FRANCE TO CUT SIZE OF ARMY TO PAY DEBTS

Exports for First Five Months of This Year Shows Excess of Six Billion Over Her Imports; American Exporters Are Doing Good Business with French Republic.

BY JOHN O'RIEE.

PARIS, July 24.—France is complying with the fundamental conditions of reparations international commercial statistics for the first five months of the present year show an excess of six billion francs, or about $600,000,000 over her imports.

Financial circles expect a quick recovery in the franc when the settlement will have been completed, but they take no attempt to hide the fact that this recovery is likely to be of short duration.

This announcement by Premier Lloyd George that England intends to ask France, on October to begin the payment to the Reparations Commission of the sum due France's former trade is invariably bound to have a bad effect on the exchange value of the franc, as it is estimated that the sum of $150,000,000 will be taken from France's exchange to pay the British claim. Unofficial estimates place the total payments to be made by Germany to France at 26 billion francs, but in the opinion of financial experts the material payment will be much smaller. Until some satisfactory solution of the problem is found the franc will continue to be the plaything of speculators and foreign exchange experts, and further, if the Premier Poincare is forced by France to force Germany to pay her bill for reparations, or to submit America accepts the offer of a moratorium.

Despite these gloomy and clouds and with the country prepared to bring another million Germans in to the Rhineland, French exporters are doing a good business, in fact, all Europe, what cut her house in order before American capital can enter of Americans are doing good business.

A very [illegible] that which provided [illegible] of Bessie Millie, who lived in the village of Stromness, in the Orkney Islands, in the early part of the last century. Old Bessie "sold wind" to the skippers who put out from that port, and it is said that no matter ever sailed out of Stromness without first paying her a visit. She made no pretensions to magical arts, but, merely boiled her kettle and gave the vessel the benefit of her prayers. For this service she exacted the modest emolument of sixpence. According to Sir Walter Scott, Bessie held that the wind was sure to come, although sometimes the sailors were obliged to wait quite a while for it. Old Bessie's house was located on the brow of the hill on which the town is built, and was so wind-swept and exposed that it gave considerable color to the dame's claims of controlling the wind.

Coming later into that upstairs room that was common to all the troups, Andre-Louis found M. Binet talking loudly and vehemently. As he entered Binet broke off short, and wheeled to face him.

"I await your explanations of the disgraceful scene you provoked tonight."

"Disgraceful! Is it disgraceful that the public should applaud me?"

"The public! The rabble, you mean. After the play tonight M. de La Tour d'Azyr came to me, and spoke to me in the severest terms about your scandalous outburst. . . . I was forced to apologize and . . ."

"The more fool you" said Andre-Louis. "A man who respected himself would have shown that gentleman the door." M. Binet's face began to empurple.

"And I say further," Andre-Louis went on, "that a man who respects himself, on quite other grounds, would have been only too glad to have asked this prelate to show M. de La Tour d'Azyr the door."

"What do you mean by that?" There was a rumble of thunder in the question.

Andre-Louis' eyes swept round the company assembled at the supper-table. "Where is Climene?" he asked, sharply.

Leandre kept up to answer him, while in the face, tense and quivering with excitement.

"She left the theater in the Marquis de La Tour d'Azyr's carriage immediately after the performance. We heard him offer to drive her to this inn."

"That would be an hour ago—rather more. And she has not yet arrived?"

"Not yet."

"Ah!" Andre-Louis sat down, and poured himself wine. There was an oppressive silence in the room.

Flatters were pushed toward him. He helped himself calmly to food, and sat in silence, apparently with a good appetite.

At long length came a rumble of wheels below and a rattle of hailing hoofs. Then voices, the high, trilling laugh of Climene floating upwards. Andre-Louis went on eating unconcernedly.

She came in, a leading lady taking the stage, head high, chin thrust forward, eyes dancing with laughter: she expressed triumph and arrogance. Her cheeks were flushed, and there was some disorder in the mass of nut-brown hair that crowned her head. In her left hand she carried an enormous bouquet of white camellias. On its middle finger a diamond of great price drew almost at once by its effulgence the eyes of all.

Her father sprang to meet her with an unusual display of paternal tenderness. "At last, my child!"

He conducted her to the table. She sank into a chair, a little wearily, a little marvelously, but, the smile did not leave her face, not even when she glanced across at Scaramouche. Andre-Louis, however, still went on eating placidly, without so much as a look in her direction. Gradually the smile began to realize that just as surely as a scene was brooding. But as surely would there be no scene as long as they remained within two minutes once remained in the room but M. Binet, his daughter, and Andre-Louis. And then, at last, Andre-Louis set down knife and fork, wiped his thread with a napkin of Burgundy, and sat back in his chair to consider Climene.

"I trust," said he, "that you had a pleasant ride, mademoiselle."

"Most pleasant, monsieur." Impudently she strove to emulate his poker face, but did not completely succeed.

"And not unpraitable, if I may judge by that jewel at this distance. Such a formidable sum must be a lovely thing, a Spanish ex-M. de La Tour d'Azyr. Would it be impertinent in one who has some notion of becoming your husband, to ask you, mademoiselle, what you have given him in return?"

M. Binet uttered a gross laugh, a queer mixture of cynicism and contempt.

"I have given nothing," said Climene, indignantly.

"Ah! that the jewel is in the nature of a payment in advance."

"My God, man, you're not decent!" M. Binet protested.

"Decent!" Andre-Louis's smoulder-ing eyes turned on him flashing upon M. Binet such a fulmination of contempt that the old scoundrel shifted uncomfortably in his chair. "Did you mention decency, Binet? Almost you make me lose my temper." Slowly his glance returned to Climene. "Mademoiselle," he said, slowly, "I desire you purely in your own interests to consider whither you are going."

"I am well able to consider for myself, and to decide without advice from you, monsieur."

"And now you've got your answer," chuckled Binet. "I hope you like it."

Andre-Louis had paled a little; there was incredulity in his great sombre eyes as they continued steadily to regard her. Of M. Binet he took no notice.

"I bow to your choice, mademoiselle. I pray that you may not regret it."

"Regret it!" cried M. Binet. "He was laughing, refused to see his daughter at last rid of this suitor of whom he had never approved, if we except those few hours when he really believed him to be an eccentric of distinction. "And what shall she regret? That she accepted the protection of a nobleman so powerful and wealthy that as a mere trinket he gives her a jewel worth as much as an actress earns in a year at the Comedie Francaise!"

Andre-Louis looked at him in silence for a long moment. Then he laughed again. "Oh, you are fantastic," he said. "You are not real." He turned on his heel and strode to the door.

Andre-Louis turned, his hand upon the door-handle. "No," he said, "I was mistaken. You are not fantastic. You are just vile—both of you." And he went out.

CHAPTER X

TWENTY-FOUR hours with La Binet had been more than enough for the fastidious and discerning taste of M. de La Tour d'Azyr. He looked back upon the episode with nausea—marvelling at himself that until yesterday he should have found her so desirable, and cursing himself that for the sake of that ephemeral and worthless gratification he should seriously have imperilled his chances of winning Mademoiselle de Kercadiou to wife.

The Chevalier de Chabrillac sat opposite to him in the enormous traveling berline. As they were rattling over the cobbles of Nantes streets, he remembered a promise to La Binet to witness her performance that night in "The Faithless Lover." He had led the mercenary little strumpet—it was thus he thought of her at present, and with some faint inclination to expect favors from him in addition to the jewel—to expect that he would seriously have intervened his chances of winning Mademoiselle de Kercadiou to wife.

The Chevalier de Chabrillac sat opposite to him in the enormous traveling berline. As they were rattling over the cobbles of Nantes streets, he remembered a promise to La Binet to witness her performance that night in "The Faithless Lover." He had led the mercenary little strumpet—it was thus he thought of her at present, and with some faint inclination to expect favors from him in addition to the jewel—to expect that he would seriously have imperilled his chances of winning Mademoiselle de Kercadiou to wife.

"Tomorrow I shall be in a position to offer you a suitable apartment," he said, slowly, "if, and in so far as Marcolin stepped out. He entered the theater with Chabrillac, who unconsciously to deliver himself into the hands of Andre-Louis.

In the interval after the second act, Andre-Louis sought the dressing-room shared by Polichinelle and Rhodomont. Polichinelle was in the act of changing.

"I shouldn't trouble to change," he said. "The piece isn't likely to go beyond my opening scene of the next act with Leandre."

He was gone. Rhodomont stared at Polichinelle. Polichinelle stared at Rhodomont.

As they approached the wings a roar of applause met them coming from the audience. It was applause and something else; applause on an unusual note. As it faded away they heard the voice of Scaramouche ringing clear as a bell:

"And so you see, my dear M. Leandre, that when you speak of the Third Estate, it is necessary to be more explicit. What precisely is the Third Estate?"

"Why," said Leandre.

There was a gasp from the audience, audible in the wings, and then quickly followed Scaramouche's next question:

"True. Also! But what should it be?"

"Everything," said Leandre.

The audience roared its acclamation.

"True again," said Scaramouche. "And what is more, that is what it will be. Do you doubt it?"

"I hope it," said the schoolgirl Leandre.

"Then you believe it," said Scaramouche, and again the acclamations rolled into thunder.

"THE WITCHING HOUR"

WELL KNOWN LEADING MAN HAS STELLAR PART IN "THE WITCHING HOUR"

Elliott Dexter, for several years famous leading man in Cecil B. DeMille productions, was specially engaged by William D. Taylor to play the leading role of "Jack Brookfield" in "The Witching Hour," a new Paramount picture which comes to the Idaho theatre tonight and Tuesday.

"Jack Brookfield" in "The Witching Hour" is a part made to order for the cultured, restrained art of Mr. Dexter. It is believed that this interpretation will stand as the greatest of all his screen and stage work, as the man of strong will he has an unusual opportunity.

To support Mr. Dexter an exceptional cast has been chosen. Included are Mary Alden, Winter Hall, Ruth Renick, Robert Cain, Edward Sutherland, Fred Turner, Genevieve Hilton, L. M. Wells, Charles West, Clarence Geldart, and Jim Blackwell. Julia Crawford Ivers wrote the scenario while James Van Trees is responsible for the photography.

Douglas Fairbanks used nearly one hundred sets, all of them exact counterparts of the rooms their ancestors in his screen version of "The Three Musketeers."—adv.

Willie Hopkins, the noted sculptor, who did the modeling for Douglas Fairbanks' "The Three Musketeers," has a word to say about the correctness of sets in motion pictures. "Much has been written about the attention paid to details in motion pictures but to my mind no reason has ever been given for it," said Mr. Hopkins. "Most properties play an inconspicuous part anyway and details may be slighted. However, in 'The Three Musketeers' the properties stand forth so boldly that they must be absolutely historically correct, or their imperfections would be immediately apparent."—adv.

Hollywood has a new fad. It is fencing. The whole thing started when Douglas Fairbanks started making "The Three Musketeers." There were so many duels fought in this picture that Doug started a fencing class for his entire cast. He didn't want to be responsible for anybody's death in his company from fighting duels, then the whole colony of Hollywood started taking lessons. The last news was to the effect that Doug is planning a fencing tournament at his Beverly Hills home.—adv.

PROMINENT CITIZEN MUCKRAKED

In our political system there is entirely too much muckraking and very often some of the best citizens and more often the most substantial officials are subjected to mudslinging of the lowest type. For this reason many of our better citizens refuse to have anything whatsoever to do with politics and even abhor the idea of allowing their names to go before the public as a candidate. Unless the public overcomes much of this mud slinging and dirty politics the ideals of our splendid republic are in danger and the tendency is now drifting toward permitting the undesirable politician to be nominated for office because the average citizen does not like to be besmirched by the slander and unscrupulous attacks of crooked political bosses.

Last week a scathing attack was made by a publication in this community which is no credit to this city or county and which has failed thus far to show any good reason for its existence, unless it is to malign and besmirch the character and good name of those who do not seek to line up with it. As an example of this unfair and unjust attack upon O. E. Carlson who is a candidate for county commissioner on the Democratic ticket, this sheet hopes to gain some patronage by nominating a man at the primary who has evidently pledged his support to that rag. If the attack had any truth back of it we would not feel it our duty to come to the defense of Mr. Carlson but since it is such an unwarranted and untruthful statement of conditions which did not exist at the time Mr. Carlson served the county as a member of the board of county commissioners we wish to set forth to the public the facts in this case. A very few people may be misled by this unwarranted and unfair presentation of what was supposed to be a report of what actually happened at the time Mr. Carlson was a member of the board of county commissioners. Few counties have had better men serve on the board of commissioners than Mr. Carlson and when a printed sheet which purports to be a newspaper so misrepresents and garbles the truth then it is time the public should cast such an instrument into the garbage heap.

ENFORCEMENT IN SA NFRANCISCO

Bootlegging is being driven lower and lower in the ranks of criminality. The closing, one after another of the "French restaurants" in San Francisco, is a symptom. These institutions were never able to live on the food they sold. If they cannot supplement their avenues with liquor sales now, it means that bootlegging has fled to more secluded places and is conducted by more outright criminal characters, which is a long step forward toward law enforcement, even in San Francisco, where notoriously it is weaker than anywhere else.

When bootlegging is conducted only in places where other crimes are harbored and only by people who also commit other crimes, it is approaching extinction. It becomes too expensive for the poor man and too dangerous for the rich man to patronize. This is the only crime which cannot flourish without the connivance of the "respectable" classes. When bootleggers get too disreputable for reputable men to patronize, they will go into some other business. Then prohibition will prohibit. It is on its way, even in San Francisco.—San Francisco Bulletin.

CHINA

John Hays Hammond, famous mining engineer, said to get the biggest salary in the world, returns from the Orient.

He is excited about China's undeveloped natural wealth, which he describes as "incalculable." Despite this wealth, China is a nation of poverty, congested, no system, a coolie and his family living on 16 cents a day.

What keeps China poor? Hammond answers, lack of transportation. It is the same in our country, every one's prosperity shackled to the railroads. You realize this when a strike disrupts freight service.

Probably the three busiest men that California ever saw "going to it" at the same time were Douglas Fairbanks, Edward Knoblock and Fred Niblo. The three all working on the screed version of Alexander Dumas' famous romance, "The Three Musketeers." Edward Knoblock preparing the script, Fred Niblo directing the picture, and Douglas Fairbanks, well he was just being Douglas Fairbanks, playing the role of D'Artagnan.—adv.

His Wife Curbed Peter Stuyvesant. Peter Stuyvesant, governor of the Dutch settlement of New Amsterdam, which is now New York, married Judith Bayard, a French Huguenot, the daughter of a minister of that calling. She seems to have been a very remarkable woman, both for her beauty and social accomplishments and for her practical good sense and sound judgment. It was his wife's presence which gave social tone to the Stuyvesant administration, and it was she to whom her husband turned when harassed by cares of state. He was notoriously irascible and quick-tempered, but his wife was able to deal with his humors, and maintain harmony in the household. She successfully educated her children in a land where good teachers were so scarce that education was a rarity.

EARLY AMERICAN TRADITION REVIVED IN NATION'S MOST BEAUTIFUL TOWN HALL

A town meeting on Broadway—A thimy-made in brick and mortar has been built in New York City. It represents the best of the old New England town meeting which Charles W. Eliot once said was probably the most perfect plan for democratic government ever devised.

According to Robert Erskine Ely, director of New York's Town Hall, this open forum has been built by the citizens of New York, "that they may continue to meet for their use and the use of various institutions dedicated to public welfare. It demonstrates that freedom of speech and thought is not curtailed in America."

New York's Town Hall was the gift of the people of the city. Through the endowment of chairs and loges in honor of or in memory of prominent leaders who stood for the best in the life of the city, state and nation, tradition was put into this civic center. There the record stands for all time—a modest little silver plate on the back of the chairs in the beautiful auditorium, bringing not only tradition "to a new building" but also serving as a constant reminder of the high ideals which these men and women always represented. The financial side of the plan was taken care of at the same time.

Other Cities Interested

New York manned the Town Hall by subscribing the complete cost of the property and the building and then dividing the cost among the number of seats and loges planned for in the building.

The success of the Town Hall idea in cities all over the country now seems assured. An open forum, for free untrammeled discussion of public policies—a place where citizens can meet to talk things over has at last been worked out in a simple, practical way. The sure foundation of this plan makes it possible for every community to have its own Town Hall, owned and loved by all of its citizens.

More than 200,000 people used this building in the first year of its existence.

GRAIN PRICES DROPPED ON CHICAGO BOARD OF TRADE

CHICAGO, July 24—Grain prices were lower at the close of the Chicago board of trade today.

Heavy receipts at all primary markets and lower prices in Liverpool were the factors in the drop. Buying by exporters, which was expected on the lower prices, failed to develop, and the market closed weak all around. FINNEY REFUTES FALSE CHARGES ON CO. HOSPITAL

Former Deputy Auditor and Clerk of Board Shows That Institution Was NECESSARY, Then Built, Created No Debt, and Paid a Profit—Is Making a Profit Now.

That the Twin Falls general county hospital was necessary when constructed, that the building was the result of a demand for better quarters for County Indigents, than could be furnished by the city—that it has been a profit making institution instead of a deficit producer for some time, after the construction are facts set forth in a signed statement of I. E. Finney, former deputy county auditor and clerk of the board of commissioners, made public today.

Mr. Finney says that in making this statement he is not actuated by any desire to help or injure the candidacy of anybody, but is interested in setting before the people facts regarding the construction of an institution which he believes is a credit to the county. The statement follows:

"Prior to the building of the county hospital the County Jail, which was too small and was unsanitary, was being used for the county indigents, temporarily. It was condemned by Dr. Wills, state sanitary inspector, who ordered that it be closed and the indigents removed.

"The board of county commissioners made efforts to find better accommodations but could find none. This fact was laid before Dr. Wilbur, who limited in order hospitals the use of the Cottage Inn temporarily, provided that it should be remodeled, painted and fumigated.

"The county commissioners made arrangements with Mrs. Charles Dyer to care for the indigents and she rented a house in the east end of the city in the residence district immediately, residents and property owners sought an injunction. Mrs. Dyer became discouraged and asked to be released from her contract. The state was becoming very urgent in demanding better accommodations for the indigents sought, with the result that protesting delegations appeared on every occasion.

"The county commissioners then proposed to purchase the Boyd hospital and had several conferences with Dr. Boyd. His price seemed much too high and the board proposed that a committee be named upon to appraise and fix a tentative price, to which neither would be bound, but which could be used as a basis of further negotiations. At that time the commissioners personally inspected the Boyd hospital in their efforts to purchase it. Dr. Boyd refused to agree to the appraisement plan proposed by them.

"The commissioners then considered the property north of the city known as the Blagg-10 acres, but the price asked was considered by them to be too high.

"At this time an epidemic of smallpox appeared and there were no isolation accomodations for the victims except a shack on the bank of Rock creek canyon, not fit for use, but the best that could be secured.

"The present site was then purchased against the protest of a delegation of adjoining property owners. Something had to be done both for indigents and isolation patients. The American hospital association was asked for plans. The plan was not for a large, comprehensive institution, but for a modern one. The work was finished within a few hundred dollars of the original estimate. By carrying the contract over two years it was paid for out of the two years tax levies. It is the only public building in Twin Falls county without a bonded indebtedness.

"It was successfully operated and created a profit, instead of a deficit from the beginning and for a long time thereafter," as an audit of the books of the county would show. Whether, as claimed, there was a deficit later on or not, I am personally unable to say.

"I. E. FINNEY."

Hospital Pays Now

That the Twin Falls county general hospital, up far from being a losing proposition, has earned over $3300 during the last quarter, is shown from figures compiled by the board of county commissioners of Twin Falls county. The exact profit is $3300.16. The figures were compiled by George H. Smith and show the total earnings to be $17,742.78, which, $10,386.48 is in cash received, $7,356.30 is the sum of hospital bills and $1,776 in accounts receivable, many of which have been paid since July, and over 80 per cent of which will be paid, according to Mr. Smith. The total upkeep and operating expense amounted to $14,442.33. These figures are subject to verification by the board between during the new system of keeping accounts inaugurated within the past quarter.

Odd Fellows' Picnic at Beverombe Grove at Filer This Evening

All Rebekahs and Rebekah lodges in the county will be out in force, as the picnic dinner and banquet at the Beverombe grove near Filer, this evening, beginning at 6 o'clock. The women will bring eatable, liquid and will help the men with the speaking. There will be a program, and several speeches. Large numbers are expected from Twin Falls, Filer, Buhl and Kimberly.

Railroad Strike Will Close Inside of Four Weeks Says Striker

"The railroad strike will be settled within four weeks unless the Oregon Short Line can fill up its shops with people from towns and rural districts," said C. C. Blake of Portland, traveling representative of the striking shopmen who arrived here Saturday. "In the event they can not fill up the shops with inexperienced men, they may delay settlement a week or possibly two," he continued, "but it will be settled within a month. The delay, however, for even a week longer than necessary will work great hardship on the farmers and business men along the line, especially the farmers. In spite of any promise the roads make in unskilled workers may settlement with the strikers will include a provision granting seniority rights to the strikers, and the others will lose their jobs.

"There is no trouble in Pocatello. We had a great parade Thursday morning with far more bands and order was perfect. There is some feeling against the state constabulary which were sent their without necessity by Governor Davis. They swagger around town carrying guns when not on duty, and exercise more rights than the Kimberly deputies, but we have had no trouble."

Mr. Blake is around presenting his side of the strike. He was following B. F. Prater, assistant superintendent of the line.

COMMISSION MEETS TO TALK OVER THE AFFAIRS OF CITY

Mayor Says Nothing Doing for Power; Roberts Declares Gathering Is Not a Special Meeting, but Is Held to Discuss Some Things.

"Nothing doing; nothing doing for the papers. Come back tonight," said Mayor J. J. Tucker this morning when The Times-representative opened the door of the office of the street commissioner and waited "on a gathering of the city commission. (Ask if this were a special meeting, Commissioner T. E. Roberts replied that it was not a special meeting, but a gathering to discuss some matters. The city clerk was not present and the meeting seemed informal. On the implied invitation of the mayor contained in the sentence quoted, this reporter withdrew.

The meeting was held in the street commissioner's office, but the door remain closed, was not locked.

Nothing is known in regard to the purpose of the gathering. It was rumored late last week that the commissioners would get together to formulate an order of business to expedite matters at their weekly gatherings, where things have been inclined to drag.

WATER AGAIN BACK IN LOWLINE AFTER BREAK ON SATURDAY

Half of Volume in Canal Turned Off —No Further Damage Done—Italts Believed to Be Responsible.

Water in full head is again running in the lowline, having been turned in at 5 o'clock last evening after the break which occurred Saturday had been repaired to a degree which would warrant letting all the water back. The break was a short distance above the syphon under the spillway, so that it was easy to turn enough water into Rock creek to allow the repairs to be made dry.

Work continued all night and until late yesterday. About one-half of the 1500 feet of water was allowed to run through.

It is believed that muskrats caused the trouble by undermining the bank. This is the first break that occurred in three years.

"AFRAID TO FIGHT" IS GOOD PICTURE, AT THE ORPHEUM

He has a cast-choked lung, a slim chance of getting a job, a mother and a sister to support, and the kid-sis needed an operation pronto to save her life. These thousand heart pulls Frank Merry in "Afraid to Fight," illustrates the courage of the man who gets a job even when there "ain't no such thing."

"My brother Tom whipped everybody in the army," said the little sister of Tom Harper to a prize fight manager; and Tom Harper found a way, with a bum lung and no job, to put his sister back on her legs and support her and his mother. Every "real" knows at least a part of the story of "Afraid to Fight" from actual experience. See the story in the best picture of his career.

Also four big vaudeville acts.

MADALYNNE OBENCHAIN EXPECTS TO BE FREED BY JURY

Mrs. Obenchain's defense with unexcused wittness closed evidence Saturday and arguments in the case were expected to be closed in time for the jury to render its verdict this week.

TWIN FALLS IS AHEAD OF UTAH IN FINE CROPS

Commissioner Moore on Returning from Salt Lake City Says Cache Valley Is Far Behind Us in Production.

"That crops in Utah cannot equal those in the Twin Falls country was the opinion expressed today by T. E. Moore, county commissioner, who is just back from Salt Lake City.

"We went through Logan and Preston, through the famous Cache valley," said Mr. Moore, "and while there are fine crops there, they are nothing compared with those growing on the Twin Falls tract. The wheat here this year is the greatest I have ever seen. It does a person good to get away in order to appreciate this country."

Mr. Moore was accompanied by his wife and Mrs. W. F. Hreckon, on the trip to Salt Lake City. Mrs. Breckon, who is the wife of the Kimberly commissioner, remained to visit a brother in the Utah capital.

Kiwanis Club Hears Congressman and Two American Falls Men

Chairman M. J. Sweeley of the Kiwanis club announced today that the district convention would be held in Ogden this year on the 23-4-5 the Hermitage on Gardens canyon. He stated that the Twin Falls club was urged to send a large delegation and to get up an Idaho song.

Congressman Addison T. Smith spoke briefly on the American Falls project and stated among other things that Idaho had received twice as much for reclamation projects as the government had realized from the sale of public lands. He spoke of many other interesting things connected with his work in congress.

Guy Fenner and Barry Dibble spoke of the American Falls project.

Dr. Caldwell spoke on the coming Chautauqua and urged his hearers to support the movement. He stated that the signers for the Chautauqua would meet on Wednesday evening of this week.

"A daughter of mine marry a tailor," cried Sallie's mother tartly, "never, with my consent; why, from the time of your great-grandmother down to now, we Kirkwoods have worn brocades, while Talbots grubbed along in calico. And if you have no family pride, Sally Kirkwood—"

"Mother," cried the girl, distressed, "John Talbot will hear."

"I hope that he may," returned the angry woman.

"I will not marry, mother," she answered, and passed into the other room.

Her last sentence went before her—and when Sallie entered the room, it was empty. Disconsolate, she sank for a moment upon her knees before the divan. John Talbot had heard, of course, those angry and foolish words of her fretful mother, and had gone away. And John Talbot did not come back; whereupon lay Sallie's tragedy, for she loved John. Sallie was twenty years following gave her no time for grieving. First came the crippled invalidism of her mother, exacting her constant service. Then came the great war, and its devastating changes, and the money which Mrs. Kirkwood had considered securely invested was lost in the change. Stock once valuable became worthless. Sallie, eager to become a wage earner, was again obliged to put ambition aside, in the present need.

Then, as it seemed, to the great home of her ancestors, she entertained to make it pay for itself, and rented the upper front rooms to an old family friend; Miss Loren was glad of the privilege Miss Loren was too, a comfort in her close bondage, to Sallie. Sometimes she would speak of John Talbot and his state.

John, it seemed, had gone steadily on to well-earned success in the mechanical profession, which had in his beginning, appeared so humble; while Beata Talbot had married a very rich man.

It was her mother's regretful reminiscence which caused Sallie to remember, one day, the old brocade. The quaint southern town had long ago formed the custom of giving each year a costume ball, during which the Kirkwood, in her and recluse, had been recalling those happier days when the daughters of her proud family had appeared at this yearly ball in an ancestral satin gown.

"And you, Sallie," she waited, "might have gone in grandmother's silver brocade."

Sallie laughed, "I will, if I can fit up to the title and put it on," she said, "and we will have a grand parade of our own."

But she had spent over the big trunk in the attic her heart was heavy. Beata, the great, was coming early that morning that he must have this bit paid at once. So when she donned the lovely old-fashioned dress she made a decision. If she would take advantage of an careless moment as possible, it she might have next month's rent in advance; later she would try to think what would be best to do. John Talbot was in his office a short time after when she married sister paid him a call. "and Jane Loren says" John's sister finished her afternoon's gossip, "that Mrs. Kirkwood's daughter is actual want."

Sallie was still wearing the brocade when the doorbell rang. When Sallie saw who stood before her, it seemed that for one dizzy, unbelievable moment her heart had stop beating.

"I come," John Talbot said, reassuringly, "to ask a favor, Sallie."

"Come in, John," Sallie said.

He glanced admiringly at the silvery dress, tenderly into the face above it.

"It's a great favor—I want to buy the old brocade for my sister Beata. She would like to wear it to the costume ball." it, I mean, Sallie—"

"Why, I will be glad to give it to you," Sallie eagerly offered.

"I could not take the dress as a gift," John Talbot said, decidedly, as he laid a roll of folded bills on the table.

"It is most generous to let me have it at all."

Silently Sallie left the room; when she returned she was wearing her own pink print frock. She held out a tissue parcel and smiled; her voice was not quite steady.

"Kirkwoods wear wear calico," she said.

Into the man's eyes came a kindly, whimsical smile.

"While a Talbot wears brocades, Sallie," suddenly, his tone was pleading, compelling, "through what a poor pitiful mistake have we suffered, you and I. Yes, you and I. Your eyes tell me that. Dear, I will pay this little dress for you to wear to the costume ball. We shall be married that day."

Contrasedly Sallie pushed the roll of bills toward him.

"I would not buy a frock for his wife!" John asked, as his arms closed about her.

"Yes," agreed Sallie, "he may."

In Knotts Circles.

"What is meant by telling the world about it?" asked the spectacled person.

"Why, I don't really know," said Prof. Diggs, with a thoughtful air. "The phrase has recently come into current use. I suppose it means employing all the facilities of the date—the telegraph, the cable and the wireless to—about—disseminate an important piece of information."

PERKINS HEARING FOR ALLEGED THREATS UP IN PROBATE COURT

Kenworth Man Was Held to Have Planned Gun Fight with R. G. Meredith Under Jail Court on Peace Bond Complaint.

The matter of binding over Fred Perkins to keep the peace, growing out of alleged threats against R. G. Meredith of Buhl, in the probate court before Judge O. F. Dwyer, a number of witnesses were heard.

Duel Is Suggested.

Mr. Meredith testified that he had heard from a dozen to 15 people say that Perkins had threatened him. W. C. Gibbs testified that Perkins said that unless Meredith would repay him the $5,000 or 10,000 he had paid in on his Roseworth place, he would "get even." That Perkins intended that he would give Meredith a gun and he would take another and they would step off 30 paces and shoot it out.

Deputy Sheriffs V. H. Ormsby and H. C. Van Ausdeln testified that when they talked to Perkins he spoke about "getting Meredith" and did not retract even when he found that they were officers. Other witnesses for state were Ted Hermida, Jack Holder and a farmer named Dunn.

Deputy Prosecutor C. A. North conducted the prosecution. Homer C. Mills appeared for the defense.

The defense offered no testimony. The tenor of the cross-examination was to bring out the fact that the men had had some words previously. Deputy Sheriff Ormsby said that Meredith had "a bad reputation" with Meredith in his office and that he had a gun in his pocket then which he could have, next necessary, reached through his pocket. He said he wanted a square deal.

Probate Judge Dwyer at the close of witnesses said that he would require Perkins to furnish bond to keep the peace, the amount of which he would determine on or before tomorrow morning.

The following is the schedule:

Monday evening: Canning demonstration, 10 a. m., for the benefit of girls of the time Ribbon club at the home of Morris Owens, three miles east of Twin Falls on Addison avenue.

Doug always has been noted for his ability to "pick 'em" for his scenes, and in this instance he has outdone himself. Marguerite De La Motte is playing Milady, the Joseline of Fairbanks' d'Artagnan. Mary MacLaren is the unhappy Queen Anne of Austria, and Barbara La Marr plays the role of Milady, who is very much in love with d'Artagnan and the three musketeers on the jump to stay out of the bastille.—adv.
