Quake rattles Puget Sound, injuring dozens, cutting power, roads

Damage could have been worse

SEATTLE – A powerful earthquake rocked the Northwest on Wednesday, shattering windows, crushing cars in showers of bricks and sending frightened people running into the streets of Seattle and Portland, Ore. About 250 people were injured and damages were estimated at about $1 billion.

The strongest quake to hit Washington state in 52 years closed the Seattle airport for several hours and knocked out power to hundreds of thousands of people. It also cracked the dome atop the state Capitol in Olympia and briefly trapped about 30 people atop a swaying Space Needle in Seattle.

"Everyone was panicked," said Paulette DeRooy, who scrambled onto a fire escape in a Seattle office building.

"I thought a car had hit my building," said Sam Song, who owns a restaurant in Everett, 30 miles north of Seattle. "Then the ground started moving around."

"It was like a bad dream," said Aron Brown, who works at the Fifth Avenue Cafe. "Everything

The 6.8 magnitude earthquake that hit the Northwest on Wednesday interrupted many people in their daily lives. Here are some of their stories:

"I thought the building was going to fall on me," said eighth-grader Kerin Sandilands, who was standing on the steps of the Washington state Capitol in Olympia when the 6.8 temblor hit Wednesday.

Kerin and classmates were on a field trip from Horizon Middle School in Ferndale, about 150 miles north. They wound up just 41 miles from the quake's epicenter. "It was kind of rolling," said classmate Dan Straghan. "It was hard to walk."

Hospital panel nears decision

By Ruth Streeter
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS – A citizens' advisory committee will make its recommendation Monday on a proposal to turn Magic Valley Regional Medical Center into a nonprofit entity.

It's a move that could make it easier for the county-owned Magic Valley Regional to negotiate with other hospitals, but could limit public discussion of some hospital operations.

After the citizens' committee weighs in with its recommendation to the hospital board, the board could decide at its March 12 meeting to pass a recommendation on to Twin Falls County commissioners, who then have the ultimate say.

Or the hospital board might decide instead at its April meeting, board Chairman Terry Schultz said.

Hospital officials have for years discussed turning the hospital into a 501C3, a nonprofit classification recognized by the Internal Revenue Service. As a result, board members might feel comfortable accepting a recommendation to go nonprofit, Schultz said.

The citizens' committee had originally scheduled four meetings through April to work toward a recommendation. But after two meetings committee members have described as productive, group members are thinking a decision would be made sooner than expected.

When the issue goes to the county commissioners, they might – or might not – hold their own hearing.

Because both the hospital board and the citizens' committee represent different segments of the public, Schultz doesn't anticipate the need for commissioners to hold a public hearing.

Commissioner Bill Brockman also said he doesn't think a public hearing is necessary, unless required by state law.

Water levels still stink for 2001 crops

TWIN FALLS – The peak of the snow season is just a month away, but snowpack remains disappointing with some good news and some bad news – and the good news isn't all that great.

While the snowpack in the mountains of western Wyoming has improved slightly in the past month, it still is far below the average for this time of year. And local snow levels have declined in the hills of southern Idaho.

Precipitation in the upper reaches of the Snake River basin was about 70 percent of average for February, said Ron Abramovich, water supply specialist for the Natural Resources Conservation Service's Snow Survey.

And the snowpack in those mountains, which supply irrigation water for southern Idaho, has grown to 61 percent of aver-

Lawmakers ponder school facilities question

Recent court ruling, budget surplus add urgency to debate over funding

By Michael Journee
Times-News writer

BOISE – To build schools, or not to build schools?

It's a fundamental philosophical question that won't just go away for Idaho lawmakers.

For years now, school districts and a few persistent lawmakers have been trying to get state help for districts with crumbling school buildings.

Like most years, a number of measures to that end have been refused by the Legislature's Republican supermajority, which has a legendary penchant for local control. Most of those measures attempt to ease the state's requirement for a 2/3 majority on school bond ballot initiatives or allow the state to pitch in a percentage of bonds approved by voters.

But a district court ruling and a record $340 million budget surplus has changed the dynamics of the debate this year.

While the Idaho Constitution says the state has ultimate responsibility to ensure educational quality, tradition has always placed responsibility for buildings on the districts themselves.

2001 Legislature

Budget includes $ for MV – B2

"For 100 years it didn't apply to buildings," said Rep. Todd Hammond, R-Rexburg.

But 4th District Judge Deborah Bail sees it differently. The state's responsibility does include buildings, and she recently ordered the Legislature to do something about school facility safety needs or have it done for them by the courts.

Such a change is a bitter pill to swallow, many say, even if school board members like Wendell's John Wright must pull middle school students out of a literally rotting school building and cram them into annexes and temporary buildings or bus them to another school district that has a little extra room.

While proponents of state funding for school buildings are usually the authors of measures dealing with the issue, Bail's ruling has brought forward a number of measures from conservatives seeking ways to deflect the court's ruling without putting state money into local school buildings.

Chief among them may be Hammond's constitutional amendment, House Joint Resolution 1, spelling out his belief that the state's responsibility for education does not include building schools for local districts.

By accepting or denying the amendment on the next available ballot, the people of Idaho will decide—the matter, which, Hammond said, is actually beyond the authority of the courts and the Legislature.

"This is really a constitutional issue," Hammond said.

No matter how the vote comes out, the issue will be settled, Hammond said.

Whether the measure will eventually pass is unknown, but Hammond was able to get the House State Affairs Committee to sign off on the idea this week. It's up for a vote in the full House soon.

Hammond's amendment is one of at least 11 measures to come before lawmakers this year trying to deal with the issue in one way or another.

With the budget surplus, and a record proposal for new spending by Gov. Dirk Kempthorne, including the renovation of the 95-year-old Statehouse, proponents of state funding for school buildings have been especially adamant about getting money for schools.

During Senate debate on a resolution pledging financial support for the Statehouse renovation, which does not have an affixed price tag, school facilities were repeatedly mentioned as a more worthy expenditure.

"I represent a school district that has a condemned building," Sen. Clint Stennett, D-Ketchum, told his colleagues. "I cannot with good conscious support this measure."

Wendell Middle School, which was condemned by the state a year ago, is in Stennett's district. Despite the district's dire situation, a $6.1 million bond issue failed with voters last October.

With students housed in a number of different places, including the Deaf and Blind School in Gooding, Wright said he is disappointed with the Legislature's reluctance to help.

The demographics of Idaho have changed since the days when the constitution was written. Lawmakers can't cling to the hope of not financing school buildings. With rural agricultural economies surviving on a season-to-season basis, the economic base just is not there locally.

Wright said lowering the 2/3 requirement on bond issue votes would help a lot. "I'm not asking them to build a school for me," Wright said. "Just make it a little easier for me to do it."

He was disappointed to hear of the demise of a proposed constitutional amendment, sponsored by Sen. Gary Schroeder, R-Moscow, that would lower it to 60 percent. The Senate voted it down on a 15-18 vote Tuesday.

"They just say 'find a place and stuff them in and then forget about it,'" Wright said. "They'll regulate them as far as whether they're safe or not and they are willing to regulate you in other ways, but they're not willing to help."

Wright said he's disappointed in the lack of leadership Kempthorne, who does not support opening state coffers to school districts for buildings, has shown on the issue.

"It's pure politics," Wright said.

Jerome School District Superintendent Jim Cobble, whose district has tried to pass several bond issues in recent years said the legislature should form a committee made up of lawmakers, agency representatives, and school administration officials to resolve the issue.

"No one of these groups can do it together," Cobble said. "Judge Bail said as much in her decision."

Commissioners won't be satisfied until all the questions regarding nonprofit status are answered, Brockman said, but he added he is happy with the committee's progress.

Committee Co-Chairman Doug Vollmer is confident the public is well-represented. The committee has been active and its members have been fielding questions from the public.

And an earlier committee – formed in 1998 when other hospitals were looking at buying, leasing or affiliating with Magic Valley Regional – set the groundwork for this committee, Vollmer said.

That committee soon discovered that people then, as now, had concerns about losing control of their hospital, Vollmer said.

A nonprofit entity would be governed by a countywide citizens' board.

Moving to nonprofit status could free Magic Valley Regional from burdensome county policy and procedure, for tax reasons, Magic Valley Regional CEO Jerry Hart said in an interview with The Times-News Wednesday.

Hart said he doesn't want to use nonprofit status to mask hospital business behind a "black curtain." But the shift would limit public access to certain hospital business, and Hart said he does not want the hospital's long-term strategic planning done in public view.

"I really believe a government hospital is really a difficult and cumbersome thing to try and operate with," Hart said.

Hart also says county-owned hospitals aren't attractive to other health care centers considering partnerships. Magic Valley Regional is pursuing such a partnership with Boise-based St. Luke's Regional Medical Center, and officials have said they would prefer working with a nonprofit hospital, Hart said.

The President's proposal

Here are how some items in Bush's proposed budget could affect people.

700,000:	The number of veterans currently enrolled in both Veterans Administration and Defense Department health plans. Bush's plan would make them choose only one.
$17,500:	The maximum amount forgiven in student loans for math or science majors who agree to teach in needy high schools for five years. Up from $5,000.
$7,500:	The amount of a permanent adoption tax credit. Up from a $5,000 credit set to expire next year.
$400:	The amount teachers would be able to deduct for out-of-pocket classroom expenses.
$300:	The amount a family of five making $32,000 could save in income taxes in the first year of tax cuts. A childless single person making $60,000 could save $190.
$290:	The average worth of an additional military pay raise. Bonuses for some personnel.
Six months:	The maximum length of time immigrants would need to wait to have citizenship and green-card applications processed once more government workers are hired and performance incentives set.
Several thousand:	The number of flood-plain properties requiring repeated rebuilding from floods that would be cut off from federal flood insurance.

Bush hands $1.96 trillion budget to Congress

WASHINGTON (AP) – President Bush shipped Congress a $1.96 trillion budget on Wednesday, formally triggering the legislative fight over his push for a mammoth tax cut financed by swelling surpluses and restricted spending.

Though scant in detail, the 207-page proposal is a first overview both parties will use in upcoming months in their battle over budget priorities. Bush's recipe of tax cuts, dramatic debt reduction and restrained spending on energy, agriculture and Medicaid covers fiscal 2002, which begins Oct. 1.

Overall, Bush's first budget envisions spending 5.5 percent, or $103 billion, more next year than the $1.86 trillion planned for this year.

The morning after extolling the plan in a nationally broadcast address to lawmakers, Bush jetted to the country's heartland for two days of campaign-style events for the package. He characterized its keystone $1.6 trillion, 10-year cut in income tax rates and other levies as relief for taxpayers overburdened by hard times.

"When you couple high energy prices with consumer debt, there's a lot of good folks who struggle in America," he said in Beaver, Pa.

Democrats contended Bush's tax plan was a bloated giveaway to the rich that understated its cost by $1 trillion and threatened to sop up money needed for education and other priorities. They prefer a $750 billion tax cut.

"The more people understand the numbers, the more they're inclined to say, 'This is too big. It's too much,'" said Senate Minority Leader Tom Daschle, D-S.D.

Spotlighting the intensity of this year's budget fight, House Speaker Dennis Hastert, R-Ill., said Democrats who oppose the tax cut preferred "a recession if that means they will have a political advantage. We're not going to let that happen."

Eager to move quickly, majority Republicans planned to muscle the core of Bush's tax plan – an across-the-board cut in income tax rates – through the House Ways and Means Committee on Thursday and through the full House next week.

Following the president's call for retroactive tax cuts to spur the lethargic economy, the measure would start phasing in the new, lowest 10 percent rate as of last Jan. 1. That would bring the cost of the income tax cut through 2011 to $960 billion. Congress would handle the other Bush tax cuts separately.

age, up from 56 percent at the end of January. In the hills south of the Snake River and in the Wood River Valley the snowpacks have declined.

Though there has been snow on the ground in town, the region is not getting high elevation snow, he said. Long term records for four sites in Yellowstone show this year as the second lowest snowpack since 1938 – the lowest was 1977, with about half as much snow as this year, Abramovich said.

"The storms aren't coming in like you'd expect," he said. They have been splitting in a unusual pattern that is sending the weather systems around the Northwest.

The National Weather Service predicts near normal precipitation for March and the next couple of months.

But Idaho water officials are skeptical.

Last fall forecasts also called for near normal precipitation this winter, said Mark Croghan, a hydrologist with the Bureau of Reclamation in Burley.

The federal reservoir system on the upper Snake is at about 68 percent of capacity – the system holds more than 4 million acre-feet of water when full.

Bureau officials expect the American Falls reservoir to fill, but filling Palisades may be tough, "unless we get a lot of moisture in the next couple of months – or a wet spring," Croghan said. Jackson Lake may also fill. Those three reservoirs hold the bulk of the water in the system.

Meanwhile irrigation officials are warning farmers to consider the likely tight water supply this summer when deciding what crops to plant.

Stories

"First there was rumbling, then I looked up, and the big columns were shaking," said eighth-grade teacher Susan Dickinson. "The doors were shaking."

Students were told to pair up and gather on a walkway. Within half an hour they were filing back onto a bus for the three-hour ride home.

Daryl Stevens was on the observation deck near the top of the 605-foot Space Needle with a friend visiting from Japan.

"You couldn't walk," he said. "It was like a rolling ship in the ocean."

They were stuck there for about 20 minutes before the elevator and stairs were deemed safe.

Space Needle facilities director Rick Harris was on the mechanical deck, 20 feet above them.

"We could barely stand up, it was shaking that hard," Harris said. "It was probably only 30 seconds, but it seemed like an hour."

He said he could see clouds of dust coming up from Pioneer Square and the south end of downtown. "This is the place to be in an earthquake. It's definitely the best ride in town."

The Space Needle was built to withstand a 9.1 earthquake.

Sen. Jim Kastama, D-Puyallup, was in a caucus meeting with fellow Democrats on the third floor of the Capitol building.

"Everyone jumped under the table. People were very scared. Everyone was clutching on to one another underneath the table, just hoping for it to end," Kastama said.

They heard things falling and breaking, he said, and then the lights went out. "Things started falling and everyone tried to stand in the doorway," said Sen. Lisa Brown. "A security guard jumped on top of me, which was very nice of him."

Steve Cooper was standing in an outside doorway of the building he owns in downtown Olympia. He said he watched the quake roll toward him – a three-foot swell that lifted buildings, sidewalk and pavement. The structure cracked and boomed as tons of ornate stucco tile fell from the roof and upper wall onto the sidewalk.

"You could see everything heave. When it hit the building, it was like a bomb going off," Cooper said, standing on the sidewalk across the street, still shaking an hour later.

"It was like a waterfall. It just cascaded over."

Part of a 300-foot-high bluff shook loose and knocked Derek Burns' house off its pilings and onto the beach at Salmon Beach, a secluded neighborhood of 100 homes along the Puget Sound waterfront in Tacoma.

"Where do I go? What do I do?" said Burns, 27, a locksmith.

Bush budget cuts program Seattle says saved lives

Knight Ridder News Service

WASHINGTON – A disaster prevention program that was credited with saving lives in the earthquake that hit the Pacific Northwest Wednesday was targeted for cancellation by the Bush administration a few hours before the temblor struck.

In the budget proposal it presented to Congress Wednesday, the administration canceled the Federal Emergency Management Agency's Project Impact, saying the $25 million federal-city program "has not proven effective."

When the quake began, dozens of city, state and local officials were celebrating the program's third anniversary in the Phinney Neighborhood Center, an 86-year-old brick school turned recreation center that had been retrofitted under a city program to survive earthquakes.

"I thought I was possibly going to die," said Roger Faris, the Project Impact coordinator for the Phinney Neighborhood Association, a non-profit group that represents 14,000 residents in a Seattle neighborhood of older homes. The former school, filled with nearly 100 children, "was shaking and moaning and groaning. I was under a table thinking this was going to be my last minutes on Earth."

But the old building survived with just a few cracks, and the emergency managers helped evacuate all the children to the street.

Project Impact has helped retrofit all of Seattle's school buildings to make them more earthquake resistant, and was working on bracing schools', water tanks, bookshelves, furniture and computers.

Late Wednesday, President Bush said he dispatched his new director of FEMA, Joe Allbaugh, to Washington and said: "We will work with state and local officials, to provide whatever help we can to the people of the state of Washington."

When asked if his proposed FEMA budget cuts were a problem, the president walked away from reporters.

Quake

was shaking. I just got the heck out of the building into the middle of the street. I'm still shaking."

Still, residents in this earthquake-prone region counted their blessings that the magnitude 6.8 tremor caused relatively little damage, mostly because it occurred 30 miles below the Earth's surface.

Given its strength, such a deep quake "is the best kind of earthquake to have," said Bill Steele, of the University of Washington seismology laboratory.

The quake hit at 10:54 a.m. and was centered 35 miles southwest of Seattle, according to the National Earthquake Information Center in Golden, Colo.

In recent years, millions of dollars have been spent in the Puget Sound region, home to more than 3 million residents, to remodel schools, buildings and highways to protect against earthquakes.

In contrast, the magnitude-6.7 Northridge quake in Los Angeles in 1994 struck just 11 miles underground. It caused an estimated $40 billion in damage and killed 72 people.

"I think the city has been very mindful of earthquake risks," Seattle Mayor Paul Schell said. "We really got off rather easily with an earthquake of this magnitude, because of its depth," Steele told KOMO-TV in Seattle.

Had the quake been closer to the surface, severe damage could have occurred from Olympia to north of Seattle, he said. "It would have been really bad news."

Washington Gov. Gary Locke declared a state of emergency – a first step in mobilizing state services and seeking federal aid – and surveyed the area by helicopter.

Schell and King County Executive Ron Sims likewise declared states of emergency.

Twenty-seven injuries were reported by Seattle's Harborview Medical Center, with six people admitted. Another 49 people were treated at two hospitals in Olympia.

Screams erupted at a Seattle hotel where Microsoft founder Bill Gates was addressing an education and technology conference. He was whisked away as his audience bolted for the exits. Some people were knocked down by others trying to get out. Overhead lights fell to the floor.

The quake forced operation of the U.S. Coast Guard Vessel Traffic Service out of its Seattle building onto a Coast Guard cutter, but service was not disrupted and shipping traffic was not widely affected, Coast Guard Petty Officer William Brandon said.

A 2,000-gallon oil spill on Harbor Island in Seattle was contained on land, the Coast Guard said.

There was damage to a number of buildings, including a six-story apartment building that lost a corner of its ceiling, exposing one unit to the sky and forcing evacuation of the other 76 units. Five windows burst at The Seattle Times' classified advertising building, and bricks fell from the top of Starbucks headquarters onto cars parked below.

Magnitude 6.8 earthquake

A seismogram from the Web site of U.S. Geological Survey's Horse Mountain station in Northern California shows vibrations from the earthquake that jolted the Northwest on Wednesday.

Generosity helps program reach out to at-risk youth

Thank you, Magic Valley, for your support of the United Way of South Central Idaho. Through your generosity, the Foster Grandparent Program and the Senior Companion Program offer support to at-risk youth and homebound and isolated elderly.

Fifty-five foster grandparents work in 22 schools and Head Start settings across the Magic Valley, offering one-to-one tutoring for children working to achieve their highest potential. Thirty-five senior companions work to enhance the stability of clients who wish to remain with their own home environment. These volunteers read to clients, transport them to medical appointments, help with shopping and, most importantly, offer companionship, friendship and regular visits to those who are lonely and isolated.

Without the help communities of the Magic Valley offer through the United Way, these programs would cease to exist. Thank you for providing a way to offer the goodness these programs bring to the communities of the Magic Valley.

Family grateful for emergency help, community support

We would like to take this opportunity to thank everyone for the thoughts, prayers and support our family has received surrounding the death of our son, grandson and nephew, Baylee Wayment. We can't express the feelings that we have for all the kindness, support and donations from businesses, organizations and individuals that has been shown. From the time of the call for help and the response from the Richfield Quick Response Unit, Shoshone Ambulance and LifeFlight, it has been a real heart-warming time. There is probably no way we will ever be able to reach all who have sent support to our family during this time. We would like to let all of you know that the words, "thank you," are forever in our hearts.

On behalf of the Filer High School Speech Team, I would like to thank Fred Meyer, along with its manager, Mark Ehlers, for its support and partnership.

For the past three years, Fred Meyer has provided guidance for our team to not only make money but also have tons of fun. Born with autism, Stephanie does not respond to stimuli as other children do. This delightful and winsome toddler flits from one toy to another, spins in circles and laughs delightedly at her own private jokes. Her increasing eye contact with adults who sit on the floor to play with her is encouraging. Stephanie's foster mother hopes that she will bring the same light and joy to her adoptive family that she radiates in their home.

Interests: Stephanie loves interactive pre-school toys with push buttons, lights and sounds. She loves to explore every object in a room, to climb and to throw balls.

Needs: Stephanie is a medically fragile child who requires a loving, dedicated and skilled adoptive family. Her family can meet her needs through focused services and careful attention to her dietary needs. Stephanie would do well in a loving, structured, secure family environment. Because she has spent most of her life in a stable placement, she will need time to stabilize in a new home. Her parents will need patience, an appreciation for incremental gains and an ability to advocate for this child's changing needs. One special family will learn how to view the world from this unique child's perspective. Please ask her adoption social worker to explain legal risk, adoption assistance and adoption subsidy.

Legislature begins correcting CSI inequity

After a decade of listening, the Idaho Legislature is finally taking steps to bring community college funding into balance. The Joint Finance-Appropriations Committee recently agreed to boost state support for the College of Southern Idaho and North Idaho College by $4.7 million. Of that sum, $3.2 million will provide dollar-for-dollar relief from property taxes.

Both schools draw students from far beyond their taxing districts. At CSI, for example, it isn't unusual to find students from as far away as Salmon. Many load up on relatively cheap college credits, then transfer to a four-year school to earn a bachelor's degree at minimal cost. They aren't concerned that local taxpayers foot some of their bills.

The Legislature's action begins to correct this inequity by spreading the cost throughout the entire state, where it rightly belongs.

The funding change is a welcome correction for property taxpayers in Twin Falls, Jerome and Kootenai counties – where community college taxes have long been collected. Just look at your 2000 tax bill and then find the CSI portion. That figure – which doesn't appear on tax bills in other counties – will now begin to drop.

In these times of rapidly rising energy costs, and doubts about income tax relief, this property tax reduction will be greatly appreciated.

But there are tradeoffs to consider.

Look at your 2000 tax bill and then find the CSI portion. That figure – which appears only in Twin Falls and Jerome counties – will now begin to drop.

As the state pays more of the bills, it's reasonable for it to assert more control over the two schools. Some may view this as an affront to the authority of locally elected college boards, but there's a lot of truth to the adage, "He who pays the piper calls the tune."

Many of the most important decisions – including capital expenses, salaries and program alignment – are already made at the state level. With or without tax relief, locally elected boards aren't likely to gain any additional authority in the years ahead.

There's another thing to consider as property tax burdens ease within the two community college districts. Just because one tax loses its bite doesn't mean that taxpayers are eager to be bitten by another tax. That should be a warning to local school districts, and other taxing entities, which may see the dwindling CSI levy as an opportunity to carve a bigger slice of the tax pie.

Aging populace will change economy

ROBERT J. SAMUELSON

Some things we can glimpse, and one of them is global aging. It is a specter that stalks most advanced societies. Over the next half-century, most wealthy societies – the United States is a conspicuous exception – will lose population; all will have older populations. This is a collective change that will profoundly influence the world economy, the future of democracy and relations between nations with declining populations (generally richer countries) and those with expanding populations (generally poorer countries).

"By 2014, Europe's entire population will be shrinking, as will Japan's," says Paul Hewitt of the Center for Strategic and International Studies in Washington. "After 2010, the working-age populations decline by a little less than 1 percent a year. That will cause most of the rich world to grow much more slowly economically." Hewitt also foresees a global scarcity of savings and investment. Government budget deficits may rise to pay for increasing pension and health benefits, draining funds from private investment. Private pension funds and retirement accounts will sell stocks and bonds, also depleting savings.

Just how large these effects might be is anyone's guess. But the driving forces behind aging and population decline – low birth rates and longer life expectancy – seem fairly fixed. The accompanying table, based on U.S. Census Bureau projections, shows what may lie ahead. The first column estimates total population change between 2000 and 2050 for six rich countries. The second and third columns provide estimates for the traditional working-age population (20-64) and those over 65.

Only the United States – with higher birth rates and immigration – escapes population decline. But even in the United States, there are fewer potential workers for each potential retiree. As long as retirees are supported by taxpayers, through Social Security and health insurance, the economic burden on workers will rise. In most countries, the shifts would be stark, and possibly unworkable. Germany's working-age population is projected to drop from 51 million in 2000 to 29 million in 2050; meanwhile, the 65-and-over population rises from 14 million to 21 million.

2000-2050 (percent change)

	Total Age	Working Pop.	Over 65
France	-18	-26	+60
Germany	-30	-43	+53
Italy	-32	-47	+41
Japan	-20	-36	+51
United Kingdom	-9	-15	+61
United States	+43	+29	+127

Although these precise predictions may prove wrong, the central truth is that "the natural growth of population in the more developed countries has essentially ceased," writes population expert Nicholas Eberstadt in the current issue of Foreign Policy magazine. In Germany and Japan, the fertility rate is 1.4, meaning that women on average have slightly more than one child each. At 2.1, the United States is roughly at the replacement rate.

Americans may have succeeded better in mixing family and work. Or immigrants may have more children than other Americans. Regardless, all rich nations will feel the pressures of aging – or declining – populations. And there's a perverse possibility that more old people will further reduce the number of young people. If taxes on workers increase to cover higher retirement benefits, families' willingness to have children may diminish, because it would be harder to pay for them.

Immigration is one possible safety valve. But for Europe and Japan, the increases needed to avert population declines would be huge. For Europe, including Russia, a doubling of present immigration levels to 1.8 million annually would be required, writes Eberstadt. Japan – with little immigration now – would have to accept 350,000 newcomers a year. By 2050, a sixth of its population would be of immigrant stock. In Europe, the comparable share would be about 20 percent. Given the tensions caused by massive immigration, these increases would be difficult.

As Hewitt notes, richer countries could also prepare for their aging by investing in poorer countries. Trade could substitute for immigration. Investments from wealthier countries would enable developing nations to build up their industries. As people retire in the rich world, they could use some of their dividends and interest from their investments to buy imports from poorer countries. Both developed and developing countries would benefit. But this bargain assumes, Hewitt says, that "globalization" works smoothly – an iffy assumption.

To predict the future is always iffy. But few rich countries are anticipating it. They should be tempering the vicious circle of higher retirement spending, heavier taxes on workers and fewer children. This means gradually raising retirement ages and scaling back benefits, especially for wealthier retirees. It isn't happening. In the United States, it has (so far) been impossible to make basic changes in Social Security and Medicare. Democracies have trouble facing the future when powerful constituents in the present have so little stake in it.

Wendell needs new school

To the citizens who care about their students:

I am a concerned student in eighth grade at Wendell Middle School. You are probably aware of the problems we are having in our school. Halfway through last year our school was condemned. We were going split shifts with our high school. We had to share classrooms and school days with the high school students. This year we are renting classrooms from the Idaho School for the Deaf and Blind. We rotate the different grade levels to Gooding every trimester. Changing classrooms every trimester gets very confusing. Everyday I ride a bus to Gooding and back. Yes, we are also paying for the bus transportation. Every day I have a different bus schedule. It also gets very old riding the bus.

The students at Wendell Middle School are losing their class time because they have to ride buses so often. This takes a large bite out of our day. One of the reasons my bus schedule is so messed up is because every other day I stay in Wendell for my first hour. I am doing this because half of my sixth class is on the computers. We do not have access to computers in Gooding. I feel that I am not getting the education I need.

This problem has also affected our sports program. We do not have a gym to practice and play in. The high school has been changing its schedule to fit. What's really bad is when we have to have other schools work around us so we can still play against them. It's so embarrassing having other schools talk to us about our school problems.

I think that our community and other communities in Idaho need to take a look at Wendell and other schools. [illegible] we will be in this same situation. I hope people start realizing these problems. Hopefully, kids won't be the ones that have to suffer. People need to start thinking and putting themselves in the students' shoes. If it wasn't for the great staff and awesome students we wouldn't be doing as well as we are today. We appreciate the ISDB for letting us use its extra space. We thank it a lot. Next time you drive through Wendell or see one of our buses driving to Gooding, please think about the students who are suffering.

California firms affect local business

The Feb. 21 issue of The Times-News, front page, lower right-hand corner contains an interesting article of news. The heading on this article says, "Valley may court California firms."

When my family came to Magic Valley from the state of Washington in 1973, the lady we first rented from told me, "If you had California license plates on your car, I would not rent to you." She was the wife of a local Realtor and she told me why she wouldn't rent to someone from California. It wasn't a logical reason.

In the 1970s (probably before 1970) and up through the 1990s, there were bumper stickers that said, "Don't Californiate Idaho," "I am sorry if you learned to drive in California," plus others.

People moved here from California and had their cars and other property damaged. People who lived here no doubt remember this, plus other incidents, plus local leadership did not want people moving here from California.

Now some of these same leaders are wanting to take membership money from various local organizations, money intended for more logical projects, and pay businesses from California to move here.

This is a sad commentary, but the worst thing is some of these local business people are used as a pawn to influence people who have no interest in relocating here.

My remarks in summary: The Magic Valley is economically strapped and we don't want to face reality.

LETTER

Hate should not surround issue

As a teacher and a mother of young children, I feel it is my duty to respond to the recent tide of negative letters pertaining to prejudice and race issues in our area. I write not to condemn anyone but only to voice a plea to all responsible citizens – before voicing their emotions in a public forum – to consider the younger generations who are so easily influenced by the things they see grownups saying and doing.

Children are naturally tolerant and compassionate toward others. Even those who have expressed prejudice were at one time free from such things until something dark and ugly – perhaps war, perhaps personal abuse or neglect – taught it to them. We need not perpetuate the sickness such experiences have caused ourselves or others by hurting or seeking to put people in their places. It is one thing to debate an issue, whether it is a memorial site or a hog farm, based on its merits alone, and another to let personal bitterness and anger cloud and confuse the matter.

Hatred has never at any time or in any place made any worthwhile contribution to our world. It will never be a viable component of any solution. Many of us have had negative experiences with one or a few of a larger group, whether it was an ethnic, religious, political or social group. Perhaps we have even felt so much hate for them that we wished they were dead, as one reader has expressed feeling toward the Japanese-Americans after the war. However, the thing that separates us from the animals is our ability to choose to act differently than we feel to act – speak.

The question is not whether it is difficult; the question is whether it is right. I offer that it is right, and it is necessary, to not only solve the problems of our own generation but to pave the way for the next. There are answers to our valley's problems, but the best ones will come of earnest, caring consideration by those who have all of the facts, not by hateful finger-pointing and blaming.

Taliban presses ahead with statue declaration

KABUL, Afghanistan (AP) – Unmoved by international pressure, Afghanistan's Taliban rulers Wednesday delegated the job of destroying all statues in the country to armed troops from the Ministry of Vice and Virtue, saying the issue is an "internal" one.

Asian officials, Buddist groups and archeologists have been in an uproar over the religious militia's decision to demolish statues, including two towering 5th century images of Buddha carved into a cliff face.

In ordering the statutes destroyed, the Taliban's supreme leader, Mullah Mohammed Omar, said Monday that they were contrary to the tenets of Islam, which the Taliban say forbids images, such as paintings and pictures.

But while many Asian Buddhists criticized the decision, most refrained from criticizing the Islamic rulers, saying that would be against Buddha's teachings.

Thailand, Cambodia, Myanmar and Laos, four predominantly Buddhist nations in Southeast Asia, have not officially criticized Kabul. In South Korea and Japan, the main Buddhist associations described the Afghan decision as anti-cultural and an affront to humanity.

Neighboring Iran, also ruled by Islamic clergy, scolded Kabul's move, saying it will likely damage Afghanistan's relations with other governments, Iran's IRNA news agency said. It ridiculed Afghanistan's Taliban rulers, saying the people who ordered the statues' destruction "strangely call themselves clerics."

A top monk in Thailand cited the Buddhist philosophy of turning the other cheek.

"As Buddhists we are not allowed to criticize anyone, but good religious people should not destroy world heritage," said Phra Wipatsri Dhamaramo, also secretary to the country's chief monk.

Among the statues the Taliban have ordered destroyed are two ancient treasures – the world's tallest standing Buddha, measuring 175 feet and a smaller Buddha standing 120 feet. They are in Bamiyan, about 90 miles west of Kabul. Both have already been damaged in fighting in the area.

In Pakistan, archaeologist and founder of the Society to Preserve Afghan Cultural Heritage, Professor Ahmed Hasan Dani, said the decision to destroy the Buddhas was a travesty. "These are not there to be worshipped. They are works of art. They belong to all of humanity," he said.

Endangered giants

The Taliban rulers of Afghanistan have ordered the destruction of ancient statues, including the fifth-century, 175-foot-tall Buddha near Bamiyan, that they feel are offensive to Islam.

152-foot-tall Statue of Liberty

Also near Bamiyan are the remains of one of the world's longest statues, the 1,000-foot-long Sakya Buddha.

By comparison, the Boeing 747 jumbo jet measures 231 feet long.

Scientists reveal process whereby cancer spreads

Scientists have figured out a key process by which breast cancer spreads to other organs, and they have successfully blocked it in mice.

But they and others cautioned that there is no guarantee that such an approach would work in humans.

"The literature is littered with cures for cancer that worked in animals but haven't translated to humans," said Jonathon Sedgwick, director of immunology at the DNAX Research Institute in Palo Alto, Calif.

The DNAX researchers found that proteins that normally help guide infection-fighting white blood cells to their targets also play a key role in breast cancer's devastating spread. They found that the proteins, called chemokines, are released in large amounts by the lymph nodes, bone marrow, lungs and liver. The chemokines then attract breast cancer cells circulating in the body. Those cells take root in the organs and form new tumors.

That explains why some organs become riddled with tumors in breast cancer patients, while other organs have few if any tumors, the researchers said.

The study appears in today's issue of the journal Nature.

Panel cites supply-demand pressures for gas prices

WASHINGTON – Short supply and fast-growing demand are behind the this winter's high natural gas prices, industry representatives and a federal regulator told a congressional panel Wednesday.

Some lawmakers remained skeptical and said they couldn't help but wonder if price manipulation or some other factor explained spot natural gas prices that quadrupled over 12 months, although they have declined in recent weeks.

Curt Hebert, chairman of the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission, told a subcommittee of the House Energy and Commerce Committee "the fundamental structure of natural gas markets remains sound" despite sharp prices that have sent heating bills soaring across the country.

Representatives of several energy trade associations told the committee the answer lies in more production, more pipeline construction and now-closed federal lands opened to gas development.

FBI agent says defendant called bombing a 'blunder'

NEW YORK – A suspect in the deadly bombing of the U.S. embassy in Kenya told the FBI that it was a "big mistake" because the bomb was improperly placed in a truck, killing too many civilians, an FBI agent testified Wednesday.

The agent, John Anticev, told a jury in federal court in Manhattan that Mohamed Sadeek Odeh said during an interrogation that he did not know about the Aug. 7, 1998, blast in Nairobi before it happened.

The agent said Odeh told him the bomb vehicle should have been backed into the embassy rather than striking it head-on so the blast would not have been directed toward other buildings and scores of civilians.

Prosecutors allege Odeh, 35, and his co-defendants followed bin Laden's orders to bomb that embassy and the one in Dar-es-Salaam, Tanzania, the same day as part of a holy war against Americans. The explosions killed 224 people, including 12 Americans.

Philadelphia's Mardi Gras degrades into looting

PHILADELPHIA – Mardi Gras revelry turned violent early Wednesday in Seattle and Philadelphia, with crowds fighting, smashing storefronts and looting, and police fighting back on horseback and with pepper gas.

More than 200 people were arrested in Philadelphia. More than 40 people were taken to hospitals in Seattle and two of them were described as in severely critical condition, one from a fall off an overpass.

By contrast, the more notorious pre-Lenten partying in New Orleans was largely peaceful, even though upward of a million people – many in costume and some in little more than a smile – had jammed the streets as Fat Tuesday jiggled and giggled its way into Ash Wednesday.

Man breaches security, forcing terminal evacuation

LOS ANGELES – A man barged through security doors at the Los Angeles International Airport on Wednesday, prompting officials to evacuate 3,000 people from three terminals for nearly two hours.

A man who was unarmed was arrested, police said. Police gave no details.

United spokesman Allen Wayne said the man appeared at the airline's ticket counter, then went through double doors with security alarms and disappeared.

Attorney general meets with black lawmakers

WASHINGTON – One day after President Bush told him to bring an end to racial profiling by police, Attorney General John Ashcroft met Wednesday with black lawmakers who had opposed him as head of the Justice Department.

"It was a frank and candid exchange," Ashcroft said afterward.

Racial profiling is the practice by police of considering a person's race or ethnicity in detaining suspects or making traffic stops. Officers sometimes also use factors such as a person's clothing or accent.

Fighting flares in ethnic Albanian areas outside Kosovo

BUJANOVAC, Yugoslavia – Heavy shooting erupted in two ethnic Albanian areas just outside Kosovo on Wednesday, as NATO dispatched a team to one of the front lines in the unrest in hopes of capping new violence in the Balkans.

The fighting broke out in southern Serbia and northern Macedonia – two volatile neighboring regions bordering Kosovo where ethnic Albanian rebels have taken up arms against government forces.

The latest upsurge of fighting around Kosovo has raised fears of another major crisis that could threaten the whole region, less than two years after NATO and the United Nations moved into Kosovo in the wake of a pullout of troops loyal to former Yugoslav President Slobodan Milosevic.

Prosecutor orders police investigation of Milosevic

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia – The Belgrade prosecutor ordered a probe Wednesday into suspicions that Slobodan Milosevic illegally stashed away huge amounts of gold – the start of legal moves aimed at trying the ousted Yugoslav president for a wide range of alleged crimes.

Slobodan Milosevic

The order is the prelude to possible detention and multiple indictments against Milosevic that could include alleged complicity in war crimes, embezzlement of state funds, corruption and politically motivated killings during his 13-year rule.

Milosevic is sought by the U.N. war crimes tribunal in connection with atrocities in Kosovo. But the authorities who replaced his government want him to stand trial in Serbia, the dominant Yugoslav republic, before considering any extradition request from the Netherlands-based court.

Croats protest decision, call for separate mini-state

BUSOVACA, Bosnia-Herzegovina – The Croat member of Bosnia's presidency said Wednesday his ethnic group was splitting away from the federation that Croats share with Muslims under the international peace accords setting up an independent Bosnia.

"Let it be clear: from today on, the federation is a (Bosnian Muslim) national entity without the Croats," Ante Jelavic told about 2,000 supporters in the central Bosnian town of Busovaca, west of Sarajevo.

Jelavic is also the head of the hard-line Croat Democratic Union, a party which is pursuing the establishment of a separate Croat mini-state – an idea rejected by the international community.

Bosnia consists of two mini-states, one run by the Serbs, the other shared by the Muslims and the Croats. Any change of this setup would be a violation of the peace agreement that stopped the 1992-1995 war.

Burley man remains critical after accident

BURLEY – A Burley man was in critical condition Wednesday evening after rolling his vehicle after leading Cassia County sheriff's deputies on a high-speed chase down Idaho Highway 27, according to a news release from the Idaho State Police.

According to the ISP, at 3:21 p.m. Wednesday, Jesus Rene Rocha of Burley, driving a 1998 Chevrolet Malibu, was involved in a pursuit with Cassia County sheriff's deputies on Highway 27. Deputies terminated the pursuit at milepost 12. Rocha continued at a high rate of speed and failed to negotiate a corner between milepost 8 and milepost 7, lost control and rolled his vehicle, the news release said.

Rocha was LifeFlighted to St. Alphonsus Hospital in Boise where he was listed in critical condition Wednesday night. No other details were available at press time.

Officials say buyback bid numbers encouraging

TWIN FALLS – The early returns were encouraging.

Bids were due by 5 p.m. Wednesday in an irrigation power buyback program proposed by Idaho Power Co. As of 4 p.m. the utility had received more than 500 applications, company spokesman Dennis Lopez said.

Company officials were still counting the number of bids, but the total number of bids or the amount of power involved were not available Wednesday.

The program is part of the company's effort to reduce its peak load during the summer when energy supplies may be short, and to avoid having to buy high-priced power from the wholesale market.

The utility was accepting bids from farmers who would be able to cut their power consumption by at least 100,000 kilowatt hours – the equivalent of a 60 horsepower water pump running for 2,000 hours.

The utility expects to pay up to 12 cents per kilowatt hour.

Popular environmental activist and musician dies

KETCHUM – Hailey resident Paul A. Todd, a well-known Wood River Valley environmentalist and popular musician was found dead Feb. 21 of a self-inflicted gunshot wound. He was 39.

Blaine County Sheriff Walt Femling said Todd's body was found near the mouth of Colorado Gulch, southwest of Hailey.

Todd was well known in the area as former manager of The Nature Conservancy's Silver Creek Preserve and as a folk and bluegrass musician.

He was hired in 1991, about 15 years after the preserve's creation, and held that job for most of the time until 1999.

"He brought it a long way in education, outreach and public relations with the neighbors and fishermen. It used to be mainly a fishing and hunting thing. He rounded it out," said former Idaho Nature Conservancy director Guy Bonnivier.

Part of Todd's education effort was the development of a curriculum for children.

A memorial fund has been created for their environmental education at Silver Creek Preserve, through The Nature Conservancy of Idaho.

Business lighting by design

Proposed light ordinance goes to TF commissioners

By John T. Huddy
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS – A proposed county ordinance – requiring owners of commercial, industrial and confined animal feeding operations to have a designer set up the operation's lighting system – is on its way to county commissioners.

The county Planning and Zoning Commission voted 5-1 Wednesday to send on the anti-glare ordinance. Commissioner Regon Hatch dissented.

Hatch was among several commission members who suggested adding a better description of a lighting designer, and the designer's role in designing lighting systems.

As defined in the ordinance, a lighting designer is an independent electrical engineer or person qualified to perform lighting system design.

Several residents and dairymen who spoke at Wednesday's hearing also questioned the definition, and the need for a designer.

"Any time you get into the designing of things, it's more money than you can afford," said county resident and farmer Mary Lewis. "I enjoy looking out at all the lights. I think they are beautiful. Out in the country, if a light bothers us, we pull down the shades. How hard is that?"

Bill Crafton, the county's planning and zoning director, said the county's ordinance would apply only to areas within county jurisdiction.

The city has a light ordinance governing parking lots, but has nothing resembling the county's ordinance, city planning director LaMar Orton. And no such city ordinance is pending, he said.

After county residents complained about glare from commercial and industrial operations, including some dairies, county commissioners formed a committee to look into the problem.

The committee of dairy owners and residents has been working on the ordinance for about six months.

Commissioners will discuss the ordinance today, but don't plan to make any decisions. County Commissioner Marvin Hempleman said the commissioners will likely have a public hearing on the ordinance sometime in March.

If approved, new commercial, industrial or animal operations would have to conform to ordinance requirements within three months from the date of permit approval. Existing operations would have three years to conform to the code.

Any operation that doesn't comply could be fined $300 per day.

Several local dairymen and farmers Wednesday voiced their opposition to the ordinance.

Harry DeHaan, a Twin Falls attorney and dairy owner, said the ordinance goes too far.

"It seems to me that there is a viewpoint in this county that if something is problematic, we can just make more laws and ordinances," DeHaan said. "I think we have enough bureaucrats. I think this problem can be solved by being good neighbors."

But Richard Shotwell, a committee member and former electrical contractor, said the ordinance is fair.

"We didn't set out to turn off lights in the county," he said. "To not fix the existing lighting problems is to suggest that the county will persist with the glare that is occurring now."

Many dairies and farms use floodlights, which cast light out in all directions, rather than isolating the light on a specific part of the operation.

A lighting fixture that directs light where needed – if properly designed and installed – can lower the wattage needed and save energy, Shotwell said.

School officials share goals with Twin Falls Board

By Jennifer Sandmann
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS – Elementary school teachers had the Twin Falls School Board singing and competing in word games at Wednesday's board meeting.

School leadership and faculties set goals each year, which they share in annual reports to the School Board. The School Board often finds itself briefly joining in the presentations when schools engage them in hands-on activities, such as timed math quizzes, to show the board what's happening in classrooms.

In the case of I.B. Perrine and Oregon Trail elementary schools, which gave their presentations Wednesday, teachers more and more are using all kinds of test scores to improve classroom instruction.

Perrine Principal Kent Anderson showed board members a six-year comparison of the school's standardized tests scores on the Iowa Tests of Basic Skills. Scores were strong in 1995 with students in most grades performing above the 60th percentile in reading, language and math. The 50th percentile is average. But the scores have gradually grown even higher with results reaching above the 70th percentile in fall 2000 in all grades tested, except for fifth grade reading that still ranked in the 66th percentile.

"We are not only maintaining them, but we are increasing them slightly," Anderson said.

He told the board that he has noticed frustration and anxiety among the faculty as they review the student performance data, but with that he sees a lot of attempts by teachers to improve instruction. He credited teachers for Perrine's growth.

At Oregon Trail, more dramatic growth has been seen in test scores. Principal Ted Popplewell showed the board a comparison of scores between 1995 and 2000. In 1995, all of the school's scores in reading, language and math were below average and many fell along the bottom third of the bell curve. This year all grades scored at least average and most posted results upwards of the 70th percentile ranking.

"Those are really amazing, and I think the only thing I can attribute to that is the outstanding staff at Oregon Trail," Popplewell said.

Oregon Trail teachers reviewed for the School Board classroom activities incorporated this year to help boost students' vocabularies and their abilities to make inferences from reading material.

In other School Board news Wednesday, the board approved nearly $49,000 for the district to buy anti-virus software for its computers. Computer Technology Group of Boise was awarded the contract bid.

There's a party goin' on

Commission continues with plans for city's 100th birthday celebration

By John T. Huddy
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS – The Twin Falls Centennial Commission continues to plan the city's 100th birthday party even though the commission chairman's seat is currently empty.

The commission met Wednesday night to discuss its ongoing activities, including fund-raising efforts and its lack of a chairman.

The commission's former leader, Jeff Gooding, resigned last year because of time constraints.

Kent Just, the Twin Falls Area Chamber of Commerce executive vice president, said Wednesday that he is speaking with a possible chairman, but that person hasn't yet decided whether or not to take the offer. Just said he didn't want to name the person yet.

Paul Smith, a local attorney and commission member, suggested giving the person a two-week deadline to make the decision. His fellow commissioners agreed.

The lack of a chairman has slowed the commission's efforts to coordinate various city events in preparation of the city's big birth

When they meet

The Twin Falls Centennial Commission will hold its next meeting from 7 to 8:30 p.m. March 28 at the Twin Falls Area Chamber of Commerce office, 858 Blue Lakes Boulevard N.

Citizen's advisory committee nears decision on nonprofit shift for hospital

By Ruth Streeter
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS – A citizens' advisory committee will make its recommendation Monday on a proposal to turn Magic Valley Regional Medical Center into a nonprofit entity.

It's a move that could make it easier for the county-owned Magic Valley Regional to negotiate with other hospitals, but could limit public discussion of some hospital operations.

After the citizens' committee weighs in with its recommendation to the hospital board, the board could decide at its March 12 meeting to pass a recommendation on to Twin Falls County commissioners, who then have the ultimate say.

Or the hospital board might decide instead at its April meeting, board Chairman Terry Schultz said.

Panel endorses end to abortion program

BOISE (AP) – Rep. Bev Montgomery's impassioned plea on behalf of poor women at risk did nothing to sway members of a House panel from endorsing a stop to state Medicaid funding of abortions performed to protect the mother's health.

Federal Medicaid funding has been restricted since 1977 to abortions performed for poor women in cases of rape, incest or to save the mother's life. Idaho is among only five states with laws requiring taxpayer funding of abortions when the mother's health is at risk.

Backers of the proposed change contend the health standard is far too subject to interpretation and abuse, but Montgomery said that view ignores the terrible price paid by poverty stricken women who must choose between their health and an often unwanted or unplanned pregnancy.

Budget writers leave $170M for tax cuts, school buildings

BOISE (AP) – Legislative budget writers made the final major decisions on the state's first $2 billion general tax budget on Wednesday, endorsing a 2001-2002 financial blueprint that increases spending by 10.6 percent and leaves less than $175 million for tax cuts and school buildings.

There remains only about $5 million in lose ends that would have to be tied up if lawmakers approve several new or expanded programs now under consideration.

So unless pieces of the new budget are defeated by the full House or Senate – something even critics believe to be highly unlikely – the finalized spending plan leaves no room for the $200 million tax cut the House approved two weeks ago.

Curtailment of that tax plan was inevitable in the Senate simply because the majority there appears to have a much more cautious view of the state's economic future.

And Senate Finance Chairman Dean Cameron of Rupert has warned GOP leaders that the state could see its revenue stream further reduced by President Bush's federal tax cut, depending on its components, because Idaho's income tax is so closely tied to the federal system.

The House-Senate budget panel managed to free up $170 million by trimming $39 million from Gov. Dirk Kempthorne's aggressive spending proposal and reducing the huge public works budget by nearly $5 million.

During its final deliberations, it refused to reconsider last year's decision to make the three veterans homes eligible for Medicaid reimbursement – something the veterans have objected to strenuously.

The committee did give the Department of Environmental Quality $310,000 to hire temporary help to clear out a backlog of more than 100 applications for air quality permits for new construction. Advocates claim that could keep economic activity going.

Sen. Robert Lee of Rexburg was among the persistent opponents of the direction the majority of the budget committee took, suggesting that the lower spending target they set was insufficient.

At a glance

Here at a glance are the highlights of the public works budget approved by the Joint Finance-Appropriations Committee followed by the recommendation on each project by Gov. Dirk Kempthorne.

- $14.5 million for maintenance and repair on existing buildings. Kempthorne proposed $14.12 million.
- $0 for the long-term prison master plan. Kempthorne proposed $150,000.
- $7.64 million for the Lewis-Clark State College Campus Activity Center. Kempthorne recommended $1,000 more.
- $4.3 million for the College of Southern Idaho Fine Arts Building. Kempthorne recommended $41,000 more.
- $10.7 million for the University of Idaho Teaching and Learning Center. Kempthorne recommended $47,000 more.
- $9.3 million for the Boise State University academic building in Canyon County. Kempthorne recommended the same.
- $14 million for the Idaho State University Classroom and Lab Building. Kempthorne recommended $64,000 more.
- $11.8 for the North Idaho College Health/Nursing and Life Science Building. Kempthorne recommended $4,000 more.

Heyburn tightens sex-business ordinance

By Aaron Brock
Times-News writer

HEYBURN – An ordinance regarding sexually-oriented businesses was changed and adopted Wednesday night.

The original ordinance stated that such businesses could not operate within 2,500 feet of any school, church, park or residential area. This distance was changed to 1,500 feet – about four city blocks – at the City Council meeting. The businesses must be located in an industrial zone.

Ralph Buttars, a member of the city's Planning and Zoning Committee, recommended the change to the council.

The change will not have any effect on current possible locations, as the only such location in Heyburn that meets this criteria is Centennial Industrial Park, east of U.S. 30 and north of 400 South.

At least one location for such businesses is required.

"It's the only industrial area that we have (where we can) place it," said Mayor Cleo Cheney.

The committee also recommended that the city clarify its area of impact. According to city attorney Steve Tuft, the city had signed an agreement with Minidoka County in 1995 in which the J.R. Simplot Co. was included in the area of impact.

The words of the agreement have always shown Simplot as a part of the area of impact, but the accompanying map was unclear, Tuft has said in the past.

An ordinance confirming that Simplot is indeed in the area of impact was passed by the council.

Heyburn is attempting to annex Simplot, and Simplot has filed a lawsuit to block the annexation. Property must be in the area of impact to be annexed.

In other council action:

• The city annexed 1.2 acres of property that is made up of Seventh Street, U.S. 30, and the Heyburn Cemetery, again based on advice from the zoning committee.

This is part of the continuing effort to smooth the jagged edges around the city, Tuft said, noting that Heyburn has always owned the property, but had never made it a part of the city.

• New attorneys to aid in several ongoing lawsuits were hired. Thomas Grim and the firm of Cable, Huston, Benedict, Haagensen and Lloyd of Portland, Ore. were brought on board to aid the city in its legal battles.

As well as the annexation litigation, Heyburn has been sued by Simplot with Simplot seeking the right to purchase electric power from alternate sources.

• Sewer and water lines will be extended to Idaho Power, at Idaho Power's request, said City Superintendent Scott Spevak. The bid date for the project is March 20, he said.

• Demolition of the old city hall building will begin on Monday. The project should be completed in two or three days, Spevak said.

• Power conservation was stressed, with a power shortage hitting much of the northwest.

"We all need to do our part," Cheney said. "Both as citizens and as a city."

Power rates will rise in Heyburn, Cheney added, but how much is not yet known. He said that the city should know more in a month or two, when the city's power provider, Bonneville Power Administration, has more information about much costs will go up.

Ground Zero looks at grand opening

Organizers say teen center is only few weeks away

By Aaron Brock
Times-News writer

BURLEY – A new teen center coming to Burley is still a few weeks away, organizers say.

Starting work about a month ago, organizers hoped to have the center up and running today, but there are still renovations to be done.

"That was our initial goal," said Miguel Farfan, owner of the local branches of Valley Communications and Labor Express. "We just didn't have the manpower and the resources to fix it up in a month."

A new opening date has not been set for the teen center, located at 1316 Oakley Ave.

Dubbed Ground Zero, the teen center will occupy the space next to the newly opened building that houses the companies owned by Farfan.

Farfan owns the entire building, and said he saw a need for a teen center. So he donated the vacant portion of his property, as well as his own time and money to the project.

"I could have rented it," Farfan said.

Adria Masoner, the coordinator for the Youth Advisory Committee for Health Net, said that organizers are still searching for a few final items, but said that most of the furniture and many of the needed games and accessories are already in place.

AARON BROCK/The Times-News

Miguel Farfan, owner of the local branches of Valley Communications and Labor Express, stands in front of his building on Oakley Avenue, which will soon house Ground Zero. The teen center had been slated to open today, but the opening date has been pushed back several weeks to allow for further renovations.

Want to help out?

Ground Zero is looking for the following items to be donated or discounted:

- A refrigerator
- A water heater
- A pool table
- Bathroom fixtures, including a sink and toilet.

If you can donate or sell any of these items at a discounted price, please call Tammy Hanks at 436-0481 or Adria Masoner at 678-8567.

Starting next week, area students will paint murals on the interior walls. Students are also working on creating a logo for the center, Masoner said.

Six local junior high and high school students from the Youth Advisory Committee are on the committee for the center. They are meeting again Friday to continue work on the project, Masoner said.

Gooding after-school program gets new name

By Aimee Metcalf
Times-News correspondent

GOODING – An after-school program has a new name.

"Children voted for the name of the program and came up with 'ASK' which stands for 'After School Kids,'" said Mary Ann Floyd, Gooding Middle School math teacher and 21st Century grant coordinator.

Floyd said there is $167,000 remaining the 21st Century grant which funded the after-school program.

"It's on a use or lose basis," said Floyd, who advised schools to come up with a wish list of items for which they see the greatest need. These will then be prioritized and sought with the remaining funds, Floyd said.

Another after-school program – KASH or Kids After School Help – also funded by the 21st Century grant with help from the University of Idaho, is looking for a new home. Currently, there are 20 children who attend the program from 3 to 6:30 p.m. at the Idaho School for the Deaf and the Blind. The U of I no longer wants to be involved in the program so the district is looking for another facility to house the program. One option would be to move the program to the elementary school. District Superintendent Darrell Hatfield suggested maybe a local church could provide room for the program. The 21st Century committee will look into those options and report back to the board at the March 20 meeting.

Coming up

The Gooding School District will hold a work session/pizza meeting for maintenance, office and lunch staff from 6 to 7:30 p.m. Monday at the joint school.

Other School Board business:

• Floyd said the portable dance floor used for the jazz dance program was moved to Motions dance studio on Main Street. The 50 students who participate in the program will be bused to the studio on Wednesdays.

• The board approved Floyd, middle school math teacher Chris Poole, and fourth-grade teacher Lynnette France to attend at a mathematics conference April 3-7 in Orlando, Fla.

Kimberly looks for funds for sewer project

KIMBERLY – The city continues to search for grant funds to help pay for the sewer project.

Community developer Susan Riddle is trying to secure a state grant but the Department of Environmental Quality's report to the Idaho Department of Commerce didn't list the Kimberly sewer improvement project as having a critical need which reduced the points Kimberly received for its grant application.

"A hole in the ground with sewage running through it doesn't make an appropriate sewer line," Tracy Ahrens of J-U-B Engineers told the City Council Tuesday.

Riddle said she will speak to the Governor's Economics Advisory Board about the situation and ask to have the grant application re-evaluated. The board will make its final decision on grants in April.

Also Tuesday, Rob Vawser and Gloria Falkenberg, representatives of the Southern Idaho Regional Communications Center, joined Twin Falls County Commissioner Bill Brockman to discuss assessments made to cities and counties served by the regional 9-1-1 center. Mayor Jim Sorensen asked for more information about how SIRCOMM money is budgeted. Brockman said he would have a copy of the budget and audit sent to the council.

Valley in brief

Buhl residents might see premium decrease

BUHL – Property owners within five miles of Buhl Fire Station might be eligible for a premium decrease March 1.

The Idaho Survey and Rating Bureau recently reduced the rating of the Buhl Rural Fire Protection District thereby reducing the rating of the dwellings within five miles.

Fire Chief Mark Grimes is advising property owners to check with their fire insurance carriers to see if they're eligible for a decrease in their premiums. Grimes said each insurance company varies in rates according to protection classification. The city of Buhl has a protection class of five.

The new rate change stems from the improvements made by the city and rural districts in developing plentiful water supplies in the rural areas and the recent purchase of a tanker/pumper.

Tribes, state talk ending dispute over slot machines

BOISE – An agreement in principle has been reached between the Kempthorne administration and the three northern Idaho Indian tribes to end the decade-old dispute over the legitimacy of thousands of electronic gambling machines in reservation casinos.

2001 Legislature

Michael Bogert, Gov. Dirk Kempthorne's attorney, told the Senate leadership committee on Thursday that legislation outlining the new gambling compacts and legalizing the machines being operated by the Nez Perce, Coeur d'Alene and Kootenai tribes will be introduced soon. State Affairs Committee Chairman Sheila Sorensen of Boise said the bill could be filed as soon as Friday.

But Bogert said the administration wants legislative ratification of the new compacts, and that could place them in jeopardy, considering the anti-gambling sentiment in both the House and Senate.

Legislature in brief

Budget committee

BOISE – The legislative budget committee narrowly rejected an attempt on Wednesday to reverse last year's decision to qualify the three state veterans homes for Medicaid coverage.

Amid warnings that the move will cost more than it saves, even in the long run, the Joint Finance-Appropriations Committee voted 11-8 to move ahead with the transition. "We did no one a favor," Republican Sen. Stan Hawkins of Ucon told his colleagues. "The weight of the bad decision we made last year is going to be borne by the veterans themselves."

In a bid to curtail a skyrocketing Health and Welfare budget, the House-Senate panel last year voted to qualify the homes for Medicaid so the federal government would begin paying 70 percent of most of their costs. When fully implemented, officials estimated the state would save $1.5 million a year.

But to gain Medicaid eligibility, the state had to improve operations at the homes, and that forced the monthly charge to rise from $2,300 to $3,200 to finance the improvements.

The result has been that what was once a waiting list to get into the homes has evaporated because veterans who had private resources – insurance for example – could not afford the higher charge. The homes now have a 15 percent vacancy rate, and the state is having to pump nearly $2.7 million in general tax receipts into the homes to make up for the lost revenue.

Closing loophole

BOISE – Gov. Dirk Kempthorne returned from a national meeting of governors in Washington, D.C., Wednesday afternoon in time to sign legislation closing for good a regulatory loophole believed to open the door to electric deregulation in Idaho.

The governor's action came just hours before an emergency bill enacted in a single day last December was to expire.

The permanent solution, unanimously approved by both the House and Senate, ends the possibility of deregulation without approval of the Idaho Public Utilities Commission. In the state that already has the lowest power rates in the nation, officials maintain deregulation would drive power costs up.

The bill responds to a federal appellate court ruling last fall that voided the state's Electric Supplier Stabilization Act because regulators did not have firm control over utility operations.

Hospital

Hospital officials have for years discussed turning the hospital into a 501C3, a nonprofit classification recognized by the Internal Revenue Service. As a result, board members might feel comfortable accepting a recommendation to go nonprofit, Schultz said.

The citizens' committee had originally scheduled four meetings through April to work toward a recommendation. But after two meetings committee members have described as productive, group members are thinking a decision would be made sooner than expected.

When the issue goes to the county commissioners, they might – or might not – hold their own hearing.

Because both the hospital board and the citizens' committee represent different segments of the public, Schultz doesn't anticipate the need for commissioners to hold a public hearing.

Commissioner Bill Brockman also said he doesn't think a public hearing is necessary, unless required by state law.

Commissioners won't be satisfied until all the questions regarding nonprofit status are answered, Brockman said, but he added he is happy with the committee's progress.

Committee Co-Chairman Doug Vollmer is confident the public is well-represented. The committee has been active and its members have been fielding questions from the public.

And an earlier committee – formed in 1998 when other hospitals were looking at buying, leasing or affiliating with Magic Valley Regional – set the groundwork for this committee, Vollmer said.

That committee soon discovered that people then, as now, had concerns about losing control of their hospital, Vollmer said.

A nonprofit entity would be governed by a countywide citizens' board.

Moving to nonprofit status could free Magic Valley Regional from burdensome county policy and procedure, for tax reasons, Magic Valley Regional CEO Jerry Hart said in an interview with The Times-News Wednesday.

Hart said he doesn't want to use nonprofit status to mask hospital business behind a "black curtain." But the shift would limit public access to certain hospital business, and Hart said he does not want the hospital's long-term strategic planning done in public view.

"I really believe a government hospital is really a difficult and cumbersome thing to try and operate with," Hart said.

Hart also says county-owned hospitals aren't attractive to other health care centers considering partnerships. Magic Valley Regional is pursuing such a partnership with Boise-based St. Luke's Regional Medical Center, and officials have said they would prefer working with a nonprofit hospital, Hart said.

day celebration in 2004. The commission has still been able to spearhead local fund-raising efforts, though.

Rose starts taken from a rose bush planted by Lucy Stricker in Hansen are being sold for more than $1,000 each. Several city businesses and residents have already bought some of the starts.

Here are some of the other things the commission is working on:

• Moving the I.B. Perrine Stagecoach from the city's airport lobby. There are plans to use the stagecoach in upcoming summer festivities around the city. A historic ice wagon or family buggy may take the coach's place in the airport lobby.

• Selling Centennial T-shirts with the motto "Making the Desert Bloom."

• Making a calendar of events for the city's centennial celebration. Several commission members suggested starting to schedule centennial events.

• Moving the county's historic museum from Highway 30 outside the city into town. Several downtown sites are being looked at for the museum.

Spanish opera takes stage in Burley

BURLEY – A tale of love, loss and robust local color takes the stage this spring in Burley.

"La Dolorosa," a one-act opera, will be presented April 2 by the Santa Fe Opera 2001 Apprentice Artist Tour as part of the Mini-Cassia Community Concert Series.

The singing will be in Spanish and the dialogue is in English.

The music is by Jose Serrano with original text by Juan Jose Lorente, adaptation and additional text by Christopher Webber and by arrangement with Sociedad General de Autores y Editores.

First performed at the Teatro Reina Victoria in Madrid, Oct. 24, 1930, the work is one of the composer's strongest, if not subtlest works, the concert organizers say.

The entire piece takes place in a monastery. Rafael, a young artist disappointed in love, has entered the novitiate. He is at work on a large fresco of the Virgin Dolorosa. He describes the scene he is painting: the Virgin Mary walks slowly up the road towards Calvary, catches her first sight of the cross where her son is dying and cries out, heartbroken and inconsolable. Deeply moved, he compares her suffering to his own. Every time he tries to depict the Virgin, her face turns into that of his lost love. The prior quietly doubts Rafael's religious vocation.

La Dolorosa, a one-act opera, will be presented by Santa Fe Opera Quartet in Burley at 7:30 p.m. April 2 at the King Fine Arts Center in Burley.

Then a woman appears, worn out and faint with hunger, carrying a baby boy in her arms. This is Dolores, whose lover has abandoned her for another woman. She has traveled far with her fatherless son, searching for a new life. Rafael is pierced by Dolores' resemblance to his old love and feels himself drawn to her, as she is to him.

Rafael tries to convince Dolores to let him confront the child's father and force the man to repair the damage he has done, but despite Rafael's increasingly passionate pleading, Dolores tells him she wants nothing to do with him.

The observant prior is far from surprised when Rafael appears and confesses his growing love for Dolores and his confusion as to his spiritual duty. Although he does try to remind the young novice that eternal happiness in the next world may depend on self-denial in this world, he helps Rafael to make his decision by opening the doors of the monastery.

Similar to operetta, zarzuela is a Spanish musical stage work, which often employs traditional Spanish material. It contains spoken dialogue and is often of a comic nature. The term derives from the Spanish word zarza (bramble). Its origins go back to the 17th century when Fiestas de Zarzuela were given at the Palacio la Zarzuela near Madrid. The palace took its name from the surrounding blackberry (bramble) bushes and the entertainments performed there were named for the palace.

BSU student earns first King/Burn scholarship

BOISE – A Minico graduate was selected as the first recipient of the Martin Luther King Jr./Meredyth Burns scholarship.

Mayra Calderon, a Boise State University student who emigrated to the United States from Mexico, is a 1998 graduate of Minico High School in Rupert. She will receive the $500 scholarship for spring semester 2001.

Calderon, a junior majoring in international business, was chosen for her extensive community service, particularly helping minority students and people of all ages, BSU reports. Among her many contributions, Calderon has participated in Latino Vote 2000, volunteered for the Idaho Migrant Council, organized church retreats for at-risk youth and served as vice-president of the Organization de Estudiantes Latino-Americanos, Boise State's Latino student club.

Her family moved to the United States at the end of her sixth-grade year because her parents wanted their children to have an education and other opportunities, BSU said.

"When I came to this country, it was very difficult to learn the language and adapt to a new culture, but I did," wrote Calderon in an essay she submitted to the scholarship committee. "Now my dream is to succeed, make my parents proud, and to let my parents know that their sacrifices were worth it."

Mayra Calderon

The scholarship will be given annually in honor of Martin Luther King Jr. and Meredyth Burns, a young civil rights activist who was killed in an accident three years ago at the age of 15. Burns, who was the daughter of Kerry Burns and Boise State affirmative action director Betty Hecker, was an avid supporter of human rights and Boise State's Martin Luther King Jr. celebration.

Corporate donors to the scholarship were Albertson's, BMC West Corporation, Hewlett Packard, Qwest Foundation, J.R. Simplot Company and The Idaho Statesman. Individuals also donated.

The scholarship was awarded during the Boise State University Martin Luther King Jr./Human Rights Celebration in January.

Ricky Martin may soon be haunted by more than screaming groupies

MIAMI – South Florida's ghosts seem to haunt only the wealthy and the well-known.

The next possible target: Ricky Martin.

The pop singer is expected to close a deal next month on a Mediterranean-style mansion on Miami Beach's North Bay Road with a reputation – it seems – of being haunted.

Former owner Micky Wolfson, a philanthropist who opened the Wolfsonian museum, warns that no one should live there. He said he hired an exorcist three times to remove the spirit of a "vindictive old maidish sort of figure."

Realtor Kent Karlock scoffs at the stories.

"I've been in that house many times and I'm not aware of anything unexplainable," he said.

According to Wolfson, the house was built by the parents of a woman who was killed on the way to her wedding in the late 1930s. It was meant to house her spirit. Wolfson didn't know the woman's name but said the sellers warned his parents when they bought the house not to make changes to it.

Television propaganda gives Colombians a lift

BOGOTA, Colombia – Contestants on the television game show "Comandos" wear camouflage, combat boots and helmets as they crawl through mud, swing on ropes and run obstacle courses at a real army training base.

"It's lots of dirty fun," said co-host Andrea Serna, whose own tight cammy T-shirts and pants are definitely not army-issue. "Many people have a fantasy of being in the army – for three days, not three years."

But Comandos is more than a game show.

Sponsored by a Colombian armed forces that admit to feeling isolated as they fight leftist guerrillas and drug traffickers, the program is also a bit of soft-core propaganda aimed at connecting the military with civilian society.

Bashed by human rights groups, chronically underfinanced, sidelined from peace talks with rebels and shunned by the sons of the elite, the armed forces are pushing the message that they are a legitimate part of Colombian society.

"Many times we feel very alone," said Lt. Col. Carlos Ospina, deputy chief of the department that sponsors the show. "An army like ours, engaged in a frontal war, must find some way of reaching the civilian community."

Student uses his life as gay Latino to open minds

WILKES-BARRE, Pa. – Jose Melendez is a gay Latino from El Salvador who moved to the United States 16 years ago, yet refuses to become an American citizen. I

"My goals are not to change people's minds," the 22-year-old said, "but to have them question what 'diversity' is and what it is to really be open-minded."

Melendez moved to the United States when he was 6, fleeing volatile politics in El Salvador. He is grateful for the opportunities and benefits this country offers but feels the problems of his homeland were caused by U.S. Central American policies during the 1980s. His feelings make him unwilling to become an American citizen, although he is a permanent resident.

Melendez grew up homosexual in a homophobic decade when many Americans were either hostile or indifferent to the emerging AIDS epidemic, he said.

Though fellow students were generally tolerant, he said, "There are many, many different high schools in New York where I could have come out and would have been shot."

Wilkes University professor Jim Harrington, also openly gay, recruited Melendez through the Northeastern Pennsylvania Diversity in Education Consortium.

UI to host multi-cultural journalism workshop

MOSCOW – The Scripps Howard Foundation has awarded the University of Idaho School of Communication a $10,000 grant to conduct a journalism workshop for students of color from high schools and two-year colleges.

The workshop will be held on the UI campus July 8-14. Twenty students will spend the week learning about the news profession from journalists of color and from UI journalism faculty and students. The participants will produce a newspaper, website and television newsmagazine.

The foundation's efforts reflect the news industry's commitment to improving its coverage of the wonderful cultural diversity that exists in America, organizers said.

The institute is open to ethnic minority students in grades 10-12 at high schools in Idaho, Montana, Oregon and Washington. Students of color from two-year tribal and community colleges in those states are also eligible to apply.

The participants will receive free room and board on the UI campus and stipends.

Students interested in participating should call (208) 885-6458.

Image de Idaho takes scholarship applications

BOISE – Last year, Image de Idaho awarded more than $20,000 in scholarships to Idaho Hispanics.

High school seniors and college students are eligible. Students must plan to enroll full-time in a post secondary institution in the 2001-2002 academic year.

For an application for a scholarship or for more information, contact: Ramon V. Silva, scholarship chair, Boise State University, New Student Information Center, 1910 University Drive, Boise ID 83725 or call him at (208) 426-3038 or e-mail him at rsilva@boisestate.edu.

The deadline is March 30.

Image de Idaho says it is a nonprofit organization which serves the interests of Hispanics in employment, training, education, civil rights and social issues. The goal of the scholarship program is to promote the educational development of Idaho's Hispanic students.

Toddler found in snowbank remains in critical condition

EAU CLAIRE, Wis. (AP) – A 2-year-old boy found lying in a snowbank and not breathing had been outside in subzero cold for up to four hours, authorities said.

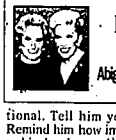
Les Hynek remained in critical condition Wednesday at the Mayo Clinic in Rochester, Minn. No other details were immediately released.

Elsewhere, a 13-month-old girl whose body was partially frozen and whose heart had stopped during a night outside in the cold at Edmonton, Alberta, was playful and talking and had been moved out of intensive care, hospital officials said.

Les was wearing only a diaper, flannel pajamas and a sweat shirt when he wandered from his home on his parents' dairy farm sometime after 3 a.m. Tuesday. His father found him unconscious almost four hours later about 50 feet from the house, Eau Claire County Sheriff's Sgt. John Vogler said.

The National Weather Service said the temperature that night in Eau Claire fell to 4 below zero. Vogler said he had heard that the boy's body temperature was about 65 degrees soon after he was found, but there was no immediate confirmation.

Doctor's wife can't convince husband to heal himself



DEAR ABBY
Abigail VanBuren

DEAR ABBY: I am an educated middle-aged woman who has not worked outside the home since my first child was born 12 years ago. My husband, "Jack," is a respected physician who makes a good living. We have two daughters, ages 11 and 9. Jack loves the girls and tries to make time for them in his busy work schedule. His career is demanding. Over the years it has taken more and more from him in terms of time, energy and emotions, which is why I have chosen to be at home. Jack has given up many of the things he used to do for fun and relaxation because he is tired all the time.

My husband has become an angry, depressed man. He manages to hide it at work and functions very well. But when he is home, he is controlling and complains constantly.

I have repeatedly asked him to see a therapist and consider taking an anti-depressant, but he absolutely refuses to do either. He says he can manage his problems. He can't. His constant criticism has killed any feelings I had for him. I am not interested in his thoughts or opinions, and I'm certainly not interested in having sex with him, which I do to keep the peace. Jack says he is happy with me and doesn't want another wife. I am NOT happy with him and I don't want another husband. It's too much work!

If we didn't have children I would leave. But how can I take my daughters away from their father? If I left him, I wouldn't know what to do to support myself since I no longer have any marketable skills. I'm afraid he'd be so angry he would leave me financially destitute.

Abby, I'm stuck. I don't know what to do.

– TIRED OF IT ALL

DEAR TIRED: Leaving isn't an option. Your husband needs you. You have described symptoms of chronic depression, and your husband needs professional help. Although it hasn't yet affected his work, if it continues, it will.

Try again to convince him to get the help he needs. Remind him of how things used to be between the two of you before he became self-protective and defensive. Do not be confrontational. Tell him you love him. Remind him how important he is to his daughters, that as a family you need his support, not his criticism.

If that has no effect, talk to one of his close and trusted colleagues, preferably one who is trained in mental health disorders, about the change in his behavior. Depression is an illness, and he or she may be able to convince him, in a way you can't, to get help. Medication and counseling do wonders in the treatment of depression. The sooner it is treated, the faster the patient (or doctor) gets better.

DEAR ABBY: Three years ago, my mother sent me a birthday card with a penny inside. She died recently, and I'm still wondering why she sent me just a penny.

Is there an old adage connected to giving someone a penny as a gift?

– DAUGHTER OF A FRUGAL MOM

DEAR DAUGHTER: Have you never heard of "a penny for luck"? Your mother included the penny because she was wishing you good luck.

AT&T Broadband sells more cable assets

NEW YORK – AT&T Broadband, the cable television unit of AT&T Corp., said Wednesday it has agreed to sell certain cable systems in four states to Charter Communications Inc. for $1.79 billion in cash and stock.

The news follows an announcement Tuesday that the company is selling other cable assets to Mediacom Communications for $2.22 billion. AT&T Corp. is also selling its 10 percent stake in Japan Telecom to Vodafone Group PLC for $1.35 billion.

All the sales are expected to help the company reduce its roughly $60 billion in short- and long-term debt. The cable sales are also meant to consolidate AT&T Broadband's cable services in larger markets.

Under the terms of Wednesday's deal, which is expected to close in the second or third quarter, AT&T Broadband will get two cable systems valued at $249 million serving 62,000 customers in Florida. Charter, meanwhile, will get AT&T cable systems serving nearly 574,000 customers in Missouri, Alabama, Nevada and California.

"These transactions will further our strategy of clustering in larger markets," said Dan Somers, president and chief executive officer of AT&T Broadband. "The south Florida systems we're getting will complement our current cluster there quite well."

In a similar move, AT&T Broadband is existing the Magic Valley and Mini-Cassia cable markets in a swap with Phoenix-based Cable ONE Inc.

Potlatch keeps Lewiston mill closed another week

LEWISTON – Potlatch Corp. will extend the temporary closure of its Clearwater Lumber Mill for at least one more week, starting Monday.

The company announced a two-week shutdown in mid-February. But on Tuesday, officials said they lengthened the closure because of poor lumber market conditions and high energy and log costs.

Operating expenses have been boosted by higher prices for electricity, natural gas and oil.

Potlatch will review conditions in mid-March to determine the mill's future operating schedule.

The Lewiston mill produces boards, dimension lumber and cedar specialties. All operations, including the log yard, sawmill, surfacing department and cedar specialties, will be closed.

The shipping department will remain in operation to serve customers.

About 320 people have been affected by the temporary shutdown. Lumber mill employees have been directed to Idaho Job Service for assistance with unemployment benefits.

Potlatch is a diversified forest products company with 1.5 million acres of timberlands in Arkansas, Minnesota and Idaho.

Hecla sells clay, feldspar units for less than hoped

COEUR d'ALENE – Hecla Mining Co. has agreed to sell Kentucky-Tennessee Clay Co. and K-T Feldspar to Imerys USA Inc. for $62.5 million, $5.5 million less than the previous sale price.

The transaction includes Hecla's ball clay, kaolin and feldspar operations and is expected to close during the first week of April.

Hecla had earlier sued Zemex Corp. of Toronto, Canada, for refusing to close on the $68 million purchase of K-T Clay's ball clay and kaolin operations. Hecla will still seek damages incurred from Zemex's failure to purchase K-T Clay.

Vicki Veltkamp, vice president of investor and public relations, said the price is not as good as the Zemex price, which did not include Hecla's feldspar operations.

Hecla's chief executive officer Art Brown said the proceeds from the sale of K-T Clay will pay off a $55 million bank debt which comes due in April.

Hecla Mining, headquartered in Coeur d'Alene, is one of the country's top silver producers. The company also produces gold and has precious metals operations in Alaska, Idaho, Mexico and Venezuela.

Mini-Cassia businesses ask local residents how to serve them better

By Virginia S. Hutchins
Times-News writer

HEYBURN – Mini-Cassia business leaders are appealing to local residents: Tell us how we can keep your business at home.

It's a plea with economic urgency.

Unemployment rates in both Cassia and Minidoka counties climbed in January from their December levels, and a labor market analyst blamed retail layoffs, coupled with a slumping ag-related economy, for a cautious business climate.

"Typically, January and February are very challenging for retail sales, and this year is no exception," the Mini-Cassia Chamber of Commerce's board president, Dave Westfall, said in the chamber's March newsletter. "But over the last several years, January and February has become a year-round problem."

While Mini-Cassia retailers constantly search for ways to attract and keep customers, he said, local residents often head out of town to shop – especially to save a few dollars.

"Anymore it seems too easy to jump in the car and drive 50 miles to get what we need," Westfall said. "We've all done it."

But the chamber aims to find out what it would take to keep shoppers at home: Better selection? Competitive prices? Superior customer service?

The organization distributed a one-page survey around the area, asking locals whether and why they shop out of town, and what they do and don't like about shopping at home. Volunteers and chamber workers have been handing out the surveys, publishing them on newspaper pages and making them available at the chamber office in Heyburn.

'Anymore it seems too easy to jump in the car and drive 50 miles to get what we need. We've all done it.'

– Dave Westfall, Mini-Cassia Chamber of Commerce board president

Business leaders are anxious for answers.

"Please help us help you. Do this for yourself and for our area. Tell us what you think," said Westfall's statement to chamber members.

The chamber will announce survey results during its Small Business Expo 2001 noon luncheon March 23, at the Snake River Plaza.

Then board members will "try to come up with some solutions," chamber office manager Shanna Walsh said. "We want to keep our people here locally" to shop and buy services.

The Mini-Cassia Chamber of Commerce can be reached at 679-4793, or by e-mail at mcdcham@minicassiachamber.org.

"We want our community to grow," Walsh said.

Steve Thompson, president of the Burley Area Merchants Association, added his own voice to the effort.

"In our contemporary world, we have no choice but to 'think globally.' However, we have a responsibility to 'shop locally' and to 'buy Idaho,'" said a statement by Thompson, who also is a membership representative of Buy Idaho Inc. "Our schools, our infrastructure, our economy, our strength in business and community are directly tied to loyal support of our local, regional and Idaho businesses."

SHIFTING WINDS

Plant closure hits Arkansas town

The Associated Press

CAMDEN, Ark. – For 73 years, the stacks at International Paper Co.'s mill belched gray, sour steam day and night over the piney woods of south Arkansas.

On summer afternoons, the plumes sullied laundry hanging outside. On winter mornings, they guided deer hunters downwind of their quarry. In any season, townspeople knew the answer to the question, "Paper or plastic?"

But IP closed the paper-bag plant in January, leaving 580 workers without a way to support families long dependent on company paychecks. The employee union urged IP to sell to another papermaker, but the company refused to put it into a competitor's hands while the market is down.

Now, with the hulking plant sitting silent, this town of 15,000 is dealing with its pain and trying to figure out how to remake itself economically.

"You cannot make any money in this town anymore, but at least you (can)

Chill factor

A look at our cooling economy

More to come

Every day the signs become clearer – after years of heated expansion, the U.S. economy is cooling down. A stock market buffeted by declining profits is just one indicator. We are also seeing slower consumer spending, more layoffs, a rise in bankruptcies, and in general, a growing concern among Americans about what the coming months will bring. The AP continues an occasional series called 'Chill Factor' that will shed more light on the economy during these uncertain times.

DOT-COM DOWNSIZING

Walmart.com lays off 24

Knight Ridder News Service

MENLO PARK, Calif. – Walmart.com – the online arm of giant offline retailer Wal-Mart Stores, which has stores in Burley and Jerome – said it is laying off 24 of its 250 employees as it streamlines its product selection and pulls back on online marketing.

Jeanne Jackson, Walmart.com's high-profile chief executive, described the cutbacks, in the company's merchandising and marketing departments, as part of a "normal" process of re-evaluation after the recent holiday season.

"This is responsible management of the business," she said, adding that Menlo Park-based Walmart.com is not suffering the same problems that have plagued pure-play online retailers.

But Sean Kaldor, vice president of e-commerce for Nielsen/NetRatings, said the layoffs are not a good sign and questioned why the company did not simply reassign employees to other positions.

Dot-com layoffs have become common over the past year. According to a report released Tuesday by outplacement firm Challenger, Gray & Christmas, Internet companies have cut nearly 35,000 jobs over the past three months, compared with about 31,000 jobs over the previous 12 months. In February, however, Internet layoffs declined slightly to 11,649, down 9 percent from January.

In the hard-hit e-commerce sector, layoffs and company shutdowns have been mostly limited to Internet-only merchants until recently, while the online arms of the big bricks-and-mortar chains have emerged as the stronger players.

Recently, some "bricks-and-clicks" players have started to feel the effects of the dot-com shakeout. Earlier this month, Barnesandnoble.com, for instance, fired 250 people, or 16 percent of its workforce.

The fear, according to Kaldor, is that if traditional retailers see business continue to slow as the economy flags, they will eventually become more tight-fisted

Banks complete merger

Firstar, U.S. Bancorp form eighth-largest banking company

The Times-News and Knight Ridder News Service

MINNEAPOLIS – Firstar Corp. and Minneapolis-based U.S. Bancorp completed their $22.1 billion merger deal this week, marking the official beginning of the country's eighth-largest banking firm and the end of Firstar's 148-year run as a Milwaukee-based company.

The merger gives the combined company access to 24 states, including fast-growing markets in the West. The company has $160 billion in assets.

U.S. Bank – U.S. Bancorp's commercial and retail name – has Magic Valley branches in Bellevue, Buhl, Burley, Filer, Hagerman, Hazelton, Jerome, Ketchum, Rupert, Twin Falls and Wendell. But Firstar has no banking offices nor ATM locations in Idaho.

The new U.S. Bancorp, led by Firstar president and chief executive officer Jerry A. Grundhofer, will be based in Minneapolis. Grundhofer acquired the company in a stock swap with U.S. Bancorp, which is headed by his older brother, John F. Grundhofer.

The company will operate in its Midwestern states under the Firstar name until fall.

In all, company officials say they expect to eliminate about 1,750 positions as a result of the merger.

CEO sounds a cautious note

Knight Ridder News Service

CUPERTINO, Calif. – Compared with the upbeat mood at her first shareholders' meeting, Hewlett-Packard Chairman and Chief Executive Carly Fiorina was on the defensive this week at her second annual appearance before the people who ultimately own the company.

With a depressed stock and two quarters of dismal financial results, Fiorina told hundreds of shareholders gathered at the Flint Center for Performing Arts in Cupertino that as the economy sours, business at the computer and printer giant – a major Idaho employer – probably won't get much better any time soon.

"We're being cautious about our outlook for the rest of this year," said Fiorina.

Shareholders said the Tuesday meeting was more somber than those of recent years. But they are hopeful Fiorina will be able to guide the Palo Alto, Calif.-based company through tough economic times.

"Like every other company, HP is having problems," said Robert Hendricks of Redwood City. "I'm going to wait and see."

Beyond HP's recent performance pitfalls, some shareholders and employees at the meeting said were troubled by an apparent shift in HP's culture – the famed "HP Way."

During the question-and-answer portion of the meeting, 14-year employee Dave Mata asked Fiorina to change a tougher performance ranking system implemented last fall. He said he was ranked low on an evaluation and was in danger of losing his job.

"The concern for the welfare of the employees is what made this company great," Mata said.

Fiorina responded that 70 percent of HP employees surveyed said that in the past, management hadn't dealt effectively with underperforming employees. She added HP's new ranking system is respectful of employees.

Another shareholder said HP has a morale problem and asked Fiorina what she is doing about it.

Fiorina said she didn't agree with the question, but acknowledged HP's restructuring, new technological focus and the economic downturn have been difficult and required "sacrifices" by employees.

After the meeting, shareholders said they thought Fiorina was taking the right measures to rejuvenate the company. But they said the HP Way, a philosophy based on teamwork, innovation and respect for the individual, may fall by the wayside.

"I've never heard this much dissension at a meeting," said Giorgia Nelson, 80, a retiree who has held HP shares for more than a decade. "HP has been known as a company with a heart. Now it is more efficient."

After the meeting, HP spokeswoman Rebecca Robboy said the criticisms voiced didn't reflect the overall sentiment of HP employees. "Ongoing feedback show that the vast majority of employees understand and are strongly supportive of the direction the company is taking to become more competitive."

Stocks slump as hopes of rate cut fade

NEW YORK (AP) Disappointed investors sent stocks sliding Wednesday when Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan effectively dismissed the chances of an immediate interest rate cut.

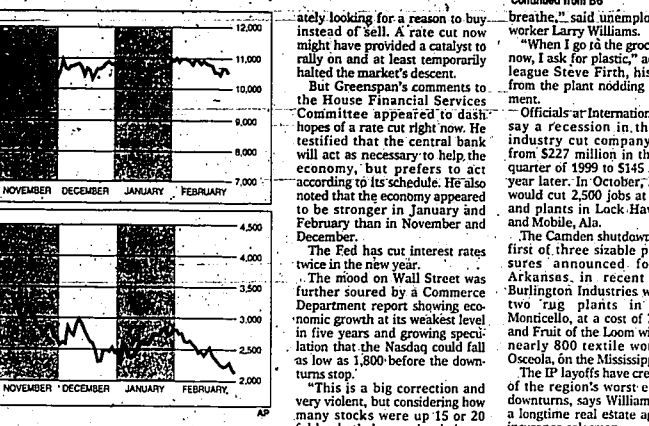
Although the Fed is still expected to lower rates when it meets March 20, that wasn't soon enough for Wall Street, which had driven stocks higher on speculation of a faster rate reduction.

"I don't think the pressure's going to lift anytime soon. I don't see the pain being over yet," said Todd Clark, co-head of trading at WR Hambrecht, who believes stocks will fall further. "The market's in a state where it's going to continue to go down."

The Dow Jones industrial average dropped 141.60 to 10,495.28 after falling as much as 213 points in volatile trading.

The Nasdaq composite index remained at levels not seen since December 1998, falling 55.99 to 2,151.83. The Standard & Poor's 500 index slid 18.00 to 1,239.94.

The Fed's lack of action was a particular disappointment for Wall Street because of the recent deterioration in the economy and stock market.



Although the central bank is still expected to cut rates at its March gathering, many market observers believe the Fed needs to act sooner to reassure investors. After weeks of dismal corporate results and profit warnings, many investors are desperately looking for a reason to buy instead of sell. A rate cut now might have provided a catalyst to rally on and at least temporarily halted the market's descent.

But Greenspan's comments to the House Financial Services Committee appeared to dash hopes of a rate cut right now. He testified that the central bank will act as necessary to help the economy, but prefers to act according to its schedule. He also noted that the economy appeared to be stronger in January and February than in November and December.

The Fed has cut interest rates twice in the new year.

The mood on Wall Street was further soured by a Commerce Department report showing economic growth at its weakest level in five years and growing speculation that the Nasdaq could fall as low as 1,800 before the downturns stop.

"This is a big correction and very violent, but considering how many stocks were up 15 or 20 fold, what's happening is in no way abnormal or surprising," said Charles Pradilla, chief investment strategist at SG Cowen analyst.

breathe," said unemployed mill worker Larry Williams.

"When I go to the grocery store now, I ask for plastic," added colleague Steve Firth, his friends from the plant nodding in agreement.

Officials at International Paper say a recession in the paper industry cut company profits from $227 million in the fourth quarter of 1999 to $145 million a year later. In October, it said it would cut 2,500 jobs at Camden and plants in Lock Haven, Pa., and Mobile, Ala.

The Camden shutdown was the first of three sizable plant closures announced for rural Arkansas in recent weeks. Burlington Industries will close two rug plants in nearby Monticello, at a cost of 750 jobs, and Fruit of the Loom will lay off nearly 800 textile workers at Osceola, on the Mississippi River.

The IP layoffs have created one of the region's worst economic downturns, says William Jordan, a longtime real estate agent and insurance salesman.

Eight years ago, Hughes Missile Systems gradually shut down a weapons plant that had employed 1,700 people. In some ways the International Paper closing is a harder hit because the weapons plant laid off its workers over a five-year period, he said.

"Our total economy isn't doing too good," Jordan said, flipping through photographs of houses he has listed. Most of the homes belong to IP executives who have relocated to other plants.

Jordan predicts the town won't feel the full impact of the IP closing for at least a year, when severance pay and unemployment benefits end. That's when he predicts laid-off workers could begin putting their homes on the market.

"People who don't want to leave Camden will have to start making up their minds," he said.

Ricky Santifer, 20 years a paper machine operator, comes to the cafe to catch up with the regulars. In April, he plans to start taking welding classes at a technical school.

"I'm 42, I'm unskilled, and my priorities now are finding a new skill to re-enter the workforce," he said.

Like Santifer, many of the former mill workers are going back to school. Continuing education is a requirement of unemployment benefits.

Roger Worsley, chancellor of the Southern Arkansas Technical Institute in Camden, said 112 former IP employees – one in five of the plant's former workforce – are enrolled at the school.

"A lot are finding college-level work to be kind of a shock," he said. "Their basic computer skills are not what they probably ought to be."

Most of the workers are taking electronics and computer networking classes, skills in demand in other parts of the state.

"The jobs are not in Camden, but they are crying for these type of workers in other places," Worsley said.

Michael Strotheide, the head of the Ouachita Partnership for Economic Development, a county-wide taskforce, said IP's plant closing will force the area to branch out of defense and timber.

"We are in for a period of regrouping," he said. "We are going to have to build the economy back up and diversify."

Firth and other laid-off workers say seeing the old mill depresses them.

"Now the plant is nothing but a big monument to unemployment," he said.

Greenspan warns of more economic weakness to come

WASHINGTON (AP) – Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan, expressing new worries about the economy, said Wednesday the slowdown "has yet to run its full course" and signaled the central bank is ready to cut interest rates again to rev up growth.

Greenspan delivered his latest assessment to the House Financial Services Committee as President Bush tried to rally the nation behind his plan for major tax cuts and for a budget blueprint that he says will shrink government debt while protecting important programs.

At a factory in Beaver, Pa., Bush said Greenspan's downbeat remarks were "all the more reason to accelerate the tax cut ... as soon as possible." Bush wants to cut individual tax rates retroactive to Jan. 1.

While repeating his support for tax cuts – which first got his blessing to on Jan. 25 – Greenspan refrained like before from endorsing a specific plan.

The Fed chairman also reiterated his interest in seeing Congress consider imposing a trigger mechanism that would trim government spending or tax cuts if projected budget surpluses aren't as large as currently estimated. Bush doesn't like the idea of putting any conditions on tax cuts.

In his economic outlook, Greenspan blamed much of the economy's weakness on an effort by businesses to cut back quickly on production in the face of falling sales.

Although companies are working hard to bring excess inventories into better alignment with demand, Greenspan said, the process may take more time.

LDS Church releases organized list of Civil War-era freed blacks

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON – The Mormon Church published records this week from the post-Civil War Freedman's Bank for newly freed slaves, making ancestral records available for as many as 12 million black Americans.

The records have been available for years through the National Archives but not in organized form. The church, formally the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, spent 11 years, with help from volunteer Utah state inmates, extracting and linking the 480,000 names contained in the records.

The result is a searchable database on compact disk which includes information such as family names, birth locations and names of former slave owners.

The discovery of the documents poses prickly questions for the nation.

When the bank closed, about 61,000 account holders were eligible to receive money. Less than 30,000 former slaves ever recovered their money and even then, most received just over half of what they were actually owed, Washington said.

Jackson Lee said it was premature to say whether there would be legislation to compensate the former account holders. Instead, she said she hoped to first have a review of the bank's records and operations.

Jewish descendants of the Holocaust have sued several European countries in recent years over decades-old bank accounts and other property confiscated by Adolf Hitler's Germany and European collaborators.

The church began the project when an employee discovered the existence of the original microfilm records. At that time, no one had undertaken the long process of extracting the documents into one database.

Rep. Sheila Jackson Lee, a Texas Democrat, said, "For too long, African-American history was embodied in untruth. We were not given an opportunity for truth."

The Freedman's Savings and Trust Company was established through a congressional charter in 1865 – the same year the Civil War ended – to help former slaves with their new financial responsibilities. With 37 branch offices in 17 states, the bank had deposits totaling more than $57 million before it collapsed in 1874 because of mismanagement and fraud.

What survived, however, were meticulous bank documents recording the names and family relationships of account holders.

One application for a former slave lists the name of his former plantation, age, complexion, children, place of birth and occupation. It also lists the names of siblings who were sold away during slavery.

"The records created by the bank are a rich source of documentation," said Reginald Washington, an archivist with the National Archives and Records Administration.

Musicians don't earn Grammy after all

LEWISTON – After a week of celebrating, four Lapwai men learned they were not included on a Grammy-winning album after all.

Andre Picard Jr., E.J. Kipp, George Meninick Jr. and D.J. Meninick were part of the drumming group Redstone that played the song "Southern Straight" on "Gathering of Nations Pow-Wow 1998."

But it was an album with the same name, by the same producers, made in 1999 that won the Grammy, in the Native American Album category, rather than the 1998 recording.

The mix-up came when the winning album was listed only as "Gathering of Nations Pow-Wow" on the Grammy Web site. Next to the listing was a link that took Web surfers to Amazon.com.

Idaho voters give nod to supplemental levy

POST FALLS – School Superintendent Dick Harris can retire with a victory after voters passed a two-year, $1.4 million supplemental levy.

West in brief

It needed a simple majority to pass, but garnered 73 percent approval. The cash will go toward textbooks, routine maintenance and six school buses. "I'll take that. It's a very good feeling," said Harris, who retires in June after seven years with the district.

The levy will replace a similar one passed two years ago. So property owners will not see a big difference on their tax bills.

Dee Lawless, president of the Kootenai County Property Owners Association, argued the district should manage its money better and live within its existing budget.

BYU faculty apologize for sexist allegations

SALT LAKE CITY – A group of Brigham Young University science faculty members has apologized to the University of Utah's medical school for sexism allegedly displayed by some of BYU graduates.

"Thank you for making us aware of this problem, and accept our apologies for the limited vision of those persons in your program who make wrongful judgments about medical training for women," the 24 BYU faculty members said in a letter last week to Victoria Judd, associate dean of the medical school.

Kent Crookston, dean of the BYU College of Biology and Agriculture, fears that continued problems might lead the medical school to reduce BYU graduates accepted into the state's only medical program.

Crookston, in a memo e-mailed Jan. 13 to all college personnel, said Judd told the BYU administrators that "Over the past several years, some of the male students in (the medical) program have flagrantly belittled female students, challenging their fit in a professional program that rightfully belongs to men, asserting that women ought to get on with the business of raising children.

AFFIRMATIVE ACTION POLICIES AND RESPONSIBILITIES

It is the policy of the South Central Community Action Agency, Inc., that no person, because of race, color, creed, religion, sex, age, national origin, or handicap, shall be discriminated against in employment or provision of services by the Agency or any delegated activities of the Agency.

The Board of Directors of the South Central Community Action Agency, Inc. commits itself to an affirmative action program that will provide for equal opportunity in employment, equal opportunity for participants in all phases and levels of programs, and action to change practices, laws and regulations which discriminate against minority persons in particular, and low-income persons generally, in the community.

Employment practices provide that individuals, including disabled veterans and veterans of the Vietnam era, be recruited, hired, assigned, and treated equally in these and all other respects without regard to race, color, creed, religion, sex, age, national origin, or handicap.

The policy of extending equal opportunity to all persons also includes insuring equal participation opportunities to the various segments of the low-income population, and implementing changes in institutions which discriminate. The Agency affirmative action program focuses on all employees, existing or potential participants, and area-wide institutions.

Discrimination of any type is prohibited. The Agency operates in compliance with all Federal and State laws protecting the rights of individuals. Prohibition against discrimination is normally defined as application to age, color, race, sex, national origin, handicap, and political as well as religious affiliations or opinions.

The responsibility of implementing Affirmative Action Policies is assigned to the Executive Director who will be responsible to the Board. The Executive Director will appoint an Equal Employment Opportunity Officer who will have sufficient authority necessary to assure program success. Every supervisor in the Agency is accountable for helping meet the goals of the Affirmative Action Plan, and their performance in this area will be evaluated just as their performance in other Agency goals.

THE ACES ON BRIDGE®

Bobby Wolff

He is lifeless that is faultless.
— English proverb

"Please assess the guilt for this defensive disaster," asks a reader. "Either of us could have found the setting trick; unfortunately, neither of us did."

East took the first diamond with his jack and made the accurate switch to spades. South ducked to West's king, and West continued with his diamond 10. East allowed the 10 to win, hoping for a club switch that never came. After South ruffed West's diamond continuation, the rest was easy. South drew trumps, cashed his spade ace, and discarded his club loser on dummy's spade queen.

West argued that his opening lead told East that declarer had no more than two diamonds. Therefore, with no tricks available in either trumps or spades, East should have overtaken the diamond 10 to cash his club ace.

East's view was that West should have shifted to clubs after East played his trey, allowing West's diamond 10 to win. South's pre-empt, coupled with dummy's trump holding, strongly suggested an eight-card trump suit. From East's point of view, a club switch by West was "obvious." Further, if South had only seven hearts, East might have scored two club tricks instead of one.

The verdict? Both sides share a good part of the blame. However, aiming at two down instead of one-down-against-a-vulnerable game is not a winning philosophy. For that reason, East gets 75 percent of the blame, while West gets "only" 25 percent.

IN BRIEF

Southern Idaho lands pair of women's hoop players

TWIN FALLS – College of Southern Idaho women's basketball coach Kendall Grant announced Wednesday that he has received verbal commitments from 6-foot-3 post Kamie Rodahl and 6-1 wing Kristi Hill to play basketball next season at the school.

"It's exciting," Grant said. "They're both good players who'll push (for playing time)."

Hill, who averaged 15 points and seven rebounds at North Eugene (Ore.) High School, is an athletic, versatile forward who possesses potent range from 10-15 feet. Recruited by several league rivals, including Dixie State College and Utah Valley State College, she also ran track in high school, competing in relays, the open 400-meter run and high jump.

"She is a tremendous jumper who can play the three and shoot like (Snow College guard and conference second-leading scorer) Casey Cooke," Grant said.

In Rodahl, Grant boosts his size and depth at the post with the loss of graduating sophomore post Trisha Gardiner. Rodahl averaged 10.7 points and 5.8 rebounds per game her senior season at Skyview High School, in Billings, Mont.

Grant, who is expecting several more players to visit the campus over the next few months, said he and assistant Shelly Wright will be looking to fill six to nine spots for next season.

Class A-4 clashes await

Title rematch tops slate of games today

By Jeff Behlman
Times-News writer

CALDWELL – The first day of the Class A-4 boys' state high school basketball tournament is in the books, and some interesting matchups await today.

Topping the list, District IV champion Richfield (24-4) meets Mackay (17-4) in a rematch of last season's state-title tilt. Both teams won their opening-round contests on Wednesday. Also intriguing is an all-Magic Valley game featuring Wednesday winners and longtime rivals Raft River (15-9) and Oakley (16-8).

Carey (18-8) also won its first game, beating District II champion Genesee 55-49 and advancing to play Clark Fork (14-8) today. The only local Wednesday loser was Hagerman (11-14), which dropped a 50-40 decision to defending champion Mackay.

Other winners on the first day of the tourney were Clark Fork, which downed Rockland 61-46, Meadows Valley, eking out a 62-58 decision over Kendrick, and Council, a 65-58 victor over Kootenai.

Richfield will tip off against Mackay at 6:30 tonight at Vallivue High.

Unbeaten Hornets gear for championship run

By Kevin Hall

DECLO – Loyd Garey remembers telling the voice on the other end of the phone that he didn't have time for any games.

But the caller insisted that it was no joke. In fact, Sports Illustrated columnist Rick Reilly really was talking to the Declo boys' basketball head coach and yes, he really wanted to write an article about "The Shot."

"I couldn't believe it," Garey said of the instant fame brought about by Mike Christensen's 75-foot prayer to win the 1998 Class A-3 state championship.

"It was kind of a funny thing," Garey said. "I said, 'You're kidding.' It just didn't sound real. It

Lou Illes slumps and gets a laugh from Jim Conners, left, and Chris Hartweg, center, as he missed the hole, actually a bottle of single-malt whiskey, in the semi-final round of office putting held in the offices of a Chicago commodities broker last Wedgesday. Conners defeated Illes in this round but lost in the final round, missing a chance to compete in The Office Putting Championship on March 1 in Chicago.

Hackers take to hallways for office putting

The Associated Press

CHICAGO – It was an ordinary afternoon at the commodities brokerage firm – brokers on the phone discussing the markets, pecking away at their keyboards, CNBC droning on overhead like financial elevator music.

And a guy standing by the file cabinet, lining up a putt while coworkers razzed him like it was Sunday morning at the local course.

Putting in the office? Even in this world of "business casual," that can't be acceptable.

Oh, yes it is. At least for companies participating in The Office Putting Championship.

"It's a pretty cool idea. Everybody in the office loves it," said Lou Illes, a senior vice president at The Linn Group, the commodities brokerage firm.

Started four years ago in Chicago, The Office Putting Championship is an annual competition to find the city's best indoor putter. Companies hold in-office, match play competitions, then send their champion to the citywide finals, being held Thursday night.

The winner gets a trip for four to Scotland, to play the British Open courses and tour The Glenlivet distillery. The Scotch maker sponsors the tournament.

So many companies want in on Office Putting there's now qualifying, of sorts. Companies register off the Internet – about 250 signed up this year – and 128 are randomly selected for the competition. The tournament's proven so popular that it spread to Boston last year.

"I think it's outstanding. It's fun ... and it breaks up the monotony of work," said Gerry Appleton of Technology Consulting Corp. in suburban Oakbrook.

For those who smirk and think, "I do this all the time in my office," this isn't just whacking a ball toward a plastic cup.

Each company designs its own five-hole course for the in-office competition. There has to be two par-2s, two par-3s and one par-4, but everything after that is up for grabs. Holes can have as many – or as few – hazards as designers want. They can run around desks, chairs, copiers, you name it.

One company even created a hole where competitors had to putt into an elevator, take it to another floor and then putt out of the elevator. People had to putt down steps at another firm.

And just check out the "cups" – highball glasses with fake scotch and ice cubes anchoring a tiny flag.

At The Linn Group, the fifth hole, is a par-4, 15-yarder that starts on a clear plastic chair mat, continues on the carpet, takes a slight turn to the left, runs diagonally through a doorway into the research room and takes another jog left to the cup, which sits amid a hodgepodge of printers, filing cabinets and boxes.

Talk about hazards. Those chair mats are slick. Get going too fast and you're down the hall in some coat closet. Trampling down a patch of grass to get a better lie may work outdoors, but try doing that to a fax machine. And think reading a green is tough? Try reading carpet. Burber, no less.

Forget about playing off the desk leg or the copying machine, too. Hit anything besides the cup, and it's a penalty stroke.

And the normal rules of golf etiquette are out the window. Silence while putting? Hardly.

Eagles stroll to victory

CSI storms through Slugout opener 12-1

By Joe Sunnen
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS – What a difference two days of practice can make for a baseball team:

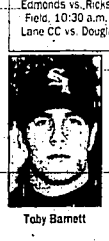
The College of Southern Idaho opened the McDonald's Slugout tournament on Wednesday with a 12-1 win over North Lake College of Texas. The Eagles sprayed 13 hits over seven innings while pitchers Craig Kilshaw and Andy Meyette teamed up for 10 strikeouts to move CSI's record to 6-6.

"We got some help again," CSI coach Jim Walker said. "They put a lot of people on base for us and we got 13 hits. We were swinging the bats well but they were having some trouble pitching."

Later Wednesday, the Community College of Southern Nevada hammered Ricks College, also by a 12-1 score.

Eagles sophomore Toby Barnett broke open a 1-1 tie in the third inning with a three-run home run, giving CSI a 4-1 edge, and drove in another run in the fifth. He finished the game 2-for-3 with five RBIs to lead the Eagles.

"I haven't been too comfortable at the plate," Barnett said. "I've been trying to work it at and once I get my swing down and get more comfortable, I should be all right. I just have to get a bit more consistent at the plate."



Toby Barnett

CSI kept its momentum going in the fourth inning, opening with a single by sophomore Chris Westburg and a double off the base of the left field wall by freshman Tom Meyers. Freshman Christian Colonel followed Meyers with a walk to load the bases and Barnett walked to score Westburg, pushing the tally to 5-1.

"We just didn't pitch well," said North Lake coach Steve Cummings. "We had too many walks, got behind in the count and just didn't pitch smart. CSI is a good ball club – they executed well and did a good job today."

North Lake walked sophomore Sydney deJong with the bases still loaded to give up another run and freshman Matt Gunning delivered a one-out RBI single to make the score 7-1. The Blazers walked in two more runs in the fourth and two runs total.

"They got in a jam," Walker said. "They weren't going to waste their pitching out there. I was glad to see Barnett step up and get a couple of hits because the freshmen have been outplaying the sophomores."

North Lake loaded the bases in the fifth inning with none away, but failed to score a run after third baseman Kevin Sytko turned a line drive into a double play and Kilshaw induced a groundout.

The Eagles put together three more runs in the fifth to go ahead

Minico wins mixed bowling tournament

By Holly Keyt
Times-News writer

FILER – With the state tournament just around the corner, the Magic Valley's best high school bowlers met at Cedar Lanes for one more tourney Wednesday.

After last week's regional tournament, each of seven local schools sent a mixed team to Filer to compete for medals. Minico came out on top, knocking down 1,256 pins and finishing 6-1.

"We did really well today," said senior Tiffinay Bywater. "We just had lots of fun."

The Spartans' only loss came in their first game to Twin Falls. Then Minico heated up and won the next six by at least 40 pins each game.

"We just do our best and whatever happens, happens," Bywater said.

Close behind in the medal chase was Kimberly. The Bulldogs tied Minico with six wins and one loss – to the Spartans.

But Minico knocked down 355 more pins, moving Kimberly to second place.

Filer and Wendell tied records for third place, each winning four games. But the Wildcats had more total pins, knocking down 958 to the Trojans' 943.

Rounding out the field were Jerome and Twin Falls, both 3-4, and Hansen, 2-5.

The Bruins got a strong start, defeating Minico by a single pin. But Twin Falls couldn't pull out wins over Jerome, Hansen, Wendell or Kimberly.

"We didn't do as well as we would've liked to," said Bruin junior Gabrielle Marcantonio. "But overall, our scores weren't that bad."

All seven teams are looking forward to meeting Idaho's best high school bowlers in the state tournament Friday in Burley.

"I'm getting a little nervous," Bywater said. "All we can do is our best."

The Spartans have taken home the championship the past two years and look to make it three this season.

But Minico should face stiff competition from about 20 other teams.

"We are definitely going to state," said Filer senior Erica Mejia. "I am excited ... I know we're on the right track."

Stephenson hopes to avoid surgery

Spring training

JUPITER, Fla. (AP) – After a breakthrough season, Garrett Stephenson is having a difficult spring.

The St. Louis Cardinals right-hander aggravated an elbow injury while pitching against the Atlanta Braves in the playoffs last season. He's still not certain whether he'll need surgery, which probably would end his season.

"I'm just trying to go out every day, work like heck and do the best I can to fight through this and be prepared for whatever happens," Stephenson said Wednesday.

After starting last season 8-0, Stephenson dropped to 9-5, then finished 16-9 as the No. 3 starter. He began to feel tendinitis pain at midseason and said his elbow "gave out" against the Braves, he said.

Stephenson spent the offseason in a rehabilitation program that included workouts with weights and machines at hospitals and rehabilitation centers.

"He's on a maybe status," manager Tony La Russa said. "Were going slowly with him."

Since arriving for spring training, Stephenson has been on what head trainer Barry Weinberg calls a "progressive throwing program." It starts with playing catch, then long toss, pitching from flat ground, from a mound and batting practice. The final step is a simulated game.

For now, Stephenson is in the long-toss phase. On Wednesday he made 75 throws from 90 to 100 feet.

The injury can be described as "a sprain with an associated strain in the right elbow," Weinberg said. "There was both ligament and muscle involvement, but he's coming along OK."

St. Louis Cardinals pitcher Garrett Stephenson tosses the ball in the outfield at the Cardinals training camp in Jupiter, Fla. Wednesday. Stephenson has been afflicted with tendinitis in his right elbow.

Elsewhere on Wednesday:

• Boston's Nomar Garciaparra, the two-time defending AL batting champion, hopes to be ready for opening day despite an injured right wrist. But if rest doesn't fix the problem, he didn't rule out surgery.

"If (the doctors) were thinking about it, they didn't tell me and I didn't want to hear it right now," he said. "Hopefully, this works, even if there has to be rehabilitation."

Garciaparra is expected to wear a removable cast for one to two weeks and take anti-inflammatory medication.

• Mark McGwire and the Cardinals agreed to a two-year extension worth about $30 million, two baseball officials familiar with the negotiations told The Associated Press on the condition they not be identified. The new deal runs through 2003, the season McGwire could be approaching Hank Aaron's home-run record of 755.

• In Winter Haven, Fla., Cleveland's Omar Vizquel agreed to a $15 million, two-year contract extension that will keep him in Cleveland through 2004. "I feel like Alex Rodriguez," Vizquel said.

The deal includes a mutual option for 2005 with a $1 million buyout and a $1 million personal services contract.

• There were also a couple of odd injuries – including the first casualty from the new strike zone. Pirates first baseman Kevin Young was struck on the right elbow by a foul ball as umpire Jim Reynolds demonstrated the newly enforced strike zone.

Young is expected to be sidelined four or five days and likely will miss the first weekend of exhibition play.

"They knocked us out of it last year, so this is a big and long-awaited game for our guys," Richfield coach Garr Ward said. "We've got our game plan, so it's just a matter of staying in control and executing."

Richfield jumped all over Cascade from the tipoff to the final buzzer, smoking the Ramblers 62-48. Richfield's Roberto Iurato singlehandedly matched the Ramblers' total point production at 17 going into the second half and helped the Tigers jump out to a 18-4 first-quarter lead.

"He really stepped up for us big today for the first time all season," Ward said. "We played great defense today, but ball handling is where we excel."

The game leveled out in the third, but Richfield maintained a 16-point advantage going into the fourth. With six minutes left in the game, Richfield put in its subs, held onto the ball and waited for Cascade to foul.

While Richfield was taking care of Cascade, the Carey Panthers squeaked out a 53-49 win over Genesee. The two teams traded off quarters, but explosive first-period play got Carey past the Bulldogs. Carey came out of the first quarter with a much needed five-point buffer.

The Panthers then gave up the second and third quarters to the Bulldogs, took a slim one-point lead into the fourth period, but hung on down the stretch. Carey was led by 20 points from Alex Peterson and 13 from Tony Howard.

Raft River advanced in the winners' bracket with a 74-54 throttling of the Notus Pirates. Today's game against Oakley will be the fourth time the teams have met this year.

"Our play as a group today was outstanding," said Raft River coach Jeff Greenwood. "They tried to take Jake (Nelson) away, which is what we wanted. Fortunately the rest of our team was able to pick up on that and capitalize off it."

Nelson scored 20, but the Trojans definitely spread it out Wednesday, putting seven players in the scoring column. Junior forward Tanner Hansen had an impressive night, shooting 50 percent beyond the arc (5-of-10) for a game-high 23 points. Bryce Greenwood added 16.

One of the teams that witnessed the ease with which Raft River won was Oakley, whose 66-57 win over Cole Valley wasn't quite as resounding on the scoreboard but was significant for another reason. It was just the second time this season that Cole Valley (21-2) – the District III champ – had lost.

Oakley's win also gave the Hornets a chance to even their season series with the Trojans at two games apiece.

"This a good ball club here," said Oakley coach Jeff Harrah. "You don't just end up here by accident. We've got a lot of leadership on this team and our kids knew when to play. ... If we play our 'A' game tomorrow, we will win."

Ammon and Zeb McBride combined for 21 points, Barry Jenks added 14, John Gay had 13 and Sander Mullen added 10.

In their own opener, the Hagerman Pirates had trouble getting the ball to fall, shooting a lukewarm 31 percent. Senior post Mike Smith had 15 points but was the only Pirate to reach double figures.

"I thought we played as well as we could," said Hagerman coach Kevin Cato. "In the first half, our offense hurt us, and in the second we had trouble on defense."

Both teams had trouble taking care of the ball, but Hagerman wound up ahead in the turnover department, with 19 to Mackay's 17.

Hagerman faces Cascade in a loser-out game today.

12-1 on singles by Colonel Barnett and deJong. Meyette came on in relief in the seventh to preserve the 11-run lead and the game was called due to the 10-run mercy rule.

"Once we start going I think we are going to be a pretty tough team to beat," Barnett said. "It's pretty important to us to win this tournament. We don't have too long until conference starts."

Diamond notes

Freshman Matt Gunning played the game with one eye partially swollen shut after being injured while playing hockey in the dorms. A cut on his forehead required 26 stitches to close. ... It was North Lake's first game using wood bats. ... Pitcher Justin Frank announced the game. ... Barnett also collected five RBIs against Snow College earlier this season.

U.S. blanks Mexico

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP) – The young Americans did in the slumping Mexicans in the opener of World Cup qualifying Wednesday night.

Josh Wolff and Clint Mathis, both substitutes, combined on the first goal in the United States' 2-0 CONCACAF qualifying game victory. Wolff then set up veteran Earnie Stewart for the clincher with three minutes remaining.

It was the Americans' third straight win over Mexico, a first in the rivalry, and the first time since 1980 the U.S. team beat Mexico in a qualifier.

It was achieved greatly because the United States exhibited rare depth. After losing forward Brian McBride and midfielder Claudio Reyna to injury in a mediocre first-half performance, the Americans were sparked by their replacements – Wolff, who turned 24 on Sunday, and Mathis, also 24.

Before a flag-waving, "U-S-A" chanting crowd of 24,624 in the chill of Columbus, Mexico played well for 45 minutes. But Mathis' long ball in the second minute of the second half was misplayed by the defense.

Wolff ran onto it before goalkeeper Jorge Campos could get to it, and he easily slipped around Campos to deposit the ball into an unguarded net.

With the Mexicans, ranked 12th in the world to the Americans' 16th, pressing for the tie, goalie Brad Friedel made several superb saves. His best came when he dived to stop Francisco Palencia's bullet in the 69th minute.

As the Americans attempted to run down the clock in the dying minutes, Wolff, of the MLS Chicago Fire, dribbled toward the right corner. Then he turned quickly along the end line, beating the defense and Campos before placing a perfect pass on Stewart's foot for the second goal.

A shoving match broke out in the U.S. end moments later, with even Campos coming all the way downfield to join the melee. But nothing developed from it, and Mexico went off meekly with its fifth loss in the last six internationals.

The last time the United States won a qualifier against Mexico was Nov. 23, 1980.

Woods travels 25.5 hours for a few rounds

DUBAI, United Arab Emirates (AP) – It took Tiger Woods 25.5 hours to reach the tip of the Arabian peninsula.

Golf

How about the best playing conditions of the early season, where velvet-like greens and lush, palm-lined fairways reveal themselves through the ornate gates of the Emirates Golf Club.

"The golf course is in fantastic shape," said Woods, the automatic favorite and the reason for the 10,500-fan daily sellout when play starts today on the 7,127-yard Majlis Course. "It's nice to be able to putt on greens that roll again. I made a few putts (in practice), which is kind of nice to see.

"When you hit putts on the West Coast they're not always going in when you hit a good putt. Here you know they'll be true."

Even in this port and commercial center on the Persian Gulf, Woods can't escape queries about a stretch that has left him without a top-three finish in this season's first five U.S. PGA Tour events.

"They don't understand the game if they think it's a slump," said Woods, who said his stroke average was identical to last year's. Sure, some competitors are 5 yards longer off the tee and maybe some are no longer intimidated.

But Woods put it off to the breaks of the game. He recalled how, on one shot last season, he "cold-cocked a kid in Canada and made birdie on the hole."

"It's been a pretty good season so far," he said. "I feel like I'm close. I've given myself chances. Sometimes the breaks go your way, sometimes they don't."

With victories in Asia, Europe and South America, Woods is not just golf's No. 1 player but it's No. 1 global ambassador. In the Middle East he's still a curiosity. One Indian reporter asked him Wednesday if he "practiced mind training," and a local journalist asked if he thought about not coming because of Arab-Israeli tensions.

He rolled his eyes and smiled but the replies were always diplomatic.

"What you realize when you watch me play is I love to compete," Woods said. "I don't know if you could say I mind-train or not off the golf course. ... One of the neat things about being able to play around the world is trying to influence others in a positive way because this is just such a great game."

Westwood likely to skip Masters to witness birth

DUBAI, United Arab Emirates – Lee Westwood must choose between playing the Masters or being in England for the birth of his first child.

That probably means Augusta, bye-bye.

Westwood's wife, Laurae, is expecting on April 7 – the day of the third round of the Masters. If the baby comes early, Europe's top player last season said he might consider trying to win his first major. Then again, maybe not.

"It's my first child. You don't know how you're going to feel," said Westwood, who has played just one event in the last dozen weeks in the longest break of his career. "I might not feel like going away, or she might say: 'Get away, go play the Masters.'"

"Everyone who's done this has had a lot of fun," said Max Sokol, the sales manager at Winstar.

OK, so it may be a little goofy that these normally staid offices are going ga-ga over a putting competition. But during the Midwest's notoriously horrid winters, everybody needs a little break.

"I loved it," said Illes, who made it to The Linn Group's Final Four before losing. "And I'm not even a golfer."

Putt

Polite clapping and encouraging shouts of, "Nice putt!" Puh-leeze.

"I've seen better shots at a doctor's office!" Brian Pullam, a broker at The Linn Group, shouted as Illes' shot stopped way short of the hole.

Some companies have gotten so caught up in the frenzy they've turned the competition into a big party. Winstar, a broadband services provider, couldn't hold an in-office competition because it was a tournament sponsor. So it played host to people who worked at companies that weren't chosen for Office Putting or who were runners-up at their in-office tournaments.

Winstar employees created the holes, modeling them after famous Chicago architectural sights. There was the John Hancock tower and Wacker Drive. Just like its congested, crumbling namesake, that hole had upper and lower segments and plenty of hazards.

BOYS' STATE BASKETBALL TOURNAMENTS

No. 1 OR BUST

Valley wants nothing less than a title

Kevin Hall
Times-News writer

A-3 tourney

HAZELTON – An improbable fourth-quarter rally by state runner-up Potlatch spoiled Valley High's run at a state championship last season, and the Vikings had to settle for third.

This time around, it's first place or bust, said Roger Caresia, eighth-year head coach of the Vikings.

"They're committed," Caresia said of his team. "Their goal last year was to get back (to the state tournament) and we've accomplished that.

"It's been one goal at a time this season. Our goal now is to win a state championship."

The 24-1 Vikings have their work cut out for them, however. In the first round today, Valley faces undefeated Lapwai (22-0), the defending state titleist and winner of 38 consecutive contests.

"They're real good," Caresia said. "Their athleticism and quickness is going to be our biggest problem."

The Wildcats return four starters from the state championship team, including 6-foot-4 senior Bryan Boyer. Besides being Lapwai's class valedictorian, Boyer was the only in-state recruit to sign a football letter of intent to attend Washington State University next fall.

In the backcourt, the Wildcats feature 6-2 sophomore sensation Rickey Jones and 6-3 junior Andrae Domebo, both of whom Caresia said can "flat jump out of the gym."

But Caresia has his own set of weapons: four seniors, led by 6-3 Rob Black (18.8 ppg). Black had games of 20-22-and-18-points, respectively, at state last year. The supporting cast includes 6-2 Derek Malone (13.7 ppg), 6-2 Robby Wood (9.0 rpg), 6-4 Mikel Griffiths and junior point guard Clark Wyatt.

Both teams play about seven deep, Caresia said.

Besides limiting their turnovers, Caresia said the Vikings must control the tempo of the game to keep the transition-happy Wildcats at bay. And Valley has to shoot near its 46 percent team average.

"I'm sure they'd love us to go and play a game of street ball with them," he said. "We'll need to be patient, play good defense and not play a totally up-and-down game. It will be a battle of tempos."

Caresia said his Vikings, the state's 2001 Class A-3 academic state champions (3.64 team grade point average), will be ready to play a hard, smart game.

Besides, there is nothing more that the Valley High boys would like than to exact revenge on the school that defeated the Viking girls' basketball team in the first round of this year's Real Dairy Shootout.

"We pose some challenges for them," he said. "They're confident and we think we can beat them."

Game time today is 3:15 p.m. at Capital High School in Boise.

Homedale Trojans

Coach: Randy Potter, 7th year
Record: 15-8
Road to state: A two-game losing streak to close Western Idaho Conference A-3 play knocked Trojans down to a three-way tie for second place, but they rebounded to produce a strong District III Tournament for an automatic berth to state behind strong group of seniors who were core of 7-18 team a season ago.
Players to watch: Kenny Overton, 6-foot senior, guard (17 points); Brandon Hopkins, 6-2 senior, forward (15 points, 6 rebounds); Andrew Endicott, 6-0 senior, post (10 points, 6 rebounds); Cole Cooper, 6-1 sophomore, post (7 rebounds), John Bridegamin, 5-8 senior, guard (4.5 assists)
Scouting report: Trojans are making their fourth state appearance in seven years under Potter, with the top finish of fourth place in 1997. They last made state in 1999, going 0-2. ... Kenny Overton helps lead the team's 41-percent three-point shooting. Homedale also shoots 68 percent from the field and has scored 70 or more points in 11 of its games, highlighted by a 16-point outing during an overtime win against regular-season WIC A-3 champions New Plymouth.

Lapwai Wildcats

Coach: Josh Leighton, Jr., 11th year
Record: 22-0
Road to state: District III champions
Key players: 6-3 jr. Andrae Domebo, 5-8 sr. Ty Domebo; 6-2 so. Rickey Jones, 6-4 sr. Bryan Boyer.
Scouting report: Defending Class A-3 state champions return four starters from 25-1 team. ... Wildcats have won 38 games in a row and have kept district crown. ... Boyer was only in-state football recruit signed by Washington State University and is a 4.0 student and senior class valedictorian. ... Wildcats posted a school-record 124 points in one game last season. ... Lapwai won three consecutive A-3 state titles and 31 games in a row from 1987-88. ... Athletic team that likes to push the tempo. ... Jones is a dunking machine.

Malad Dragons

Coach: Terry Jones
Record: 18-11
Road to state: Forced to beat the Duke Pirates in a play-in game. Scouting report: Kenny Ward is the area's top scorer and the team has a couple of other players that can lift it up when needed. ... Dragons had a disappointing season by Malad standards.

New Plymouth Pilgrims

Coach: Scot Gamos, 5th year
Record: 20-5
Road to state: A long one. Won regular season Western Idaho Conference A-3 title and took a first round bye in District III Tournament. But Pilgrims were upset by Nampa Christian in semifinals and lost two consecutive games against Rams and Middleton before eliminating Nampa Christian in second-place playoff game. Then they did had to win play-in game against Timberline, which they defeated.
Key players: Ross Pittman, 6-0 senior, guard (15 points); Tyrone Kelly, 6-3 junior, forward (10 points); Kyle Hawker, 6-3 sophomore, forward (8 rebounds)
Scouting report: Pilgrims are making third state appearance in five seasons under Gamos and their second straight. ... Pittman is New Plymouth's only returning starter from last season's state team, though Gamos sees his team's biggest strength is depth, with several players able to come off the bench to start at any time. ... Before becoming New Plymouth's head coach in 1995, Gamos was an assistant at Malad, helping to three state championships in 1992 and 1994.

Potlatch Loggers

Head Coach: Ron Lowell, 12th year
Record: 15-8
Players to watch: Nick Nicholson, 5-11 senior guard; Jimmy Everett, 6-2 junior post.
Scouting report: This is the Loggers' eight state appearance in nine seasons, but this is hardly the best Potlatch team to get here. Besides Nicholson, an excellent 3-point shooter, and Everett, a crafty back-to-the-basket player, the Loggers have little in the way of talent. But they do have Ron Lowell, probably the most successful coach in the state who hasn't won a championship (he taken Potlatch to four state title games, and lost them all). The Loggers pride themselves on solid half-court execution, but can be flustered by transition clubs – like Lapwai. Potlatch was the last team to beat Lapwai, but since then, the Loggers have lost six straight to the Wildcats – including last season's state title game.

Rime Bulldogs

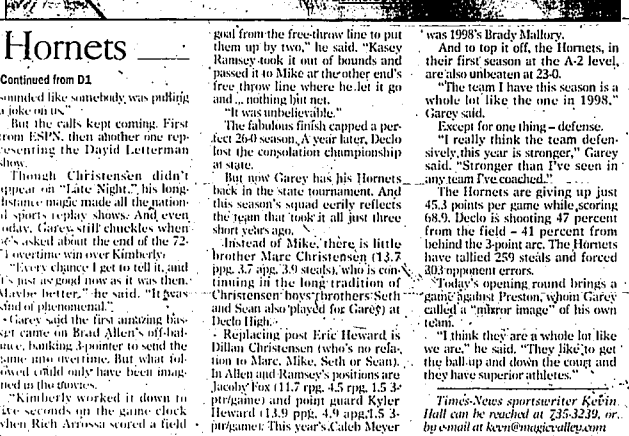
Coach: Terry Sorba, 7th year
Record: 12-7
Key players: Jake Landon, 5-11 senior, forward (15.4 ppg); Andrew Hahan, 6-5, senior, center (10.2 ppg, 8.8 rpg); Damian Smith, 5-8 senior, guard (17.1 ppg, 3.1 apg)
Scouting report: The Bulldogs live and learn the perimeter, even vs. smaller teams. ... The 6-5 Hahan can be nullified by a bulky center, but a fairly tough in the paint, dominance any mismatch he keeps. ... Landon's best shot is 15 feet out, but of late he has made a flurry of 3s to raise his season percentage to 37.5 (27 of 72).

Valley Vikings

Coach: Roger Caresia, 8th year
Record: 23-1
Road to state: District IV champions
Key players: 6-3 sr. Rob Black (18.8 ppg), 6-2 sr. Derek Malone (13.7 ppg), 6-2 sr. Robby Wood (9.0 rpg)
Scouting report: Second trip in two years for the Vikings, who finished third at state a year ago. ... Vikings are riding a 12-game winning streak. ... Valley is 2000-01 state academic champions. ... Versatile, athletic team that relies on its defense and perimeter shooting. ... Black is an all-area football safety who suffered a broken shoulder at the end of the season. ... Malone was Viking quarterback.

West Side Pirates

Coach: Lee Ralphs
Record: 14-7
Road to state: Beat Malad twice (at Malad in the district tourney to clinch
Scouting report: very athletic. Led by Jake Spencer and Zach Beuter, both good shooters and tall (by A-3 standards)



CLASS A-2, TEAM BY TEAM

Bonners Ferry Badgers

Coach: Dan Weisbarth (Michael Cowley interim)
Record: 5-17
Road to state: Finished fourth in IWL regular season. Won four games in five nights to take second at District I tournament. The Bangers overcame 12-point fourth quarter deficit Friday to beat third seeded St. Maries then beat top-seeded Priest River which had played Bonners three times already. 10 the No. 2 seed.
Key players: Ben Greenlaw, 6-4 soph. W, Adam Voig, 6-3 sr. W, Greg Beck, 6-1 jr. G
Scouting report: Badgers started season 1-8, then went 4-5 the rest of the way when Mestas's was out with heart problems. Voig and Beck are dangerous threats from the outside and Greenlaw finds a way to score

Declo Hornets

Coach: Lloyd Garey, 8th year
Record: 23-0
Road to state: No. 1 seed into District IV tourney, beat Wood River and Kimberly twice for the championship.
Key players: 5-10 sr. G Marc Christensen (13.7 ppg, 3.7 apg, 3.9 steals), 6-1 sr. P Dylan Christensen (13.6 ppg, 7.4 rpg), 6-0 sr. G Kyler Heward (13.3 ppg, 4.9 apg), 6-3 sr. F Jacoby Fox (11.7 ppg, 4.5 rpg, 1.5 3-pt/game)
Scouting report: This is Declo's first year in A-2. ... Key to beating Hornets might be shooting them. The Hornets press until they're blue in the face, going from jaunts on a harassing style of play. An opponent also must shut down the team's hot perimeter game – no easy task. ... Senior leadership as starters Heward, Fox and Dylan Christensen has helped season a young cast of bench players. That youthful reserve corps had been a concern of Garey's entering the season. ... Dylan Christensen plays with his back to the bucket vs. impressive to watch, kind of like Jesse Smith of Mackay (now a freshman at Idaho State)

Lakeland Hawks

Coach: Trent Dennis, 5th year
Record: 15-5
Road to state: Finished second behind Priest River during season in Intermountain League (IL). Went 2-0 to win District I Tournament beating Priest River twice for the championship.
Key players: Shane Robertson 6-3 sr. F, 16.5 ppg, 8 rpg; Ryan Hansen 6-0 sr. W, 10 ppg; Jaime Pelletier 6-0 jr. W/F, 10 ppg, 7 rpg
Scouting report: Hustled and charged to MVP of the IWL, beating with Priest Rivers, Kyler Smith, and well the Hawks top the district title. The Hawks didn't shoot a 3-pointer in the district tourney after shooting 21.5 percent during the regular season and don't expect that to change at state. ... They like to force turnovers and use Hansen's speed on the break. Or set things up and work it inside for easy points.

Marsh Valley Eagles

Coach: Randy Ruxton
Record: 16-6
Road to state: Swept district tourney after finishing second in regular season
Scouting report: Not real big, not real fast, but well coached and fundamentally sound. ... Brent Andrus can light it up. Tyler Wheatley is a rugged wing player that will bang down low or shoot the 3

Middleton Vikings

Coach: Dale Kanz, 4th year
Record: 20-5
Road to state: Qualified as District III champion
Players to watch: Justin Freed, 6-3 senior, wing (17.6 points, 6 rebounds); Brad Anderson, 6-3 senior post (11.4 points, 6 rebounds); Driggs Miller 5-8 senior, guard (9.1 points, 5 assists)
Scouting report: Freed and Anderson are three-year varsity players for Middleton, while Miller and wings Dusty Murray and Heath Julian all are returning starters. ... Middleton opened the season 16-0 before suffering its only loss, to Fruitland. However, the Vikings came back to beat the Grizzlies twice including in the district final.

Preston Indians

Coach: Guy Hall
Record: 20-4
Road to state: Took second in district tourney after going undefeated in regular season
Scouting report: Boise Burns (yes, that's his real name) has some serious hops and scores around 15 per game. The rest of the team is filled with good role players. It lost for being multiport up against Declo in Round 1. Preston could do something big season

Salmon Savages

Coach: Brent Godfrey, 3rd year
Record: 20-2
Road to state: The District VI champions
Key players: David Schroeder, 6-3 senior, guard (21.3 ppg, 6.8 rpg, 5.0 apg, 42.1 3-pt percentage); Wyatt Ray 6-5 senior center (9.5 ppg, 5.2 rpg); Joe Folsom, 5-11, senior, guard (10.9 ppg); Matt Hansen, 5-9 senior point guard (5.6 apg)
Scouting report: Schroeder is the real deal, with super leaping ability and speed in transition. Often asking for teammates – game runs a little slow for him. ... Ray is a bull and uses his shoulders for extra inches. ... Folsom is a danger and plays basketball like a fullback. ... Was injured most of last season, but came back strong in playoffs. Finished as A-2 state runner up in 2000 to Soda Springs.

Sugar-Salem Diggers

Coach: Gene Romney, 12th year
Record: 18-8
Road to state: Losing streak of four to Salmon, Sugar Salem landed in state with a decisive 71-39 play-in win over Kimberly
Key players: Cody Patterson 5-11 guard (12.4 ppg, 3.4 apg, 5.4 rpg, 30.7 3-pt percent), Ike Kent 6-3 junior, forward (11.3 ppg)
Scouting report: Patterson can be dangerous from 3-point range, but has been streaky as with most perimeter shooters. ... Wardle is a bulky stalwart and will shoot from anywhere on the floor. But as Patterson rigses so generally go the Diggers

But the calls kept coming. First from ESPN, then another one representing the David Letterman show.

Though Christensen didn't appear on "Late Night," his long-distance magic made all the national sports replay shows. And even today, Garey still chuckles when he's asked about the end of the 72-70 overtime win over Kimberly.

"Every chance I get to tell it, and it's just as good now as it was then. Maybe better," he said. "It was kind of phenomenal."

Garey said the first amazing basket came on Brad Allen's off-balance, banking 3-pointer to send the game into overtime. But what followed could only have been imagined in the movies.

"Kimberly worked it down to five seconds on the game clock when Rich Arrossa scored a field goal from the free-throw line to put them up by two," he said. "Kasey Ramsey took it out of bounds and passed it to Mike at the other end's free throw line where he let it go and ... nothing but net.

But now Garey has his Hornets back in the state tournament. And this season's squad eerily reflects the team that took it all just three short years ago.

Instead of Mike, there is little brother Marc Christensen (13.7 ppg, 3.7 apg, 3.9 steals), who is continuing in the long tradition of Christensen boys (brothers Seth and Sean also played for Garey) at Declo High.

Replacing post Eric Heward is Dillan Christensen (who's no relation to Marc, Mike, Seth or Sean). In Allen and Ramsey's positions are Jacoby Fox (11.7 rpg, 4.5 rpg, 1.5 3-pt/game) and point guard Kyler Heward (13.9 ppg, 4.9 apg, 1.5 3-pt/game). This year's Caleb Meyer was 1998's Brady Mallory.

And to top it off, the Hornets, in their first season at the A-2 level, are also unbeaten at 23-0.

"The team I have this season is a whole lot like the one in 1998," Garey said.

Except for one thing – defense.

The Hornets are giving up just 45.3 points per game while scoring 68.9. Declo is shooting 47 percent from the field – 41 percent from behind the 3-point arc. The Hornets have tallied 259 steals and forced 403 opponent errors.

"Today's opening round brings a game against Preston, whom Garey called a "mirror image" of his own team.

"I think they are a whole lot like we are," he said. "They like to get the ball up and down the court and they have superior athletes."

Familiar faces lead big-school lineups

The Times-News

BOISE – The state's biggest high school classification has a new look. Where last year there was but one A-1 grouping, this season there are two – A-1, Division I and A-1 Division II.

Yet the lists of state qualifiers in both boys' state basketball tournaments, which start today in the Boise valley, hold an awful familiar feel.

Topping the list of A-1, Div. I returnees is Pocatello, last year's A-1 champion. The Indians began upset minded Highland in a second Region III championship game and enter the mix a respectable 16-8.

Also back for the Div. I event are Lake City, a two-and-out casualty in 2000 but a 17-5 District I-II titleist this time around, and District IV's top seed Madison (17-7), last season's consolation champion.

The other returning team is found in the Div. II ranks, Bishop Kelly, the third-place Class A-2 from last season, made the cut in its first year in the bigger classification sporting a 15-9 record and third-place District III showing.

There is no clear favorite in either tourney, however. No team has fewer than Lake City's five losses in the Div. I bracket, while in the Div. II ranks that number is eight – Bonneville, Century and Moscow enter with as many defeats, and will duke it out with a pair of sub-.500 squads in 12-13 Nampa and Vallivue.

NO YOUR SPORTS

There will be no YourSports section today due to expanded coverage of the state high school boys' basketball tournaments. YourSports will return next Thursday.

CLASS A-1, TEAM BY TEAM

Class A-1, Div. I
Capital Eagles

Coach: Raymond Sera, 4th year
Record: 13-10
Road to state: At the District II Tournament the fourth seeded Eagles defeated No. 5 Timberline and top seeded Germania at home to second seeded Meridian at the champ on a 64-59 at Capital gym and Friday
Scouting report: This is an overachieving team. The Eagles were picked to finish in a preseason coaches poll. Capital relionds on a tall about 20 points a game and also has twice scored a 3-point game in a two game stretch. ... Key player is Matt Lohn, a senior 6-6 post who averages about 12 points and eight rebounds a game

Coeur d'Alene Vikings

Coach: Larry Beiser, 5th year
Record: 11-14
Road to state: Lost in the opening round of regular season vs. Lakeland. Only other champ on its game of the tournament head from District IV, where they finished Saturday at Grangeville
Scouting report: The Vikings are heavy on hoopsdreams. If they come, they come in a hurry on outside shots. They can be a dangerous team if they can get their game on the inside. Coach Beiser expected a player in 6-10 Javor Rupe to return, but he left the team and quit the leadership.

Highland Rams

Coach: Tom Fisher
Record: 14-11
Road to state: District III runner up, beat Eagle in play-in game
Scouting report: Big story is 6-11 Steve Cosby, football signee at Boise State. Rams and Cosby are as talented a team and player from Region III as there is, maybe out. Key to beating them is getting Cosby off his dribble, many times and hope the 3-point shots are on fire.

Lake City Timberwolves

Coach: Jim Wenger, 10th year
Record: 17-5
Road to state: Won three games from District III during regular season. Beat Kellogg twice after it won Region II Tournament
Scouting report: The Wolves are a tough team to be Timberwolves, and went 12-0 in the previous two years. Junior 6-6 Matt Duffy, a good outside shooter has started to emerge and driving more which with his size and speed makes him tough to guard. ... 6-0 senior Kyle Hoffman is best free throw shooter.

Madison Bobcats

Coach: Bill Hawkins, 10th year
Record: 17-7
Road to state: District IV top seed
Scouting report: The Bobcats are big, quick and can shoot. Sr. G Moses Hawkins led all District IV players shooting 57 percent from behind the arc, 6-8 sr. P Kyle Silvers led the area in blocks, was second in rebounding and seventh in scoring

Meridian Warriors

Coach: David Roberts, 1st year
Record: 18-7
Road to state: At the District III tournament, the second-seeded Warriors defeated No. 7 Boise and third-seeded Borah, then defeated fourth-seeded Capital 64-59 for the title
Scouting report: A well coached team with two of the league's top players. The Warriors are an inside and out side threat because of 6-10 Kevin Fellows, a senior Penn State signee, and freshman point guard Jacob Bower. Bower is a freshman but plays much older. He was a national Elite Feet three champion as a youngster. He shoots about 42 percent from the free throw line and 33 percent from three-point range.

Pocatello Indians

Coach: Greg Evans
Record: 16-8
Road to state: Won District IV tournament
Scouting report: Given these overachieving talent but they do have a couple of shifty pieces of the puzzle in the hoopy case to draw on for experience kept the last season. Ben Brown and Ty Parrish are good guards and score in the 10-12 ppg range. Coon Parrison has developed into a solid forward. Though he is a little undersized

Rigby Trojans

Coach: Doug Moratina, 3rd year
Record: 18-8
Road to state: District VI second seed
Scouting report: As 5-5 sr. G Logan Kinghorn goes, so goes Rigby. Kinghorn is a tough penetrator and can do it from the outside or from the inside. But he went down in the second quarter of the district championship game against Madison with what appeared to be a sprained ankle, and it is unclear how healthy he will be by today.

Class A-1, Div. II
Bishop Kelly Knights

Coach: Kent McCarthy
Record: 15-9
Road to state: Finished third at the Division II District Three tournament earning an automatic bid to state
Scouting report: The Knights could almost be classified as a three-angle team. In one corner, Sr. 5-10 G Joe Bernstein (12.0 ppg, 4.0 apg) is a pure point guard, with the ability to drive all the way to the basket or dish off to the open man. In another corner, Sr. 6-4 W Zach Rasmussen is a good 3-point shooter, hitting 37 percent in the final corner, jr. 6-6 P Rob Pankowski is a classic post player, boasting a variety of moves

Bonneville Bees

Coach: Tim Hayden, 3rd year
Record: 18-6 overall
Scouting report: The Bees rely on strong outside shooting, tough rebounding and a hounding team defense for success. ... Key players include: Jake Burtenshaw, 6-foot-0 junior, guard (16 ppg, 48 percent from 3-point range); Kevin Clayton 6-foot-1, senior, guard (12 ppg, 5 rpg, 41 percent from 3-point range); Ian Hedges 6-foot-2 junior, center (6 ppg)

Century Diamondbacks

Coach: Cody Shelley
Record: 16-8
Road to state: Had a great year. Quitted apart over last two weeks. Swept Div. I Pocky Schools (4-0) but struggled after an game fight late the team took key thugs. Finished as runners up to Bonneville in District 4-5 race
Scouting report: Matt Stucky (junior post player) is perhaps the best player in southeast Idaho. Guards Aaron Tremayne and Shred Nelson are solid role players, Gavin Graud provides depth inside

Emmett Huskies

Coach: Lance Hansen
Record: 13-10
Road to state: District III runner-up – finished first in the Division II Southern Idaho Conference during the regular season
Scouting report: The Huskies are a quick, hands, smart wing defense type of team. Employing a light man to man defense. Emmett thrives in creating chaos and eventually edging them down as the game goes along. Key player G/F Matt Ahern (12 ppg) is a streaky shooter – in the district final he missed his first seven shots before heating up in the second half.

Moscow Bears

Coach: Don Dudley, 9th year
Record: 14-8
Scouting report: 6-3 sr. F Dave Williams is the team's leading scorer, averaging 15 ppg. He may be the league's most dynamic player and 6-3 jr. F Dave Burton one of its most immovable inside forces. Frenetic extended court defense is the Bears hallmark and a bulk of their scoring opportunities come in transition.

Nampa Bulldogs

Coach: Lane Schumacher, 1st year
Record: 12-13
Road to state: Finished third at the District III tournament. Travelled to Declo on Saturday, defeated Burley 65-56 to earn a state berth
Scouting report: Lane Schumacher had a whirlwind of a first season as coach of the Bulldogs, having to endure four game suspensions before clinch his best players, as well as lackadaisical play at times to go along with similar play at others. ... Players to watch: F Josh Wamsley, 6-5, 19.0 ppg, 5.0 rpg; G Chris Yourguen Sr., 6-0 12.9 ppg; F Pete Roberts Sr., 6-2 11.0 ppg, 6.0 rpg; PG Kerry Gordon Sr., 5-8 9.0 ppg, 5 apg

Skyview Hawks

Record: 15-8
Road to state: District III champs – finished third in the Division II Southern Idaho Conference during the regular season
Scouting report: Senior 6-3 F John Bekear averages 24.1 ppg, 8.7 rpg. ... The Hawks are on top of their game right now. The preseason pick to win the division, Skyview struggled at times during the regular season, finishing 8-6 in the league. They crashed it up in the District III tournament, knocking off Mountain Home, which had defeated them twice during the season, then Bishop Kelly in triple overtime. Beat Emmett in the final

Vallivue Falcons

Coach: Mike Chatterton, 4th year
Record: 12-13
Road to state: Won play-in game against Post Falls after finishing fourth at District III Tournament
Scouting report: With no returning starters and just one returning varsity player left from a 7-17 team, Falcons put together their first state qualifying team at the 4-1 level in the talented transfer player (Middleton's Brian Graham 6-3 jr. G averaging 17 ppg, 5 rpg) and a slew of talented sophomores. Opened their conference season with a 1-5 record and then went 6-2 to end the regular season

In praise of a very fine man

Today's column has nothing to do with the outdoors, and everything to do with the salt of the earth. It's about a man – not my father – who had a big influence on me when I was growing up.

He's fighting for his life now and I'm praying for him. I hope you will too.

Tyrie Howard was the first black person I ever knew. I met him when I was about six, when he started working as a once-a-week handyman for my parents. There weren't any black families in my neighborhood, nor were there any black children in my elementary school.

Howard – he was always just Howard – taught me a lot about life when I didn't think I had anything to learn. He'd spent nearly 22 years in the Army and, in his soft Georgia accent, he shared many of the things he'd learned.

"Never carry what you can push," he told me once, as we were wrestling something heavy onto his old pickup truck. "And never push what you can drag."

FORCE OF NATURE
William Brock

There were deeper lessons, though, lessons about life, dignity and respect.

Once, when I was about 14, an older friend was at my house when my parents were away. It was just the two of us, with Howard working somewhere outside.

My friend was hungry, so he began ransacking the refrigerator and every cabinet in the kitchen. I stood by, speechless, as my more-worldly friend rummaged for food.

Howard came in, took one look at what was going on, and spoke with the voice of man who knew his business.

"Stop that," he told my friend. "This isn't your house."

My friend and I were astonished, but Howard wasn't backing down. I hadn't been protecting my parents' interests, so he stepped in to fill the role.

One of my brothers tells another, equally revealing story. While a teen-ager, he stashed some, er, saucy reading material behind a painting in a hallway of our home. Howard found it while he was dusting and left my brother a note, telling him that magazines of that sort can lead men to a bad place.

Good old Howard. He was one of the gentlest, most soft-spoken people I've ever known, but he didn't shy away from confronting things he felt were wrong. A wise man once observed, "The years teach much which the days never know" – and now, decades later, I recognize the strength of character he needed to confront his employer's children.

Howard and I were never buddies. We never went anywhere together. The only place I knew him was at my parents' house.

The last time I saw him was in 1981, a couple of years after my father died. I was in college and he was about to move to Spokane, Wash. He was going down one road and I was headed down another. Without really noticing it, 20 years have gotten between us since then.

I called him the other day, after my mother told me he had cancer.

"People look at these things in a lot of different ways," he told me, "but everything is going just fine for me."

He isn't getting treatment anymore. No more chemotherapy. No more poking and prodding. He's just taking pain meds and making his peace with the world.

"I've had too good a life to start worrying about it now," he told me. "It was kind of rough for the wife for the first couple of days, but we're going to pull this off."

Times change, little boys grow up, mature men get older, and the world keeps on turning. At some point, people must confront their own mortality. When my time comes, I hope I'll have the serenity that Howard has found.

"You turned out all right," he told me at the end of our chat. "There were times when we were worried about you, but you turned out all right."

You turned out all right too, Howard. If we meet again, we'll smile indeed.

OPENING DAY

Anglers are catching fish at Oster Lakes right now

By Stu Murrell
Times-News correspondent

Today is opening day for the fishing season at Oster Lakes and the southeast half of the Hagerman Wildlife Management Area. It is one of the most popular fishing openers in the Magic Valley, particularly with senior citizens.

That's because the area is easily accessible and the lakes have been planted with trout from the nearby Hagerman State Fish Hatchery.

About 6,000 catchable trout have been planted for opening day and more will be stocked for the weekend, says Kevin Price, fish culturist at the state hatchery. Opening day draws as many as 500 fishermen, Price says.

Most of the area's fish will be caught within a week, so Fish and Game will plant more on a weekly basis until July 1, when the ponds typically become mossy and hard to fish. Until then, it's a "put and take" fishery because Fish and Game puts trout there and anglers take 'em away.

Take it to the limit

Anglers can test their skills with a variety of methods, ranging from bait fishing to fly fishing.

Worms, power baits and combos of marshmallows and worms all work well, but many people use lines and sinkers that are too heavy for the average-sized trout in these waters. A 6-pound line, with just enough weight to cast effectively, should be equal to the task.

Another effective method is to use a bobber with about 4 feet of line and a single night-crawler. Reel it in slowly, stopping periodically.

Today's fishing opener encompasses a wide variety of waters. The Riley Creek impoundment, which is the large pond abutting the northwest side of the fish hatchery, is probably the most popular and easily accessible. It is a haven for bank anglers, but a resourceful few deploy small boats or float tubes. No outboard motors are allowed, but the pond is small enough for easy rowing.

Another place to fish is the pond at the end of the raceways, just above Riley Creek. Lures in the raceway outlets sometime yield fish that aren't hitting bait.

There are six Oster Lakes, all of which are easily reached with a short walk on a level path. Lakes 1-4 are planted with trout, while lakes 5 and 6 contain largemouth bass and bluegill. The lakes are ringed with trees and vegetation that provides welcome shade on hot summer days. Bird watchers can enjoy a great variety of songbirds while they fish.

Finally, for anglers who prefer moving water, there is Riley Creek itself. There are plenty of spots to fish along its banks, but watch for poison ivy on the lower section from the bridge downstream to the Snake River. Poison ivy doesn't have leaves at this time of year, so keep a wary eye peeled for low-growing stems with white berries.

As with most popular areas, Oster Lakes and Riley Creek are often strewn with trash. Show some respect for these scenic areas by carrying your trash away with you. Don't leave it for someone else to remove.

Spreading the love of bass fishing in walleye land is not easy task

By John Myers
Duluth News Tribune

DULUTH, Minn. – There aren't many anglers in the Northland as dedicated to bass fishing as J.T. Colosimo. In fact, there aren't many anglers in the Northland who'd even admit they fish for bass.

But Colosimo contends there are legions of avid bass anglers out there, ready to go public. And he's trying to let them know they aren't alone. That's why the Duluth man helped form the Twin Ports Bassmasters fishing club.

"Fishing, when you are into it like we are, you're doing it or thinking about it every day of your life," Colosimo said.

To get more youths hooked on fishing, the club recently hosted a kids' casting contest at the Duluth Boat, Sports and Travel Show. And while the kids are bass honing their casting skills, club members hope to find closet bass anglers among the adults.

"You may not believe it, but there are a lot of bass fishermen up here. They just don't want to talk about it in public," Colosimo said. "I have people come up to me in stores when I'm wearing my Bassmasters jacket. They take a peek over their shoulder to make sure no one else is looking, then they tell me how much they love to fish bass. But they don't want their walleye (fishing) buddies to hear it."

Wolves keep away from watchful eyes

By Jo Sandin
Milwaukee Journal Sentinel

MERCER, Wis. – After dark on almost any back road here, a traveler can open the car window, imitate a wolf's wild call and get an answering howl.

Just don't expect to see the animal that answers.

Though timber wolves have returned to Wisconsin's North Woods in numbers large enough to consider reclassifying the federally endangered species as "threatened," for most humans here the great gray predators remain as elusive as a wall on the night wind.

Bruce Bacon, wildlife biologist for the Department of Natural Resources in Iron and Ashland counties, has tracked wolves in a truck, on snowshoes and from a plane. In the last 10 years, he has seen only five.

That's not many considering that Bacon can locate animals by the frequencies of the radio collars worn by a few and that the two counties are home to about 80 of the state's 250 wolves.

Yet, Bacon counts himself lucky. A DNR forester who retired last year after 27 years had never seen a wolf. On the other hand, a group of ice fishermen on the Turtle-Flambeau Flowage recently saw 10 in stately single file loping across the ice.

"It's all a matter of being at the right place at the right time, and of being in the right place as often as possible," says Bacon, who identified the wolves by their territory as members of the Chippewa River Pack, the state's largest.

Adrian Wydevan, DNR mammalian ecologist, says Wisconsin is home territory for about 66 packs, all descendants of animals that wandered here from Minnesota, where the state wolf population is more than 2,500. Another 13 solitary animals are seeking a pack to accept them or a mate with which to start their own.

Public wolf sightings are part of the system Wydevan uses to prepare estimates about Wisconsin packs. The U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service considers wolves in Minnesota, Michigan, Wisconsin and (a few) in North and South Dakota to be a single, distinct population, healthy enough to allow a lower level of federal protection, said Ron Refsnider, of the regional office in St. Paul, Minn.

That's why the service last July proposed reclassifying timber wolves in the Midwest from an endangered to a threatened species on the federal list, says Refsnider. Wolves have been listed as threatened by the state since 1999.

'It's all a matter of being at the right place at the right time, and of being in the right place as often as possible.'

– Bruce Bacon, wildlife biologist for the Department of Natural Resources

Refsnider says: "I think surveys of public opinion at least in the Upper Midwest indicate that people will support wolf recovery as long as conflicts with human activity can be dealt with."

He says reclassifying wolves would allow more flexibility in dealing with problem animals such as a couple of calf-killers trapped and relocated by Bacon.

Last year, Wydevan says, Wisconsin residents reported 14 cases of wolf predation, but most wolves have kept to natural prey – whitetail deer.

This winter, even finding that burgeoning deer herd has been a matter of waiting and watching for human observers, Bacon says.

That's a healthy sign.

"It means that the animals are in good shape," says Bacon. "There have been winters when the deer were so stressed you could walk right up to them."

With his counterparts across the state, Bacon is responsible for estimating the size and health not only of the deer herd, but also of other wild populations.

Technology goes only so far in performing that task. Although specialized computer software helps biologists estimate the size of each year's deer herd, a lot of work still depends as much on backwoods experience as high-tech equipment.

"It looks like a single wolf this time," he says as he follows the tracks toward an area in which loggers take out individual trees where deer often gather.

Farther down the road, yellow snow indicates an alpha wolf has been marking the pack's territory.

Long years of field observation have led to a formula known as the winter severity index. Every day with 18 inches or more of snow is worth one point as is every day with a daily low temperature below zero, so Bacon measures snow cover regularly and keeps track of temperatures.

An index up to 50 combined points adds up to a mild winter with few deer deaths. Combined points of 51 to 80 indicate a moderate winter when a few fawns and older deer will die. A severe winter of 81 points and a very severe winter of more than 100 points lead to massive die-offs.

Right now, the winter severity index is only about 70 and deer are in good health, he says. When he finds a deer carcass from a recent wolf kill, he breaks a femur and inspects the marrow for further information. A deer in good health, he says, will have marrow much like tallow. A starving deer has marrow that looks like red gelatin. Looking at food sources is another clue to wildlife health. When they are not feeding on aspen buds, ruffed grouse are burrowed into snow roosts, although a scattering of tail feathers and small tracks on a roadside drift reveals that a marauding fisher has found at least one such cozy haven.

Deer also browse on the buds of young trees, says Bacon, but the fact that only the twig tips are gone is a clue that the herd is getting plenty of food. The carcasses of recent kills are evidence that wolves also are feeding well.

Howling surveys from July through October help determine pup production. A trained listener such as Bacon can pick out the high-pitched yowls of the pups.

He can even distinguish among several adult voices, so new information about the size and location of packs in his area is never farther away than a howl in the night.

Utah man climbs the highest peaks in 49 states

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) – It doesn't take a rocket scientist to climb the highest peaks in every state.

However, Salt Lake City's Roy Macpherson is a retired rocket scientist who started climbing high points back in 1984 at the age of 58, when "peak-bagging" was popular.

There's little doubt his science background and attention to detail helped him study maps and climb all but one of the 50 high points in the United States.

The one peak that remains is the most remote and difficult Mount McKinley in Alaska.

Macpherson, 74, is one of only two Utah residents confirmed to have completed 49 state climbs. The other is Winford "Dub" Blindworth, also of Salt Lake City. The two are among an elite national group of only about 110 people who have accomplished this feat.

Macpherson has been hiking since his Boy Scout days in Colorado.

He decided with two years to go in his career as a rocket-engine engineer for Hercules Inc., then a Utah defense contractor, that climbing all the Western states' high points would be a challenging, yet attainable goal. Mount Rainier was his first climb on July 22,1984.

He then scaled the summits of the other 10 Western states, completing the last, California's Mount Whitney, on July 17, 1990. All three of his sons went along on that one.

It wasn't until 1989, when Macpherson had just three of those 11 Western high points to go, that he heard about the High Pointers Club, which was just beginning to take off and now has thousands of members around the country.

He joined the club, and that helped him complete the generally easier high points in the East.

His hardest overall climb, he said, was Gannett Peak in Wyoming's Wind River range. Although only 13,804 feet high, it took him three attempts to reach its summit.

The first time he said he wasn't properly prepared, and the second time the weather didn't cooperate, dumping 6 inches of fresh snow. Even his final, successful ascent of Gannett, a multiday backpack trip of some 40 miles, wasn't that easy.

"I thought I was going to die," he said.

Mount Rainier was his second-hardest climb.

He considered doing McKinley but said the $17,000 price tag and four to six weeks required for the climb were never appealing enough.

Macpherson believes prospective high pointers would be wise to join the national club and they shouldn't let the technical climbs scare them away.

"Technical climbing is very safe if you do it properly," he said.

His wife, Sydna, has supported him in his climbing endeavors, and she has accompanied him to 30 of the high points. Family members and friends went along on other climbs, but on some, like Idaho's Borah and Maine's Mount Katadin, he had to go alone.

All the trips to the summits were fun, he said, including the one in Florida, which you can drive to, and Delaware's, which is located in the middle of a two-lane paved road.

He continues to stay in shape, hiking three or more times a week in the Salt Lake area mountains and also biking with his brothers. He admits he's had to slow down in recent years, but that's why he did the highest and hardest high points first.

Why climb high points? It's not just because they're there, he said.

"First, I get a kick out of planning and scheduling climbing. ... When you are at the trailhead you frequently have aches and pains, but these all seem to go away after you have hiked 20 or 30 minutes. Something chemical happens in your body, maybe the release of endorphins, and you just feel great," Macpherson said.

Stepping off to a skating rhythm

Professional: Cross-country skiing is simple

By Ray Grass
Deseret News

SOLITUDE, Utah – It's as easy as walking, albeit as slippery at times as walking on ice.

Still, there's a certain appeal to stepping onto two skinny boards and walking off, through the snow, into nowhere. Snow-covered mountains in the winter are beautiful and wild.

Mostly, it's the quiet people like. It's an unpolluted kind of quiet, made so by the way the snow grabs hold and doesn't let go of sound. Even the groan of aspens waving in the breeze and the very breeze itself are muted.

Scott Nielson, director of the Solitude Nordic Center at the top of Big Cottonwood Canyon, believes so.

Building a Nordic track involves packing down a 16-foot swath in the snow and then cutting two parallel grooves off to one side. The flat is for freestyle or skating; the grooves are for the classical cross country.

"Nowadays," said Nielson, "most people are into skating. It's easier, faster and they don't need to mess with waxes. With classical, you need to know how to wax."

Classical cross-country is the old-style skiing – left, right, left, with skis side by side and arms swinging in cadence with the skis. Skating is the newest style, made popular by competitive skiers. The skis are put in a "V" with the tails nearly touching, then the skier steps off in a skating rhythm and glides.

Skating is possible on a groomed track but impossible in the untouched powder. That's where classical and snowshoeing have the edge. Any one of the three, though, is easy to learn.

"If you can walk, you can cross country ski. It's the same with snowshoeing. Again, if you can walk, you can snowshoe," he noted.

Jill Nielson goes cross-country skiing at the Solitude Nordic Center in Big Cottonwood Canyon, Utah, Feb. 17. Nielson displays the old-style, classic cross country method of skiing: left, right, left, with skis side by side and arms swinging in cadence with the skis. The skis are put in a 'V' with the tails nearly touching, then the skier steps off in a skating rhythm and glides.

The Solitude Center has made it easy for skiers and snowshoers. The groomed trails thread through the pines and aspens like a web. A walk in the forest can be as comfortable or as exhilarating as a person chooses. An hour can be enough for some but way too little for others.

"The nicest part is that even on days when there are a lot of people, it's seldom you get bunched up in a group. There's enough track you can always get away, be off by yourself and really enjoy the peace and quiet," he added.

"Usually, we'll go out and stomp out snowshoe trails. If it snows and we don't have the opportunity, there are signs you can follow throughout the area."

The center is open daily from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. There are rentals available for snowshoes and classical and skating skis. A daylong adult ski package is $12. Snowshoes for a day are $10. A trail pass for a day of skiing or snowshoeing on the Solitude system is $10.

Nielson recommends those learning either sport, especially skiing, take a lesson.

"At least you are shown the right things to do. But then when you go out, don't think so much about technique all the time. Go out and have fun. That's the important thing," he noted.

"Over time it will come. And the better you get the easier it becomes, just like with any sport."

There are, he continued, new people stepping onto cross country skis all the time. After the Olympics next year, he expects numbers to increase even more.

"They did after the '98 Games, and I expect the same thing next year," he said. "People see it on TV or see it in stories in papers and magazines, and they say to themselves that it looks fun and they want to try it – so they do."

And, as countless others have discovered at the Solitude Center, if they can walk, they can ski and snowshoe ... and it's only a short walk from the center to that absolute quiet found in snow-covered forests.

Bass

"I have nothing against walleyes. I used to guide for walleyes in Wisconsin. But there's nothing like the moment when a bass breaks the water and your heart just freezes for a second. That's the greatest feeling in the world. I still get it every time I catch a bass," he said.

Colosimo, a self-described semiretired carpenter, fishes in tournaments across the country and is often on the road seeking open water and big bass. He moved back to Duluth a few years ago and has been trying to preach the religion of bass fishing to the Northland masses.

Colosimo founded Twin Ports Bassmasters one year ago. It now has 14 members. In the land where walleyes are king, bass just don't get much respect.

Club members want to change that. They meet once each month to trade tips and plan their summer schedule of informal fishing contests on local lakes.

Twin Ports Bassmasters is the only Bass Anglers Sportsman's Society-federated bass club in the Duluth area and one of 42 in Minnesota.

"I think it's going to take off in the next year or two," Colosimo said, likening the friendly competition in the club's fishing tournaments to the camaraderie found on a sports team. "If you like to fish bass and you want to get better at it, you can learn more from one day on the water with us than a summer trying to do it on your own."

A quiet Montana interlude

Winter offers chance to commune with wildlife at refuge

MOIESE, Mont. (AP) – A thrush surveys its domain from the naked spines atop an ancient, gnarled juniper, seemingly oblivious to the snowflakes swirling softly around it.

From its lofty perch, the thrush, a Townsend's solitaire, has a splendid view of Mission Creek snaking through its rosebush-choked bottom land, past the tortured junipers, cottonwoods and occasional ponderosa pine sentinels, and carving alternately through cattail marsh and native prairie grassland.

We, too, are soaking up this idyllic view, as the two of us stroll dreamily through the February snow squall, following a deserted road that parallels Mission Creek in the National Bison Range. Rounding each bend of the stream, white-tailed deer rise silently from their beds and stare at our approach. The only sounds are the periodic honking of Canada geese passing somewhere nearby, invisible in the low clouds, and the squeak of our boots biting into the old snow. A golden eagle watches our halting progress solemnly from a rock outcrop on the hillside above us. On the opposite side of the creek, high in the branches of a cottonwood, a second eagle is eyeing us. This one's a bald.

The Bison Range in winter is all about solitude – in terms of human contact, that is. If you visit during the winter, however, you can expect to have plenty of company from the range's wild inhabitants.

In fact, winter at the Bison Range is an opportune time to see a variety of wildlife in a particularly scenic setting, undisturbed by the crowds of summer. And yes, that includes the range's namesake creatures, the American bison. The Bison Range, located about 40 miles northwest of Missoula in western Montana, gets between 180,000 and 200,000 visitors per year, according to Pat Jamieson, outdoor recreation planner at the refuge. Only a tiny fraction of that total, an average of about 30 visitors a week, come to the range in winter, she said.

"A lot depends on the weather," Jamieson said. "If the sun's out and it's nice, we'll get a lot of people out for a Sunday drive, mostly local folks. We do have people who like to come up and have the place to themselves.

"If we get some nice days at the end of February and the beginning of March, people start getting cabin fever. And we're low enough that the snow tends to melt out before a lot of other places. Glacier Park will still be under snow and ice. But we'll start seeing green grass.

"It's just a nice place to get away from home and spend a few hours outside. It's amazing how many locals use this place. We're something people think of when it's a nice afternoon, and they say 'We're tired of being in the house. Let's go to the Bison Range.'"

Winter visitors have several options for enjoying the Bison Range – from tours in the comfort of their vehicle, or for a more intimate experience, getting out for a stroll or full-fledged hike.

Although the popular, self-guided 19-mile Red Sleep Mountain Drive is closed from the end of October to mid-May, several other vehicle tours are available, Jamieson said.

The winter drives, which are plowed regularly, include the five-mile out-and-back Buffalo Prairie Drive, the shorter West Loop, and the also short drive around the Bison Display Pasture. The Prairie Drive is particularly nice, said Jamieson. It follows Mission Creek for a mile or so, affording excellent views of its woodland bottom, and opportunities to see the diverse wildlife species that are nurtured by its riparian habitat. Then the drive departs from the creek bottom and enters the broad expanse of Alexander Basin and its open native grassland and spring-fed brushy coulees.

In the Mission Creek section of the Prairie Drive, visitors are likely to see white-tailed deer, elk, waterfowl and eagles, Jamieson said. And in the basin, pronghorns and bison are frequently seen.

Bison are scattered around the range more than normal this winter, Jamieson said, because drought conditions last year dried up some of the range's springs, forcing managers to disperse the herd of 387 animals in other areas with adequate water.

Winter walks at the Bison Range include a short nature trail loop along Mission Creek, located near the picnic area, just inside the entrance at Moiese. A longer walk, the public fishing access along Canal Road, follows Mission Creek for over a mile.

The road is open to visitors for foot travel only.

A visitor views the National Bison Range in Moiese, Mont., Feb. 15. The Bison Range in winter is all about solitude – in terms of human contact, that is. If you visit during the winter, however, you can expect to have plenty of company from the wild inhabitants.

Whether you make your winter tour of the Bison Range on foot or by vehicle, a good place to start is the visitor center, at least on weekdays. The visitor center, which features many attractive and informative displays, is open from 8 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. weekdays in the winter. Staff personnel there can answer questions and direct you to areas where you're more apt to see wildlife.

You also can pick up a map and some fascinating brochures about the range's history and wildlife.

Birds are one of the greatest attractions at the Bison Range any time of the year, Jamieson said.

"If you're a birdwatcher," she said, "this can be a neat place to come in the winter. You can usually get around our little nature trail. It's a nice place to wander around. We get a lot of rough-legged hawks down there in the winter, and eagles and chickadees. A couple of the staff saw a bobcat down there two weeks ago. And there's a pair of great horned owls. It's mating season for the owls, so it's a great time to see them on the nature trail."

On their annual Christmas bird count for the Audubon Society, Jamieson, along with Dave Wiseman, the refuge manager, and Bill West, the assistant manager, observed 34 species of birds at the Bison Range on Dec. 17.

A few of their noteworthy sightings that day included a flock of 100 American goldfinch, two pileated woodpeckers, 20 Townsend's solitaires, a marsh wren, an American dipper, a prairie falcon, and a variety of additional raptors and waterfowl.

Solitaires, rough-legged hawks and several other species are more likely to be seen at the range in the winter than any other season. Waterfowl are especially abundant on the range in the winter, according to West.

"We're right in the middle of the biggest concentration of wintering waterfowl in this part of the country, especially mallards," he said. "A really good time to see the big migration is from Thanksgiving to the end of the waterfowl hunting season. By then many of the big bodies of water, like Ninepipe and Pablo reservoirs, are frozen. But Mission Creek on the Bison Range is still open. You can see migrations of mallards that rival the big Midwest refuges that I've worked at."

During the annual winter waterfowl survey conducted on Jan. 17 by the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service in the Mission and lower Flathead valleys, observers – in an airplane and others in vehicles – counted more than 36,000 ducks and almost 3,000 geese, plus a bonus of 62 eagles – 60 balds and two goldens.

You! be the Judge

BY CLAIRE BERNSTEIN

Based on Actual Court Cases

The Wrong Victim

Nine-year-old Josh was riding happily in the school van. He was in his favorite seat, right next to George the driver. Josh was excited.

"Guess what I'm bringing for show-and-tell, George! It's a little alien puppet..." Suddenly Josh saw a man waving in the middle of the road. "Stop George! Maybe his car is broken." George braked and opened the door. The man jumped in. George smiled. "Hi, having car trouble....?" Suddenly, George froze. The stranger jabbed something into his ribs. A gun. "Shut up and drive. One false move and you two are dead."

George's heart was racing. He glanced at Josh. The little boy was shaking with fear, his head hidden under the dashboard. George looked in the rear view mirror. Two state trooper cars were right behind. But his relief was short-lived. The carjacker saw them too. He started shooting at the troopers through the open window.

"You pigs better get away or I'll kill both of them," he yelled out the window. The van swerved in and out of back country roads. The state troopers were talking to each other over the radio. "Morgan, should we shoot?!" Morgan frowned. "Let's hold our fire. That nut is capable of anything."

Soon, the van approached a densely populated area. Morgan sprung into action. "We've got to move now. It's too risky to wait. Try to squeeze the van against the guard rail." One patrol car zoomed out in front and forced the van to stop. The second roared up next to the van. Morgan jumped out and ran to the rear of the van. He fired five rounds.

"AHHHHHHHG!!!!!!" Bullseye. Two shots killed the carjacker instantly. Suddenly, the troopers heard a faint voice. "Help. I'm shot....Mama!!!" The troopers ran to Josh.

"Give him first aid! I'll call an ambulance." Morgan inspected the van. "Bad luck. One of my bullets passed through the rear passenger seat, bounced off some metal and hit the poor kid." Luckily, Josh lived. But his mother felt horrible about her son's trauma. She sued the troopers in Josh's name.

In court, Josh's mother exclaimed tearfully, "Your Honor, these troopers nearly killed my boy. They violated the Fourth Amendment by intentionally using their weapons around him. They also violated the Fourteenth Amendment by depriving Josh of his life and liberty without due process. They shot an innocent child. They should be punished for their recklessness!"

Morgan spoke for the troopers. "Look, your Honor. What happened to Josh was an accident. There can be no Fourth Amendment claim. Josh wasn't the intended target. As for the Fourteenth Amendment, we weren't attempting to deprive Josh of his freedom or his life. For heaven's sake, we were trying to save his life. Don't punish us for that!"

DECISION

"The troopers didn't violate either Amendment," Judge Eve announced. "The conduct of these troopers was constitutionally acceptable. In fact, it was admirable. Any other person would thank the people who risked their lives to save Josh. Case dismissed!"
