, Nov. 30th. It was designed for laughing purposes only. There isn't a serious thought or a moment in the entire show. It's mission on earth is simply to banish dull care and stifle the book worm and grouch. Get seats early as Mutt and Jeff in College invariably plays to capacity houses and the early bird catches the best seat.

LAVERING THEATRE

H. B. Warner in "The Ghost Breaker" Monday, Nov. 29th.

The attraction at the Lavering theatre on Monday, November 29th, will be the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Co.'s production of "The Ghost Breaker," with H. B. Warner in the title role of the man who proves that the "ghosts" haunting an old Spanish castle are really ruffians hired by a wicked Duke. This play, by Paul Dickey and Chas. W. Goddard, was hailed on Broadway last year as one of the most unique dramatic productions in history. It certainly makes a film so utterly different that there is nothing on record with which it can properly be compared. Cecil B. De Mille directed the production, and he was supplied lavishly with every degree of talent and every physical accessory which he could possibly utilize.

Nothing outside of a mining camp will approach it. Every man who owns an acre of this good land will have to see it advance so rapidly that it will give him a headache when he contemplates it in his later years.

We wish the good people of Poplar Hill, Washington and Union school districts would write or telephone in any items of interest in their respective districts, to the end that we may make the Journal of greater interest to their neighborhood. We have a splendid correspondent from Maroa and would like to secure one from each of the neighborhoods mentioned. Who will volunteer? Paper and postage will be furnished and any other necessities that is demanded. Come on friends and lend a hand.

Warner, of Snokomick, Wash., who is conducting revival meetings in the townsite building will speak Friday night upon "Earth's Four Great Universal Empires and the Establishment of the Fifth Empire." These Twin Falls people have a large circle of warm friends who will regret their departure. Many social events have taken place during the last week, complimentary to Mr. and Mrs. Heine and Miss Zita, showing the warm friendship felt by their many friends. Last Saturday afternoon, Mrs. Heine gave a farewell party, a Kensington, at which she entertained twenty-two of her friends. After serving a musical contest was engaged in by the ladies in which Mrs. Falling received first prize and Mrs. Longley second. Both prizes were pieces of hand painted china. Mrs. T. J. Woods sang two beautiful vocal solos during the afternoon. Assisted by Mesdames Wilbur Hill, Hahn, Burton and Misses Grace Bower and Zita Heine, Mrs. Heine served a two course luncheon at the close of the afternoon. Pink and white were the colors used in the luncheon and room decorations, which consisted of large bouquets of pink and white carnations and chrysanthemums. The guests were: Mesdames Hart, T. J. Woods, Thompson, Graham, Longley, La Croix, Regan, Bower, Benoit, Sprague, Heap, Hamilton, Grant, Spafford, Maxwell, Hahn, Epler, Browne, Lehner, Parsons, Channel, Spielberg, Hartdegan, Robbins, Falling, Philleo, Crozier, Burton, Lavering, Young, Hill, Craven, Morse and Miss Elvina Browne.

"SAFETY FIRST" FOR AUTOISTS

A Few Suggestions From the Standpoint of a Railroad Man.

By Howard Elliott

Secretary Safety and Efficiency Committee, San Pedro, Los Angeles & Salt Lake Railroad.

If auto drivers were as careful as street car drivers, collisions between automobiles and trains would be as rare as those between trains and street cars. Before a trolley car crosses a steam road at grade, where there is no human flagman, one member of the crew goes forward, looks both ways and listens. If the road be clear he gives the "come ahead" signal. If, not, the car must not move until danger is past. Suggest this procedure to the auto driver and he smiles.

"Unnecessary," "A waste of time," and "Too much bother," are some of his excuses. Yet this one simple precaution would, if followed, practically eliminate the grade crossing horror. There are more and stronger reasons why the auto driver should be more careful than the motorman. The motorman is prohibited from talking to passengers. There is no such prohibition for auto drivers. The motorman must pass a rigid examination as to eyesight, hearing, stead'ness of nerve and sobriety. The auto driver is subjected to no such test.

Therefore, even if the conductor did not go ahead and flag across, the motorman would still be more apt to effect a safe passage than the auto driver, who oftentimes is talking and does not have his mind concentrated on the business of driving.

Another thing. To the street car employe the passengers are so many "persons." Perhaps he could call none of them by name. If one should sicken and die, he would not shed a tear. Yet he protects his charges with extraordinary care. The law demands it, the rules of his company require it, and his best judgment dictates it.

The auto driver's passengers are usually his kith and kin. Their lives are as precious to him as his own. If one should die, his heart would bleed. Yet he races across a railway track looking neither to right nor to left (as careful observation show a vast majority do) and then calls unreasonable and unnecessary for his adoption those precautions which street railway compies take to safeguard the lives of those in whom they have only a passing interest.

"Not Question of Cost."

It is not a matter of damages. If you think it is how much, Mr. Automobile Driver, will you take for your daughter or your son?

It is a rule of law in nearly every state in the Union that the highway traveler at a railroad crossing must look and listen effectively; that he must look and listen both ways, and that if by so doing he could have seen a train and avoided collision with it, a collision occurs, the presumption arises that he either failed to look and listen or was heedless of what he saw and heard, in either of which events he would be guilty of negligence barring recovery.

In the following states, the courts hold that in addition to looking and listening the traveler on the highway must stop: Oregon, Maryland, Massachusetts, Alabama, Indiana, Iowa, Missouri, New Jersey, Maine, Wisconsin, Michigan, West Virginia, and California.

What the railway companies want, and what all students of the problem believe desirable, is that drivers of vehicles on reaching railway crossings shall be even more careful than appears necessary, not because any rule or law compels it, but because the love of life for themselves and others should impel them to habits of extreme care.

The railway companies are taking the lead in an endeavor to eliminate accidents. In most parts of the country they represent the only organized effort to combat the evil. The Auto Club of Southern California has done a most wonderful work in placing sign posts at points of danger. It is a pity that like work cannot be done by the automobile organizations everywhere.

The Long Island railroad is employing vigorous tactics to bring home to the public the dangers of reckless automobile driving on Long Island. Instead of the hackneyed phrases, "Stop, Look and Listen," or "Railroad Crossing, Look Out for the Cars," or "Danger," or "Safety First," they have posted in conspicuous places all over the system large streamer signs bearing the following inscription:

"This Sign May Save Your Life Today." All the precautions in the world will not save the lives of those who drive automobiles recklessly over railroad crossings. When approaching a crossing, please Stop, Look and Listen. We are doing our part. Won't you do yours?

"Long Island Railroad."

This campaign is resulting in a great reduction in accidents.

In Southern California the railways have installed at a great many crossings, wigwag or moving signals, lighted at night. They have proved very effective.

Ignore the Signals.

But it is noted that many autoists ignore the signals, and at places where the railways have lowered the gates in the face of approaching trains it is not infrequent for drivers to crash through the gates before they notice that they are down. The Long Island railroad, tired of having autos driven through the gates, is now experimenting with gates made of heavy wooden spars the size of a large telephone pole. They are painted in black and white stripes to make them as conspicuous as possible.

But no system has yet been devised or can be invented which is fool proof. What should be organized at once is an Auto Drivers' Careful Club. Its [illegible] at grade crossings, an occasional ten-foot walk across tracks and the physical exertion of an arm swing. Its benefits, long life and freedom from injury. Its motto, "More Weddings, Less Funerals."

Here is Pledge.

The Pledge: "I promise to henceforth exercise extreme care at the intersections of road and rail. On reaching a crossing, I will stop, look and listen. If there is an automatic flagman, I will look diligently both ways, whether the signal is moving or not. If there is more than one in my car, one will be appointed monitor to walk across and survey the situation. If the way is clear, the monitor will signal to "Come ahead," using the same arm movements that railway flagmen use in passing signals to the engineer. In all cases I will observe signs and signals, but in no case will I rely entirely upon them. If I do not own an auto, I will be equally careful as a pedestrian, and will exert myself to secure new members of the Careful Club of the Automobile States of America."

SYNOPSIS OF PRECEDING CHAPTERS.

A feud has existed between Colonel Arthur Stanley and his cousin, Judge Lamar Stanley, over an heirloom, the diamond from the sky, found in a fallen meteor by an ancestor. Also, the succession to the Stanley earldom in England may come to an American. When a daughter is born to the colonel and the mother dies the colonel buys a gypsy boy and substitutes him. Three years later the gypsy mother, having had no part in this bargain, steals the girl, Esther, reared in secret, and leaves her son undetected as the heir. The gypsy has obtained possession of the diamond from the sky, and a document with the Stanley secret. Years later Hagar, gypsy queen, returns to Virginia with Esther. Dr. Lee, the late Colonel Stanley's friend, adopts Esther. Arthur Stanley, son of Hagar, falls in love with Esther, and so does his companion and cousin, Blair Stanley, rightful male heir of Stanley. In stealing the diamond Blair causes the death of the doctor and tries later to put the blame on Arthur, who takes the gem.

Arthur Stanley eludes his pursuers and joins Hagar, who reveals his identity and upbraids him for his wild life. Needing money, he pawns the diamond in Richmond. At a ball, at which an adventuress, Vivian Marston, wears the borrowed gem, Luke Lovell, Hagar's gypsy guard, steals the diamond, and to avoid detection drops it into a mail box. Arthur leaves Richmond and goes to the west. The diamond passes into a mail bag, picked up by Quabba, organ grinder. Quabba's monkey steals the diamond. Hagar takes Esther to Stanley hall.

Tom Blake, a detective of Richmond, who is hired by Hagar, produces finger prints convicting Blair. Hagar proposes silence to Mrs. Stanley as the price of Hagar's and Esther's being received in Fairfax society. Blair strikes down Hagar and steals the finger prints, leaving the gypsy queen demented. Marmaduke Smythe, lawyer, arrives to announce Arthur is heir to the deceased Earl of Stanley. Learning Arthur is a fugitive he seeks Blair instead. To win Vivian, Blair steals the diamond, later marrying her and leaving for the west. Their train is robbed, Vivian losing the diamond, which a slain train robber drops in the desert. The $100,000 he stole is found by Arthur, now known as John Powell, sheep herder. Vivian deserts Blair, telling him he must regain the diamond for her. Luke Lovell, driven from the camp after learning Hagar's secret, leaves to seek Blair. Hagar is under treatment and Esther is in Richmond society. Abe Bloom, gambler, knows Blair's guilt and covets the diamond. He calls it the price of his secrecy.

The diamond is later picked up by an Indian woman. Dr. Lee, Arthur learns, died of heart disease. Becoming very rich he buys Stanley hall, sold at auction, through Blake, and also provides for Hagar and Esther. Luke Lovell buys the diamond from the squaw, but loses it in a fight on Santa Barbara bay, the gem sinking. Vivian, desiring aid to ensnare Arthur, sends for Blair.

Esther and Quabba, also Blair, go to the California mines to seek Arthur. Smythe is sent west by Blake. Vivian Marston is saved from drowning by Powell, who is infatuated by her. Smythe finds the diamond and gives it to Esther to deliver to Arthur. Blair and Luke go to the yacht in Arthur's absence and find Esther there.

Esther and Quabba escape while Blair and Luke battle. Blair in the meantime has joined Vivian in Los Angeles. Durand, "king of diamonds," a crook known to Vivian, goes to a saloon near the miner in hope that he can learn the whereabouts of the diamond. There he meets Luke Lovell. Esther and Arthur appear on the scene. The diamond is lost in a melee. Esther saves Arthur, who is injured, and he goes to Los Angeles in care of the physician-crook, Durand. Esther follows and is refused admittance to see him. In the meantime Smythe has hid the diamond in a tree. It is later found by two bill posters, one of whom murders the other for the diamond. Arthur is "doped" by Durand, De Vaux and Vivian, although Blair, who has taken charge of Arthur's business affairs, protests.

CHAPTER XLI.

The Working of the Conspiracy.

EVER before him in the darkness the contorted face of a dead man and ever jangling in his breast the crystal and metal trumpery that cost his comrade's life! A cold sweat was on the forehead of Williams, the billposter, as he saw these things and felt these things and ever brutally lashed the wretched horse over the rough and stony mountain road in the stifling darkness.

Once he did this just as the front wheels struck a stump or boulder. The rickety wheel crashed, the wagon went over, and the man was flung out head first on the road. With the collapse of the wheel the flickering lantern jolted out and the glass broke and tinkled in the road as the wagon toppled over, and the frenzied horse, relieved of his dragging burden, sprang with a flash of renewed strength and galloped off until, entangled in the sundered harness, it tripped and fell heavily and lay heaving and helpless on the mountain road.

Then, cursing the deed he had done and the trumpery he had done it for, [illegible] his eyes from a deep cut in the forehead, held a handkerchief to the aching wound and limped off into the night, but still holding fast to the diamond from the sky.

Marmaduke Smythe also fled from the burning fallen tree and the dead man beneath it and ran, forgetting his own fears and misery at the haunting memory of this phantom of the night. The moon came from behind a cloud and dimly revealed the gray roof and dull white walls of the ranch house by the bee yard. Toward it Smythe ran wildly, and, reaching its door, he hammered furiously with both fists and, forgetting the stolid composure of a lifetime, screamed loudly he knew not what.

The rancher, roused, came down to the door in answer to the clamoring summons in the night. Behind him his frightened wife, holding high a lamp. Frayed and tattered, more like a tramp than a prim man of the law, the half hysterical Englishman told his broken story of a dead man lying beneath a burning tree, and then, as though he would put the horrid occurrence behind him, the strange messenger turned and fled again. And yet for all his fright and all his panic the Englishman had clung instinctively to the deer head that had been his impediments, beloved and cherished, since the sale at Stanley hall. How long ago that was, whether days or weeks or months, Marmaduke Smythe could not have told.

"It was all a horrid nightmare," he afterward would say. "America is all right for the Americans," he would add, "but it is deucedly weird, wild and murderous for a British subject to retain any desire to sojourn there. Had it not been my bounden duty as legal representative of the earls of Stanley to find the American heir I would never have visited or loitered in such utterly impossible wildernesses and crude communities, I heartily assure you."

But the worst of Marmaduke Smythe's hardships in darkest America were over. By dawn he reached a distant ranch and encountered a bewhiskered farmer driving to the nearest town. Smythe and his precious deer head rode twenty miles in more or less comfort and arrived, dusty, tattered and torn, at a fair sized city. At the straggling outskirts he plucked up courage again; and then when they drove up a business street the sign "King George Hotel" above a somewhat middle class hostelry to have so high standing a name made Smythe clutch the old rancher hastily by the arm.

"If you will stop here I will alight, thank you," he said.

The farmer stopped his horse at the curb. Smythe paid him and thanked him again and crossed the sidewalk, carrying his deer head trophy, also dirty and travel marked. The day clerk, loitering at the doorway, smiled at the eccentric looking figure before him.

"I have been lost in the wilderness and suffered untold hardships for a fortnight," stammered Smythe. "Could I secure a room and bawth?"

"Sure!" said the matter of fact hotel clerk. "You can have two rooms and two bawths if you pay for them."

Marmaduke Smythe took off his hat, pressed it in a reverential manner to his breast, gazed at the sign at the doorway of the hotel and cried fervently, "God save the king!"

Then a dizziness overcame him, his eyes closed, and he swooned back stiffly on his heels. Hogan, the head porter, passing by with his hand truck, deftly followed the quick gesture of the clerk and ran the truck under the heels of the swooning Smythe as he fell stiffly back, still holding, however, to the deer head with a strong, tenacious grip.

Thus was Lawyer Marmaduke Smythe, out of the wilderness at last, delivered safely to a room and "bawth," while the day clerk signed the register for him as "Lord Saveus, London, England."

Meanwhile in Los Angeles Esther resolutely stayed on, determined to see Arthur, despite the efforts she knew were being made by those who surrounded the injured man to prevent it. She did not trust to Vivian's promise that she should see Arthur when he was conscious or recovered. Day by day she called at the Powell mansion, as Arthur's beautiful residence was known, and day by day she received word from the impassive faced manservant that Mr. Powell could see no one.

Then one day she was coldly told that Mr. Powell had been taken early that morning to a sanitarium and that his condition was critical, so far as the results of his mental injuries were concerned, but that physically he had improved.

This statement was true only in so far that it was the desire of Durand and Vivian to have Arthur removed from the city. But, weak willed as he was under the drug addiction, Arthur was stubborn and set against leaving Los Angeles. He hardly dared mention the name of Esther or ask questions concerning her, for since his physical and mental weakness had been augmented by the drugs which he used, as he thought, in secret, the whole affair of Durand, De Vaux, Vivian and even Blair had been, by devious means, [illegible] that his recollections of [illegible] fancies, [illegible] of periodic insanity, caused by his injuries.

And so the soul strangling had achieved their dreadful purpose. Between their concentrated suggestion and the use of drugs Arthur had become convinced that his obsession regarding Esther was a manifestation of madness, and he became terrified at the thought of it and endeavored to keep Esther from his mind.

"How is Arthur?" asked Blair upon one of the few occasions they were alone. "I mean, how is he mentally." Blair added, "for I don't believe a word that cursed Durand says in his smug, [illegible] doctor phraseology."

"Arthur grows stronger bodily every day," said Vivian, "but his drug taking makes him a mental weakling. He will do nothing and sometimes he cries like a little child. This is what I think of [illegible]."

CHAPTER XLIII.

In the Lion's Clutch.

"YOU'RE a nice one to talk!" said Vivian to Blair. "I suppose you hate this job?" And with an expressive gesture she indicated the luxurious private offices of the Good Hope Oil company, the headquarters of John Powell's oil, mining and other industrial ventures which Blair Stanley, as a relative and a supposed business associate and interested capitalist from the east, had taken full charge of.

Blair winced. The shot had gone home. If Arthur Stanley, as "John Powell," recovered in body and health, if he shook off the shackles of morphine and rid himself of the harpies who surrounded him, it would mean the end of the power and authority that had become sweet to Blair.

Vivian Threw Her Arms Around Him.

Vivian laughed as she noted Blair's changed expression. "You see," she said, "you may hate Durand and you may despise De Vaux; but, after all, it was a good thing for you that Durand was present when Arthur was injured and saved his life and brought him back. Durand has played fair with you and put you in the saddle here. So it was lucky for you that he and De Vaux came to find the diamond."

At these words Blair burst into a rage. "They shall never have that!" he cried fiercely. "The Powell millions, made in oil or mines, are just as any other dirty money to me. But the diamond from the sky belongs to the Stanleys alone. It came from no human hand, but fell from the stars in a molten meteor, born of a miracle to our adventurer ancestor. If a hundred lives stand in my way the diamond shall never be the vulgar swag of thieves, cut up to be made marketable and hawked through the jewel marts of the world."

Vivian threw her arms around him. "Blair," she cried, "they must never have the diamond! I would suffer myself to be cut to bits rather than it should meet a diamond [illegible]."

And then two looked into each other's eyes and understood and triumphed each other fully, for they both remembered the night of the Sandoval ball—the first time in a generation the diamond from the sky had blazed upon the breast of a fair woman, and that woman was Vivian Marston! In many things that could and would be the [illegible] of the snare Durand [illegible] [illegible] of diamonds and [illegible] [illegible] the Stanley [illegible] as Blair was, his honor, [illegible] [illegible] He would have [illegible] thousand deaths are the [illegible] should be partitioned and [illegible] [illegible] He would have [illegible] whole and priceless [illegible] neck of the woman he loved. That was the Stanley way.

"The big blowout" of Santley's stupendous circus, as its proprietor would say, was undoubtedly "La Belle, the Lady of Lions." Splinters, the clown, was a big hit too. But La Belle's act with the fierce great Nubian [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] La Belle was [illegible] show this season, and Splinters was her husband. She was bold and handsome, and Splinters, the clown, was tormented with many a bitter pang of jealousy through her coquetries—or mildly describe it.

Sam Santley, proprietor of Santley's stupendous circus, was what was known as a "wild cat" boss. Through devious ways—luck at gambling and by the exercise of sharp practices—he had acquired the [illegible] [illegible] his own show from [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] an announcer when the [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] and then suddenly drunk, only to be up more or less red eyed and trembling and yet alert and on the job when the big tops went up on the lot the following morning. And as for the ladies—the "Janes," he called them—Mr. Santley also monopolized the fair. Woe to any of his circus people who transgressed the bounds of strict morality with his show! But with himself it was another matter, and Sam Santley looked with longing eyes on La Belle, the Lady of Lions.

The show had reached Los Angeles, playing up through Lower California and the Texas border. Business looked good, and Sam Santley himself walked from the performers' entrance of the big top highly pleased with himself and the world in general. In the performers' entrance La Belle, the Lady of Lions, had given him a smile. Splinters, the clown, had seen it, and his face had contorted in jealous hatred under his bismuth makeup. Then Sam Santley had strode to the "privilege" tent, where his advertising men and the followers of the circus generally met for social converse when "on the lot." When the performance was going on in the big tent there was a lull for the grinders, door talkers and shillabars, not to mention the plate board, cane and doll rack men and other purveyors of amusement out of and in the side shows. This lull was taken advantage of by dropping into the "privilege" tent for bottled beer and perhaps a brisk "pass" or two at craps. All these things paid Sam Santley. He sold the bottled beer at a profit and no temporary game of craps was so short but what the official "pass picker" swept in Mr. Santley's percentage.

At the entrance of the "privilege" tent Sam Santley, in his ringmaster's costume, is accosted by a grimy, shambling, shaking man in a stained and tattered suit of paste marked overalls.

"What's the matter with you? Get out of the way!" growls Santley.

The creature before him moistens his lips and mumbles:

"I am Williams, boss—Jack Williams. I was out with the bill posting outfit, don't you remember?"

"Why aren't you out with it now?" snarls Santley. "Got drunk, I suppose, and quit the job cold, and now you're here with a hangover panhandling. Get off the lot before you're kicked off. As for any money, you don't get a jitney. Beat it!"

"But listen, boss. I wasn't drunk; I didn't quit. I walked 100 miles like a crazy man. A tree fell on the wagon in the woods way back in the interior and killed Ben Burk and the horse and smashed the wagon"—

"Come in and tell me," interrupted Santley, for the loss of a horse and bill posting wagon was something to worry about. That Burk had been killed did not matter much. Billposters cost nothing. It is different with horses and wagons.

Then, seeing Williams was shaking as with ague, Santley ordered a drink of whisky from his private stock for him. Williams gulped it down and told his story as best suited him. But he said no word regarding the trumpery that had perhaps been the real cause of the death of Burk the billposter and the loss of the horse and wagon.

A game of craps attracted Santley's attention after he had made a mental calculation that after all the horse was a [illegible] old bit of crow bait and the wagon a rickety affair that could be replaced at slight cost.

"A hundred dollars at the outside is the loss," thought Santley to himself.

He always had been lucky at dice. The cynical idea occurred to him that he might here in a brief moment recoup the loss. He drew a roll of bills from his pocket, tossed a $100 note on the [illegible] and growled, "Who [illegible]" curiously. He thought how it would adorn the fair throat of the coquettish La Belle, the Lady of Lions.

[illegible]

"I shoot a hundred bucks against the junk!" he growled and tossed the dice to Williams.

The necklace with the great diamond clattered to the table. Williams seized the dice with trembling hand and rolled them along the table top. "Come seven!" he gasped and snapped the thumb and finger of the casting hand.

The dice rolled, paused, spun, rocked and settled. Two aces were uppermost. A losing first throw!

Santley chuckled, swept the stakes up in his hairy paw and laughed hoarsely at the chalky faced, trembling wretch who had lost the guerdon that he had reached up from the knees of murder for—the diamond from the sky!

That night it blazed upon the breast of a false woman. That night Splinters, the clown, crept in the cage of Lancelot, the lion, and whispered into his ears the secret, and the lion nodded as though he understood.

The next day Quabba learned through a fellow countryman, the gardener at the Powell mansion, that John Powell had not been taken to a sanitarium to convalesce. In fact, Quabba learned that physically Mr. John Powell had so far recovered that at the doctor's order he could now be taken out, and in order to divert him his friends were to take him to the circus that afternoon.

Esther received the information late and had arrived and entered the arena when the performance was well under way. At the end of the aisle, near where she sat, and at the edge of the hippodrome track was the private box containing Arthur, Blair, Vivian, Durand and De Vaux. All eyes were turned upon the arena, where Santley was announcing the thrilling and sensational act to follow: "La Belle, the Lady of Lions, and Lancelot, the superb untamed Nubian king of beasts."

Esther crept slowly down by the box to speak to Arthur when suddenly all in that box rose to their feet with a gasp of astonishment, for there on the breast of the woman in the lion's cage, gleaming and dazzling in a shaft of sunlight, blazed the diamond from the sky.

Then a loud cry of horror rose, and the vast audience heaved as a wave heaves, for the lion had sprung at the woman ere her smirk could change to a look of fear and had struck her down and, with his cruel claws rent her fair bosom and tore away the gleaming jewel there.

Santley shrieked and sprang forward, and just then the clown, Splinters, standing behind him, drew a pistol from his parrot garb and shot the man through the back.

The lion's paw drew away, bearing the diamond with it to the cage edge, and a hand reached for it. And then the crowd surged out in panic, screaming in horror, and Arthur and Esther were torn from each other by the human wave.

Couldn't Be Flattered.

"Oh, go away! I don't want any insurance. Don't try to jolly me—I can't be affected by flattery. I'm not that kind of a man. Why"—

"That's just what I thought," interposed the agent. "The minute I found your name on my list I decided to call on you at once. It is sickening to have to keep calling on men who expect you to jolly them and praise them and flatter them all during a business conversation. It isn't done by any business house in the regular course of business, so why should it be done by agents? My dear Mr. Grouch, we need such men as you. You need them greatly, and always. I have flattered until my mind is a storehouse of [illegible] adjectives and pet names, and I tell you I'm tired of it. I could tell at a glance that you were far beyond such crude methods.
