FAVORITES IN CAST

Lila Lee and Lois Wilson, two of the most prominent screen leading women, again do excellent team work in the cast of "le Mariomony, a Failure" a new Paramount special comedy directed by James Cruze, showing next Wednesday at the Idaho theater. Misses Lee and Wilson have each played many notable leads. This is not the first time that the two leading women have worked together in the same picture. They will be recalled as the two wives in William de Mille's production, "Midsummer Madness."

...AT THE... THEATRES

ALL STAR TRIO MAKES "WHERE LIGHTS ARE LOW"

A combination of Sessue Hayakawa as the star; Lloyd Osborne, as author and Colin Campbell, director, should be sufficient to insure perfection on the screen.

This all star combination believed all their talents upon "Where Lights Are Low," the newest Hayakawa vehicle released by R-C Pictures Corporation and scheduled for exhibition at the Orpheum theatre for two days beginning today.

Sessue Hayakawa stands absolutely supreme as an interpreter of strong dramatic roles. His list of successes embrace many of the most notable dramatic productions in the history of moving pictures. He made his first big hit in "The Cheat," after which his career on the screen was a succession of triumphs. "Where Lights are Low" gives the noted star just the sort of part for which he is best equipped and he rises to the occasion magnificently.

COMING TO ORPHEUM

"The big American drama of all time."

"The love that passeth understanding." Woman's abiding faith and sacrifice. All these elements in Thomas H. Ince's supreme achievement, "Hail the Woman," coming to the Orpheum theatre, commencing Thursday.

You cannot afford to miss one tense moment in this resounding drama of life!

Twin Falls team of Caldwell high school played Boise Monday afternoon and defeated the visitors, 15 to 7. Indifferent battery work and worse support from the fielders was responsible for the lost game.

HANSEN BUTTE BOND ISSUE CARRIES BY UNANIMOUS BALLOT

Thirty-one Votes Cast for An Issue of $2,700,000 Which Court Will Be Asked to Validate—Complete Success Depends on the Erection of the American Falls Dam—Means Much to County

The power of directors of the district by their attorneys, Porter & Wilson, will go to the court at once to take the necessary legal steps to get the bonds validated. In the meantime other steps will be taken so that when the court has given its confirmation there will be no unnecessary delay.

The Hansen Butte project is not within the scope of the Twin Falls irrigation district, but depends for its full success on the construction of the great American Falls dam, the erection of which would be the signal for the extension of the irrigation district. The Marriage irrigation district has measured, but if the American Falls dam should go in it could not be used.

Hence, Hansen but none the less is Twin Falls' big irrigation district. With the Hansen Butte development would bring thousands of acres of irrigated and much capital to Twin Falls county to help reclaim land and make it productive.

CHICAGO, May 16.—Grain prices were sharply higher at the close of the Chicago board of trade today. The market advanced all the opening and continued to rise when heavy buying by local elevator interests and commission houses developed. Straus Says Business Good Bargain Days

That the past Friday and Saturday were successful from a business point of view, was the opinion expressed today by B. Straus, senior partner of the firm of Straus & Glauber. He says that the firm was more than repaid for the reductions made on the suits and goods offered for sale, by reason of the large increase in business which resulted. Mr. Straus declared that the reductions were not made on a few suits selected for the purpose but were general and will be continued for the rest of the week. The original price and sales price were clearly marked, showing the actual reductions.

The sales were genuine and the bargains real, covering entire stocks, and buyers appreciated this fact and acted accordingly. The success of the two days bargains were pronounced.

If we have some more splendid warm days like yesterday we will begin to look up that "Old Swimming Hole" soon.

Assistant Prohibition Commissioner Jonck estimates that 60 per cent of dry law violators are aliens. Mr. Jones is in a position which gives authority to his estimate. It is confirmed by the observation of others. When the house of representatives of the United States voted by 3 to 1 to deport these people it acted in accordance with public sentiment. Those in America who cannot obey American law should get out. The law should be enforced rigorously.

When you hear a man who has been here only a few months get up in public and plead for the future of Twin Falls it certainly ought to make those who have been here a longer time take time to do some planning for what service we can render to make this a better city. If we can grapple with this situation and hold our own for a few months longer we will begin to recover in such a rapid fashion that everybody will have work and the wheels of prosperity will begin again to grind out the coin.

The New York stock market is discounting the future not so much as the present. This is the accepted explanation of the general advance in securities prices during the last few months. Those whose business it is know the industrial and commercial trend are convinced that the long-desired revival is under way and will take be arrested in the near future. They are reacting consistently with their information and belief. They are pushing the good thing along for their own advantage and, as the sequel will prove, to the best benefit of everyone.

The integrity of the men on each of the respective tickets at the coming city election is a point to think about in selecting your ticket from which you will make up your ballot at the polls in June. Long platitudes do not satisfy the voter and convince him either black or white. The record of the sponsor for the other ticket should be taken into account in making up your ballot. Men who have their records running through the courts of this state in a disreputable fashion should be ostracized during our city affairs. Use the class of people whom you wish to run your city affairs. Think it over.

Jazz, the insidious and all-prevailing jazz, was directly responsible for the death of Melville M. Wilson, one of New York's oldest cellist, according to his closest friends. The 72-year-old musician was unable to adjust himself to modern conditions, so they say. He couldn't play jazz—and he wouldn't. His cello was almost sacred to him and he would not defile it with the music demanded by the dance-rooms and the restaurants of today. So the orchestra would be "reorganized" and the old man would have to leave. They were always sorry to have him go. "But—what would you? Our patrons demand jazz, and jazz all the time!"

"Student, your life will never be long enough to close your books," was the solemn injunction of the speaker at the baccalaureate exercises last Sunday evening and this suggestion carries a world of truth for all of us. How much time are you, Mr. Average Citizen, putting in daily at some definite regular reading or study? Do you allow your usual vocations to take all your time and give every ounce of energy to your business? You could not be blamed for this the way business has been for the past year or so, but it is your solemn duty to devote some time each day toward the improvement of your mind and to keep these thinking wheels limbered up and retracting some of the sutures which you were taught to follow in your earlier days.

DOCTORS DO MOVE

In the days of Moliere the doctor was a natural butt for the satirist, for then medicine was mostly guess-work and bluff. Since natural science, specifically since Pasteur, it has its feet on the ground.

With its discoveries, its conquests, its strides ahead, goes along, like its shadow, an army of frauds. There are cures for diseases for which no cure has been discovered. Not only the laity and the druggists take part in these phantom cures, but regular physicians also.

Medical science moves so fast that in the last decade we have entered a new era. Yet it was more than a decade ago that Samuel Hopkins Adams published the last authoritative popular account of what medicine could and could not do.

Every sufferer longs to be cured, whether of cancer or indigestion, debility or shattered nerves.

CHAPTER XVI

"Can you speak to me?"

Pollyop's voice was so tender as she bent forward to examine her protégée in the set ones of the Silent City and had taught them that love was ever present.

Evelyn cared at her electrified. The brown eyes were softly luminous. The lips which only a little while ago were strained and blue now were scarlet and fraught with sympathy. What wonderful thing had happened? Pollyop had taken the place of her feet and hands. She could wriggle a little, although her flesh hurt dreadfully when she tried it.

ment, Pollyop dropped to her knees and began to chafe the injured ankles.

"I'm goin' to give you back to your man," she said, smiling; "but you got to away to him I swiped from not any squatter men. He'll fall me forever, mebbe, but I don't care about that. I love Larry an' Lye Breeger no more than he love him in this."

Then her face fell beside Mrs. MacKenzie's, and she wept hysterically. Evelyn's fingers clutched at the chestnut curls.

"Pollyop, oh, Polly, darling!"

This was all she could say, for she, too, was weeping even more wildly than the other. In the presence of such divine unselfishness, the pelpit of her withered soul seemed to lift and open, as she groped for a broader understanding.

"Granny Hope learned me a lot of things," came up to Evelyn brokenly. "She always said, Granny Hope did, that love was strongerr'n hate no! I must pray your man wouldn't be so wicked to us squatters."

The glittering brown head rolled back forlorn, in consuming agony.

"Don't, Polly, darling!" Evelyn begged. "That's it's all right now. And my husband will—"

Polly sat up, brushing back damp strands from her face. I'ought to be ashamed! I'm a fine one to help me," she shot out. "Nothin' at all! First, I know 'him betterr'n you do. Then next I wouldn't ask him. Cause—cause I'm that bad. I'ought to be without my Daddy, Hopkins an' my Jerry baby." Her voice rose in wild appeal. "But, God dear, how much I want 'em. Oh, how I want 'em!"

The words fell into Evelyn's heart with the keenness of physical pain. Only a little while before she had stood alone at the brink of the grave. There had been no hope that the summer would bring a helpful new thing to hold her close to Marcus. But now her thoughts whirled. So great was her faith in Polly Hopkins that she knew in a little while she would be back in her husband's arms.

The attack of weeping over, Pollyop arose and, beat again into pap the hard bread and hot water. This time she took all the sugar left in the cupboard. Daddy would not be home for over two years, and Jerry probably never, and she—she wouldn't be in the shanty long. Groaning, she shipped in a little more hot water, then some of the contents of the cup splashed on the floor.

"It ain't fair, nothorne," she said, coming back to the cot; "but the hurt's end, an' you need a lot of strength up. I'm goin' now an' get your man. You get this hot pap into your stomach while I'm gone."

She pushed the cup away, holding out a shaking hand.

"I don't want you to go without me, Pollyop," she cried. "Please, don't leave me here alone. I'm terribly afraid, I tell—"

The grave young squatter contemplated her for the space of twenty seconds, perhaps.

"You're afraid of the fakerman, aint you, Miss?" she asked. "Well, you've got a right to, too! Larry's different from the rest, though he was as wild in' up to this night, to chop off your head, so he. This afternoon I heard his and kind, Larry's he."

"I'm afraid of everybody," gasped Evelyn. "Everybody but you, Polly. Please, take me with you, or—let me stay till morning."

A slight shake of Pollyop's head brought Evelyn to a sitting position, but pain-racked bones and nerves laid her back again.

"There," interjected the other girl. "You can't even hard it'd be to get you through the snow to your man's house. You'd die before you got there. I'm blest if you wouldn't. No, I got to be alone, Miss."

Seeing the fear in Mrs. MacKenzie's eyes, she brot over the cot.

"Will you believe something I've got to tell you, Fra?" she said in a whedding tone.

"Surely I will, Polly," answered Evelyn, wiping her eyes, "but I'm so afraid, so awfully afraid."

"That's no lie," replied Pollyop impertinent. "An' as I said, you got a right to be scared of the squatters. Why, only this afternoon I hated you an' Old Marc as hard as the rest of the Silent City folks—more, mebbe! But—but what I was really goin' to tell you is this. If I log you along with me, you won't have no baby in the summer. That's God's truth. I'm telin' you, too."

Evelyn lowered her lids and a painful flush mounted to her hair.

"You're—wanin' that little baby, ain't you?" demanded Polly, her voice vibrant with emotion. "Now, be a big woman, an' say while I'm yoin, will you? I'll promise to hustle for all I'm worth."

Mrs. Mackenzie's timid glance ran around the room.

"I suppose an' she whispered, "but what if some of your people came here?" She shuddered and went on hurriedly: "Polly, what're you going to say to Marcus?"

"I don't know yet," mumbled Pollyop, "but I'll bring him back. Oh, I got it! Say, I'll stick your in Granny Hope's coop-hole. No squatter'd think to go in there, even if he comes in. Here! I'll help you."

Tenderly she coaxed and tugged, but without avail, and patiently Polly sat down on the side of the cot.

"Miss Eve," she took up, in low tones, "I'm goin' to tell you something Granny Hope told me. Now, you want to get home to your man, don't you?"

"Yes, yes, oh, so bad, Pollyop," cried Evelyn, "but I can't stay here alone! I can't! I can't!"

She did not think then of the many days and nights that other girl had passed by herself in the same little shack.

"Mebbe it does seem so, Eve," said Polly Hopkins. "But, honey, when I'm done you'll be thinkin' different. Now, listen: don't you know way down in your heart that a man's separ-ly sufferin' his life away?"

Evelyn burst forth into weeping afresh.

"Of course I know it, Polly," she sobbed, "but—"

"An' you want him to be waiting all night till daybreak, not knowin' whether you're in the land of the livin' or not, huh?"

This was a solemn question, asked by a very solemn-eyed girl.

"Another thing," continued Polly, "when it comes daybreak, there'll be a lot of squatters about. They come at dark, an' in the dark. I'd have to leave you then, wouldn't I? Tonight it's stormin', an' most of 'em are in bed. I could run as fast as a rabbit an' be back in a jiffy. Can't you screw up your courage a little, Miss Eve?"

This long statement Evelyn thought over for a few moments. Then:

"Perhaps I could, if—"

"Now, you can," interrupted Pollyop. "Now, listen: Granny Hope said anything you want you can have out of love's own heart for the askin'."

"But I'm such a sickly girl," moaned Evelyn despairingly. "Suppose I—I—I—"

"Why, you can't, Pollyop replied. "Well, I'm sorry, Miss Eve, God knows, but never mind all that now. I got to get Old Marc! an' the only way you can help is to stay quiet while I'm out, for him. Now, lies on one side I'll sow you away in the rubbish room till I get back."

Ashamed to make further appeals to the girl who was showing more courage than she had thought possible for any girl to show, Evelyn allowed Pollyop to pick her up and stand her on the floor.

Then the weak lessen on the strong, and when Polly tucked her tightly the blankets about Evelyn, she whispered:

"Granny said prayers in this room all last year an' way on till she died. 'The Lord is my shepherd, I shall not want!' Granny said was one of the best to keep in mind."

She stooped and smoothed back the hair from Evelyn's wet brow.

"Kiss me, Polly, dear," she begged, with streaming eyes.

"All right!" murmured the squatter girl. "Kisses're mighty comfortin' sometimes."

She stooped and laid her lips on Evelyn's and, turning swiftly, left the room. Evelyn heard her snuffing the candles outside and then heard the latch click as Pollyop closed the door behind her.

Bounding out into the snow, Pollyop raced through the road toward Bishop's but, for she had decided to speak to him before going on. She lifted the latch and peeped in.

Larry sat by the stove, puffing his pipe. He gave her but a glance then dropped his head mournfully.

"Where's Lye, Larry?" Polly asked in a blasting whisper.

"Gone home," came in—a grunt.

"He's sick to his stomick, an' so be I. I'm most frozen, too."

With her hand on the latch of the door which she had closed against the storm, the girl stood in shivering indecision. She felt intuitively the inner emotions going on in the stolid speaker. She wanted to throw her arms about him and tell him all that had passed in her home during the last hour. But if she did, Larry would take the blame of the crime on himself. Of course he would! Polly Hopkins knew the heart of Larry Bishop as if she had made it herself from God's own clay. If the person in her shack had been Old Marc, he would have had no compunction in pulling him out of the way, but a woman—

"I don't want you for anything tonight, Larry, Bishop," she broke out, fumbling with the latch. "An', mind you, dearie, never tell nobody you an' Lye swiped Old Marc's woman. That's a promise, Larry, ain't it?"

"Yes," replied Bishop, nauseated.

"Then go to bed an' sleep!" retorted Pollyop. "You'll get warm, an—an—I'll see you tomorrow—mebbe. I won't be seein' you in my shanty tonight."

Then she went swiftly out, slammed the door and was away like a winter bird, before the squatter could question her.

Swiftly she ran on, her hair almost on end because to save her friends, she must face the haughty MacKenzie himself. It had been her cruelty that had prompted their act, and now, besides saving Evelyn, she must shield them. The nearer she came to the MacKenzie house, the harder her heart pounded, with dread at the task before her.

In the meantime Marcus MacKenzie and his wife's mother were together, the lady stretched out on the divan and Marcus pacing the floor. Since MacKenzie had left the Hopkins shack, he had ridden madly over the hills, urging every mount available to help him find his wife. Secretly he had wept tears such as never had poured from his eyes before in all his superficial life.

Having set in motion what he could summon from town and country, he had come back home to the hysterical mother. He had no comforting assurance to give her, or any to allay the burning grief within himself. Evelyn had disappeared as if the ground had opened and swallowed her up. He paused in front of Mrs. Robertson, his dark, handsome face working painfully.

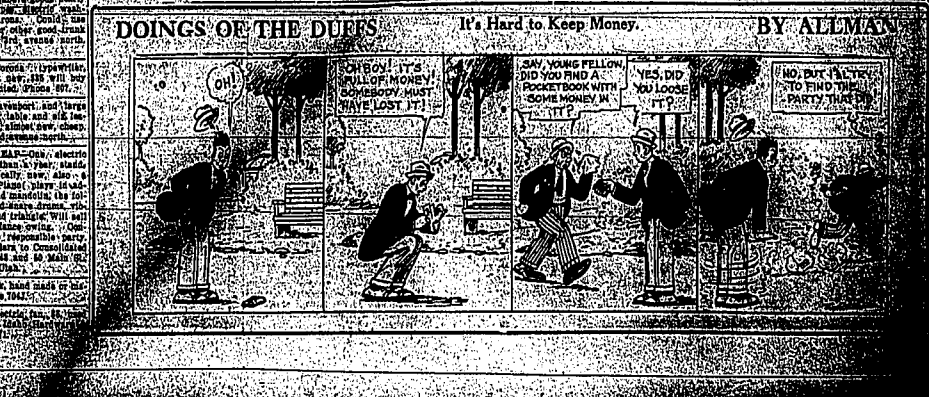
DOINGS OF THE DUFFS

It's Hard to Keep Money. BY ALLMAN



CITIZENS TICKET OUTLINE PLATFORM CAMPAIGN PLANS

Briefly, definitely but plainly the candidates on the Citizens ticket headed by William Graham have issued declaration that they will, if elected, take whatever steps may be necessary to enforce completion of all paving and curbing contracts within the city in conformity with the contracts and specifications on file.

The candidates also state that they will enforce ALL laws; that they will operate the city at the least possible cost to the taxpayers, and that they will collect from water users only so much money as is necessary to retire obligations and meet operating expenses.

The statement issued in the form of a very brief platform is signed by William Graham, candidate for mayor and head of the ticket, C. O. Thomas, W. H. Dwight, L. B. Chapin and T. J. Lloyd. It pledges that:

"If elected, we will to the best of our ability perform the duties devolving upon us with fidelity to the public interest and with purpose to economy.

"We will, if elected, immediately take whatever steps may be necessary to enforce completion of all street paving and curbing in conformity with specifications and terms of contract.

"We pledge our good faith to collect from the water users of the city, only so much money as will be necessary to care for interest on and retirement of water works obligations outstanding, and to pay the costs of operations and to conform to the laws of the state which require that these funds be maintained separately.

"We will enforce ALL laws.

"We will operate the city at the least possible cost to the taxpayers and thereby reduce the city tax levy.

LECTURE ON CHRISTIAN SCIENCE HERE ON SUNDAY NIGHT LARGELY ATTENDED

"Christian Science, the Divine Immanence" was the subject of a lecture by Peter V. Ross at the Orpheum theatre Sunday night. The speaker declared that misery, hate, sickness and sorrow had not in fact been created, that they have no actual existence because Love is actually God and pervades everything. He quoted St. John's statement, "God is love, so that dwelleth in love, dwelleth in God, and God in him," to illustrate this point. He paid a tribute to Mrs. Eddy for her work in revealing the doctrines of Christian Science."

BIG IRRIGATION DIST. PETITION WILL BE SIGNED

Twin Falls Canal Board Has Formally Endorsed the Present Form of Petitions and Is Pushing the Work of Getting Them Completed.

Success for the movement to create a big irrigation district was predicted today by Senator L. L. Evans and F. A. Banks of American Falls and Guy Flenner of Boise who were here today conferring with members of the local committee. They pointed out the benefits that would result to the whole country from the construction of the big dam, which is the Shoshone tract, said Engineer Banks, "the signatures of 50 men, representing 15,000 were needed. Instead of this, the signatures of 200, representing 25,000 acres were received in a few hours. Similar success attended them elsewhere."

Mr. Banks explained the manner in which extra acreage got into original petitions. An old map will show, he said, that Twin Falls was west from Jerome with the understanding that the lands marked in a certain manner representing property entitled to go in would be included. Messrs. Banks and Flenner were away when this was received and the transcribers got busy and copied it all. This has resulted in some delay.

Endorsed by Board.

The Twin Falls canal board has passed on the petitions for the formation of the district and is now circulating these petitions for the signatures of the farmers.

W. F. Alworth, vice chairman of the board acting in the absence of Evan Lincoln, has asked the business men of the various towns to help the chairmen of the various communities in circulating these petitions because the farmers are all very busy with the spring farming operations.

The Southside district is the last district to complete this work and it is expected that the petitions will all be signed and in the hands of the Twin Falls county commissioners by the first day of next week.

Mr. Alworth, as chairman of the Twin Falls division has asked a number of men to begin circulating these petitions starting in tomorrow morning.

MISS ETTA RILEY HAS BOKEN HAND FROM AN ACCIDENT IN AN AUTO

Calmness marked the conduct of the quartette of women whose auto turned turtle on the highway the other side of Hansen about 8 o'clock last evening, breaking three bones in the left hand of Miss Etta Riley, of Riley sisters, who was driving. Other members of the party consisting of Miss Stella Riley and Dr. Emma Crossland of this city, and Mrs. A. D. Smith of Hollister, none of whom were injured.

The party had spent Sunday and Sunday night in Pocatello, which they left Monday. The road was dusty and difficult to drive on but they were going at a good rate when they struck the freshly stirred dirt due to road improvement, above Hansen. The car skidded and turned over, the top was badly torn. After first aid was administered to Miss Riley, they were brought to this city by Mr. and Mrs. H. C. Gaines, who were in the neighborhood on a visit.

The council planned its examination trip for pavements and then adjourned, after allowing general fund bills to the amount of $177.90 and local improvement bills in the sum of $1546 for district 24.

"BOUGHT AND PAID FOR"

"I bought you, I paid for you, and you're my wife!"

This grabbing speech, the peak of one of the big dramatic scenes of a famous stage play, causes an equal consensus in William de Mille's screen version of "Bought and Paid For," which was shown at the Idaho theater last night. Agnes Ayres and Jack Holt, the featured players, both of pronounced stars of reputation and popularity, were seen at their best in their trying roles.

SPIRIT OF UNREST IN TWIN FALLS SUBJECT OF FINE ADDRESS

The Kiwanis Club luncheon held yesterday in the Rogerson hotel was addressed by Rev. W. H. Tolliver, of the Baptist church and it was the consensus of opinion by many of those present that this was one of the best addresses delivered to this luncheon club for several months. The talk was very practical and dealt with one of our most vital issues in Twin Falls.

Chairman M. J. Sweeley presided, and each member was asked to arise and give the first name of the fellow on his right and tell his own occupation. This disclosed a lot of fun and brought forth some good puns.

Rev. Tolliver chose for his subject, "The Spirit of Unrest in Twin Falls." He flatly first with the causes of unrest and urged his hearers to take every precaution to remedy these. Labor conditions have been bad for several months and some for all winter. He urged those who had plenty odd jobs of work to be done about their premises to have same done so as to help tide over the period of unemployment. Repairing short phrases, painting, decorating etc. should be done now so that fewer men will leave our city to seek employment elsewhere.

Unfortunate Comparisons.

Some times our comparisons are unfortunate in Twin Falls because we are inclined to compare the present with the most prosperous times we have ever had here and the maker our present look very dark. At least let us compare with a less prosperous time and thus the contrast will not be so great.

Then again the person spoke of the losses many have sustained since coming here and cited a comparison whereby a man may have bought a farm at $300 per acre and resold the same for $500, getting the three hundred dollars clean and yet claimed that they had lost the total value of the land because they had been compelled to take it back. But this was wrong reasoning according to Rev. Tolliver.

Too Many Leaving Here

Too many good citizens are leaving our city and going to California and other places to find work. Thus our population is becoming depleted and we must remedy this condition.

As a remedy for these conditions Rev. Tolliver urged that we bring about more employment by offering our men jobs such as crafts and work to bring more payrolls to this city. Again we must have confidence in the future of our city and in the Twin Falls tract. Banks have gone broke because people lacked confidence enough in them to put their money in same and as a result the lack of that cash had helped to bring about the financial stringency. We can do much to overcome this lack of confidence which is depopulating our city and country and stay the tide until relief comes.

Good Times Are Coming.

Good times are just ahead of us now and we ought to get in and boost for it. It is a shame to see our splendid stacks of alfalfa rotting in the field when a poorer product has been selling in Kansas City for $22 a ton. We must have lower freight rates in order that our products can find an outlet to the makers of the world. We must build this road to Nevada and put over the American Falls dam in order to bring back this country the way it should be developed. Send out the literature from this city and tell the world that this is the most wonderful place in all the world to make your home. The story of California and the man who died in an unknown country without a friend made a great hit and yet taught a forceful lesson.

MAYOR AND COUNCIL EXAMINE THE PAVING PENDING ITS REPAIRS

Officials of City Making the Round Over Territory Covered by the Warren Construction Company, Last Spring Accompanied by Authors of Sponsor-Lambenheim Report

Mayor F. W. McRoberts with the entire council, City Clerk Paul R. Taber, and Street Commissioner J. J. Pilcerrim, representing the city, Engineer Lee Chase representing the Warren Construction company, accompanied by Fred Spencer and J. W. Lambenheim who made the famous Spencer-Lambenheim report, as much discussed during the past year, started out this afternoon to inspect the weak points alleged to exist in the city paving. It will take several hours to make the examination.

The Warren Construction company has been promising for some months to fix the paving as soon as weather conditions would permit. This company has asked for and received rent at prices on the rock crusher for use in breaking rock that may be needed in the work.

The paving is shoddy brittle in many places. It is said by some that this is due to hasty work in trying to make a record. On the other hand, it is said that the stretch on which the record was actually broken are in the best condition.
