Coach Stevens Sends Eleven Through Vigorous Workout; Saltburn Battle Expected

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Oct. 8 (UPI)— Determined to score big game against Yale, Coach Frankford, Mat Stinson, is putting the Yale football squad through arduous workouts.

Yale's coach, however, has the long-standing custom of taking the squad on an easy morning session, then driving them through 45 minute running sessions and then playing football to end the scrubs, for 20 minutes.

A new Stevens' strategy became known today. It was learned yesterday that he had been working with the Yale coaches on the first, after-the-game, when experienced running, passing and kicking techniques, in preparation for the game.

Yale's coach, however, has not yet received the opposition.

The game will be played at 2 p.m. Saturday.

HAZELTON CONQUERS Hazelton Eleven

HAZELTON, Oct. 8 (Special)—The Hazelton grid warriors defeated Hazelton by a score of 42 to 0 in their second game of the season, last night from Hazelton Field.

The game Saturday is being played at the invitation of the Twin Falls Chamber of Commerce.

The Hazelton team, which has been the victim of the taking of the high school teams of the state, will play their games at Field No. 1, the first permanent home of the Hazelton team.

Saturday will come to Twin Falls, and twice in each of the remaining games mixed up an offering of new blood on the field. The change, straight football and aerial attacks, is sending out players both to high school coaches than those of the Hazelton team.

THE game Saturday will be of capital interest to Twin Falls and the other larger centers of Twin Falls and the Southern Branches. Many

former Brad stars, including several all-state players, are playing on the Hazelton team. The team, however, has not yet gained the athletic prestige of Twin Falls high school will take the field against the College of Idaho, and the Hazelton team is expected to give the Hazelton team a hard time.

How do they know
That summer is gone?
Not one leaf has fallen

How do they know
That autumn is coming,

In lavender hummocks?

BECAUSE WE FAIL TO PROTEST?

HAVE our long railroad hauls to big markets and the high freight rates we have been accustomed to pay robbed us of the courage and initiative to secure the freight rates to which we are entitled?

In this newspaper last Thursday was reproduced a special article from the columns of the Idaho Farmer by Sherman M. Coffin in which the statement was made that the overcharge paid by Idaho motorists because of freight rates higher than they should be amounted to more than $800,000 in 1928. For 1929 the rate of gasoline shipments indicates that the overcharge will be not much less than $100,000.

At this rate, the overcharge amounts to three dollars each for every man, woman and child in the state, according to the writer.

The rate on gasoline into Idaho from Tulsa, Oklahoma where our gasoline prices are fixed, it $8.18 per 100 gallons for an average distance of 143 miles. In the Cheyenne field, the freight rate is $8.45 per 100 gallons for a distance of 771. The rate is much more than double for Idaho what it is for Wyoming. The Idaho distance is just a little more than double the distance to Cheyenne. The generally accepted practice of the interstate commerce commission of decreasing rates as the distance increases has not only not been applied in this case, but the exact opposite has been done.

The significant thing about it, according to the author of the article, is that THERE HAS BEEN NO PROTEST FROM THE PEOPLE OF IDAHO over these conditions.

Why not? Is it because we have faced high rates so long that we accept them as being inevitable, like death and taxes?

It's about time to start protesting.

HUMAN VALUATIONS

THAT is the question. "What will people say?" has furnished one of the chief inhibitions and has been one of the chief correctives of human conduct throughout the ages.

If it has been an instrumentality of securing some desirable results, it has also made cowards of men and women and fettered their initiative when their vision may have pointed the way to new pathways. Their courage may not have been equal to the task of a clash with the majority.

What people will say should not have too great weight with us. In the final analysis the individual's own valuation of himself over a given period of time furnishes us with a more dependable criterion of his worth than what people say about him.

We are in very large degree just about what we think we are. Our own valuations of ourselves have a way of fixing our individual places in life. Some of us esteem ourselves too highly and may have to pay for our conceit when a period of stress or trial, reduces us to our true stature. Altogether too many human beings fail to evaluate themselves and their abilities highly enough and permit themselves to be appraised at a worth that does them an injustice.

If a great need, the construction of a big engineering project, the erection of a beautiful building, or any scores of such dreams, must be conceived in the mind of man before taking on the form of reality, it is just as true that great characters have their roots in the dream of greatness which must be father to actual worth.

What people may say of individuals is of less importance than what the individual DESERVES to have said about him. There is a vast difference sometimes. In an age wherein mankind has learned to treat his brother with consideration and kindness, it is a fact that the individual is often harsher in his judgments of himself than of others.

Achievement, whether of the individual, the community, the state, or the nation, depends on a number of factors and forces, and confidence in one's self is one of the greatest.

Some of us need to be kinder to ourselves if we are to measure up to our status. If the "elder Morgan's" statement that one can not afford to be bear on America is true, it is equally true for most of us when we back ourselves, our city, or our state.

THE GALLERY

CARETTIVELY few of us who live in the wide open spaces have spent much time in art galleries studying paintings and other works of art.

As a matter of fact, altogether too many of us would need to have a corps of interpreters with us to permit of any degree of appreciation of what is best in the arts.

But there is one gallery with an appeal that is felt by most of us and is available to the vast majority. That gallery is furnished by the landscape of the countryside in October.

Have you been seeking your share of one of the greatest "gold" strikes of all history? The only requirement are eyes with which to see and the love of beauty to direct those eyes and add to the appreciation of what Mother Nature offers.

The maples have a richness now to shame the more gorgeous costume of queen or maid. The walnuts are clothed in a rich yellow as to make the favorite color of the old Chinese court dresses seem pale in comparison. Other trees add to the richness of color that marks the October landscape.

Silks, satins, velvets! Nature provides them all for us in the gallery of the great outdoors to be seen and appreciated by all of us.

Something different, that plan of President Hoover and Premier MacDonald to have a conference on the relations of England and the United States in the president's mountain camp. Maybe they whittled as they talked, chewed dead grass stems and dug the toes of their shoes into loose dirt.

Twin Falls high school has no outstanding individual football stars, but the team promises to develop into a formidable machine for winning games. The team is everything in importance, and the individual is always dispensable.

That headline in the paper Monday evening that "Women Soon Will Control the Country's Wealth" is not at all surprising in view of the diligent search of purse pockets they have been making all these years.

Wish October would stay two months!

The Black Diamond Walla Walla citizens will take care of the Walla Walla Athlons' interests next year and are now making arrangements to rent acreage and other ground, on which the next crop will be planted. The past season has demonstrated the value of the land and the great promise of the future, based on heavy mining yields. Concerning new year's operations, Mr. Eckert is quoted in the Walla Walla Tribune as follows:

"Although the past season's heavy mining profits have not been greater, could be economically carried on in the lower areas, it seemed to indicate that those without a doubt, could be grown successfully on the elevations."

"The Walla Walla miners failed to determine that the new growth could be economically carried on in the lower areas, it seemed to indicate that those without a doubt, could be grown successfully on the elevations."

"In the United States, particularly from non-irrigated land in California, Colorado, Wyoming and Idaho, irrigation that grows were practically a failure this year, due to the drought. Even Michigan and New York states suffered greatly to the same extent."

"With these conditions, general and considering that in this particular locality we experienced a shortage of rainfall unprecedented since accurate records began, it is difficult to say how this year's experience differed in what localities could be grown."

"Since we are unable to demonstrate this past year's complete success, it has been determined to repeat the project next year."
