HUNDRED FOURTEEN BELIEVED DROWNED

ASSAILANT OF BOISE GAME WARDEN CAPTURED AND CONFESSES TO TALK OF MURDERING UNCONSCIOUS MAN

Posses of Game Wardens and Ranchers Comb Country for Man Thought to Be Murderer and Wanted by the Officers; He Is Still at Large.

BOISE, Idaho, Nov. 15. (UP)—Earl Shields, one of two beaver trappers who assertedly knocked out Joe Mahoe, game warden, Saturday and then debated killing him, was captured last night by Roy Eaton, a rancher living near Mayfield about 50 miles through the mountains from the spot near Trout dale where Mahoe was attacked. The assault occurred when Mahoe attempted to arrest the men for illegally trapping protected animals.

This state game department had requested Eaton to be on the lookout, and when Shields came to his cabin for food, Eaton flourished a revolver at him before asking any questions. He promptly disarmed Shields and took him to the ranger station.

Confessed To Work

Officials said Shields readily confessed being one of the attackers and offered to plead guilty to illegal trapping. Shields claimed that he saved Mahoe's life by persuading his companion not to shoot the warden where he lay on the ground semi-conscious.

The companion was tentatively identified as "Kifler" Webb, supposed to be wanted in Oregon for two murders.

Shield's story, officers said, was plausible. He contended that after Webb had struck the game warden on the head, he himself suggested methods of getting rid of Mahoe so that Webb's mind cut off the shooting. The suggestion took the form of a proposal to hang Mahoe to the low branch of a tree to make it appear as if he had committed suicide.

Shields said that as soon as he had dissuaded Webb from the intended shooting, he was able to get hold of Webb's gun and put it into his pocket. Then he persuaded Webb to let Mahoe alone altogether, Shields claimed.

No Record

Webb has no criminal record, and he said he believed his saving the game warden's life should mean only a fight sentence for him. He said he did not know that Webb had a criminal record and that he had been his companion for only a few days. They separated as soon as they left Mahoe, Shields said.

A posse of game wardens and ranchers were in the mountain country today seeking Webb. Mahoe left his home to join them, expressing grim determination to get his assailant before returning.

Parachute Folds Trapped Soldiers

SAN ANTONIO, Tex., Nov. 15 (UP)—The six soldiers killed yesterday when a transport plane crashed near here, were trapped in the cabin by folds of an open parachute, an investigation of the wrecked biplane revealed today.

Two men leaped free of the falling plane and floated to safety in their parachutes. They were Lieut. Harvey P. Dyer, pilot, of Beverly, Kans., and Sergeant Frank J. Siebenaler of Milwaukee.

The cabin doors were blocked by the baggage parachute, apparently too slow by one of the soldiers. Lieut. Dyer said the big plane went out of control at an altitude of 2,000 feet. He said he shouted to the men to jump. Then he and Siebenaler, in open seats, leaped.

The six soldiers killed: Privates Nicolas Villanueva, Canal Cochabamba, Bolivia; Arthur W. Hardesty, Lebanon Junction, Ky.; Carl W. Harris, Winnisboro, Tex.; Harry W. Fielding, Gallipolis, O.; Denver F. McClosky, Placid, Tex., Irvin Self, Victor, Tex.

Mexican Chamber Discusses Hoover

EL PASO, Texas, Nov. 15. (UP)—Members of the majority bloc in the Mexican chamber of deputies debated a motion to extend greetings to President-elect Herbert Hoover because he is "a representative of Yankee imperialism," dispatches to the Spanish language newspaper El Continental here said today.

Bloc leaders opposed to the suggestion were quoted by the dispatches as saying that any candidate elected to the United States presidency was "a representative of Yankee-imperialism."

The motion was proposed by Representative Botero as a congratulation to Hoover for having "triumphed over American Catholics," the dispatch said.

VOLCANIC FORCE IS ABOUT SPENT

CATANIA, Nov. 15 (UP)—The eruptive force of Mount Etna seemed spending itself today as the speed and volume of the lava flow from the volcano's crater decreased. Attention was turned to housing the destitute and to the work of rehabilitation.

While the main stream of lava has diminished considerably in violence, the two branch streams moving in the direction of Nunziata and Giarre have caused their flow. The crater from which the fiery stream has been pouring is showing less activity.

Plans have been made for erection of two hundred stone houses for those made homeless by the destruction of Mascali. The Italian cabinet appropriated funds for that purpose.

The lava stream which destroyed the second highway between Catania and Messina Tuesday advanced only 50 yards towards the sea in the last twenty-four hours. The stream in the Carraba section remained stationary.

CHARGES PENDING

WASHINGTON, Nov. 15. (UP)—The government has no intention of dropping Fall-Doheny bribery charges against Former Secretary Albert B. Fall, New Mexico's lone senator from the state which destroyed the second highway between Catania and Messina Tuesday advanced only 50 yards towards the sea in the last twenty-four hours. The stream in the Carraba section remained stationary.

PALO ALTO, Calif., Nov. 15—President-elect Hoover hopes to establish through his Latin American tour the neighborly custom of an exchange of visits between the heads of these countries and the United States.

To that end, he will invite officials in the various Central and South American countries he visits to come to the United States as the guests of the nation during his administration as president it was learned today.

Hoover wants to remove all "ship hat" atmosphere from his visit. He has requested the state department that he go as a private citizen instead of an official representative of the United States. He has decided to take Mrs. Hoover along with him.

Has Reasons

Hoover's idea in inviting officials of Latin-American nations to visit the United States while he is president goes beyond his own administration in purpose. He would like to see it a permanent custom for heads of the various countries in the western hemisphere to visit one another, a custom of European nations for centuries.

Hoover has broadened the scope of his tour to include a visit to Nicaragua, as it was indicated several days ago by the United Press. With his visit to Mexico, he thus will make a personal appearance in the two countries below the Rio Grande in which most ill feeling against the United States has been shown in the past years.

The Maryland will make its first stop under the tentative itinerary at Carlito, on Nicaragua's west coast.

Hoover and his party are expected to make the 27 mile trip inland to Managua, the capital, where American marines have been familiar figures in recent months.

Invitations Come

Cordial invitations have come from other central American countries but no decision has yet been reached as to a visit. There is a possibility the president-elect may visit Guatemala. The only stops provided in the tentative southward itinerary to Valparaiso, Chile, besides Carlito, are Balboa, in the canal zone and Lima, Peru.

The itinerary will be flexible and indefinite in the president, according to Hoover's assistant, George Anderson. Additional stops may be decided upon while enroute, he explained.

WILKES BARRE, Pa., Nov. 15. (UP)—Warfare again broke out in the Pittston mine district today with the murder of one man and the wounding of another.

Radium Poisoning Slowly Takes Life

NEWARK, N. J., Nov. 15 (UP)—The hope of life of five women slowly dying from the effects of radium paint, was shaken today by the death of Dr. Sabin U. Von Sochocky, inventor of the paint.

The five women had found courage in Dr. Sochocky's emphatic statement of only a few weeks ago that he would cure himself of the radium poison induced by his own invention.

The women were employed in painting luminous watch dials with the radium paint. They gradually became poisoned. Each has been awarded $10,000 cash and a $600 annuity.

American Request For Blackmer May Not Be Granted

PARIS, Nov. 15 (UP)—France will reject the American government's request for extradition of Henry M. Blackmer, wanted in the United States on an income tax charge, the United Press learned in highly authoritative quarters today.

The procurer general today turned all of the papers in the case over to the accusations court and the court is expected to cite two grounds for refusing the request. It is pointed out that the French law limits extradition to within three years of the commission of the crime, whereas five years have passed in the Blackmer case and also that the offense of making a false statement is a fiscal statement, which was the basis of the American request, is not punishable in France.

While it virtually is certain that the court will reject the American request, U. S. treasury department attorneys and official reports of the American government will be heard by the judges. The case will come before the court during this month.

Under French law, the decision of the accusations court is final if it rejects the request, although the minister of justice could reverse the decision if the request were granted.

Earl Carroll Home Investigated With Publicity Lid Off

ATLANTA, Ga., Nov. 15. (UP)—The publicity lid placed on the Atlanta federal penitentiary after Earl Carroll went into detail about the life inside the walls, is due to pop off during the investigation of a special congressional committee which opens here today.

The committee is expected to determine:

1. Whether reports of favoritism to such individuals as Earl Carroll, Former Governor McCray of Indiana, Ex-Congressman J. W. Sutrell, and Thomas W. Miller, one-time alien property custodian, have any foundation in fact.

2. If the Russian Cheka system was invoked. Whether a prisoner who remained at the penitentiary for three months early this year was in reality William Larson, department of justice agent "planted" to spy on Warden John W. Snook.

3. The exact purpose of a survey of prison conditions now being made for four department of justice agents under Thomas C. Wilcox of the Detroit, Mich., bureau of investigation. They were followed recess to the prison by Warden Snook only after he was called to Washington for a conference with Mrs. Mabel Walker Willebrandt, assistant attorney general.

4. The basis of reports of petty graft and smuggling before the hearing today he would insist on a thorough investigation of the Larsen "spy" case and also seek to have Agent Wilcox appear before the committee. Ostensibly, however, the committee is seeking information about housing conditions.

Three Negroes Get Many Victims In Very Short Time

CHICAGO, Nov. 15. (UP)—Within fifteen minutes after three negroes held up and killed a druggist here last night, they were captured, had confessed to that killing and another, and were booked for both murders.

Patrick Lucas, 45, was killed last night in his South State Street drug store by the three negroes, Morgan Swan, 22, Napoleon Glover, 18, and Van Bonjacras, 22, when he offered resistance.

A squad of police was on the trail in a few minutes and ran down the trio in an apartment house. After a brief gun battle the three negroes surrendered and confessed to killing Lucas. At the police station they admitted killing Matthew Luck, negro, in a drug store holdup last Sunday night. Luck was a bystander.

GOVERNMENT WINS TESTIMONY FIGHT IN PERJURY CASE

Seeking to Show Stewart Falsified in Oil Trial Held on April 24.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 15 (UP)—The government won today in its efforts to place before the Robert W. Stewart perjury trial jury the testimony of the Standard Oil immunate before the senate Teapot Dome committee last April 24, when he admitted receiving $279,000 in Continental Trading company liberty bonds.

Justice Jennings Bailey overruled defense objections and admitted the report of these hearings. He ruled that Stewart was sworn properly on his first appearance February 2—which he declined to answer and denied knowledge of the disposal of the bonds, according to the record.

The judge decided the April appearance was a continuance of the February testimony and that a second oath was unnecessary.

Ruling was made at the start of the testimony of Chairman Gerald P. Nye of the senate committee called as a government witness. Nye immediately was excused temporarily and the prosecutor went at the tedious task of grueling with defense lawyers on the many stenographic corrections necessary preparatory to reading of the testimony.

Nye will be recalled probably later today. On his first appearance he merely testified that he and Stewart were present April 24. It was at this point that Defense Attorney Frank Hogan objected.

The government is seeking to have the April 24 story is in direct contradiction with the alleged falsified story told by Stewart in February.

RESCUED AND DEAD BROUGHT INTO NEW YORK HARBOR TELL STORY OF GREATEST SEA DISASTER IN DECADE

"All Night Long I Lay in the Bottom of the Lifeboat and Could Hear the Screams of Men and Women in the Water," Says One of Rescued Women.

NEW YORK, Nov. 15 (UP)—The U. S. government set out today to discover what sent the British steamer Vestris to the bottom, with the loss of probably 114 lives. A tabulation of those known to have been rescued and bodies already picked up after the sinking of the steamship Vestris follows:

TEN BODIES COME ASHORE IN GALE

FOLKESTONE, England, Nov. 15. (UP)—Ten bodies of the crew of fifteen of the Rye lifeboat were reported to have washed ashore at Jury's Gap today after the boat struck the Camber Sands while returning from the rescue of the steamer Allegro of Rica. Fate of the other five was unknown.

The Rye lifeboat was caught in a 70 mile gale which raged about the coast before noon. All life saving apparatus of Jury's Gap, Dunge Marsh and Galloway have been sifting out along the coast in an effort to pick up anyone still alive.

The steamer Allro was abandoned off Dungeness and afterward drifted as a derelict. The Allro had sprung a leak and her crew was taken off by the Smyrna of Hamburg which responded to the SOS.

Seaboard posts along the coast reported that shipping is battling against a heavy gale. Southampton, Portland and Plymouth all reported heavy seas running.

A large part of England was swept by a severe windstorm during the night. The storm reached 42 miles an hour in London and 65 miles an hour in the Scilly Islands.

Stories Told

NEW YORK, Nov. 15. (UP)—Stories of heroism, of suffering and of tragedy were continued today as the final chapters in the sinking of the steamship Vestris were written. Into New York, the port from which the Vestris sailed on its voyage to South America last Saturday, today had been brought 205 persons who were miraculously saved from death when the Vestris listed and foundered.

The latest survivors to arrive here—55—eight passengers and 19 members of the crew—came in on the French oil tanker Myriam this morning.

The first person to walk off the Myrium was Mrs. Cline Slaughter, of Chicago, whose husband, rescued by the American Shipper, awaited her at the East River pier in Brooklyn. She had reached safety on her twenty-first birthday.

"It Was Terrible"

"It was terrible," she told newspapermen concerning the sinking of the Vestris.

"I was never worried until we started to get into the lifeboats on the starboard side. My husband and I got into one boat that was being lowered. It would not lower and we transferred to another boat which also stuck. Then the Vestris started to turn on its side. I jumped for the deck but lost my balance and fell into the water. When I emerged I saw my husband swimming towards me. I was just about exhausted. Then second Officer Watson swam alongside and helped me up until lifeboat No. 11, manned by negroes came up and we got in.

Husband Safe

"I never saw my husband again and oh, I am so glad he is safe. All night long I lay in the bottom of the lifeboat and could hear the screams of men and women in the water. Some of the men whistled to attract attention. Now and then I could hear the cries of those passing a dead man, a dead woman or a dead child. Finally the Myriam rescued us."

Rescued and brought to New York: aboard the S. S. Berlin, 23; aboard the American Shipper, 125; aboard the Myriam, 57. Total 205.

Rescued and enroute to port: aboard the battleship Wyoming, 8.

Bodies already brought to port: aboard the Cutter Tucker, 4; aboard the Cutter Ashuelot, 1.

Bodies reported enroute to port: aboard the Manning, 4; aboard the Porter, 1; aboard the Shaw, 13; aboard the Davis, 1.

The tragic story of how most of the women, all of the children and many men aboard went to death in a stormy sea, has stirred the nation to every effort to find out if the Vestris was unseaworthy, if the lifeboats were unfit for service, as charged by passengers, if the sending of an SOS call was delayed beyond the point of safety, and if there was blundering and needless confusion in launching lifeboats.

The principal investigation was in the hands of United States Attorney Charles A. Tuttle. Fifty or more subpoenas already have been issued, and federal officials informed the United Press that anyone who may be presumed to have any knowledge of the cause of the disaster would be summoned.

One of the main stories to be checked is that a coal port in the side of the Vestris, just above the water line, was so defective that water in the Vestris said that water poured through the port, flooding the interior of the ship.

ALL OF CHILDREN DIE IN DISASTER

All But 11 of the Women Are Drowned as First Two Boats Lowered Were Wrecked.

NEW YORK, Nov. 15. (UP) — All the children and all but 11 of the women who sailed on the Vestris have been lost, it apparently certain today. Fate played a cruel trick when it caused the old sea order of "women and children first" to operate indirectly against the women of those it was designed to protect.

The lifeboats that did not survive were those that were put off early in the sinking, and they were the women and children. The first two boats, loaded with women and children never were even launched. The bot of the doomed steamer, swung them against her side and the ropes jammed. One broke loose and the passengers went into the boiling sea. The other was crushed and sunk by a falling davit as it reached the water.

Through the stories told by the survivors, a thread of painful memory ran constantly of the deaths of the helpless children.

"I had a child in my arms, but it was dead."

"The body of a woman with a child in her arms swept by our boat."

"I could hear a woman calling, but we could not reach her."

One survivor told how a stewardess, holding a child in her arms, was thrown from a capsizing lifeboat and carried away by a wave. Miss Helen Cubbin, of New York, a survivor, told how a boy and girl clung to her for protection. They were torn from her when the lifeboat capsized, she said, and she, never saw them again.

Mrs. Earl Devore, who was saved while her husband was lost, described the swamping of the lifeboat in which she and several other women were seeking safety. "I heard women around me wailing," she said. "and one 'Oh, my God, the children are having a.' She went down and that was the last I saw of her."

UNKNOWNS SEEK TO KILL FAMILY

Wealth Is Gone and List of Dead Shows That Some Evil Is at Work.

NEW ORLEANS, La., Nov. 15. (UP)—The two surviving members of the ancient von Herr family of Germany live in perpetual fear that they may be victims of a one-side feud being carried on by persons unknown for ransoms equally unknown.

The story of the feud came to light here recently when attempt to assassinate Baron Frederick Wilhelm Gustave von Herr was frustrated by several cocks in a pocket book that deflected and stopped the bullet just over the heart.

The score so far is—dead: The father of the present baron killed on the streets of Metz in 1925; Eric von Herr, killed at the same time; still living, the present baron, Hugo von Herr, 23, studying at Friedrichshaven, the starting point of the Graf Zeppelin on its recent flight to America.

The ancient prestige and wealth of the von Herrs is gone—confiscated after the war. The present baron, 23, still showing the effects of undernourishment during the war and scarred from the explosion of a French bomb dropped from the air over Metz, has been working in the office of a local dentist; a compatriot of the baron who knew the family in Germany.

The assassin, according to the Baron, had warned him first that he was due to die, that night. Then came the attempt which failed—a single shot fired point blank aimed at the heart.

It was an "Army Man," as the Germans know the type, who did the shooting.

During the war the present baron's father was political leader in Alsace-Lorraine—after the armistice. He suggested that the province be made an independent republic, and led a movement toward that end.

In the resultant turmoil, the Baron says, his father made many enemies. Among them might be the men who now are trying to exterminate the family.

For years after the war the von Herrs lived in terror. The present baron was sent to the United States for safety in 1921 after several attempts on the life of the old baron had failed.

Then came the shooting on the streets of Metz in 1925. A gang opened fire on the old man and two sons. The old man was killed and one son, Eric, died with him. The youngest, Hugo, escaped.

ICE BETRAYS DEER

They were trying to figure out some way under the game laws in which the forbidden meat could be eaten.

Tax Meeting Will Be Held In Boise On December 13-14

BOISE, Nov. 15. (Special)—December 13 and 14 have been fixed as the dates for the general tax meeting which is to be held in Boise to discuss and formulate recommendations to the 1929 legislature looking to a revision of the Idaho tax laws.

The meeting has been contemplated ever since the Western States Taxpayers conference which was held in Boise in August and at which representatives from 12 western states exchanged views on taxation and similar problems. Fixing dates for the meeting was left with the executive committee of the Idaho State Chamber of Commerce and Ralph E. Thomas, secretary, has just made the announcement. The sessions will be held in the house of representatives chamber of the statehouse and will be open to the public. Taxpayers from all of Idaho are particularly invited to attend and participate in the discussions.

A special committee of the Idaho State Grange interested in the tax-ation problem in Idaho and the Idaho Education association and other organizations are working with the State Chamber of Commerce and the recommendations come from the December meeting will have the approval of all these organizations.

The first day of the meeting will be taken up with discussions on state financing including methods of raising money and how it shall be expended. From those discussions it is anticipated recommendations for increasing state revenues will be made in order that the admitted tax burden on real property may be lightened. Various proposals for increasing state revenues have been advanced. Among them are sales taxes, income taxes and luxury taxes.

The second day of the meeting will be devoted to discussions of county-municipal-and-local-taxing problems. Discussion of the country unit plan of school administration will also take place on the fourteenth and W. D. Vincent, state commissioner of education, will present this idea.

There will be few speeches during the two days meeting. Most of the work will be by informal discussion and any person present may take part.

The United States Chamber of Commerce will have a representative at the meeting in the person of Morris Edwards and he will talk on "Business Men and Taxation." Mr. Edwards represents the finance department of the national chamber and is well posted on matters of public finance.

SCHOOL WOULD BE TEACHING ETHICS

French Deplore Lack of Chivalrous Education in Modern Age of Youth.

PARIS, Nov. 15. (UP)—Deploring the decline of good manners in France, several prominent Frenchmen have sponsored a proposal that a school of French gallantry be established. This school will act as a sort of Academy of Etiquet and award annual prizes for the most distinguished act of politeness recorded in the same way that the Carnegie Foundation awards prizes for heroism.

The blame for the decline falls upon modernity, but particularly upon the modern woman who it is charged "brings up her children badly and regards instruction in social deportment as trivial if not superfluous."

"These young people behave disgracefully," said Andre de Fouquieres, chef de protocol at the Foreign Office, "though most of them are sons of the finest families in France and heirs to the best traditions. Observe how poorly they bear themselves in the company of women. They behave like nouveau-riches. Behold—they kiss the hand of a woman in the street, which is an act expressly forbidden except indoors; and they lift the hand to their lips, instead of inclining low over it.

"This is not all, alas! We have often seen a would-be gallant kiss the hand of a lady while his left hand remained stuck in his pocket. Then there are those who take the hand of a girl, and those who smoke in the company of women. These young people of today are really bad bred thoroughbreds.

"Perhaps it is not a question of how they were raised. Most of them received a proper education, but they have been spoiled by the very women towards whom their deportment indicates a disrespect. It is the young women of today, the ultra-moderns, the feminists, the bachelor girls who set these young bloods a bad example. They permit everything, and the men thing everything is permissible. They behave badly, they behave horribly! A school for their education would be an excellent idea—but to be of any value, it would have to be co-educational."

Installation Of Lights For Night Flying Being Made

EDEN, Nov. 15.—Farmers living west of Eden were pleased to learn that a survey has been made for the beacon light to be used for aviation night flying. The light will be located four miles west of Eden where the highway crosses the railroad track between Eden and Perrine. The line will follow the highway and a number of farm residences will connect with this line. Manager Carpenter of the Idaho Power Co. says the line will be completed just as soon as possible. The beacon is to be a thousand candle power automatic light which will burn all night throwing its rays for ten miles.

It is expected that night flying will begin next spring and as the company has a number of extensions to build, the work will be done soon. The next light will be located east of Hazelton and will follow the highway instead of going through the rocks. If enough patronage can be secured who wish the service.

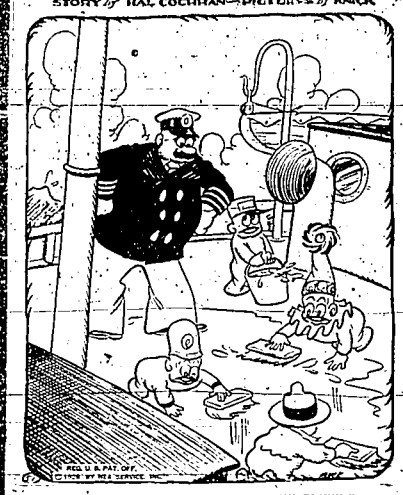
SHETTIMITES

STORY by HAL COCHRAN—PICTURES by KNICK



(READ THE STORY, THEN COLOR THE PICTURE)

The Tinymites slept sound and long. They didn't hear the breakfast gong aboard the ship, so they were late when things were set to serve. This made the captain rather mad. He figured they were acting bad. "I shouldn't let them eat," he thought, "that's just what they deserve."

But then he quickly changed his tactics and promptly stifled off to find if he could wake the sleepy lazy bunch. He rapped and rapped at their door. When just a few words he had said, the Tinymites jumped out of bed. "Ahoy there!" "Hurry up, you lads," they heard him loudly roar.

Then Clowny whispered, "My such fate. We've overslept, and we are late. But it is the captain's fault because he made us shovel coal. Let's all get dressed, and hurry out." Once more they heard the captain shout, "Make haste, you lads, and I will give you sweet milk and a roll."

Soon at the table they all sat and Carpy said, "I just wish that you'd let us have some coffee. We'd enjoy it very much." The captain walked up to his side and gave him milk. Then he replied, "It isn't good for little boys. No coffee should you touch."

In just a little while the bunch went out on deck. "I have a bunch," exclaimed the burly captain, "that you know what these are for." He pointed to some pails, bars of soap, and brushes too. Then said, "I hope you Tinymites know how to scrub. Get busy on the floor."

They all flopped down and worked away. At first it seemed like so much play. Then Clowny grew quite weary, and exclaimed, "I'll be a wreck." The captain laughed, "Ha, ha, ho, ho! You don't give up now, but simply go ahead and keep on scrubbing till you've finished all the deck."

(Clowny tumbles into the sea in the next story.)

Exports Of Nation Break Big Records

WASHINGTON, Nov. 15. (UP)—United States exports during October were $555,000,000 breaking all records since January 1921, according to preliminary figures issued today by the commerce department. GOVERNOR ISSUES STATEMENT CITING RED CROSS VALUE

Twelfth Annual Roll Call of Organization Began Armistice Day; Closes the 29th.

Calling upon the citizens of Idaho to renew their allegiance to the American Red Cross in its Twelfth Annual Membership Roll Call, which will be held from Armistice Day to Thanksgiving, Governor H. C. Baldridge today issued the following statement from the Governor's office at Boise.

"Since the establishment of the American Red Cross as a national organization almost countless instances may be cited of its splendid achievements, but it appears to me we need not go beyond the past year to find ample reason for continuing our generous support of its activities.

"Quoting from official statistics, there were 86 disasters during the year, with the assistance given more than 700,000 persons (this figure including the Mississippi flood victims). In the month of June, 1928, the American Red Cross was handling disaster relief operations in 15 states and in the territory of Alaska. During the fiscal year, relief operations were handled in 23 states. For domestic disasters $17,186,608.14 was spent during the past year.

"When the floods come and the winds blow, leaving destruction in their wake, the American people are prompt to respond to appeals for help, but it is the support through the annual membership, upon which the Red Cross depends to keep in constant readiness to give immediate relief.

"With visitations of tornadoes, hurricanes, floods, epidemics and other destroyers a matter of recent history, we cannot use this occasion to plead for sympathy in these afflicted regions.

"The Twelfth Annual Roll Call of the Red Cross begins on Armistice Day, November 11, and continues until the close of Thanksgiving Day, November 29th. In sympathetic charity for our suffering fellowmen, and in gratitude that our state has been spared the visitations of a great calamity, may the citizens of Idaho resound unanimously to this call.

"One year ago the state of Idaho enrolled a Red Cross membership that was more than double the membership of the previous year. In spite of this increase a 1400 higher membership is necessary if the state is to reach its goal. The membership fee of $1.00 makes one a member of the Red Cross for a year. Join today through your nearest Red Cross Chapter.

Dane-Arthur Stars of Prison Football Game

There are three places a man has a natural dislike of visiting—a barber shop, hospital and prison. But Karl Dane and George K. Arthur had to go to all three places in the filming of "Brothers In Love," which is at the Idaho theater as a Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer comedy.

In the opening scenes the famous funmakers are seen in a barber shop. They next are in a hospital and finally meet again in a collegiate penitentiary.

A football game between rival prisons furnishes the high-lights of the new laugh riot and Dane and Arthur, as gridiron gladiators battle for the honor of their "alma mater" and the hand of the warden's pretty daughter. Jean Arthur (no kin to George) is the girl.

MOSCOW, Nov. 15 (UP)—Mistaken for a deer Charles W. Hindman of Mount Idaho was shot and killed by his hunting companion, Charles S. Horton of Lewiston, at an isolated spot 23 miles from Grangeville. The bullet severed an artery and Hindman bled to death.

STOCK JUDGING TEAM GETS TRIP TO KANSAS CITY

Joint Meeting Of Chamber Directors Called By Wilson

By virtue of their excellent record made at the recent contest in Portland, when they placed second in competition with 50 Idaho Twin Falls high school stock judging teams, composed of John Pole, George Evans and Calvin Baker, will leave Friday morning for Kansas City to participate in the national contest. John S. Pole, junior coach, will accompany them. The trip was made possible through the industry of the team itself in earning part of the needed funds, and a number of generous, unsolicited donations.

Part of the $150 required to send the team to Kansas City was presented by Howard V. Hunt, recently retired general manager of the Oregon Short Line, the Twin Falls Flour Mills, the J. C. Penney company, the Pacific Pack and Produce company, and the Twin Falls county Panama cranes. The team made $17.50 on their "hot dog" stand at the football game Armistice day, and the 800 bushels of potatoes which they harvested, will net about $100. The small deficit will be made up by contribution of the school.

The activities of the Twin Falls chamber of commerce are divided under all business which includes retailers, jobbers, clerks, recreation, merchants, highways, state relations, industrial, advertising, parks and playgrounds and educational. Cold Snap With Snow Predicted In This section

SALT LAKE CITY, Utah, Nov. 15 (UP) A cold snap, accompanied by additional snow with a let-up tomorrow, was predicted today by government weather forecasters for this section of the United States.

Snow, which ranged from only a few inches in Minidoka national forest, Idaho, to 17 inches at the Brighton city watershed in Utah covered the section Wednesday night and early today. Almost planes were grounded but for the most part, beet and potato harvest was impeded and mining accidents were numerous, due to melting snow and intermittent rain would begin in their industry.

One serious accident was attributed to the storm. George Know and H. Tanoguchi, both of Helper, Utah, were injured seriously when their automobile turned over on the road to Price where they were taken for treatment by passing motorists.

BANCROFT, Nov. 15 (UP)—Fifteen hundred rabbits were killed, it was estimated today by farmers of the county who conducted an extermination drive Tuesday and yesterday. Another drive will be made Nov. 21.

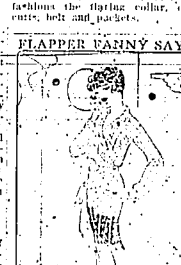
FLAPPER FANNY SAYS:



A divorcee in a woman who has taken her husband's name in vain.

YOUR CHILDREN

By OLIVE ROBERTS BARTON

Copyright 1928, NEA Service, Inc.

"Mother, where's my string?"

"What string?"

"My piece of string. It was on my bureau."

"I don't know anything about your string, Billie."

"Well, I had it. It was in my pocket and I laid it on my bureau. Buddy Smith tied a new kind of knot in it his uncle showed him. It's a sailor. I'm trying to learn how it works."

"Get him to show you again today, Billie. I must have thrown it out the morning when I cleaned up."

"Oh, gee, Mother, I wish you wouldn't throw my things out. I wanted that string. Buddy's going to the other school. I can't see him now."

The next day Billie crawled over the banisters carefully. Mother, did you see my nail?"

"Nail! for goodness sake! What did you want a nail for? No, I didn't see it."

"Oh, gee, Mother, that was a good nail. A man gave it to me. They were tearing down an old house and I was standing there and he said, "Here's a nail kid. It's a hundred years old. It was made by hand."

"Oh, well, Billie, it just looked like more rubbish to me, I guess. I must have thrown it out with the rest of the stuff in your pocket-size I intended your pants."

"Did you throw out my two stones, too? Gee, mother, I've been keeping those to put in my collection."

"I suppose I must have. You can get some more. Really, you can't keep all that rubbish around. You'll have to learn to be a gentleman and not stuff all outdoors into your pockets."

A few minutes later Billie tore into the kitchen. "Where's my collection, Mother? I had it in my drawer."

"Your collection!"

"Yes, my stones. You know, that old cigar box. I had a lot of dandy things in it, I can't find it."

"Oh, that! Why, I threw it out, I guess, when I was straightening your drawers. You wouldn't keep old rubbish like that, Billie. Little gentlemen keep their bureau drawers in order."

They were pretty much alike at Billie's house. A continual clearing out with no regard to Billie's feelings.

All boys go through a sort of rubbish stage. Unless things get too trying, let them have their little treasures. They mean so much to them. At least why not say, "Billie, may I throw this out?"

You would expect that much of your belongings.

LEAVES JOB FOR MOVIES AND WINS

Nora Lane . . . used to be a model.

HOLLYWOOD, Calif., Nov. 15.—Missouri girl looks good. That's what Missouri newspapers can say about Nora Lane, former St. Louis artist's model. Nora has become a very successful Hollywood screen actress.

Some may think that the step from artist's model to actress isn't a very big one, but it is.

Miss Lane's first jobs were in westerns, or "horse operas" as they are sometimes called.

Just Came For Visit

"I didn't crave pictures for a career, they chose me," declares Nora. "I came out here on a visit with no intention of going into pictures. Even when my friends suggested that I was the right type I told them that I had no desire to become an actress. Since I had a little spare time I took a job back in St. Louis, where I was a model, dividing my time between artists and women's fashion shops.

"One night a casting director asked me to have a test made. "Duh Mike! He chose me for his leading lady in his next picture, "Arizona Nights," and gave me a five-year contract.

Like many five-year contracts, Miss Lane's was terminated at the end of the first year when Thomson completed his own contract with Paramount. However, everything turned out for the best as far as Nora was concerned. During the six months she has been free she has made five pictures. Her last part was as Adolphe Menjou's leading lady in "Marquis Preferred."

County Assessors Receive Letter On State Valuations

BOISE, Nov. 15.—(Special)—Applying a yardstick to Idaho valuation might well be the gist of a letter recently sent to all assessors of Idaho by Ralph E. Thomas, sec. of Commerce. The letter secretary of the Idaho State Chamber was based on a publication of the Minnesota Tax Commission called the "Assessors' Manual."

In Minnesota valuations of buildings are worked out on the basis of the number of cubic feet in the building, the kind of building it is, and the use to which it is put. For instance the Minnesota commission figures that it costs from 16 to 20 cents per cubic foot to build a frame, shingled roof, farm dwelling of good construction and finish. A frame, shingled roof barn painted and with a good foundation costs from 8 to 12 cents per cubic foot to build.

City property is divided into several classifications. Class A city dwellings, the commission figures, cost all the way from 26 cents to 51 cents per cubic foot to build depending on the kind of construction whether brick, stucco or frame. Class A city dwellings are presumed to have a full basement with cement floor, laundry, hot water air furnace heat, modern plumbing, bathroom, electricity or gas, some built in features and fireplace, hardwood finish floors and good construction.

All kinds of city property are included in the classification as outlined in Mr. Thomas' letter to the assessors of Idaho—apartment houses, theaters, stores, office buildings, garages, etc.

The element of depreciation is also taken into account. Frame buildings are depreciated at from 2 to 1 per cent and brick from 1½ to 3 per cent. After a structure has been depreciated 75 per cent no further allowance is recommended as long as it is usable.

The manual recommends that assessors give the highest possible publicity to the scale of values for land and property that they propose to use in making assessments. Many valuable suggestions will result from such procedure it is pointed out.

"Property owners," the manual says, "are not so much concerned in the high or low assessment of their property, as they are in its equitable assessment compared with their neighbor's property. The objection to paying taxes is greatly mitigated when a property owner has been given an opportunity to examine the proposed taxable value in advance, and convinced from such examination that, relatively, his neighbor' property is subject to the same tax burden as his own."

BUYING REVIVAL LIFTS UP WHEAT BUT DROP COMES

CHICAGO, Nov. 15—A revival of buying power sent wheat sharply higher today, but profit taking brought a weak close with only fractional gains. Corn was sold heavily and ended sharply lower. Oats also were weak.

At the close wheat was 5¾@6c higher, corn down 1⅝@1¾c and oats unchanged to ½c lower. Provisions were sharply lower.

Wheat news was bearish, but Chicago traders were not inclined to press the selling side. Trade was quiet most of the day. Receipts were 44 cars.

Corn met with selling by commission houses and profit taking on the advance of the past seven days. Trade was moderately active. Arrivals were 378 cars. The cash market was steady to ½c higher.

Oats showed a tiltiner tone than corn or wheat early, in the day due to purchases by commission houses and the p. ofit taken. Receipts were 27 cars and cash oats were unchanged.

Pied Piperess Is Able To Relieve Montrose People

MONTROSE, Colo., Nov. 15 (UP)—Montrose housewives were desolate. Mice were everywhere and there seemed little to do about it. They set traps for them, placed convenient poison cookies in the corners, and wondered how soon the cats latest crop of kittens would develop the manner bedtime. At the height of the invasion office Mrs. and cookie boxes, the Montrose cat grew tired of the steady diet of brown meat, and checked the responsibility of her time order in the house to the trap and poison cakes.

Miss Madge G. Case, known as the "Pied Piperess," arrived here about that time, and a citizens committee gave her full power to check the menace.

After making into cat holes approaching housewives, and examining the incredient mouse traps Miss Case announced that there were two mice to every inhabitant of Montrose, and that each mouse, by nibbling here and there destroyed about $1.82 worth of property in a year.

Montrose people now are planning further entertainment in a form peculiarly attractive to mice, in spots designated as "favorable" by the Pied Piperess. Results thereon are anticipated with joy, and even the cats are remaining their appetites, according to reports.

Hundred Chinese Killed In Battle

HONG KONG, Nov. 15 (UP)—One hundred communists were killed and more than 200 taken prisoner in a two day battle with Nationalists, advices to Hong Kong said today.

MAJORITY STOCKS GAIN EARLY BUT STEADY AT CLOSE

NEW YORK, Nov. 15 (UP) The majority of rails made gains in the first half of the session on the stock exchange today, but the rise in money to 6½ per cent and the fear of a record expansion in bankers loans curbed dealing and caught up at the taking later in the day.

Tobacco which had been tumbling to minor helped the market weaken slightly cut down up and at 2 p. m. were only 24 minutes late.

U. S. Steel was a trump favorite of the list, rounding up to a new high record. General Motors became sold steady while such issues as Westinghouse Electric, several rebounds. The tobacco and "specialty stocks" were to be high favorites.

Strength in tobacco and specialty stocks reflected expansion of holiday business. Chain Stores and Montgomery Ward were prominent among the leaders in the latter group, while American Tobacco issues and Lorillard led among the tobacco.

Railroad issues were quiet and fragile little progress. Utilities continued firm after an early outburst of activity. Oils held about steady and pipes firm.

MARINES PREPARE

WASHINGTON, Nov. 15 (UP) Two detachments of 80 marines each left here today for San Diego, Calif., to be sent aboard the battleship Maryland and Utah as escorts for the president-elect Hoover on his south-ern cruise, the navy department announced today.

Mad Rush For Oil Sands Started In Oklahoma Field

MAPLE, Okla., Nov. 15 (UP) Not since the crach making day of 1889 when there was a mad rush into Oklahoma territory has there been such excitement. There hey! more excitement today than those just before 12:00 today, when the final whistle was blown starting 100 claim oil derricks drilling to reach the oil sands in the Maud and Mission areas of one of the most noted oil sections of the world.

For weeks "roughnecks" have laboriously erected piping and tools over rough, dirt roads into the district in which drilling operations prevented wells from starting before November 15. Many of the oil companies have been preparing for the big race for weeks and today, after the day was only a mad, wild, tumultuous one.

Ray Collins, "oil arbiter," who has been umpire of the curtain-raising program of the greater Seminole pool, which is now in its third year, producing 52,000 barrels of crude oil in a day, stalked back and forth among the crews this morning to see that no unfair advantage was taken in starting the race the most noted in all the oil history of Oklahoma.

Each well out down in the Maud and Mission area cost an average of $10,000, making the race cost equal an investment of $1,000,000. One hundred wells were started in attempts to reach the rich Wilcox oil sands, saturated with liquid gold.

PARTY LEADERS NOT CHAGRINED OR DISCOURAGED

Democrats Gathering for Congress Frame Background for a New Party.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 15. (UP) — Democratic leaders from all parts, and all factions, assembled here for the opening of Congress, were hardly due to cheerin at the prevailed outlook in the party.

To a man, they were not talking about a campaign or overthrow the last on the other hand they seemed pretty and privately confident. Up from the Capitol they marched by their president, candidate, Governor Alfred E. Smith.

Smith, and the leaders in discussing the fall fever matters as they met in an extra campaign which will have to be undertaken in the next two years. Local campaign, and this will involve no contest on a national scale. The present treatment of the party is not a matter of joy, but when the national prospects are to be considered.

Salmon Settlers File Damage Suits Against Company

The Salmon River Canal company has not served the settlers of the district efficiently, according to the stand taken in four complaints filed against the company today by settlers asking for damages due to alleged loss of crops because of water shortage.

The complaints ask for damages of $1,000 each. They allege that the company failed to deliver water in sufficient quantities during 1926 and that a great loss to crops was resultant. The complaints further charge that the water was delivered irregularly and in variable quantities, especially after July 21.

One complaint was filed by C. W. Rayborn and J. M. Kirkman for the sum of $2,543.41 and costs. Another was filed by Ed Snider for damages of $1,621.65. A third by C. W. Rayborn was for damages of $4,261.81 and the fourth was filed by J. M. Kirkman. It were remanded for sentence and trial of Elmo Cunningham, a third witness in the Miller case was started.

PROGRESSIVES AND DEMOCRATS MIGHT LINK UP TOGETHER

Norris Not Likely to Be Punished for Bolting the Old Republican Party

WASHINGTON, Nov. 15.—The present disablement of the Democratic party may be expected to point more clearly than ever to the progressive group in the Senate as the really active element of opposition in national politics.

Especially it seems bound to single out Senator George W. Norris of Nebraska as the overtowering "leader" of the opposition, even though it may often appear that he has little to lead. Once there was much talk to the effect that the Democratic party were dependent on the progressive bloc whenever they sought to block an administration measure.

For a while it probably will be more accurate to say that the progressives, who provide so much of the leadership, are dependent for support on Democratic senators, who vote against the Republicans in most cases from mere force of habit.

Insofar as congress is concerned the conservative Republicans are stronger, the conservative Democrats have been reduced in number and the progressive bloc, represented in both parties, has held its own.

Not Punished

Norris, that incorrigible insurgent, isn't likely to be punished for his waywardness in campaigning at the end for Smith. There isn't any particular chance of taking his Judiciary Committee chairmanship away from him at the forthcoming session because Democrats and progressive Republicans would join to prevent it.

In another year, by the time the Seventy-first Congress meets, members of the Old Guard who would now like the Norris scalp are likely to be little less enthusiastic about punishing the Nebraskan. They remember what happened after they punished the insurgents in the 1923 campaign; the Democrats came so close to controlling the senate after the 1926 election that it was necessary to coax the insurgents back into good standing in order to have even a titular party majority in the upper house. The thing might happen all over again.

The question of whether anything should be done about Norris and Blaine of Wisconsin, who also supported Smith, will be up to President Hoover.

What In 1930?

According to some of those who know Norris best, developments of the recent campaign have made it reasonably certain that he will run for re-election in 1930.

A herd of wild horses had to be corralled to get Norris to run again in 1924 and it is understood that he has figured this term as his last. But his declaration for Smith was followed by the anti-saloon League's threat to drive him out of politics in Nebraska, despite his dry record.

His friends now say that Norris never run from a fight in his life and that, on the contrary, Norris always runs towards fights as fast as he knows how; they assert confidently that the progressive leader will receive the free hand in 1930 to determine whether he, or the Anti-Saloon League rates highest with the voters of the state.

It may be recalled, however, that Norris has expressed the idea that he would like to be governor of Nebraska in order to carry out his ideas of what a modern, progressive state government should be. Thus there is some possibility that the old warrior may decide to challenge the league in a fight for the governorship.

Much Wagging

Once more come deep mutterings and wagging head-wagging over the possibility of a realignment of parties; the creation of a new liberal or progressive party which will supersede the Democratic party as an opposition to conservative Republicanism. Such a lineup is bound to come eventually, but there is not a chance in the world of it within the next four years. Any attempt to make the Democratic party a straight-out progressive party, engineered from within or without, is doomed insofar as concerns the near future.

The election of 1932 may find a wet ticket in the field, depending on what happens in the meantime. But the prohibition question with its never failing tendency to divide parties, will have to be solved and buried before the political division can be clearly made between conservative and liberal factions split by social and economic principles.

Another War Is Not Likely For Many Years Says Famed British Statesman

A Nation May Be Provoked To War In Defense Of Honor However

LONDON, Nov. 16.—(UP) Another war is not likely for many years, but war has not yet been abolished, Sir William Jameson-Hicks believes. Sir William—home secretary and popularly known as "Jix," expressed his opinion of the peace question to the United Press correspondent, whom he received in the home office in Whitehall.

"In my opinion," Sir William said, "war is unlikely for many years. But human nature is slow to change and we must not overlook the danger that, just as a man may be provoked to fight by a quarrel in which his honor is involved, so a nation may be provoked to war in defense of its national honor.

"There is of course the League of Nations with machinery for the settlement of international disputes, and there are other organizations ready to interpose themselves with a view to seeking to prevent war in such cases. This is all to the good. I think the outlook for peace is good for at least a couple of generations, but frankly, I think it could be still better if we could be sure that the increase in recent years of conferences on peace was the onward expression of a spirit of increasing good will among nations."

At that point, the man who recently, by reason of his earnest zeal and eloquence, persuaded the British parliament to reject the proposed new prayer book because he felt that it violated the principles of reformation, commented upon the part played by religion in the life of nations and the corresponding influence which it exerted upon their attitudes.

"I look at the present tendency to neglect religion with the gravest anxiety," he said, adding: "Religion affects the home life of a nation, therefore it affects the mentality of a country's youth."

Asked whether he thought silk stockings, jazz and the movies were to any extent responsible for that tendency, Sir William replied in the affirmative and he added: "That science plays an important part in it also. The proof of this it is in the increasing number of people who fail to attend church services on Sunday, relying instead on services broadcast by wireless to their homes. I think all this is most unfortunate and I believe it is a bad line throughout for any nation to adopt."

Sir William was then asked if he approved of evangelists such as Billy Sunday or Aimee McPherson. He kept nothing of the first, he said, nor had he heard Mrs. McPherson when she was in London. He seemed reluctant to discuss the matter and replied: "I don't like eccentricity in nor views," when asked what he thought of attempts to obtain a fuller attendance at churches by modern methods of publicity.

Asked how he came interested in religious matters Sir William became more talkative. "Through my wonderful mother," he explained, the minister described her as one "who is 82 years old and still in possession of all her faculties." "My mother," he added, "is a very strict protestant, and as such she has always been keenly interested in the church controversy. She knows every side of the question as well, if not better than myself."

Sir William then discussed Britain's attitude toward the immigration problem, and he explained the method by which he "arrived at decisions which either barred or admitted prospective entrants to England.

"First of all," he explained, "I consider the interest of my country. Obviously, while we have over a million unemployed here, it would be foolish of me to admit aliens where work can be accomplished just as well by Englishmen. Then I consider the mental and physical condition of applicants. Naturally we don't want to admit diseased or criminal aliens."

Harvest Of Apples Nearing Completion

The commercial apple crop of Idaho is estimated at 3,792,000 bushels, which indicates a potential carlot shipment of 5,334 cars, according to the November crop report compiled by J. H. Jacobson, of Boise, statistician with the United States Department of Agriculture. This total will be increased if prices and demand warrant shipment of poorer grades. Quality of the total crop is placed at 81 per cent compared with 86 per cent last year and 84 per cent the ten year average.

The United States commercial apple crop totals 34,441,000 barrels against 25,200,000 barrels in 1927 and a five year average of 33,700,000. Quality of the U. S. crop is 75.7 per cent while last year it was 72per cent and the ten year average was 73.4 per cent.

Meteoric Display Expected Tonight

DENVER, Colo., Nov. 15.—(UP)—A brilliant spectacle of shooting stars and meteorites was expected to be visible in Colorado tonight, according to astronomers at the Yerkes Observatory at Williams Bay, Wis.

The earth tonight was moving through the cluster of Leonid meteors, believed to be remnants of a great comet. These meteors whirl around the sun in an orbit that crosses the path of the earth each November. At about 33-year intervals, however, the earth passes directly through the main cluster of the Leonid group.

Any of the metallic bodies that enter the earth's atmosphere usually are destroyed by friction before they strike the earth, astronomers here said.

Game Laws Are To Be Obeyed But One Case Is Exception

SANTA FE, N. M., Nov. 15. (UP) —Game laws are to be obeyed, but there is a limit to exasperation, state officers here admitted when they freed Norman P. Appleton on a charge of killing a bear on a state game preserve.

Appleton had a hunting license, but state officers were unaware that a bear was on the preserve. The bear had rifled Appleton's ice box repeatedly, he said. The marauder had eaten meat, cheese and a watermelon, which were being saved for a dinner party. Adding insult to injury, the bear had refused to leave when approached courteously, or even when attacked with a stick, until all the food had been disposed of.

Appleton took out a state game license and shot himself a bear when the raider made his next visit to the ice box. Technically, Appleton was within the law, except that he shot the bear on the preserve land, always forbidden territory.

Because the justice of the peace who presided at Appleton's trial, perhaps, sympathized at the loss of food and recognized the "mitigating" circumstances, Appleton went free under the technicality.

Conscience Brings Escaped Man Back

ALBUQUERQUE, N. M., Nov. 15 (UP)—Albert Ferguson, escaped prisoner, listened to his conscience and came back to Albuquerque to serve out a sentence for bringing a stolen automobile into the state.

He was released almost immediately by federal officials, who decided to say nothing of his voluntary return but anything to do with a commutation of his sentence.

Ferguson and his brother, Harold, were sentenced in March, 1926 to one year each in jail. After four months of good behavior, Albert was made a trusty. He failed to return one day after being sent on an errand and search for him was futile.

He lived for a time after his escape in Kansas City, he told officers here, and then went to Rock Springs, Wyo., where he was married. His conscience did not become active until after a baby was born, he said, but shortly after he had moved his family to Portland, Ore., he decided to return.

His story won him a commutation of sentence from the attorney general at Washington.

Excellent Weather Aid To Harvest Of Big Potato Yield

It appears that Idaho will harvest 19,890,000 bushels of potatoes against 24,380,000 last year, according to the November crop report for Idaho just issued by J. H. Jacobson, statistician for the United States Department of Agriculture.

Excellent harvest weather has prevailed and over half the crop was in November 1, with practically no damage from frost. The indicated yield at that date was 170 bushels were acre in comparison with 212 in 1927, and a five year average of 182 bushels. The quality of the crop, speaking in terms of graded is low this year. It averages 39 per cent whereas last year it was 87 per cent and the ten year average was 92 per cent. Yield and quality were reduced because of disease and extreme heat during July and August. Up to November 7, 3081 cars of potatoes had been shipped out of Idaho compared with 6118 in the same date last year and 28,513 cars total for last season.

The United States Potato crop is now placed at 465,651,000 bushels, the highest on record. Last year 407 million bushels were harvested while the previous five year average was 394 million bushels. An exceptionally high yield of 122.2 bushels per acre is indicated which coupled with an increase in acreage planted over last year of 9.2 per cent accounts for the large total production. Last year's crop averaged 115.7 bushels per acre while the ten year average is 104.9.

DEMPSEY MAY DECIDE TO FIGHT AGAIN

SHARKEY MAY BE FIRST OPPONENT IN RING RETURN

"I Don't Know What I Am Going to Do," Says the Famous Manassa Mauler.

NEW YORK, Nov. 15.—Jack Dempsey may meet Paolino Uzcudun or Jack Sharkey in a bout at Yankee stadium next summer and the announcement of the former heavyweight champion's return to the ring probably will be made after a conference with Tex Rickard at Miami Beach, Fla., in January.

Those are the paramount points which fight fans are taking for granted today after three days of conferences between Dempsey and Rickard.

"We have arranged for Dempsey to visit my place in Miami Beach," Rickard said after the last conference, "and shortly after his arrival I expect to be in a position to say whether Dempsey will attempt another comeback. There is no secret about the matter now. He doesn't know his own mind yet and there is still plenty of time for him to make it up one way or another."

Although everything points to Dempsey coming back again, the thing that is troubling both Rickard and Dempsey is that neither of them is sure the former champion can get himself back into shape to meet a first rate contender.

Dempsey is 33, and began fighting in 1916. He has fought only three times since he knocked out Luis Firpo in 1923, the two 10 round bouts with Tunney and his bout with Sharkey. Dempsey is overweight and out of shape now. He admits it himself.

A strong indication that Dempsey plans to enter training soon is provided by the fact that Gus Wilson, his former camp attendant, has arranged to close his Orangeburg, N. Y., training camp for the winter as a step toward rejoining Dempsey.

Dempsey will return to California the first of next week and may go into the hills and start training secretly. "I don't know from day to day what I'm going to do," Dempsey said. "If I return to the ring, it will be for Rickard and on Rickard's terms".

Today's program called for 18 holes with 64 of the low scorers to qualify. Eighteen holes will be played tomorrow and the final 36 holes Saturday.

REVISED OFFENSE RUMORED FOR T. F. FOOTBALL ELEVEN

Towan May Replace Frazelle to Give Team More Drive for Coming Games.

The Twin Falls Bruins will continue to practice this week despite the poor weather, the influenza epidemic, and no game this week, it was understood last night. The boys took a light warming up practice last night with nothing heavy on the schedule.

Rumors of varied intensity are traveling around that Coach Jones is planning a shakeup in the backfield before the next game comes to disrupt peaceful slumbers. Towan proved himself a wonderful driver and line smasher in the Caldwell game and in the Boise game. He has rightly earned a place on the first string backfield.

On the other hand, Tooley, the regular fullback, is just about as hard a line plugger and is the peer of all passers in the state of Idaho. Tooley must be in the game to do some of that passing work. He is needed to alternate with Towan on the line smashing part of it.

Shoemaker can't very well be moved as he is the most versatile man on the backfield and did a good job of punting in the game with Boise. He can hit the line or skirt the ends if necessary. Wardo at quarter is the fastest man on the whole squad and will remain, without dispute, in his present place unless injured.

The only man left is Frazelle. He is without doubt the best blocker of the lot and is game to the last minute. He does lack in speed, however, and although he drives hard he hasn't the weight of Towan or Tooley to push him through.

The rumored shakeup is that Towan will go in for Frazelle, making the backfield consist of Wardo at quarterback, Shoemaker and Towan at halves and Tooley at fullback. Frazelle will be retained as a utility man to go in when some player is injured. Frazelle is capable enough and tries hard, but Coach Jones believes after the Boise game, that the revision will present a better offensive.

The epidemic of influenza has touched several of the first string but will probably be over by the time the big championship game comes on Thanksgiving day.

YALE-PRINCETON CLASSIC RENEWAL BILLED SATURDAY

For 52 Years the Two Teams Will Have Driven at Each Other on Gridiron.

By GEORGE KIRKSEY
United Press Sports Writer

NEW YORK, Nov. 15. (UP) — Football's oldest classic— the Yale-Princeton game — has its fifty-second renewal at Palmer Stadium, Princeton, N. J., Saturday.

Yale and Princeton played their first football game in 1873, Princeton winning 3 goals to none, and they played every year since except in 1874-75 and the war years of 1917-18. Yale has won 27 games, Princeton 15 and nine have ended in ties.

Since the war Princeton has an edge of five games to four. The most crushing defeat Yale ever administered to Princeton was in 1920 when the Elis won 22 to 0. In 1923 Yale rolled up a 27 to 0 victory. Princeton's two biggest triumphs were in 1926 and 1923 when the Tigers won, 20 to 0 and 25 to 12, respectively.

Last year Princeton sent an undefeated team to New Haven and outplayed Yale for three quarters only to see victory snatched from their grasp in the last few minutes of play. Scoring a touchdown in the second quarter when Ed Wittmer plunged over the Yale goal-line Princeton maintained its lead until the middle of the final period. On fourth down with 12 yards to go Johnny Hohen, Yale quarterback, standing in midfield, threw a desperate pass to Fishwick, Yale right end.

Yale 14 to 6

He caught the ball on Princeton's 25-yard line and ran the remaining distance for a touchdown without a Tiger touching him. Hammersley kicked goal, giving Yale the lead, 7 to 6. Hammersley broke away a few minutes later and scored another Yale touchdown, making the final score after goal was kicked, 14 to 6.

Yale has a reputation for invariably playing "dumb" football against Princeton. Many superior Yale teams have brought defeat down on them by their own blunders.

This year's Yale eleven, coached by young Mal Stevens from out Kansas way, may not be the best team Yale has ever turned out, but it certainly is far from the "dumb" variety. Under the direction of Johnny Hohen and Hoot Ellis, the Elis have played consistently smart football.

The defeat at the hands of Army 18 to 0, was in no way traceable to mental errors by the Yale players. The score belies the closeness of the game. Yale was on Army's 1-yard line when the game ended and lost another probable touchdown when the referee failed to rule interference on a forward pass.

White a Hero

Many unknown Princeton players have come out of the Yale game heroes. The greatest of all, perhaps, is Sammy White, who picked up a fumble in the 1911 game and ran for a touchdown, giving Princeton a 6 to 3 victory. The same year White picked up a blocked punt and ran for a touchdown against Harvard.

Arthur Poe is another legendary Princeton hero who gained his fame in the Yale game. In 1898, it was Poe's keen wit that saved the day for the Tiger. Yale was bearing down on Princeton's goal, when a Eli suddenly fumbled the ball. Poe either knocked the ball out of the Yale player's hand or picked the ball up after it had been fumbled—historians are not clear on the point—and by a miraculous run in which he circled behind his own goal posts and around the Yale team sped the entire length of the field for the only touchdown of the game.

The next year, 1899, Poe again rose up to thwart the Yale eleven by kicking a field goal to give Princeton a 11 to 10 victory. A field goal in those days counted only one point.

Ranks With the Best

One of the mid-western experts, whose football thoughts are given much recognition, says that the greatest tackle of the year is Harvey Long, above, of the Detroit eleven. Now, Frank Brazil, halfback, is the lad who has been getting most of the nice words said about him when this Detroit eleven came up in the discussion, but the boys think that as a tackle Mr. Long is much better than Mr. Brazil is as a halfback. Long weighs 196 pounds and is extremely fast. He usually manages to be the first man down on Detroit punts. He is said by followers of the Detroit eleven to be a better tackle than Raskowski of Ohio State, Sprague of the Army and other noted tackles of the day.

Navy Attempt To Reconcile Army Without Results

NEW YORK, Nov. 15. (UP) — The Navy's move to open negotiations for a truce with the Army has been given the "cold shoulder" by authorities of the U. S. military academy.

Practically all chance of the two service academies meeting in football in 1929 or 1930 was removed yesterday when the West Point publicity department issued a statement saying all "key" games for both years have been filled.

STORMS INDICATE BAD GRID GAMES

Rocky Mountain Conference Duo for One Upset This Year Is Belief.

SALT LAKE CITY, Nov. 15 (UP) —Storms today indicated unfavorable conditions Saturday for the outstanding football games of the season in the Rocky mountain conference Saturday.

A muddy field may be just the setting required by the Cougars of Brigham Young university to upset the undefeated Utah Redskins in the Ute stadium. The playing field there was covered with slushy snow and although the drainage is good, there was little doubt that the field would be soft, and perhaps be the proverbial sea of mud.

Similar conditions prevailed at Logan where the stage was being set for the clash of the Utah Aggies with the Montana Bobcats.

The farmers worked out in a downpour of rain yesterday. Bear stories from Bozeman mitigated the disappointment over the weather. Before the Bobcats entrained, it was reported the team had gone stale.

The logical outcome of these games Saturday would be for the underdogs to win. No startling upsets have occurred this year in the conference, and by the law of averages, at least one, and perhaps two are due for this final stretch of the race.

GRILL CAFE MEN WIN AT BOWLING

Defeat Idaho Theater Pin mashers in Two of Three Games Last Night.

Taking the first two of three games, the Grill cafe bowlers walked on the Idaho Theater pin smashers at the bowling alleys last night. The first game went to the hashers $17 to 740, the second $14 to $12 and the third went to the Hollywood representatives, $04 to 776.

Honors on individual scores were about evenly divided between the two teams. Farpo of the Cafe made high score in the first game with 185 and high total score, 515. Hank Bruggeman of the Theater also took high honors in the second and third games with scores of 180 and 177.

The game was just a little contest between the two Bruggemans and the Grill cafe. Hank Bruggeman picked up the first split in the fourth frame of the first game. He clipped the 2-5-10 pins nicely. He started the second game with a double and made a turkey in the last one.

Charles Bruggeman picked the 3 and 10 pins in the first frame of the second game on a splendid roll.

Bill McDonald got his first turkey of the season in the first game and went home happy, though his team did lose the match. Farpo got a turkey in the first game and a turkey in the second which helped his total by many points.

Last night's scores:

Idaho Theater:				Totals
Abbott	177	141	143	461
Bruggeman	177	180	177	534

BALLET

(Pauline Pearl Strachan)

Deep in a meadow greenly gay
I am watching the blade of grass ballet.
Tall and supple blades of grass
Deftly curtsey as they pass;
To and fro
They come and go,
In and out
And round about.
Now they thread a weaving chain
Which links the stream
To the winding lane.

The wind is the ballet master.
Slowly he stirs the blades, then, "Faster,
Faster," he cries, till a long and thin
Note from his flute
Hints their pirouettes
And they mould their forms into silhouettes;
Then joining hands they trip and wheel,
While, "Too, heel, all chase, toe, heel,"
Calls the master, urges them again
"Swiftly, more swiftly," till the blades attain
The rhythmic loveliness of summer rain.

GRAFT AND A DUTY EVERY CITIZEN OWES

IN Los Angeles the district attorney has been indicted by a special grand jury on charges of accepting money to "close up" on the prosecution of wealthy swindlers. In Cleveland the entire election board has been fired for permitting gross vote frauds. In Philadelphia a third of the high police officers have been dismissed for graft. In Chicago new revelations come every day of thuggery and chicanery at last spring's primary election.

Thus does the American democracy continue to demonstrate, day by day, that some kind of drastic medicine is needed pretty badly.

An isolated case of crookedness in public office is easy to understand. Nothing ever will prevent some lone public servant, now and then, from yielding to temptation. But at present we have no isolated cases. We have something that looks very much like an epidemic.

Our first impulse, naturally, is to look for new laws. We must provide extra safeguards at the polls. We must get a better system of checks and balances that will make it harder for district attorneys and policemen to graft. We must do this, that and the other thing, so that we can make a fool-proof system that will let our consciences rest.

Unfortunately, however, reliance on new laws won't do us a particle of good. We have relied on them altogether too much in recent years. That is one reason for the present mess.

We get fine uprisings of civic responsibility every so often; and when we get them we insist on jamming through a new law to remedy matters. This done, we settle back and forget the whole matter, confident that everything will be rosy.

But everything isn't. When respectability goes to sleep, rascality gets busy. And one of the best things American respectability does is sleep.

Why can't we open our eyes and face the truth? Why can't we recognize the fact that as long as we refuse to bother ourselves with our civic and political responsibilities we shall have district attorneys indicted, election boards fired and police officers dismissed for grafting? Why can't we understand that our lofty disdain to take an active, energetic interest in governmental affairs "provides the best possible breeding grounds for crookedness?

The machinery of our city, state and national governments is all right. We don't need to tinker with it any more. We have nothing and no one to blame for the present scandals except ourselves.

No dishonest man could ever slip into public office, or last a day after he got there, if the honest citizens didn't permit it.

AN AMERICAN FACTORY IN ENGLAND

SIR WILLIAM JOYNSON-HICKS, British home secretary, recently remarked that "the best means of securing world peace is "the cordial interlocking of commercial relations."

The Firestone Rubber company the other day opened a big factory at Hounslow, near London. At first glance this impression into Britain's industrial realm could hardly seek like a welcome step in the British Isles. But the factory employs 2000 British workmen, at very respectable wages. And, in a country as beset by unemployment as Great Britain, that means something.

That is what Sir William meant by a "cordial interlocking of commercial relations." The closer the ties of business are, the closer the friendship will be. When two countries are making each other prosperous there is little danger of trouble between them.

Ladies used to leave the gentlemen after dinner to tell their stories and smoke their cigars. Now they leave the gentlemen after dinner to tell their stories and smoke their cigars.

One of the great fears we've had about those talking pictures is that Bull Montana will be revealed with a tenor voice.

A reporter on a western newspaper is 78 years old. Very few men can go along that far, but probably he is sustained by having met so many interesting people.

GLACIAL REMAINS IN IDAHO

By Byron Defenbach

PROBABLY no citizen of Idaho is more familiar with its remote regions than is Mr. Stewart Campbell, state mine inspector. He is the writer's authority for the statement that there is no longer a living glacier in Idaho, perhaps has not been for thousands of years. But the results of glacial action are apparent all through our mountainous sections, and the remains of these tremendous natural phenomena are interesting features of the state we live in.

It is difficult to avoid technical words in describing a glacier. Imagine a spot so high, or for some reason so cold that more snow falls on it than melts and evaporates. The snow will eventually become so deep as to exert enormous pressure and one or more streams of this compressed snow will begin to flow toward lower levels. The world's two greatest glaciers are the Greenland and the South Polar caps; they are dome-shaped ice deposits flowing in practically all directions from their centers to the sea. The Greenland cap is a body of compressed snow a mile deep. Those, like many of the glaciers of Alaska and Norway, terminate in the ocean, their lower ends breaking off as icebergs.

Idaho being inland, it is probable that our glaciers were more like those of Switzerland, Glacier National park, and Mt. Rainier. These glaciers flow like a river, and drain off snow as a river drains off rain. Mt. Rainier, in Washington, is 14,500 feet high, and has eight glaciers from five to ten miles long perpetually and constantly slipping down into the forests to within some 3000 feet above sea level, at which elevation they have gradually melted into rivers.

The bottom of glacier usually carries great quantities of earth and rocks, and its wearing or eroding force is beyond human comprehension. The move is continuous, not by jerks, is slower in winter than in summer, not always downward like a river, but never ceasing. Some of the great Alpine glaciers move less than a foot a day; the Malin, in Alaska, flows about ten feet. The life of a glacier is something like that of a newspaper writer; it may be slow, but it is just one eternal grind.

Many of Idaho's extinct glaciers appear to have started at present elevations of around 10,000 feet, and to have melted at from 5000 to 7000. At the point of melting they dropped their cargoes of rock and sand, often forming moraines or dams behind which are some of our superb mountain lakes.

One of the most interesting things about a glacier is the character of its substance. At first glance it is clear ice, but it is not absolutely brittle. The top flows faster than the bottom, the center faster than the sides. Like partly cooked taffy, it bends. But it cannot be bent too quickly or stretched too far; it breaks, forming huge crevasses. Scientists have at least five different theories of glacial movement. One of them is that all the particles melt apart every instant, and are as instantly frozen together again in new positions. That idea is not as clear as ice, but it is deeper than any glacier on earth.

A monument to the taxpayer is proposed by a Filipino legislator. We suggest a statue showing two corporation lawyers figuring up a big firm's income tax.

THE NEW AND THE OLD IN JAPAN

(Chicago Tribune)

THE new emperor of Japan ascended his throne at Kyoto with ceremonies which linked old Japan with the modern nation. The hereditary family of Japanese government presents a continuity covering almost the whole period of recorded history. Until two or three generations ago the country itself kept its ancient forms and mores. Then came the most rapid modernization the world ever had seen.

This was necessary if Japan was to be great, but part of the marvel was the moral and spiritual triumph which preserved the loyalties and the immutable values. The United States, as a new nation of footloose people was temperamentally fitted to take social and industrial revolution on the wing. It could be eager for change and meet new ideas in the air, but even here the constant discard of older things for new causes an occasional fear that America will not stand still long enough to fix itself the permanent characteristics of national life.

What these misgivings must have been in Japan when change began to tear down the structure of ages can only be imagined by an occidental. The elder statesmen and the ruling patriots knew what had endured and as that was laid aside they could only guess at what would endure. We occasionally regret some departure from the ways of the fathers. We feel that the future cannot be so completely substituted for the past without weakening intangible essentials of national life. But we have just stepped out of the shell and as great nations, have to be our own forefathers. Japan was embedded in tradition, customs and laws. It could not step out. It had to explode itself out.

Even so superficial a thing as the flaying aside of old garments, graceful and symbolic of habit, for new garments generally unbecoming but indispensable if Japan was to march as a modern, must have seemed a complete makeover of national purpose and thought. The most disciplined, reverenial, ceremonious people in the world were putting themselves in the clothes and taking to the pursuits and occupations of individualistic occidentalism and older statesmanship must have asked itself what this would do to the moral core of national life.

Could they change the form and keep the substance? Could they retain what was peculiarly and beneficially Japanese and adopt the measures necessary to put them in the stream of western corrective life? Would they lose the distinction of their own civilization and become disorganized, second rate imitators of something else which was fundamentally antagonistic to their natures and purposes?

The marvel of Japan is that it made the carry-over. There has, of course, been some revolution of idea and some disintegration of the old spirit. Modern economy is a deadly foe of caste and of sacred persons. It cannot have much to do with traditions. It isn't sentimental or emotional. It must put about everything except realities aside. It makes its own gods and does not inherent them. And democracy, once begun, is a pushful, restless, ambitious force. In a capable people it does not STOP HERE. It has reached the ultimate of its purpose. Japan cannot yet be charted.

Carbon Black Now Big Industry In Texas Panhandle

BORGER, Tex., Nov. 15. (UP)—Carbon black manufacture is becoming one of the big industries of the Panhandle of Texas. Many plants, owned by two large companies, are being enlarged to increase production.

Two carbon-black companies have built five plants valued at millions of dollars to make carbon-black from the natural gas available in the Panhandle oil fields.

The companies are putting in plants with the anticipation of the industry lasting here for ten years, officials said. Should the gas supply run out before that time, the probabilities are that the investment will have been bad, the officials said.

Carbon-black most commonly is used in automobile tires. The mileage of a tire is trebled by the addition of carbon black in the rubber compound, manufacturers said.

More than 200,000,000 pounds of carbon-black is produced each year.

The pigment is manufactured here by burning natural gas against a metal disk. The carbon collects on the plate much in the same fashion as carbon collects on the glass chimney of an oil lamp when the flame is high.

The particles of carbon-black are more minute than any other substance common to the commercial world, experts say. One particle or it is 32 times smaller than a grain of flour. For this reason it is adaptable to use in many compounds for commercial purposes.

Cooperatives Help Farming Families An Educator Finds

MINEAPOLIS, Minn., Nov. 15.—Cooperative farming organizations are the "nucleus around which the farming industry clusters and holds together, is the opinion of Dean W. C. Coffey, of the University of Wisconsin's department of agriculture.

"Our co-operatives are contributing to the business ability of our farmers," he says. "To succeed, co-operative marketing must be an efficiently conducted business.

"Our co-operatives are helping redefine and integrate our rural life, community consciousness has been lost in many instances. The growth of co-operation has helped to retain community consciousness or to re-define it.

"Our co-operatives are helping to break down racial and religious barriers. There must be unity of purpose in a co-operative that succeeds. This is so apparent that it tends to wipe out narrow prejudice of race and of religious creed.

"Our co-operatives are promoting education. The consolidated school thrives best where co-operative societies are most successful.

"Economic reform, the fundamental objective in co-operative marketing, is also a mean to an end. It is a means toward securing better homes, better farms free of debt; it is a means for educating the members of the family and setting them on their feet in their life occupation; it is a means of securing recreational advantage and making the country a desirable place to live."

More People Buy Hudson-Essex Cars Than Any Other Six

The outstanding leadership of the Essex Super-Six is a matter of actual and vital fact on the outright issue of what people want. On that basis it has established its long time position as the world's largest selling "Six."

Here, for the first time, real car luxury, with brilliant performance and fine appearance, were presented at less than $1,000.

Essex alone combines these qualities. They result from original design, with a chassis as remarkably engineered in every detail as its Super-Six motor.

It is that characteristic which differentiates Essex from any but costly cars. It is that which accounts for its smooth, effortless ease in every phase of performance.

Hudson's two great factors of performance supremacy are exclusive inventions and can be shared by no other maker.

The released Super-Six principle converts to useful power, energy that in other types is lost in vibration.

And Hudson's companion invention to the Super-Six principle, upon which patents have been granted, adds a further step in efficiency by actually converting hitherto wasted heat into useful power.

The new Hudson motor gives the snap and performance of the high compression type without sacrifice of flexibility and smoothness.

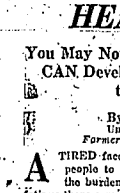
Mental Worries Pave the Way for Serious Physical Ills

CONTENTED MIND IS HEALTH ESSENTIAL

You May Not Be "Captain of Your Fate," But You CAN Develop a Fighting Spirit and Determine to Ride Down Your Cares.

By ROYAL S. COPELAND, M. D.
United States Senator from New York.
Former Commissioner of Health, New York City.



DR. COPELAND

A TIRED face hurts my soul. I wish it were not necessary for people to wear themselves out to make a living or to carry the burdens of life. After a face becomes lined with care and fatigue there comes another thing to mar it. A certain hardness creeps into the features. There is a set of the jaw and lines about the eyes that are not pleasant to see.

I do not mean that the beauty may be damaged by such lines. Indeed, some of the most striking faces of history have shown these marks.

It is not the "looks" I have in mind. I am thinking of what is going on in the brain of that afflicted one. The natural sweetness of disposition, kindliness, patience, forbearance, charity and genuine goodness are being impaired.—Next comes recklessness or indifference.

A contented mind is essential to good health. Fatigue, worry, surrender to circumstances—these are steps in the impairment of body, as well as mind.

The first week in January is "inventory week" with most business men. At that time they count up the figures to see whether the year just ended is one of profit or loss. Not only is this the purpose of the appraisal, but also it is to clear the desks for another year of business.

How often do you take inventory of your soul and body? Just as important as the financial welfare of any business man in the world. It means everything to you certainly.

An occasional check up is good for you. Perhaps you have not reviewed your affairs. It may be well that you are worried, perhaps inconsiderately worried over trifles. Even if they are far more important than trifles, they may be evils that can be removed by a little energy or ingenuity.

You may not be captain of your fate absolutely, but, after all, there are few experiences in life that cannot be modified or improved by the exercise of good sense. If they can by overcome, you should make every effort to get rid of troubles that are undermining your health and threatening your influence.

I am resigned to the fact that there are troubles beyond the hope of removal. In that event, there must be developed a philosophy that will make it possible to endure cheerfully what cannot be mended. I depend that is where religion is for, but that subject I shall leave to the preachers.

It is a pity, however, for a naturally healthy body to become clogged and sordidly dampened by mental worries. But sure as fate, it will be unless you develop some fighting spirit and determine to ride down your cares.

We may argue over the relationship of mind and body. You may say the diseased mind is responsible always for the diseased body—I may put it the other way—but plain, ordinary common sense should teach us that cares that can be overcome, should be overcome. We cannot afford to harbor unnecessary worries. They pave the way for physical ills.

Modern Eve

By Madge Geyer.

LONG, long ago in the Garden of Eden, the game of Love started. Mother Eve was the originator of all the lovely wiles and coquetries that have come down the ages as part of her daughters' and grand-daughters' and the many many generations thereafter. Each generation has added, in its own way, to the knowledge which woman has acquired, in her everlasting search for Love. But way down in the bottom of their hearts they are all the same. Outwardly, different; at heart, exactly alike.

They tease and coquette and pout and plague, and tempt and run away—until the poor men are so dizzy they don't know what to do. Modern Eve only got as far as the apple when she stopped her Temptation Scene, but she uses it's equivalent—and that's Dan Cupid—tucked comfortably away in whatever apple may be used as bait. Sometimes the bait is money, that's tragedy. Sometimes it's beauty—that never lasts! Oftenest it's a heart—that's what lasts always. And Dan purrs in glee to know that the Modern Eve still plays her original game—only with a different ending. Then it spelled banishment; now it's Happiness, Love and Contentment.

Planning the Basement or Cellar Playroom

THE modern movement to establish playrooms in the basement instead of in the good old attic is open to question. While allowing that the room is generally used only when the weather outside is inclement, the total absence of sunlight is an objection. Though the cellar or basement may be free from all dampness still it must have artificial heat and light to make it habitable. If an open fireplace is installed and there is light from the upper parts of the windows it would help. Insuring needed ventilation.

Naturally there is less noise from the downstairs room than from an attic, which is a point in favor of the basement. Raising a family is a business, career or an occupation, whichever way you may express it, and it is bound to be beset with problems like any other great adventure, and the one of playtime and its surroundings is of importance.

If the basement is decided upon then see to it that the walls are well cemented, a cemented floor over which a wooden floor may be laid, the lights well placed and safely protected from balls or other flying objects. A well equipped lavatory should connect with the room and be as well celled and protected.

One such room recently finished by an interior decorator was beamed ceiling, open fireplace, and little inches designed for a workshop for the embryo carpenter; plaything closets, shelves for mechanical toys, an inset blackboard, a built-in couch with book shelves above it, a low folding drawing table that folds against the wall when not in use, and special lighting features.

One other unusual idea is the arrangement of a miniature airplane running from outside into the basement, gradual descent with a handrail at the side. On this the children may come by roller skates, wagon, doll carriage, or any unusual way lied without a single "don't" to mar the trip. The runway is covered with the corrugated rubber so one side for those who will like to walk down without danger of slipping. It solves the trouble of getting bicycles in and out also.

One of the playrooms has the current walls pictured with a fairy story, one of Russian origin that has to do with the mastery of fearsome dragons with a multitude of heads. Wood sprites that are helpful to the hero who rescues the little maid and carries her off on his fiery steed. Quite a study, the motif is low enough to allow its enjoyment without crouching, one's neck so free.

Charming chintz coats for the upholstery of the deep comfy chairs and the couch, also to use as curtains for doors and windows. A famous artist has designed the pattern which he calls the "History of Toys," the action in the figures is conveyed in the most fascinating way. Then there are other patterns of outdoor things animals, flowers, birds and so on. Still another that deals with the sea and its denizens, the Dutch boy and girl, the Dutch clog abroad, so popular today, are used freely as shelf and mantel decorations. Children love them, especially the soldiers and animals. Some people choose to hide willow chair and settee instead of using the upholstered stuff, then it is painted to fit the color scheme of the room. The sand box, the standard baby mock swing, the animal rocking toy are almost an item, giraffe so tall which is much more fascinating than the old-fashioned horse and is not any more costly. Other large play things may be installed as wished or as the space permits. This makes a page for those who are from five to fifteen if taught to appreciate the amusements that are provided at home.

THE BRAVE ARE DEATHLESS

An Armistice Day Thought
Nov. 11th, 1928.

I tell you they have not died. They live and breathe with you.
They walk now here at your side,
they tell you things are true.
Why dream of popped sod when you can feel their breath—
When flower and soul and God know that there is no death?

Guide: "That man over there is an artist of note."

Banker: "Yes, I know. I have three of his notes."

Small boy (looking at the new rural mail box): "It must be the minister's.

Another Little Lad: "No, it can't be. Don't you see what it says on it? 'No collection on Sundays.'"

There's never been a substitute for work—or luck, either.

ADVICE

To John Held, Jr., Gifts
Saucy maids of John Held, Jr.,
You, I think, should watch your step.
Too much speed, you know, will ruin your Rep.

Cross your legs with less composure,
Tempt ye not the wanton glance?
Be discreet, or you'll expose your Pants!

Fred makes this encouraging—or discouraging remark: "If some of the girls I knew twenty years ago had retained their schoolgirl complexions they'd look so freckled their friends would laugh at them today."

BITS O' WISDOM

Enthusiasm is confidence in action; it is the spark plug of any enterprise.

Work is the expression of your creative instinct.

You don't grow old until you are too lazy to learn.

It is the duty of industry to give the boy a chance.

Good manners consist largely in treating the other fellow as though he were as important as he feels.

Just why should a glib stranger be anxious to make you a present of several thousand dollars? Invest in lasting, repent in poverty.

Price war: Accumulating a deficit for the winner to collect from the public after it's over.

Now that college expenses are replied the money can be used to keep the children in tires.

Tid Bits: It seems that the young men are losing confidence in old methods. Most of them are wearing suspenders.

In the good old days people referred to the good old days.

HE RESTS IN PEACE

He was a college student and crowked one summer day,
But someone said he'd only passed away.

A western land agent said, "Let me suggest
The gentleman in question surely did go west."

Whereupon the hardware dealer whose name was Tuckett,
Said, "No my friend, you're wrong, he kicked the bucket."

While the football man remarked as he played the game of golf,
"I think that my friend surely did kick off."

The bank cashier sagely shook his head and said, "Too much glib.
That's why perhaps that he cashed in."

The ferryman remarked as he manned his craft the Rever,
"'twas only last night that that young man passed over."

And the hairdresser choked and almost cried,
When she made the statement that the college student dyed.

PRACTICAL POLITICS

"Atlas carried the world on his shoulders."

"What we want is a man who can carry a few close states."

Somehow we just can't help being a little more tolerant toward the campaign liars of our own party.

Spared in Factory Blast

There were eleven in the Blaney family before an explosion of celluloid and chemicals wrecked the Preble Box Toe Factory across the street from their home in Lynn, Mass. Now the home is gone, the father was taken, dying to a hospital, and only these four children survive. Harry and Norman Blaney, front, were injured by the blast; Lillian and Ella escaped unscathed. But their mother, Mrs. Harry Blaney, four sisters and one brother were killed.

ENEMIES IN WAR MEET AS FRIENDS

Fonck and Udet, Air Aces, Swap Compliments in Berlin, Now It Is All Over.

BERLIN, Nov. 15.—"I'm very happy to meet you," said the German to the Frenchman. "But have we not met before?"

They had—these two well-groomed men, vigorous in their thirties, who smiled at each other and cordially shook hands when formally presented in the lobby of a Berlin hotel.

One was Captain Rene Fonck, the greatest of French aces, who shot down 75 German planes during the war. The other was Captain Ernst Udet, the greatest of surviving German aces, who shot down 62 Allied machines.

Last Met In The Air

Their last previous meeting had been shortly before the Armistice, ten years ago, instead of smiles and pleasant words they were matching flying skill and marksmanship as they rode thru the shell-infested skies over the battlefront.

Both were great craftsmen, and they can through alive. Now they are friends.

"Yes, I have found a new friend in the person of an old enemy," said Captain Fonck. "We were gunning for each other in the old days, but we can meet pleasantly together now. We talk the same language—the language of the flying man."

Fonck's Gun Jammed

"I had great luck one day," said Captain Udet as they talked together of war days. "You shot down three of my comrades, and probably the only reason I am able to shake your hand today is that your machine gun jammed just in time for me."

Fonck was here to visit the German aviation show. Jean Marbeuf, Berlin correspondent for a Paris newspaper, a good Frenchman and an admirer of Udet, brought the two famous aviators together.

"If these two men had been left alone together ten years ago one of them would not have lived," said Marbeuf. "Now they are able to meet in a friendly and fraternal spirit like two athletes after a sporting match. The interview between the two should be a red-letter day in the history of Franco-German peace. They have set an example for old 'adversaries which will do more to neat friendships than political maneuvers."

How Udet Fought

Fonck and Udet exchanged many reminiscences. Fonck was particularly interested when the German ace explained:

"I used to wait until nighet was about to fall and then flying at a height of 15,000 to 18,000 feet, I would get aqven or eight miles behind your lines, turn my tail toward the setting sun, and wait for your machines to return home. With the sun in their eyes they were easy to pick off."

Udet spoke admiringly of the French commandant Happe, saying: "I remember on the 12th of October, 1916, a fight in which I had shot down two planes over Ghlermbert when I recognized Happe. We knew him by his beard, which we could see flying in the wind. What audacity! We regarded him as an heroic madman."

Both Plead For Peace

Their talk of war ended with words of peace.

"When you look back upon all these things, how can one help being for peace?" remarked Udet.

"Yes," replied Fonck, "if you asked the views of the ex-service men I am sure there would be a crushing majority in favor of peace."

Farmers Protest Against Herds Of Feeding Antelope

DEER TRAIL, Colo., Nov. 15. (UP)—Farmers in this district are protesting that herds of antelope are destroying their crops. One man reported to game officers that a herd of 75 antelope had been feeding upon his wheat, his bean fields, and other crops for three weeks.

More than 200 head of antelope are concentrated in a small territory here, and, under protection of the game laws, are growing fat on an excellent diet, farmers said.

Protests made here included suggestions that the state pay damages on crops overrun by the antelopes, and that an open season be fixed in which the bucks can be killed.

Janitor Given Leave

Jack Wilson who has served as janitor of the Eden high school ever since the building was built, was granted a leave of absence by the board of directors at their meeting at the high school building Monday evening. The work at the high school will now be in charge of Karl Reynolds, under the supervision of Henry Schwab, chairman of the board.

They are planning a visit to the Jerome Co-Operative Creamery and other points of agricultural interest soon. All are greatly interested in the work this year.

Mr. and Mrs. W. R. Summer of Jerome came down for the Odd Fellows party Monday evening.

Arthur Price who is employed at the Eden elevator had the misfortune to break the bone in his hand Monday afternoon, while cleaning grain, his hand being caught in the machinery. A physician, hastily summoned, took an X-ray and found that the break was a clean one and will not permanently cripple the hand.

Casualty Not To Player In Game

NEW YORK, Nov. 15.—One casualty was reported in the camp of the New York university football squad after their game with Colgate and it wasn't a player.

Not a member of the Violet squad was injured in the game, but Charley Porter, N. Y. U. trainer, slipped on a bar of soap in the dressing rooms between halves.

As a result, Porter, instead of spending his time doctoring the players in the days that intervened between the Colgate game and the next game was forced to attend his own badly bruised hip.
