Letter from Bush breaks deadlock

President expresses 'sorrow,' but does not apologize

The Washington Post

HAIKOU, China, April 12 – China agreed to release the 24 American servicemen and women detained on Hainan Island and they swiftly flew off in a chartered U.S. airliner Thursday for debriefings in Hawaii and the promise of returning home to their families by Easter.

Their departure, agreed after tortuous transpacific negotiations, relaxed a standoff that has strained relations between the world's most powerful nation and its most populous since the midair collision April 1 between a U.S. Navy EP-3E Aries II surveillance plane and a Chinese F-8 interceptor over the South China Sea.

"The American people, their families and I are proud of our crew," President Bush said in announcing the agreement Wednesday morning at the White House, "and we look forward to welcoming them home." The U.S. crew left here in a Continental Airlines Boeing 737 and landed at about 10 p.m. MDT on Guam, where they transfered to a military aircraft for the rest of the trip to Hawaii.

President Jiang Zemin, speaking as he ended a state visit to Uruguay, said the 21 men and three women in the EP-3 crew would be released "on humanitarian grounds" after the United States said it is "very sorry" for the loss of a Chinese pilot and his F-8and "very sorry" that the Navy plane entered Chinese airspace without permission as it made an emergency landing at a Chinese air base here on Hainan Island.

The U.S. expressions of sorrow, in an English-language letter that Ambassador Joseph Prueher handed to Foreign Minister Tang Jiaxun in Beijing, pointedly omitted use of the word apology – despite China's demand for an apology – and did not address China's contention that the U.S. aircraft was responsible for the collision.

"There is nothing to apologize for," Secretary of State Colin Powell told reporters accompanying him on a European trip. "To apologize would have suggested that we have done something wrong or accepted responsibility

What now for China and U.S.?

By Steven Mufson and Thomas E. Ricks
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON – The prolonged detention of 24 U.S. military personnel appears to have hardened attitudes toward Beijing in Congress and in the Bush administration, increasing the chances that the United States will agree later this month to sell a major package of arms to Taiwan, including submarines, anti-submarine weaponry and the precursors of an Aegis missile defense system.

Coming up soon afterward, the administration may decide to ignore Beijing's protests and grant a transit visa to Taiwan's president, Chen Shuibian. A month later, Congress will have an opportunity to attach conditions to the renewal of China's normal trade relations status. And the month after that, the International Olympic Committee will decide whether to let Beijing host the 2008 Games.

TF docs depart care plan

By Jennifer Sandmann
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS – Seventy Twin Falls physicians are leaving or have left Blue Cross of Idaho's popular managed health-care plan, a local physicians group says.

Their departures mean that patients who use Blue Cross' Preferred Provider Organization may have to choose between switching doctors or paying more for health care.

The physicians and Blue Cross are at odds over the company's new reimbursement rates, and doctors also say they don't want Blue Cross managing health-care decisions. Blue Cross counters that it only makes coverage decisions.

Magic Valley Health Network is an organization of 84 Twin Falls doctors. Its executive director, Tony Burns, said 70 of the physicians either already have left the Blue Cross managed-care plans or have given notice that they will leave.

Burns said he could not release the doctors' names without approval from the network's board, which meets today.

Blue Cross won't provide its own number to show how many physicians it is losing from its PPO. After repeated questions from The Times-News, the company would say only that it was impossible to provide a number or names since discussions with the physicians continue.

"We value the relationships we have with our contracting physicians, and it would be inappropriate to list names or to discuss details of physicians contracts," Blue Cross said in response to written questions from The Times-News.

Most of the pending departures will occur the first week of May. Patients can check with their doctors or Blue Cross to find out whether their physicians are sticking with Blue Cross' managed-care plans. If their doctors are leaving Blue Cross, subscribers can check with Blue Cross to find out how much their plans cover.

Some independent physicians and all of the doctors at Southern Idaho Medical Group and Physician Center have left or will be leaving. Magic Valley Regional Medical Center and Twin Falls Clinic & Hospital are Kempthorne signs bevy of bills, including tax cut, on valley visit

By Michael Journee
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS – Just before his deadline passed, Gov. Dirk Kempthorne came to town with a pocket full of pens to sign a several new measures into Idaho's law books.

Idaho's historic $94.5 million tax cut, another tax cut for property owners in Twin Falls and Jerome counties, and a set of new dairy regulations were among the measures Kempthorne signed in a number of stops throughout the Magic Valley Wednesday.

It was the final day of the 10-day time frame Kempthorne had after the conclusion of 2001's legislative session for signing the new laws. Kempthorne traveled around the state this week signing bills as he went.

Kempthorne's first stop in Twin Falls was at the College of Southern Idaho campus. There he signed the tax-cut measure and the $20.5 million community college appropriation bill that provides a state money for 37 percent cut in local property taxes. The new tax rates will take effect in December 2002.

About 300 local lawmakers and officials and CSI students and teachers gathered in CSI's Evergreen Building watched Kempthorne sign the bill, which includes $3.2 million "in what we will call property tax relief," Kempthorne said.

Despite her long-fought-for victory on the CSI property tax issue, which has been in local lawmakers' sights for years, Rep. Maxine Bell, R-Jerome let it be known that she'll continue fighting for more state money for CSI.

"We think you're worthy of full state funding," said Bell, co-chairwoman of the Legislature's powerful Joint Finance-Appropriations Committee.

Kempthorne used the event to highlight some of the other education measures he signed this year.

"This is probably the best year ever for higher education," Kempthorne said.

In addition to the community college budget, lawmakers sent him the largest appropriation ever for the state's colleges and universities – worth $314.9 million.

Also he signed a $103 million public works bill that includes $4.5 million for a fine arts building at CSI, a bill giving each high

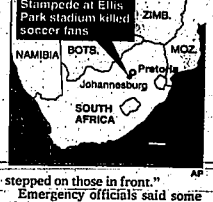
Stampede at crowded soccer match kills 43

The Associated Press

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa – Fans stampeded at a soccer stadium on Wednesday night, killing 43 people, including two children, and injuring more than 150 others.

The stampede occurred during a game between two popular teams at Ellis Park Stadium. Witnesses said the stadium was vastly overcrowded and erupted into chaos after the Orlando Pirates scored a goal against Kaizer Chiefs, a Premier League rival.

"That's when everything happened," stadium security guard Louis Shipalana, 42, told The Associated Press. "The stadium was full. There was no place to stand. The people were pushing toward the fence (around the field), and the fence collapsed and the people in the back stepped on those in front."



AP

Emergency officials said some of the victims died at the fence surrounding the field and others at a fence at the entrance to the stadium.

Security guard Petrus Saayman, 22, said he rushed to help a teen-age girl trapped in a fence. "The girl, she broke her neck or something. When I came there, she was already dead."

continuing their contracts, though the clinic's doctors will not.

The popular Blue Cross PPO plan covers many local employers, including the city of Twin Falls, Twin Falls School District, Seastrom Manufacturing Co Inc., Lamb Weston Inc., and The Times-News.

Blue Cross has provided employers with a list of physicians who are involved in the plan – 33 of whom Blue Cross says are "in current discussions" about whether they'll continue and that they might not be participating as of May.

But Burns said those 33 doctors have given notice that they'll leave the Blue Cross PPO when their contracts run out next month. Burns confirmed that the health network does have more negotiations scheduled with Blue Cross, but the negotiations will be on behalf of all health network doctors, not just those listed by Blue Cross as still in discussions.

Blue Cross says 63 percent of Twin Falls physicians remain in its PPO, which it says is down from 67 percent in July 2000.

How Blue Cross computes that percentage is unclear. Comparing the two sides' assertions is difficult, because neither has provided a list of departing physicians.

Blue Cross invites patients to visit its website to find a list of its participating PPO providers, but the online list as of Wednesday did not specify which doctors would be leaving the PPO. Blue Cross tells viewers that the site is updated daily but that it is important to verify the contracting status of a provider or facility before obtaining treatment.

The Blue Cross online list can be seen at www.bcidaho.com.

PPOs cap medical costs for patients, because doctors contract with health insurance carriers and agree they won't charge patients more than Blue Cross will pay for specific procedures. In some cases, this means doctors are giving patients discounts. Fewer doctors in a PPO means less choice for patients, which is what is happening in Twin Falls.

Patients in a PPO plan are free to see any doctors they choose, even those who do not contract with the PPO. But patients who go "out-of-network" can wind up paying a bigger share of the bill – in some cases substantially more.

Patients who see non-PPO doctors also may have to coordinate payments themselves, losing the service of direct Blue Cross reimbursement to their physicians.

As Blue Cross' PPO membership in Twin Falls shrinks, local physicians and Regence BlueShield of Idaho are moving toward renewed relations after a contract dispute between BlueShield and doctors statewide in 1999. That dispute led to a class-action lawsuit brought by 19 Idaho doctors – none of whom are in Twin Falls – that was settled Friday.

Burns reported verbal agreements – which BlueShield confirmed – on terms for a BlueShield PPO network in Twin Falls. He said they are the same terms that the Magic Valley Health Network has proposed to Blue Cross.

"It's a true partnering with an insurance company to manage costs," Burns said.

Physicians would agree to manage prescription drug costs and procedures but also would be able to choose from more expensive options for care if that is what the patient needs, Burns said.

"It doesn't give one side or the other too much control," he said.

Twin Falls physicians recently have been returning to BlueShield's traditional plan, according to Georgeanne Benjamin, spokeswoman for Regence BlueShield. Nearly 80 percent of Twin Falls doctors are back on the traditional plan, and they include cardiologists, urologists and internists.

"It's our goal to reach a mutual beneficial agreement for our members," she said of the PPO negotiations.

Physician contracts with health insurance companies are shrouded in secrecy, so details about the contract disputes are sketchy. The settlement reached by doctors in the class-action lawsuit and BlueShield might also remain confidential.

Sixth District Judge Peter D. McDermott in Pocatello said Wednesday that the class-action lawsuit had been scheduled to go to trial later this month but was settled Friday. The terms of the settlement are confidential at this point as attorneys are putting together the paperwork and might continue to be so after it's finalized.

Feds: Poison killed Idaho wolves

BOISE (AP) – The banned predator-control poison Compound 1080 killed at least two gray wolves in Idaho last year, including one near Fairfield, the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service confirmed on Wednesday.

The agency's National Forensics Laboratory in Ashland, Ore., performed necropsies on the wolves and determined that sodium fluoroacetate was the cause of death, even though one of the animals also had been shot.

Fish and Wildlife Service law enforcement agents recovered the body of the wolf, designated B-37, in the Salmon-Challis National Forest near Pepper Creek last August.

Another wolf designated B-96, a male member of the Smoky Mountain pack, was found dead near Lick Creek about 20 miles north of Fairfield last November. Although B-96 also had been shot in the lower right hip, he died as a result of Compound 1080 poisoning, the agency said.

$10,000 reward offered

Killing a designated endangered species is punishable by up to a year in jail and a $100,000 fine. The Fish and Wildlife Service, Defenders of Wildlife and the Wolf Education and Research Center are offering a $10,000 reward for information leading to the arrest and conviction of anyone responsible for the killings.

A list of Twin Falls docs leaving the program ....

Magic Valley Health Network, a local physicians group, says 70 Twin Falls doctors have left or are leaving Blue Cross of Idaho's Preferred Provider Organization. The network reports a membership of 84 Twin Falls physicians, which includes most but not all Twin Falls physicians. Here's a rundown provided by the Health Network of the number of member physicians, by specialty, who will be leaving the Blue Cross PPO.

school graduate with a 3.0 or better grade-point average up to $500 a year for two years for college tuition at an Idaho school, and a measure increasing college professors' pay by 2 percent.

After signing the community college budget, Kempthorne put his pen to the big tax cut that lawmakers fought over for most of their three-month session this winter. That bill includes $85.8 million in permanent tax cuts and $8.7 million in one-time relief.

It includes a permanent four-tenths of a percent reduction in individual income tax rates, a $58.4 million cut, and in corporate income rates, a $6.8 million reduction.

The last measures to be signed by Kempthorne this year were two dairy regulation bills. A group of local politicians and dairy industry representatives gathered at Si-Ellen Farms in Jerome for the ceremony.

House Bill 262, the hallmark legislation of four dairy regulations passed this year, clarifies the Department of Agriculture's role in regulating the dairy industry odors and spells out punishments to be meted out to dairy operators who don't work to control odor problems.

House Bill 211 requires state regulatory officials to help counties site confined animal feeding operations if they need it.

Earlier in the day, at a ceremony at the Blaine County Courthouse in Hailey, Kempthorne signed two other bills aimed regulating dairies.

Senate Bill 1040 requires dairies that sell their animal waste for application on cropland to list the buyers' names and addresses in their nutrient management plans. The bill covers about 90 percent of Idaho dairy waste.

Senate Bill 1067 requires a new or expanding dairy to provide evidence to state regulators and county planners of an adequate water right before a siting or milking permit can be issued.

Blizzards, rainstorms hit western Plains

DENVER (AP) – A powerful storm battered the Plains with tornadoes Wednesday and paralyzed parts of Colorado and Wyoming with blowing snow that closed hundreds of miles of highways and the region's biggest airport.

Up to 18 inches of snow fell along the eastern side of the Rocky Mountains and winds gusted to 70 mph, heaping the snow into deep drifts. Parts of Wyoming got up to a foot.

"I don't think we've had this much snow forever. This is ridiculous," Sarah Mischke said after walking to work in Cheyenne, Wyo.

All Denver public schools were closed for the first time in more than six years.

Nearly 50,000 customers lost power in Colorado. "We're treating this like a military operation," said Xcel Energy spokesman Steve Roalstad.

The blowing snow closed Denver International Airport, canceling dozens of flights. However, the shutdown came early in the morning, before travelers could set out for the airport and get stranded.

But for farmers, ranchers, and firefighters, regardless of whether it's sloppy, slushy and dirty or not, it's still water - and they love it.

The storm dumped the equivalent of an inch of water in the area, easing fears of a dry summer as well as concerns over the lagging winter snowpack.

"Farmers and ranchers were starting to ask when was the April moisture coming. Even though the moisture came sideways, it still lands someplace and is helpful," said Don Nitchie of Akron, northeastern regional director for Colorado State University's agricultural extension division.

The snowstorm came on the back side of a weather system that also sent a line of severe thunderstorms across the eastern Plains, with tornadoes, hail and high wind causing damage from Texas to Nebraska. A twister near Coalgate, Okla., killed a man and seriously injured his son.

The storm system also spread heavy rain across the upper Midwest, where crews continued piling up sandbags against rising rivers in southern Minnesota and in the Red River Valley along the Minnesota-North Dakota line.

Granite Falls, Minn., Mayor Dave Smiglewski worried that the heavy rain would keep volunteers away as the Minnesota River threatened the town.

"You can't expect people to work nonstop in these kinds of elements," he said. "This is stressful stuff."

A bicyclist pedals through snow on a street in Denver, Wednesday. A powerful spring storm paralyzed parts of the West knocking out power, snarling traffic and grounding air travel with heavy, wet snow and gusty winds. The storm caused the worst disruption since an October 1997 blizzard that left 10 dead and killed 30,000 livestock.

Panel opens hearing on car rollovers

WASHINGTON (AP) – Government engineers are trying to figure out the best way to tell prospective buyers the probability that a vehicle would roll over in a crash.

Experts from around the country gathered Wednesday at the National Academy of Sciences to grapple with the question that has been debated since the early 1970s.

It has taken on new importance because of the growth in popularity of the relatively unstable sport utility vehicle and the rash of rollover accidents involving Ford Explorers with Firestone tires.

Under a law passed in response to those accidents, the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration must begin driving tests next year to determine vehicle rollover risks. Car shoppers must have access to that information for 2003 model year vehicles.

Bush sides with Clinton on mercury

WASHINGTON (AP) – President Bush is siding with his Democratic predecessor on two air pollution issues, agreeing to regulate mercury emissions from coal-burning power plants and requiring cleaner diesel fuel and engines.

Environmentalists expressed delight Tuesday that the Bush administration is asking a federal appeals court to uphold a Clinton-era plan on mercury pollution regulation.

"This is a strong indication that they support moving forward with a national standard for mercury emissions from power plants," said Andy Buchsbaum, a spokesman for the National Wildlife Federation, which joined in asking the court to let the EPA regulate mercury emissions.

The Environmental Protection Agency asked the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit on Monday to dismiss a suit challenging the agency's decision in December to begin ordering reductions in the estimated 40 tons of mercury spewed annually from power plant smokestacks.

It was a rare instance of the Bush administration's agreeing with former President Clinton and environmentalists and going against an industry whose executives overwhelmingly supported Bush's election.

The first instance came in March when the Bush EPA said it would enforce rather than challenge a rule issued in the waning days of the Clinton presidency that goes after diesel trucks and buses as sources of dirty air.

The government motion on mercury regulation says the suit by the Edison Electric Institute – a trade association of investor-owned utilities – and another industry group is premature since the EPA has taken no final action yet.

"The preliminary decision to list a hazardous air pollutant or a category of sources emitting such pollutants is unambiguously defined not to be a final agency action subject to judicial review," the motion said.

Edison spokesman Dan Riedinger said, however, that the aim was not to overturn the EPA decision but to give utilities "a prudent and realistic goal" and more leeway in meeting the eventual new standards.

Bush promised during his presidential campaign to cut power plants' emissions of sulfur dioxide, nitrogen oxide, mercury and carbon dioxide. He recanted the carbon dioxide pledge last month, saying he had since learned it was not a pollutant under the Clean Air Act.

Exposure to mercury, most often through the food chain starting with fish consumption, has been linked to neurological and developmental damage in humans. Fetuses and young children are particularly vulnerable.

The EPA has long regulated mercury emissions from incinerators and other sources but not from power plants. At present, utilities are not even required to report the amount of mercury coming from their smokestacks.

Bush seeks change to endangered species act; Democrats promise fight

WASHINGTON (AP) – Democrats invoked the threat of a filibuster Wednesday as a possible way to defeat legislation sought by President Bush that would limit the ability of environmental groups to get rare plants and animals added to the government's list of endangered species.

Sen. John Kerry, D-Mass., said "any and all" legislative tactics are being considered to thwart the proposal outlined in Bush's budget submitted to Congress on Monday.

Filibusters have become the tactic of choice in recent years because they require at least 60 votes in the Senate – now divided 50-50 between the two parties – to bring a measure to either final passage or rejection.

The budget provision proposed by Bush for the fiscal year starting Oct. 1 still would permit citizens and environmental groups to bring the sort of lawsuits that have largely set the Interior Department's agenda in listing endangered and threatened species lists.

But it would cap at $8.46 million the department's budget for responding to those suits and give officials more discretion in determining which species and "critical habitat" areas should be addressed first under the 1973 Endangered Species Act.

Now, there are 507 animals and 736 plants on the department's endangered list; a backlog of almost 250 candidate species is under review.

As of Friday, Fish and Wildlife Service officials were contending with 76 lawsuits focused on more than 400 species. They also have been served with notices of 95 more lawsuits affecting 600 species, agency spokesman Mitch Snow said.

"This is an effort to try to bring some balance back into our listing budget so we will be able to do high-priority listing actions," said Hugh Vickery, the agency's spokesman on the endangered species program.

Developers, industry and government agencies themselves long have complained that environmental groups use the endangered species law to tie up projects like dams and airport expansions in lengthy reviews.

Clergy, politicians urge calm after two-day rioting over police shooting

CINCINNATI (AP) – About a dozen downtown businesses were boarded up Wednesday and glass littered sidewalks following two nights of protests over the police shooting of an unarmed black man.

There were few people on the streets as the Cincinnati archdiocese canceled classes at two inner-city Roman Catholic schools and police urged curiosity-seekers to stay out of the Over-the-Rhine neighborhood.

On Tuesday, gangs of roving youths looted stores, set fires and attacked motorists with bricks, forcing residents to lock themselves indoors while clergy members and politicians appealed for calm.

The rioting was sparked by the killing of Timothy Thomas, 19, who was shot while fleeing a white police officer. Thomas, 19, wanted on 14 misdemeanor warrants, was the fourth black man killed by police since November.

Los Angeles mayor's race heads for runoff – between Democrats

LOS ANGELES – A Hispanic former lawmaker and the heir to a political dynasty headed for a runoff in a race that could give Los Angeles its first Latino mayor in more than a century.

The outcome signaled a dramatic change in local politics as voters elevated two Democrats into the runoff in favor of the Republican businessman endorsed by outgoing Mayor Richard Riordan.

Antonio Villaraigosa

James Hahn

With 99 percent of precincts counted by mid-morning Wednesday, former state Assembly Speaker Antonio Villaraigosa had 30 percent, or 142,744 votes. City Attorney James Hahn had 25 percent, or 118,347 votes. Real estate broker Steve Soboroff had 21 percent, or 99,453 votes.

Villaraigosa, 48, would be the city's first Hispanic mayor since 1872. He was born to a Mexican immigrant, dropped out of high school then rose to become speaker of the state Assembly, where he served six years.

Audit finds Wisconsin welfare reform program deficient

MADISON, Wis. – A study by the nonpartisan Legislative Audit Bureau of Wisconsin's pioneering program to get people off welfare and into jobs found the majority of participants are still living in poverty.

Wisconsin Works, or W-2, was launched in 1997 by then-Gov. Tommy Thompson and hailed by President Clinton as one of the most revolutionary welfare overhauls in the country.

It replaced the main federal welfare program with child-care funding and other financial incentives for unemployed parents to find work or job training. Participants' cash benefits are reduced if they miss work or fail to participate in required activities.

Wisconsin's tough work rules – developed over years of experimentation – became a cornerstone of the federal welfare overhaul of 1996.

During W-2's first three years, Wisconsin's welfare rolls were cut in half, but one-fourth of the people who left were back on cash assistance within 18 months. And half of those who continued working were living below the poverty level, according to the study. The current poverty threshold for a family of four is $16,400.

Report: Amtrak gets cut on DEA busts of drug carriers

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. – The local Amtrak office provides federal agents with details on passengers in exchange for 10 percent of any cash seized from suspected drug couriers, the Albuquerque Journal reported Wednesday.

A computer linked to Amtrak's ticketing terminal sits on a desk at the local branch of the Drug Enforcement Administration, in what officials describe as a one-of-a-kind arrangement, according to the newspaper.

Through it, federal agents can learn passenger names, points of origin, destinations and where, when and how the tickets were bought.

The information helps determine which passengers will be questioned – and whose luggage will be checked by a drug-sniffing dog – aboard trains stopping in Albuquerque.

Peter Simonson, executive director of the American Civil Liberties Union of New Mexico, called the deal "an insidious alliance" and said the group might challenge the practice in court.

Study: Dementia patients often die within three years

People with dementia caused by Alzheimer's disease or narrowed blood vessels in the brain often die within about three years – a far grimmer prognosis than generally thought, Canadian researchers say.

Previous studies that put the average at five to nine years did not take into account people who die so soon after the disease hits that they cannot be included, the researchers said in today's New England Journal of Medicine.

"We know these are terrible, rapidly progressing, devastating diseases. But the way we've looked at the data, it's even worse than we thought," said Christina Wolfson of the epidemiology and biostatistics department at McGill University's Montreal Neurological Institute.

Survival time after diagnosis for 821 patients with dementia was found to be about 6.6 years. But when the "survivors-only bias" was taken into account, the study found that half of the patients would live less than 3.3 years, and half would live longer.

UMass resident assistants seek union for better wages

AMHERST, Mass. – Complaining they are underpaid, resident assistants at the University of Massachusetts are trying to form a union in what is believed to be the nation's first organizing attempt by undergraduate students.

School administrators are trying to block the move, which follows successful union drives among graduate researchers and teaching assistants across the Northeast.

The university's 360 resident assistants filed a union election petition last week with the Massachusetts Labor Relations Commission, which will determine if the group is legally eligible to form a union.

Inmate dies after drinking bleach at jail

CROSSETT, Ark. – A man being held on a minor charge at the city jail died Wednesday after drinking bleach in the laundry room.

The 24-year-old man, whose name was not released, may have drunk the bleach in an effort to be taken to a hospital, state Trooper Jim Linkous said. He died while being taken to the hospital aboard a helicopter.

The inmate had been let out of his cell Tuesday evening to do his laundry, and drank bleach from a bottle, police said.

"You can imagine how painful that must have been," Linkous said.

Make the switch to compact fluorescent light bulbs.

The standard incandescent bulbs currently lighting your home have changed very little from the original ones Thomas Edison designed in 1879. They are inefficient, with only 10% of their energy contributing to light. That's right—90% of the energy given off by standard bulbs is wasted as heat.

Compact fluorescent bulbs use integrated circuit technology to prolong the life of the bulb, and consume less energy.

- Save up to 75% on electricity costs
- Outlasts up to 16 ordinary bulbs
- Cooler & safer
- Instant-on electronics

Other tips for saving energy:

- Use lamp-and-appliance-timers.
- Use water-saving shower heads to save energy and water.
- Set your water heater thermostat to 120 degrees, or 140 if you have a dishwasher. Operate your dishwasher only with full loads.

Small changes can make a big difference:

- Seal air leaks around doors and windows, along attic access hatches, and behind electrical outlets.
- Wrap heating and cooling ducts with duct wrap, or use mastic sealant.
- Clean or replace furnace and air conditioners regularly.
- Install shades, awnings or sun screens on windows facing south.
- When going on vacation, shut off or turn down your air conditioner or furnace.

for having done something wrong. And we did not do anything wrong. Therefore it's not possible to apologize."

By showing flexibility on the apology demand, Jiang avoided a rupture in relations with the United States, but left himself open to charges of being soft on America at home. Jiang was not the only one who showed flexibility. On the day of the collision, the Bush administration said the EP-3E was sovereign U.S. territory and demanded China return it immediately, but after China sent a cargo plane packed with technicians to probe the high-tech aircraft, that argument all but disappeared.

The plane will stay on Hainan after the crew goes home, and its fate will become the subject of negotiations scheduled to begin April 18 in San Francisco under the U.S.-Chinese Military Maritime Consultative Agreement, which was reached in 1998 to avoid incidents such as the April 1 collision. Prueher's letter said the meeting also will include "discussion of the causes of the incident," giving China a chance to press its insistence that the U.S. plane was at fault and that the United States should not make intelligence-gathering flights close to Chinese shores.

"The incident has not been fully settled," Jiang stressed, according to the New China News Agency. "We hope that the U.S. side will adopt a serious attitude toward China's standpoint on the incident and handle it properly."

But U.S. officials asserted in Washington that they have no intention of stopping the flights. As a result, the tone of next week's session is likely to be far different from the restrained expressions of regret that top U.S. officials have been careful to showas they sought to persuade China to release the U.S. military personnel.

The crisis underscored the importance and explosive nature of Washington's relationship with Beijing, which is complicated by China's growing military capability and the U.S. commitment to defend Taiwan, the island of 23 million that China claims as its own and has vowed to reunite with the mainland. The Bush administration is expected to announce later this month a major arms package for Taiwan, something China has vociferously opposed.

Relations are also troubled by differences over human rights. Even as the spy plane controversy moved toward resolution, the U.S. delegation at the U.N. Commission on Human Rights in Geneva presented a resolution accusing China of cracking down on religion and other basic freedoms.

Despite the strain of the last 11 days, U.S. officials said the impact of the crisis on long-term relations is unclear. "Over the next several days, everybody will need to step back and take a look at the totality of the picture," said a top Bush administration official.

Throughout the past week, American and Chinese diplomats had been locked in strenuous negotiations over the wording of the U.S. statement. The letter that Prueher delivered at 6 p.m. Wednesday Beijing time (4 a.m. MDT) was an exercise in linguistic gymnastics, and its sixth draft.

"Both President Bush and Secretary of State Powell have expressed their sincere regret over your missing pilot and aircraft. Please convey to the Chinese people and to the family of pilot Wang Wei that we are very sorry for their loss," the letter said.

"Although the full picture of what transpired is still unclear, according to our information, our severely crippled aircraft made an emergency landing after following international emergency procedures. We are very sorry the entering of China's airspace and the landing did not have verbal clearance, but very pleased the crew landed safely."

Despite U.S. characterizations that the letter was not an apology, Foreign Ministry spokesman Sun Yuxi called it a "letter of apology."

"The firm struggle by the Chinese government and people against U.S. hegemony has forced the U.S. government to change from its initial rude and unreasonable attitude to saying 'very sorry' to the Chinese government," said an editorial in the People's Daily, the Communist Party organ, that was read on state television tonight.

The two sides also offered different translations of the letter in Chinese.

In a statement broadcast to the nation, the Foreign Ministry translated the English "very sorry" into "shenbiao qianyi," an expression of sincere apology or regret that Chinese linguists say involves an acknowledgement of error and an acceptance of responsibility.

But a copy of the letter in Chinese released by the U.S. Embassy did not use that term, saying instead that the United States "expressed 'feichang wanxi,'" or extreme sympathy, to the Chinese people and the family of the missing pilot. It also said the United States was "feichang baoqian," or extremely sorry, that the Navy plane landed without permission.

Assess

administration official, betraying frustration that lies just below the restrained posture President Bush and other senior administration have maintained during the 12-day standoff over the air crew. "There's a strong sense within the U.S. government that there needs to be a price."

The mood in Congress is also restive. House International Relations Committee Chairman Henry Hyde, R-Ill., said he expects a reaction against China when Congress goes back into session during the week of April 23.

"I expect a less-than-amorous embrace of China on whatever issues present themselves, whether it's WTO (the World Trade Organization) or arms sales to Taiwan," Hyde said. "I think a difficult relationship will become more difficult, but whether there will be a long-term estrangement, I don't know."

Many policy experts assert that a more tempered approach – bolstered by the business stakes in the $115 billion annual bilateral trade – will prevail and restrain the United States from retaliating for the detention of 24 crew members of a Navy surveillance plane that made an emergency landing on China's Hainan Island after a mid-air collision with a Chinese fighter jet on April 1.

"We stopped this process that was unfolding before it became more serious," Secretary of State Colin Powell said Wednesday in answer to a question about the damage to U.S.-Chinese relations. "I don't see anything that is unrecoverable."

Others say the political dynamics in Washington have been altered by the confrontation over the U.S. plane and its crew.

"It weakens the supporters of China and very much emboldens those with suspicions that China's up to no good in the world," said Kenneth Adelman, a Reagan administration official, co-host of a defense information website, and friend of Vice President Cheney. "Politics is about intensity, and you really zap the intensity out of the pro-China folks."

One administration official said that members of Bush's foreign policy team have drawn up lists of upcoming events and U.S. actions that could be taken in the near- to medium-term in light of the standoff, though he said no discussions had taken place while the freedom of the U.S. crew members hung in the balance.

"There's no question in my mind that people feel they've been rubbed the wrong way by the Chinese at senior levels of the administration," said an outside policy expert close to the Bush team.

At the Pentagon, the main mood Wednesday was relief. Military officials expressed understanding of the diplomatic need for the United States to say it was "very sorry" about the death of the Chinese fighter pilot and the emergency landing on Chinese soil. But there was annoyance with Beijing as well.

"One foot difference and there could have been 24 dead Americans," said a senior defense official, referring to the mid-air collision. "I think they owe us an apology."

Budget for INEEL worries Idaho congressional delegation

By Megan Scully
States News Service

WASHINGTON – Proposed cuts in the U.S. Department of Energy's environmental programs have sparked concerns among members of Idaho's congressional delegation, who fear that budget cuts could have devastating effects on the cleanup of Idaho National Engineering and Environmental Laboratory.

President Bush's 2002 budget proposal released this week would slash the INEEL budget for both long-term and short-term cleanup projects by $67.3 million, marking a decrease of more than 15 percent from this year's budget at a time when the laboratory is facing multi-million dollar deficits and layoffs.

Overall, the budget would reduce the Energy Department's environmental management program, which includes the cleanup of INEEL, by $354 million, resulting in a decrease of 5.7 percent from this year's budget.

"There is no question that what the president has proposed for the Department of Energy and all laboratories is substantially below where we want it to be," said Sen. Larry Craig, R-Idaho.

While he largely agrees with the administration's overall budget numbers, Craig said he believes that boosting the funding for nuclear cleanup projects will require "having to shift some priorities at the Department of Energy."

But the administration insists that a complete review of environmental management programs is necessary before they receive additional funding.

"When I assumed this office, I was told that the schedule calls for the remaining cleanup to take 70 years at a cost of $300 billion," Energy Secretary

Spencer Abraham said when the budget was released.

"That is not good enough."

In the meantime, Abraham said that budget requests for 2002 "fulfill other critical goals that will lead us to our cleanup objectives."

At INEEL, that means $56 million for the shipment of radioactive waste away from the site, said Joe Davis, Energy Department spokesman.

"That number meets all of our obligations to the state to continue the treatment and transportation of radioactive waste," Davis said.

In 1995, the federal government ordered INEEL to remove all of its buried waste by 2018. If its budget gets slashed, Idaho's congressional delegation has argued, the laboratory would be faced with an unfunded mandate.

To continue with the cleanup, Rep. Mike Simpson, R-Idaho estimates that INEEL must receive at least $140 million more than was allotted in the president's budget proposal, amounting to $475 million for both short-term and long-term cleanup projects.

"I am . . . disappointed in the level of funding for the environmental management budget," Simpson said.

"If that were the budget to finally be adopted, it would mean the Department of Energy would not be able to meet the commitments it made to a number of states, including Idaho, for cleanup."

The budget proposal, released this week, spurred a letter to Abraham by Sen. Mike Crapo, R-Idaho, who has taken the lead on this issue in Congress as the co-chair of the Senate Nuclear Waste Cleanup Caucus.

"This proposed reduction in funding will surely slow cleanup progress being made on the ground today and force the federal government to violate legally-binding compliance commitments to the states," Crapo wrote.

Last week, the Senate passed an amendment to its version of the federal budget introduced by Crapo that secures an additional $1 billion for environmental management programs. The amendment brings federal spending for nuclear waste cleanup to $6.6 billion and raises INEEL's own budget 10 percent from last year's figures, bringing it to almost $460 million.

Shoshone schools eye R-rated films

By Lorraine Cavener
Times-News correspondent

SHOSHONE – Some parents in Shoshone don't think teen-agers should be watching R-rated movies – especially in the classroom.

So the School Board Monday heard the first reading of a new policy that would prohibit the use of R-rated films in the classroom and would require permission from a department head or principal to use any materials outside the curriculum. The draft policy will have two more readings before the board votes on whether or not to approve it. The board would like more input from parents and teachers, said School Board member Pat Hamilton.

More MV news – C1-3

The issue came to the forefront a couple of weeks ago when Shoshone High School English teacher Janet Avery sent parents a permission slip to allow their children to watch the movie, "Frankenstein," which was based on the Mary Shelley classic the students were studying in class. Avery had edited parts of the film thought to be inappropriate for students and offered an alternative activity for students whose parents didn't want them watching the movie.

A group of parents objected to the use of the R-rated movie and brought their concerns before the School Board.

"Five parents came and requested the board deny the use of R-rated movies," said Superintendent Max Excel.

Shoshone schools have never had a policy regarding supplemental resources used in the classroom because this is the first time the issue has come up, Excel said. The board has been looking at other districts' policies to help them with the final draft of the policy.

Hamilton, a librarian for Shoshone and Gooding public libraries, said she does not see the policy as censorship. If a person sees something on television they don't want to watch, they can turn it off, but "a student in a classroom does not have that ability," Hamilton said.

Hamilton sees the issue as one of community values rather than censorship.

Hamilton said comments on the policy may be directed to the district office at 784-1348.

Paradis decision angers former prosecutor

SPOKANE, Wash. (AP) – The prosecutor who won the death penalty against Donald Paradis said Wednesday he still believes the former Spokane man was heavily involved in the murder of Kimberly Palmer.

"The jury that considered the case found Mr. Paradis guilty," Marc Haws said.

"I never did try to get a jury to say he was the slayer, only that he was a principal in the slaying," Haws said. "Jurors were convinced and I am still convinced."

A Kootenai County judge on Tuesday vacated Paradis' murder conviction and accepted a plea agreement in which Paradis pleaded guilty to a reduced charge of being an accessory to the concealment of a murder. The former motorcycle gang member was then sentenced to five years in prison, but given credit for time served and allowed to walk out of the courtroom a free man.

Paradis had been sentenced to death in 1981 for the murder of 19-year-old Kimberly Anne Palmer of Spokane.

The release of Paradis after 21 years in prison does not shake Haws' faith in the judicial system.

"I think it's time for all of us to move forward and get this behind us," said Haws, now a federal prosecutor in Boise.

Last month, the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals upheld a lower court ruling that the one-time member of the Gypsy Jokers motorcycle gang was denied a fair trial because Haws withheld notes that could have allowed the defense to discredit a key witness. The notes raised a jurisdictional question because it was not clear if Palmer was killed in Washington or Idaho.

Paradis and his lawyers were critical of Haws after court on Tuesday.

"I was a victim of a prosecutor who tried to make a name for himself and used me as a stepping stone," Paradis said.

Haws was a deputy Kootenai County prosecutor in 1981 when a jury convicted Paradis of killing Palmer and dumping her body in a ravine near Post Falls, Idaho.

U.S. attorney for Idaho steps down

BOISE (AP) – Betty Richardson, a former state Democratic Party leader and Idaho Industrial Commission chairman, is resigning effective April 20 after more than seven years as the federal prosecutor for Idaho.

Appointed by President Clinton in October 1993, she was the first woman to hold the position in Idaho. The Lewiston native said she planned to return to the private practice of law with her husband, Peter, in Eagle.

"It has been a tremendous honor to have served the people of Idaho as their U.S. attorney for the past seven years," Richardson said in a statement issued Tuesday. "This is one of the most rewarding jobs an attorney could ever hope to have, and I wish my successor all the best."

No announcement has yet been made, but GOP state Rep. Tom Moss of Blackfoot, a former Bingham County prosecutor, is expected to win the Bush administration's partisan appointment to the job at the recommendation of Idaho's all-Republican congressional delegation.

National Infant Immunization Month

All Children Need Vaccines

Vaccines help protect your child from many diseases. These diseases can cause serious health problems, including life-threatening illnesses, lasting disabilities, and brain damage. Some even cause death.

Children under age 2 are at special risk. They're more likely than older children to become very ill or disabled from a disease. That's why it's so important to vaccinate on time.

How Do Vaccines Work?

Vaccines help:

- Strengthen the body's immune (defense) system. Vaccines cause the body to make antibodies. These antibodies help the body fight disease. Vaccines are usually given by injection (a shot).
- Protect your baby throughout childhood. Once vaccines are given, antibodies continue to fight diseases for months or years. Some vaccines can protect for life. Others may need to be repeated.
- Keep diseases from spreading. When you have your baby vaccinated, you'll also be helping to protect other babies, children, and adults!

Myths About Vaccines

It's important to learn all you can about vaccines and vaccine safety. Start by getting the facts.

MYTH: Breast-fed babies don't need to be vaccinated.
FACT: Breast feeding has many benefits for babies. It can help protect them from certain illnesses, but only for a short time. Vaccines can protect your baby for a long time- often for life!

MYTH: Vaccines cause sudden infant death syndrome (SIDS).
FACT: There is no known cause of SIDS. The age at which many children die from SIDS is similar to the age when vaccines are first recommended. This is a coincidence, not a connection.

MYTH: A lot of children get hurt by vaccines.
FACT: Severe side effects from vaccines are very rare. It's a much greater health risk not to get vaccinated. Some children may have mild side effects, such as crankiness or a slight fever. These usually only last a few hours. Getting the disease can be far more dangerous and painful.

MYTH: Diseases are rare now. Vaccines are not really necessary.
FACT: Certain diseases are rare in the U.S. because of vaccines. If we stopped using vaccines, diseases would spread very quickly - and many children would become very ill.

MYTH: It is dangerous to give so many vaccines at the same time.
FACT: Studies show that giving several vaccines at one visit is safe and effective.

EDITORIAL

If valley gets fewer seats, select occupants carefully

Idaho's legislative districts will be rejiggered soon to reflect new population data from the 2000 Census. Fast-growing metropolitan areas will be the winners in this game of political reapportionment – and rural Idaho will be the loser.

At this point, it appears that two or three rural districts will be shuffled off to Boise and Coeur d'Alene. The rest of the state will tighten its belt accordingly.

With southern Idaho's political representation about to shrink, it's crucial to elect good leaders who can work together.

This is important because the Magic Valley could lose two representatives and a senator. Mini-Cassia is particularly vulnerable, though the political pie still hasn't been carved.

That job falls to a Legislative Redistricting Commission which, in all probability, will consist of three Republicans and three Democrats. That's flattering for Democrats, considering that there are only a dozen of them in the entire 105-member Idaho Legislature.

No matter who sits on the commission, it's inevitable that it will give more legislative muscle to Boise and Coeur d'Alene. That, in turn, will mean less representation elsewhere – which is the wrong direction to travel on the road to political power.

It's important to remember that the interests of Boise and Coeur d'Alene aren't always aligned with southern Idaho's. True, the average Idaho legislator is a conservative Republican with more than a passing familiarity with farm and ranch issues. But in politics, as in real estate, the most important things are location, location and location.

So no one should be surprised when representatives from urban districts vote the interests of their constituents. And no one should be surprised when those interests, at times, conflict with the interests of rural Idaho.

If political representation is about to wane, it's crucial to elect good leaders who can work together for all of southern Idaho. There's strength in numbers, but the inverse – splintered positions – equals squandered opportunities.

Southern Idaho occupies an important place in Idaho's physical and political landscape. It is something of a transition zone, buffering the Treasure Valley's high-tech growth from the LDS farm areas of eastern Idaho.

As such, southern Idaho is not fertile ground for political ideologues. This is an area with a long tradition of electing fiscal conservatives who tend to avoid hot-button social issues.

Budget hawks who watch their constituents' money and steer clear of no-win fights will always be in demand here. The looming reapportionment means we'll send fewer of them to Boise, so it will be vitally important for voters to elect good ones.

Campaign finance reform endangers free speech

ROBERT J. SAMUELSON

Campaign finance reform is the modern Prohibition: a misguided moral crusade that, though doomed to fail, infuses its supporters with an overwhelming sense of moral superiority. We are (they say) cleansing politics from the influence of "dirty" money. This moral smugness is entirely unfounded, because the advocates of "reform" have consistently avoided the only honest way of curbing the role of money in politics. That would be to amend the Constitution.

All campaign finance reform collides with the First Amendment. The effort to deny this conflict produces campaign finance laws and regulations that restrict free speech – flouting the First Amendment's spirit – without imposing binding limits on campaign contributions or spending. We have the worst of both worlds. The McCain-Feingold bill, recently passed by the Senate, would perpetuate this dubious tradition.

If it becomes law, it will be evaded – just how would depend on which parts the courts might find unconstitutional. McCain-Feingold would ban "soft money" contributions to national parties and their political committees (such as the Republican and Democratic National Committees). So more money may be channeled through nonparty groups – from the Sierra Club to the Chamber of Commerce – that will finance election activities for candidates they favor. Or we may see the rise of "shadow" political parties. If you can't make "soft money" contributions to the Democratic National Committee, you might make them to, say, a Committee to Elect a Democratic Congress (which would deny any formal party affiliation).

Given the shakiness of this assumption, courts may declare some or all of Title II unconstitutional. But if they don't, its restrictions would (of course) be evaded. Though it would restrict election ads made over radio, TV, cable or satellite, McCain-Feingold would place no limits on direct mail, phone banks, or newspaper and magazine ads. Naturally, advocacy groups would resort more to these.

In the 1920s, Prohibition's supporters regarded drink as a wellspring of evil. Now, money in politics is portrayed as a similar cesspool. Campaign contributions, it's said, aren't free speech; they're just money. The trouble is that, in an electronic age, political speech usually requires money. You can talk to me on the sidewalk for free. But you can't communicate with a mass audience without advertising, direct mail, Internet sites or phone banks.

The only way to make "campaign finance reform" effective is to amend the Constitution by reducing the First Amendment's protections for political speech. Make no mistake: I do not favor such an amendment. The arguments on its behalf are exceptionally weak.

First, campaigns are supposedly too expensive. Are they? In 2000, all spending for Congress and the White House (including money spent by nonparty advocacy groups) approached $3 billion; estimates Michael Malbin of the Campaign Finance Institute. Perhaps another $1 billion was spent on state and local elections. In a $10 trillion economy, the $4 billion is four one-hundredths of 1 percent of national income. In 2000, about 105 million people voted. This works out to about $38 a vote – not exorbitant.

Next, we're told that the rich run Washington through campaign money. Well, if they do, they're fairly inept. In 2001, the wealthiest 10 percent of Americans will pay 52 percent of federal taxes. Meanwhile, federal programs benefit mainly the middle class and the poor. In 2000, the government spent about $400 billion on Social Security, $300 billion on Medicare and Medicaid and $105 billion on "means-tested" programs for the poor (food stamps, child nutrition).

Campaign "reform" advocates won't push for a constitutional amendment, because it would compel them to concede the conflict between their "reform" and free speech – and open a debate that they would probably lose. Instead, they promote laws that are bound to be evaded and increasingly criminalize and stigmatize the very process – politics – they claim to be purifying. "Soft money" fundraisers become modern speak-easies. This approach, though good public relations, hardly commands the moral high ground.

Forests require a cautious guardian

Your recent applause at the departure of Forest Service Chief Mike Dombeck and the suspension of new regulations for mining companies on public lands show once again how, to The Times-News, everything boils down to money. Dombeck, you quote, was "a cautious guardian of about 192 million acres of national forests." What's wrong with that? Better a cautious guardian than "a friend of the timber industry." And what's wrong with "tougher environmental standards" for the mining industry? Quite frankly, what's either industry doing in my forest?

The problem with the concept of "multiple use" is that some uses exclude other uses. Some uses harm the forest to the point where other uses are no longer viable. Ever try hiking through a trampled glade piled high with cow dung? Or stumble upon a clear-cut section of a mountain where erosion has begun to erase any signs of a once-great forest? Or view the pitiful results of strip mining on a once magnificent landscape?

You're right about one thing, though. "These changes would not have occurred if Al Gore had won the election," although you should have said "won the Electoral College." With Gore, you'd have gotten "a cautious guardian." Instead, we have a "friend of the timber industry." Soon, you might not be able to see the forest for the Bush.

Who you gonna call?

Last summer, my garage and my neighbor's painted block wall adjacent to the alley were abused by "graffiti doers." Subsequently, I called the "Graffiti Busters" for help. I got a short but sweet message machine stating pertinent information they requested for your dilemma. I don't recall there being any information for me in response. I waited for a return call and checked my alley to see if they just pop by and remove your graffiti. I called three times last summer and twice this spring.

I still haven't heard or seen any results. The only way I knew this service existed was the phone book and now the newspaper. They've never returned a call or "de-graffitied" our garage and wall. Now, where are they? Who are they? Perhaps they only do businesses. That's fair. How do I know?

I've long since painted my brand new garage door and my wall is fading. My neighbor's 6-foot painted block wall still sits littered with graffiti. He's on a fixed income and definitely unable to paint his wall.

It's not so much that I want to iterate as it is to make a little noise about what's not being done. Who you gonna call?

Why the DARE program is doomed to fail

CRISPIN SARTWELL

I recently saw my 10-year-old stepson Vince "graduate" from the Drug Abuse Resistance Education program – DARE for short. He sang "one-two-three F-R-E-E" and "Talk It Out" and took a "solemn vow" to "say no to alcohol, tobacco and illegal drugs, and yes to my own self-worth."

But I don't think he is, in the end, any less likely to use drugs than when he began. What he has learned, if anything, is that the adults involved – well-intentioned although they are – don't understand drugs or children.

Taught by police officers in 75 percent of the nation's school districts, DARE is the dominant program for anti-drug education in this country. Its red diagonal logo has become ubiquitous in schools, on cars, on T-shirts.

Born in Los Angeles in the era of Nancy Reagan and "Just say no," DARE has had to weather a series of studies – including ones by the surgeon general and the National Academy of Sciences – that suggest it is completely ineffective.

As a recovering drug addict, I didn't need the studies. The DARE program has only one idea of the cause of drug use: "peer pressure." And it has only one approach to dealing with it: screwing up your resolve to say "no." And it has only one sort of person telling you how and why to do this: police officers.

So what's wrong with this approach? If you have ever been a serious drug abuser, you understand. It's true that "peer pressure" can be the occasion for people to try drugs. Certainly, if no one around you has any drugs, you won't be trying them. And when your friends are doing drugs, it goes very quickly from seeming impossible or worthless to seeming something like normal.

Drug abuse can also create a kind of small-group solidarity in which the cool people who use drugs are opposed to the straights or cowards who do not. But the situation is one of complicated inclusions and exclusions, of membership and identification, of finding a cultural zone in which you feel comfortable.

Implicit in the DARE program is a condescending view of young people, according to which young people are incredibly easy to manipulate. The approach is exclusively slogans, posters, songs chanted in unison, pledges of loyalty and so on. Any self-respecting young person ought to rebel against that sort of thing.

The "peer pressure" approach is generated by people who really don't understand what drugs are for. The reason you do drugs is because you like the way they make you feel.

Drugs are not a flight from external reality; they are a flight from oneself. The use of drugs is about altering one's conscious state. If you are happy with an unaltered conscious state and are doing drugs simply because of peer pressure, you will never be a drug addict. But if you hate who or what you are, if you hate the noise in your head, then when you discover drugs you will feel like Columbus stumbling over America.

In addition, teen-agers try drugs in a spirit of adventure and exploration. That's something that leads young people to take all sorts of risks. Our role as people trying to raise kids is to help them try to survive the experimentation, not to prohibit it completely.

If you want to save kids who could eventually be addicts, impress upon them that despite their pleasurable effects, drugs can break their lives. In the long run they make the problems they seem to ameliorate worse.

The people most likely to be able to communicate these ideas effectively are former drug users, adults who can speak honestly, realistically, and with knowledge on the subject.

If the DARE program would actually educate in an interchange with kids rather than merely subject them to propaganda, catechisms and loyalty pledges, it would have a better chance of making a difference. If it would recognize that children are capable of making their own choices, and that they will, that would help, too. But as it stands now, it seems to have little hope of influencing anyone in any meaningful way.

Drug-makers' offers bring help to few of Africa's HIV-infected

Money, cultural differences keep most of the millions away from treatment

ABIDJAN, Ivory Coast (AP) – Across sub-Saharan Africa, six countries have struck deals with major Western drug-makers that will let them provide HIV treatment at a couple dollars a day per patient.

Yet the accords are expected to provide the life-saving drugs for only a few thousand people, out of the 26 million HIV-infected people across the region.

Even at cut rates, HIV drugs remain far beyond the monthly minimum wage in much of the region.

All of the participating nations already have programs in place, but say they can afford to provide treatment for only 1 or 2 percent of their HIV-positive patients. Few governments have made it a budget priority.

For the millions of Africans to whom even the increasingly low-cost treatment is still out of reach, suffering and dying – without proper treatment or even diagnosis – remains the only affordable option.

"People don't want to take the test, because they know if they test positive" there is no medicine for them, said Dr. Aliou Sylla, who works with HIV patients in the arid West African nation of Mali, one of the latest countries to announce an accord.

"They prefer not to know rather than to live in anguish all their lives," Sylla said.

Drug companies' cost cuts for Africa have come increasingly quickly in the last two years amid growing international pressure to make HIV treatment more affordable on the continent that needs it most.

Competition from generic drug-makers is helping drive down costs as well.

The drug companies announced their cost-cutting offer more than a year ago.

Mali and Cameroon last weekend became the fifth and sixth African nations for which accords were disclosed.

Agreements were confirmed late last year and early this year for Senegal, Ivory Coast, Uganda and Rwanda.

"There's quite a few lined up behind them," said Bob Laverty, spokesman for Bristol-Myers Squibb, a prominent company in the accords. "Things are moving quickly now."

Companies offering the low-cost HIV drugs for Africa include Bristol-Myers Squibb, GlaxoSmith Kline, Boehringer-Ingelheim and Merck and Co.

And the drugs are low cost: Prices for a year's three-drug therapy for each HIV patient will range from $700, down from $7,000, in Senegal, to $1,020, down from $5,820, in Mali.

The same therapy would cost tens of thousands of dollars in the United States.

With pressure building on drug-makers, some major companies since have announced even further cost concessions for Africa.

The newest proposals are to provide drugs at cost or below, or, in South Africa, waiving patent rights to clear the way for their cheaper, generic competitors.

AIDS programs in Ivory Coast and elsewhere hope for vast increases in future patient care out of the newest offers.

With the earlier negotiated deals, the price breaks, significant as they are, will make a difference only to a tiny fraction of the continent's HIV infected.

Twins start long recovery after surgery

SINGAPORE (AP) – Tiny Ganga Shrestha, though heavily sedated, blinks her eyes when you call her name and responds to touch 24 hours after a long, dangerous operation to separate her brain from her twin sister's.

Both strong-willed Ganga and her more bashful sister Jamuna were doing relatively well but were still in critical condition Wednesday after their 96-hour ordeal in the operating room, Singapore General Hospital spokeswoman Ho Lai Fung told The Associated Press.

I Have To Pay For Your Education?

"Alexandra, you're looking lovely. Considering the terrible ordeal you're going through."

David ushered his client into the boardroom of his law office. Once they were settled, he turned to his client. She was sitting stiffly at the table, ready for battle.

"Now, Alexandra, I know how angry you are with Tim and the divorce, AND the other woman. But if you want more money, use your charm. You won't get far with those 'drop dead' vibes you're sending out."

David's secretary ushered in Tim and his lawyer. Alexandra ignored her lawyer's advice and lashed out. "Late as usual, Tim. I bet you're never late for you-know-who."

Her lawyer whispered in her ear. "Cool it, Alexandra, or you'll get nothing."

Tim ignored the outburst and calmly sat down while his lawyer opened up his file. "David, your client is absolutely ridiculous in her demands. In addition to the alimony and child support, she's asking for rehabilitative alimony – four years of college tuition..."

But he was interrupted. This time it was Tim's turn to strike out.

"Alexandra, you were always greedy. Now you've become a horror."

Tim's lawyer pulled him down and whispered in his ear. "Tim, you're not listening. She's hurt and desperate. Sweet talk her or you'll come out of here a poor man." But it was beyond the point of sweet-talking. Alexandra jumped to her feet.

"Tim Burton, my sweet little ex, you are a hot shot lawyer in a famous international law office. You're making a fortune. Plus you've got a woman half your age. You have everything. All I want is a chance to go back to school to upgrade my job skills."

Tim jumped to his feet.

"Upgrade your skills?!!" he snorted. "You just want to empty my wallet! And stare at young college boys, I bet. You'll end up with some degree in sheep herding and I'll end up minus eighty grand." He got up and stormed out the door, his lawyer in tow. "You'll see me in court, Alexandra. I'm not giving you an extra penny."

In court, the judge ordered Tim to pay Alexandra everything she asked for. Tim appealed. In a bid for sympathy, Tim came to court in his worst designer suit.

"Your Honor, Alexandra is being unfair. I already pay alimony and child support. And now I have to pay tuition? College is expensive. I'm not going to have anything left!" He discreetly checked the time on his gold watch. Alexandra stormed to her feet.

"Your Honor, Tim is being selfish. He pays so little alimony that I need a job to support myself. I was a housewife for so long, I have no skills. College is my only way out. I need Tim's money to do it. Please, Your Honor, I need this chance for a better future."

Should Alexandra get the extra money?

Israelis flatten refugee camp, begin talks

JERUSALEM (AP) – Israeli and Palestinian security chiefs met Wednesday in a U.S.-sponsored effort to reduce violence, Palestinian officials said, hours after Israeli tanks rumbled into a refugee camp and reduced a neighborhood to rubble – the first such foray into Palestinian territory during seven months of violence.

The U.S. administration is reluctant to help broker peace talks before violence ends, but U.S. mediators stepped in after the latest flare-up to arrange the meeting between Israeli and Palestinian security commanders, with participation of U.S. diplomats and CIA officials.

The Palestinians initially said they hesitated to attend the talks, following the Israeli assault with tanks and bulldozers on a neighborhood in the Khan Yunis refugee camp in the Gaza Strip. Israel said the pre-dawn raid was in response to mortar fire.

Two Palestinians were killed, more than two dozen wounded and 30 homes razed or heavily damaged in the raid that left hundreds of people homeless, according to Palestinian officials. The Israeli troops came under heavy return fire from dozens of Palestinian policemen and gunmen, witnesses said.

At daybreak, two camp residents with hoes tore into the rubble, retrieving blankets and pillows.

Economic troubles spark Turkey protests

ANKARA, Turkey (AP) – Police with nightsticks and water cannons battled stone-throwing protesters in the capital Wednesday as more than 130,000 protesters in several Turkish cities rallied against the government amid a financial crisis.

Prime Minister Bulent Ecevit rejected demands that his government resign over its handling of the crisis. Wednesday's protests were the largest since the lira began plummeting in February, leading to a half million layoffs.

In the capital Ankara, police fired hundreds of shots into the air and used water cannons and tear gas to disperse a crowd of 70,000 after demonstrators threw stones, bricks, and pieces of wood at police and journalists. The protesters were trying to walk to the parliament building.

Demonstrators smashed the windows of cars, shops, banks and government offices as they fled from nightstick-wielding police. Officials said 202 people were injured in the protests, including 137 policemen and more than a dozen news reporters. Police detained 100 people.

At least 40,000 people marched in the Aegean port city of Izmir, where shopkeepers refused to open their shops, and 20,000 people marched through the central Anatolian city of Konya. In the southern cities of Gaziantep and Mersin, protesters set fire to photocopies of U.S. dollars.

RISING STARS
High School Sports

John Shetler
Filer golf

FILER – With a little help from his friends, Filer junior John Shetler is fast becoming one of the best high school golfers in the Magic Valley.

Shetler and seniors Nate Stinson and Travis Hofland form the core of perhaps the best and deepest boys' golf team in school history. The trio practices from the time school lets out until dusk falls and the hard work is paying off in the form of individual medalists and low team scores.

"They kind of feed off each other," Filer coach Dennis Mai said. "If one's having a bad day, then the others try to lift that person up and play better."

Shetler shot 31 for top honors at the Declo Invitational earlier in the year and finished fifth at the Canyon Springs tourney after shooting 80. At Friday's Jerome Invitational, the state's largest high school tournament, Shetler dropped in his second career hole in one and first ever in a tournament.

"The hole in one was a highlight for me so far," Shetler said. "But I shot a 1-over that day so the guys were getting on me a little bit."

The friendly competition and immense talent among Filer's team has made the Wildcats a contender for the Class A-2 state crown. Each golfer brings a different element to the team. For Shetler it's a great desire to succeed. He started golfing when he was 13 and finished ninth at the state junior golf tournament as a 14-year-old.

"Every year he matures," Mai said. "He struggled with his mental attitude last year but he's come a long way in that respect. On a good day he can shoot a very low score. When's he's a senior, I think his good days will come even more often."

Annie McCauley
Buhl track and field

BUHL – Buhl junior Annie McCauley doesn't mind running with the boys' track team.

She has to, they're her only competition.

The four-event athlete is a standout on a Lady Indians track team too small to field a relay team. McCauley finished first in the long jump, the 200- and 400-meters and tied for first in the 100-meters at the Angie Wyatt Invitational April 4.

"I prefer to think I'm running against the clock," McCauley said. "That's my competition."

As a freshman, McCauley broke Buhl's school record in the 100 and placed eighth in the 100 and sixth in the 200 at the A-2 state meet. This year, she's already tied the school's 23-year-old mark in the 400 and her personal best long jump of 17 feet, 4.5 inches at the Wyatt Invite would have easily won the state meet last season.

"She's certainly our star," said Buhl coach Tom Chivers. "I think she has an outside chance to win the 100 at the state meet and that's probably her weakest event."

While setting school records is nice, McCauley said she has her sights set on bigger numbers. She hopes to run the 400 in 58 seconds by her senior year and thinks she can reach 18 feet in the long jump.

"I want to take state in the 400 and the long jump," McCauley said. "And hopefully I can do it in the 100 and 200 to. The school records aren't really something that I think about."

After her early season performances, McCauley's best event might be the 400. The grueling sprint seems perfectly suited for her natural speed and work ethic.

"She came into the season in shape after playing soccer and basketball," Chivers said. "But don't let that fool you. You don't coach speed."

Tribe looks to repeat at Mid-Season Classic

By Kevin Hall
Times-News sports editor

Schedule – B3

BUHL – It must be the halfway point of the high school baseball season.

The sixth annual Buhl Mid-Season Classic launches Friday with the defending champion Indians hosting seven other teams in the two-day tournament at both Clint Faux Memorial Field in Buhl and Harmon Park in Twin Falls.

Besides the usual jaw-clenching action and exciting fare, the tournament welcomes two first-timers to the fray. Burley's junior varsity makes its debut along with Class A-3 Firth. Both teams will be on Buhl's side of the bracket along with one-time champion Bear Lake. The Tribe, who have played in the championship game every year and won it three times, defeated Bear Lake for last year's crown.

Also playing this weekend are the Twin Falls Juniors, who are joined by Filer, Middleton and Sugar-Salem to form Group 2.

Buhl coach Gary Krumm said he expects a competitive tournament, especially facing the Bears at 12:15 Friday.

"They're always tough. We've kind of built a rivalry with them through the tournament, Legion and football," Krumm said. "They're always good and well-coached."

Krumm thinks Buhl's bracket is probably the stronger of the two, but he said each presents a challenge.

I think definitely our pod is the toughest," he said. "Firth is kind of an unknown but with their football past, they're athletic. And of course anytime you have an A-1 varsity (Burley) playing, you know they'll be tough to stop."

Twin Falls heads up Group 2 with A-2 state runner-up Middleton, an improved Filer and the darkhorse Diggers rounding out the field.

"Who knows who's coming out of there," Krumm said. "Middleton will be one of the favorites and Sugar-Salem is good too. I expect (Twin Falls coach Matt) Rasmussen to put together a good junior team and Filer is better than they have been in the past."

Senior slugger T.J. Cline heads the Buhl battalion hitting an outlandish .680 (17-for-25) with six home runs and 21 RBIs through Buhl's 9-1 start to the season. Clean-up hitter Sean Van Elderen is batting .464 and No. 5 Cody Chandler is swinging at a .500 clip.

DALLAS – Jamie Langenbrunner scored off his own long rebound 2:18 into overtime as the Dallas Stars continued their domination of the Edmonton Oilers with a 2-1 victory Wednesday night in a first-round playoff game.

Langenbrunner fired at Tommy Salo at the edge of the left circle, then got the puck back a few feet away barely inside the right circle and knocked it in for Dallas' 13th straight victory over Edmonton at Reunion Arena.

Mike Modano also scored for the Stars, who came into the postseason on a 13-game unbeaten streak. Dallas improved to 25-4-2 against the Oilers the last four seasons.

The Western Conference series doesn't resume until Saturday, then again Sunday in Edmonton.

Dallas, seeking to become the first team to make three straight Stanley Cup finals since the Wayne Gretzky-led Oilers of 1983-85, has eliminated Edmonton from the last three playoffs. This is the fifth straight year the teams are meeting in the postseason.

The Oilers led 1-0 in the second period on a rebound goal by Ryan Smyth. Soon after, they had a 4-on-3 power play for 1 minute, 44 seconds but got off only one shot, mostly against Modano, Derian Hatcher and Richard Matvichuk.

Dallas appeared to have tied it a few minutes later on a blast by Brad Lukowich, but Brett Hull took out goalie Tommy Salo as the puck arrived. The interference nullified the shot.

Then the Stars went on a power play and Modano fired in a one-timer with 1:46 left in the second off a crisp pass from Darryl Sydor. Modano nearly scored again as the period ended.

Dallas has won 13 of 15 playoff games against the Oilers the last four years, all with Belfour. Andy Moog was in net when the Stars lost the 1996 series.

Examiner issues new Earnhardt report

Seat belt wasn't at fault

The Associated Press

CHARLOTTE, N.C. – The maker of the seat belt used in Dale Earnhardt's car says a new medical report exonerates his company in the racing great's death.

Bill Simpson, founder and chairman of Simpson Performance Products, said the medical report prepared for the Orlando Sentinel proved what he knew all along – that a broken seat belt did not cause Earnhardt's fatal injuries.

"That report is total vindication in my mind," Simpson said Wednesday from Indianapolis, where he is participating in a safety seminar. "Since NASCAR said a belt broke, it's been total hell for me, so naturally the report made me feel pretty good."

Simpson said at least one racing team has dropped the company as a supplier, and that angry racing fans have sent him death and bomb threats.

Simpson learned Tuesday that a court-appointed medical examiner who studied Earnhardt's autopsy photos found that the seven-time Winston Cup champion was killed Feb. 18 when his head whipped violently forward in the when his car hit a wall going 150 mph on the final lap of the season-opening Daytona 500.

"NASCAR has made clear that we will not suggest or speculate on the circumstances surrounding Dale Earnhardt's accident until our study is complete," president Mike Helton said. "No one at NASCAR has ever suggested what may have happened in this accident other than to say in our preliminary investigation we found issues of concern involving the occupant restraint system."

But by saying – five days after the accident – that the belt broke, the perception was created that it caused Earnhardt's death.

Simpson said NASCAR's announcement was premature, especially in light of its announcement this week that its ongoing investigation into the wreck won't be completed until August.

"I don't think they thought about what they were doing before they announced the seat belt had broken," Simpson said. "It wasn't handled correctly."

McGwire ends slump with homer

The Associated Press

ST. LOUIS – Mark McGwire ended an 0-for-12 season-opening slump with an opposite-field home run, helping the St. Louis Cardinals beat the Colorado Rockies 3-1 Wednesday night.

MLB

Pedro Astacio (1-1) retired 11 batters in a row before McGwire lined a 1-2 pitch over the right-field wall for his 555th career homer, putting the Cardinals ahead 3-1.

Matt Morris (1-1) won his first game as a starter since September 1998, allowing one run and six hits in seven innings. Dave Veres struck out his two batters for his first save.

St. Louis has won five straight since going 0-3 during a season-opening series at Colorado and the Rockies have lost five in a row.

Braves 2, Mets 0

NEW YORK – Greg Maddux (2-0) was nearly perfect for seven innings, combining with a pair of relievers on a one-hitter.

The Mets wound up with only one runner against Maddux, Mike Remlinger and John Rocker. Todd Zeile lined a single barely beyond the reach of second baseman Quilvio Veras with one out in the second.

Rafael Furcal's RBI double in the third gave Maddux and the Braves all the offense they needed. Chipper Jones' 21st career homer against the Mets provided an insurance run in the seventh.

Rick Reed (1-1) lost despite a four-hitter.

Olympic champion to auction gold medal

The Associated Press

NEW YORK – The gold medal that hung from the neck of Tommie Smith when he raised his fist in a black-power salute at the 1968 Olympics is on the auction block, with a starting bid of a half-million dollars.

Smith, the 1968 Olympic 200-meter winner, has put the medal and many of his other mementos up for sale.

Among the 20 items, the gold medal is by far the most expensive, with a minimum bid of $500,000.

Smith, the men's track and field and cross country coach at Santa Monica (Calif.) College for the past 23 years, insists that he is not conducting the auction for financial reasons.

"It's not to make money," he said. "I thought somebody might want it more than me. I thought it might be nice for someone to hold it who didn't win it.

"It's been in my trophy case for so many years. I've been smiling at it every day. It's tired of where it is."

Lady Spartans win, boys place second at Highland

The Times-News

POCATELLO – Led by Samantha Stanger with a 39, the Minico Spartans girls' golf team beat Shelley, Ririe and Rigby at Jefferson Hills Golf Course in Rigby Wednesday.

The Minico boys placed second to powerhouse Shelley, who were led by medalist Nick Higham's 68. Bud Jensen shot 72 for the Spartans, who finished 29 shots back of Shelley 293-322.

"I'm real happy with the girls," Minico coach Kelly Arritt said. "The boys still got to come down, but that's a little lower than what we did at Jerome last week."

Minico joins Twin Falls, Pocatello and Highland for a Region III clash at Highland Golf Course on Wednesday.

Pacers wrap up final playoff spot

NBA

INDIANAPOLIS – Jalen Rose scored 25 points and Reggie Miller added 24 – including seven 3-pointers – as Indiana clinched the Eastern Conference's final playoff spot with a 100- 93 win.

The Pacers, who matched their season-high with 14 3-pointers, won their fifth straight and their ninth in a row at home. The victory, coupled with Boston's 102-97 loss to Miami, assured the Pacers of an opportunity to defend their Eastern Conference title in the playoffs.

Kurt Thomas had 22 points and 10 rebounds to lead the Knicks. Latrell Sprewell and Mark Jackson each had 15 points.

Bulls 113, Wizards 109

WASHINGTON – The Chicago Bulls ended a franchise-record 25-game road losing streak Wednesday night with a 113-109 victory over the Washington Wizards.

The Bulls won on the road for the first time since a 104-86 win at Boston on Dec. 13. Chicago is 3-36 on the road all season, its only other victory away from the United Center coming at Atlanta on Nov. 30.

Elton Brand had 26 points and 11 rebounds and thwarted the Wizards' last chance by intercepting an inbounds pass with three seconds left.

Heat 102, Celtics 97

BOSTON – Alonzo Mourning had 21 points and nine rebounds and Tim Hardaway hit a pair of 3-pointers in the final minutes as Miami won its fifth straight game and pulled within a game of idle Milwaukee in the Eastern Conference standings.

Boston's loss, combined with Indiana's 100-93 victory over New York, eliminated the Celtics from playoff contention.

Paul Pierce scored 41 points and Antoine Walker had 29 and nine rebounds for Boston.

Pistons 99, Raptors 87

AUBURN HILLS, Mich. – Jerry Stackhouse scored 20 of his 35 points in the fourth quarter as Detroit won for the sixth time in seven games.

The Pistons, who entered the game with a 2-34 record when trailing at halftime, overcame a 17-point deficit.

Toronto had its four-game winning streak snapped, and lost for the second time in three games against Detroit this season.

Vince Carter led Toronto with 22 points, and Alvin Williams had 15 points and 11 assists.

Hawks 107, Cavaliers 102

ATLANTA – Jason Terry scored 38 points and Nazr Mohammed added a career-high 24 as Atlanta took control with a 24-4 run in the second half and snapped a three-game losing streak.

Atlanta, trailing 80-69 with 3:46 left in the third period, outscored the Cavaliers 11-2 the rest of the quarter and starting off the fourth with a 13-2 spurt that culminated with Mohammed's lay-in after a steal by DerMarr Johnson.

SPORTS IN BRIEF

Muni men tee off twilight golf today

TWIN FALLS – Men's twilight golf begins at Twin Falls Municipal Golf Course today at 6 p.m. Spots are still available for this and the upcoming golf academy, which starts today and Friday from 5:30-7:30 p.m. For more information on course activities, call 733-3326.

Muni Ladies hold golf scramble

TWIN FALLS – The Twin Falls Ladies' Golf Association will meet today. Results from the April 5 golf event saw Patty Lee win over Barbara Firth, Doreen Vanable, Swede Jones and Betty Hawkins in first flight.

Maryann Lancaster won second flight over Joan Tugaw, Christy Bush and Sondra Hill.

Griese signs 6-year deal with Denver

DENVER – Brian Griese, who emerged last season as one of the NFL's best young quarterbacks, agreed Wednesday to a new six-year contract with the Denver Broncos.

Griese threw for 2,688 yards with 19 touchdowns and four interceptions in 10 games last season and led the NFL with a quarterback rating of 102.9. He missed six of Denver's final seven games, including their playoff loss in Baltimore with a separated right shoulder and had reconstructive surgery on Jan. 10.

Reports put the deal at around $42 million.

Pirates sign Ramon Martinez for one year

PITTSBURGH – Right-hander Ramon Martinez signed a one-year contract with the Pittsburgh Pirates on Wednesday with an option for a second season.

Martinez, 33, was widely expected to join the Pirates, who had their starting rotation decimated by injuries during spring training.

Martinez, the older brother of Boston ace Pedro Martinez, went 10-8 with a 6.13 ERA in 27 starts for the Red Sox last season. He spent a month on the disabled list with a bruised right knee.

He was released by Boston after the season and went to spring training with his former team, the Los Angeles Dodgers, before being granted free agency on March 28.

Kaufman retires from football for ministry

OAKLAND, Calif. – Napoleon Kaufman, the Oakland Raiders' backup running back last season, retired from football Wednesday to devote his energies to his ministry.

In a brief statement released by his agent, Cameron Foster, Kaufman ended his six-year career with the Raiders, who drafted him out of Washington in 1995 with the 18th overall pick.

Kaufman, 27, rushed for 499 yards on a career-low 93 carries as Tyrone Wheatley's backup last season. He also had 127 yards receiving while battling leg injuries that caused him to miss two games and limited his play in others.

Smith

Smith and his wife, Delois Jordan-Smith, did not want to part with the medal or the other treasures he has kept over the years. However, they were outvoted by his five children.

After being swayed, Smith and his wife, who also is his agent, opened a Web site last September featuring an auction in which the gold medal is listed.

Smith said he doesn't expect the medal to sell because of its high price. His wife has received some inquiries about the medal, but so far there have been no takers.

Smith won the gold by running the 200 meters in 19.83 seconds, a world record that stood for 11 years. On the victory stand during the playing of "The Star-Spangled Banner," Smith thrust his gloved right fist into the air, while bronze medalist John Carlos raised his black-gloved left fist.

The protest came at the height of the black-power and anti-war movements in the United States and so enraged Olympic authorities that Smith and Carlos were ordered out of the athletes' village and sent home.

Buhl

Though hitting will be important, Krumm said pitching is the key to this year's championship.

"The whole key to this tournament is pitching," he said. "Getting the right guy and the right game together."

Pitchers have a seven-inning limit per day with each team playing two pod games Friday, and another on Saturday before entering championship play later Saturday.

Krumm is counting on the young arms of Ryan Wagner and Tim Bourner to get the Indians through Friday before going to ace Seth Matthews (2-0, 3.09 ERA) and No. 2 Jeff Walker (3-0, 2.00 ERA) on Saturday.

"Everybody's in the same boat," he said. "Every coach is trying to come through this the same with their pitchers. We're excited, it's a midseason checkpoint for all of us."

Games begin at 10 a.m. each day with Saturday's championship scheduled for 4:45 p.m. in Buhl.

Astros 7, Brewers 1

MILWAUKEE – Wade Miller (2-0) pitched a three-hitter and struck out 12, and Houston won its fifth straight over Milwaukee.

Ben Sheets (0-2), the Olympic hero who lost 8-2 to Miller and the Astros in his major league debut last week, allowed three runs and seven hits in six innings, striking out six.

Cubs 4, Expos 2

MONTREAL – Julian Tavarez (2-0) allowed six hits in seven innings and Eric Young had two RBIs in the final regular-season meeting between the teams.

Chicago made it 3-0 in the fifth on Tavarez's run-scoring bunt and Young's RBI single. Jeff Fassero pitched a perfect ninth for his fourth save.

Pirates 6, Reds 5

PITTSBURGH – Kevin Young's RBI double finished off a two-run, seventh-inning rally aided by John Riedling's three wild pitches. The Pirates won for the first time in PNC Park, where they lost the stadium opener to Cincinnati 8-2 Monday.

Jose Silva (1-0) pitched two scoreless innings for the victory while Riedling (0-1) lost.

Marlins-Phillies game rained out

PHILADELPHIA – The Florida Marlins-Philadelphia Phillies game was rained out Wednesday night.

The game was called after a delay of 1 hour, 34 minutes. It will be made up as part of a twinight doubleheader June 28.

American League

Yankees 8, Royals 5

KANSAS CITY, Mo. – Alfonso Soriano and Paul O'Neill had three RBIs apiece as the New York Yankees completed a sweep of the six-game season series against Kansas City with an 8-5 win Wednesday.

Brian Meadows (0-2) gave up five runs and eight hits in six innings. Kansas City stranded 15 runners in the game, two short of its team record.

White Sox 7, Indians 6

CHICAGO – Jose Valentin and Tony Graffanino homered as Chicago built a 7-1 lead.

Chicago starter Cal Eldred had to leave the game after two innings with pain in his surgically repaired right elbow.

Sean Lowe (1-0) allowed just one hit in three innings, and Keith Foulke pitched the ninth for his third save. Dave Burba (0-1) gave up six runs and seven hits in 3 2-3 innings.

Orioles 5, Red Sox 4

BOSTON – Last in the majors with a .170 batting average entering the game, Baltimore scored four runs in the first. Boston's starters allowed just eight runs in the team's first seven games.

Willis Roberts (1-0) allowed two hits in four shutout innings and struck out seven. Frank Castillo (0-1) gave up four runs and seven hits in 3 2-3 innings.

Devil Rays 4, Blue Jays 3

TORONTO – John Flaherty hit a tiebreaking RBI double in the off Billy Koch (0-1) in the ninth inning as Tampa Bay stopped a seven-game losing streak.

Tampa Bay closer Esteban Yan (1-0) pitched 1 2-3 innings for the win.

Twins 12, Tigers 1

MINNEAPOLIS – Luis Rivas, Tom Prince and Cristian Guzman homered as first-place Minnesota kept up its unexpected power surge and swept Detroit.

The Twins (6-2), who have won all five games against Detroit this season, are two games ahead of the Chicago White Sox in the AL Central. Joe Mays (2-0) allowed one run and four hits in eight innings.

NHL

Sabres 2, Flyers 1

PHILADELPHIA – Dominik Hasek stopped 31 shots – including Mark Recchi's first-period penalty shot – as the Buffalo Sabres beat the Philadelphia Flyers 2-1 Wednesday night in Game 1 of the Eastern Conference quarterfinals.

Roman Cechmanek, who allowed just two goals on 102 shots in a four-game sweep of Buffalo during the regular season, gave up soft goals to Chris Gratton and Doug Gilmour in the first period. He made 21 saves.

Eric Desjardins scored the only goal for the Flyers, who are playing the Sabres in the playoffs for the fifth time in seven years. Philadelphia won three of the previous four series.

Red Wings 5, Kings 3

DETROIT – Detroit beat Los Angeles without captain Steve Yzerman, who missed most of the playoff opener because of a sore leg.

Brendan Shanahan scored twice for the Red Wings, who had a 3-0 first-period lead after their first nine shots in the Western Conference quarterfinals.

The Red Wings haven't lost a first-round playoff game in two years. Detroit is unbeaten in 20 home games overall, dating to the regular season.

The Kings have not won a playoff game since the 1993 Stanley Cup finals and have lost 13 straight postseason games, including a four-game sweep by Detroit last year.

Yzerman was only able to play 5 minutes, 58 seconds of the first period.

Prosecutor calls for grand jury members

TWIN FALLS – The Twin Falls County prosecutor today will choose the next round of jurors to sit on a standing grand jury the county has used for nearly five years.

The summoning – which starts at 9 a.m. in the judicial annex of the Twin Falls County Courthouse – is for a routine replacement of jurors, said Prosecutor Grant Loebs. Grand jurors must be registered voters and residents of Twin Falls County and be willing to serve four-month terms, he said.

Loebs said the grand jury has been in place since July 1997. He said he has used the grand jury to consider a number of cases, including murder, drug crimes, child abuse and white collar crime.

Cases that go before a grand jury are closed to the public, Loebs said. A case does not become public unless and until the grand jury hands down an indictment and the case is moved to District Court, he said.

Loebs says he favors the use of the grand jury in cases where possible witnesses, especially children, have been traumatized. The grand jury might also be asked to consider other sensitive cases, he said.

Chamber brings lobbyist to legislative breakfast

TWIN FALLS – Idaho Association of Business and Industry lobbyist Brent Olmstead will be the speaker at the Twin Falls Area Chamber of Commerce's legislative wrap-up breakfast today at Cavanaugh's Canyon Springs Hotel, 1357 Blue Lakes Blvd. N.

The gathering will begin at 7 a.m. include a discussion of the chamber's legislative agenda for the 2001 session, and how those measures fared in Boise this winter.

Lawmakers also will be on hand to discuss their thoughts on the session.

The gathering is expected to wrap up by 8:30 a.m. at the latest.

Community Watch meets at courthouse tonight

TWIN FALLS – Val Stots, coordinator of the Ike Kistler Safe House, will speak at the monthly Community Watch meeting at 7 tonight in the community room at the Twin Falls County Courthouse.

The public is invited to attend the meeting and should enter the courthouse through the north entrance.

The evening will also include a short business meeting to discuss current court cases.

Those interested in finding out more about Community Watch can call Barbara Powers at 734-4014 or Deb Kelley 733-3947.

Canal Co. seeks helpers to clean ditch banks

TWIN FALLS – The Twin Falls Canal Co. is looking for volunteers – groups or individuals – to help clean ditch banks in Twin Falls before Monday.

Descriptions and maps of the areas are available at the canal company office. The canal company also will provide garbage bags and disposal.

To volunteer or suggest areas that need cleaning, call Joe at 733-6731.

Ketchum prepares to raise parking violation fines

KETCHUM – Steeper fines for multiple parking violations, designed to help free up two-hour spaces for customers of downtown businesses, take effect Sunday.

The first infraction will prompt a warning, followed by fines of $10, $20 and $40 for the second, third and fourth infractions.

For a fifth violation, when four or more citations are unpaid inside a 12-month period, and one of the tickets is delinquent by 90 days or more, a vehicle will be towed. It will cost the owner $90 plus administrative fees and payment of all unpaid parking tickets before the vehicle will be returned.

Previously, the city's two-hour parking citations carried $10 fines.

'A hideous drug'

KIRSTEN SHULTZ/The Times-News

Gov. Dirk Kempthorne calls methamphetamine a 'hideous drug' at the opening of a three-day conference called 'After the Bust: Responding to Meth Lab Victims' Wednesday in Sun Valley.

Governor decries Idaho's meth problem

By Pat Murphy
Times-News correspondent

SUN VALLEY – Characterizing the spreading use of home-brewed methamphetamine as Idaho's biggest illegal drug problem, Gov. Dirk Kempthorne kicked off a three-day workshop here with a grim and gripping perspective of the deadly concoction's toll.

"Meth is a hideous drug," Kempthorne said, "and a serious threat to society, to law enforcement, to themselves (users) and to their children."

Kempthorne admittedly was preaching to the choir of some 100 investigators, prosecutors, hazardous waste disposal experts and social service workers from throughout Idaho, the District of Columbia and six other states who are meeting at the Sun Valley Inn to share strategies for dealing with emerging major issues: children caught up in meth families and how to pay for the costly cleanup of deadly toxic waste of meth labs.

"Never have I seen such squalor and filth," Kempthorne said of a meth house he toured after a raid by police. "Children eat, breathe and sleep where toxic chemicals" are scattered during the brewing of the drug.

The consequences to children of the meth epidemic is especially pitiable, the governor said. If meth users don't abandon their children, then they abuse them through savage neglect – poor nutrition at home, poor hygiene and inattention to their schooling. Some children are even left brain-damaged by exposure to the drug being brewed and used by their parents.

Of the 500 women incarcerated in Idaho prisons, many are meth addicts who've left behind their children, the governor said.

Meth is easily produced from household chemicals and asthma

After the Bust: Responding to Meth Lab Victims

The three-day conference featuring experts discussing child victims of methamphetamine labs and the toxic environmental aftermath of police raids continues until noon Friday at the Sun Valley Inn in Sun Valley.

The cost is $35 for the entire conference, but fees will be waived for those who would like to attend just one or two sessions.

Latest crime statistics send mixed messages for TF area

By Mark Heinz
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS – Early figures indicate that violent crime declined in the Magic Valley last year, but Twin Falls' police chief says burglaries and other thefts were apparently a growing problem in his city during 2000.

Yet in Twin Falls County, burglaries fell by nearly half between 1999 and 2000, according to numbers recently released by the Idaho State Police uniform crime reporting unit.

2000 was also the first murder-free year in all of Twin Falls County for at least five years, according to reports.

A statewide crime statistics report won't be fully compiled and ready for publication for a number of weeks, an officer at the ISP crime reporting unit said Wednesday. Many of the Magic Valley law enforcement agencies contacted Wednesday by The Times-News said they hadn't yet received crime reports for their jurisdictions.

But some agencies have obtained early drafts of their reports, Twin Falls police chief Lee DeVore said. The Times-News got draft reports from the Twin Falls Police Department, the Twin Falls County Sheriff's Office and the Filer Police Department. Figures dating back to 1995 for Twin Falls city and county were also obtained Wednesday.

The numbers for 2000 don't reveal anything shocking, DeVore, Twin Falls County Sheriff Wayne Tousley and Filer police chief Cliff Johnson agreed.

"Basically, we're down in just about all areas," Johnson said.

One of the most dramatic changes was a drop in burglaries in Twin Falls County, Tousley said.

There were 101 breaking-and-entering burglaries reported in Wendell schools to apply for state grant

By Gina Mulder
Times-News correspondent

WENDELL – Wendell school district leaders are hoping to tap into a $10 million state grant program to help pay for a new middle school.

The School Board Wednesday approved a resolution that would ask Wendell taxpayers to approve a 20-year, $4.6 million plant facilities levy and approved an application to the state treasury for a $1.5 million grant from the state's school plant facilities reserve fund.

The $1.5 million grant would be used to pay the interest on the $4.6 facilities levy. The total project cost adds up to $6.1 million, the same amount of the bond issue election voters said no to in October 2000.

Facilities committee representative Steve Howerton said the committee decided to pursue the state grant to lower the amount needed from Wendell taxpayers. The grant program was recently established by the Idaho Legislature to lend a financial hand to qualifying school districts that don't have the resources to resolve unsafe or unhealthy conditions.

"I think we're on the right track here," Howerton said. "Compared to the $6.1 million

Meeting

A public meeting to discuss the $4.6 million plant facilities levy and a $1.5 million state grant application to build a new middle school will be held at 7:30 p.m. April 30 at the Wendell High School auditorium. The $4.6 million plant facilities levy election will be held May 22 at the Wendell Middle and High schools.

Expect second-worst water year on record

The Times-News and The Associated Press

TWIN FALLS – This year won't be the worst water year in Idaho – just second-worst.

Following a long-running tradition, the state's Water Supply Committee met on a wet, snowy day in Boise Wednesday to look at just how bad this year's water supply will be this year.

The question is not whether there will be water shortages this year, but when they will hit, Department of Water Resources spokesman Dick Larsen said.

And that largely depends on the weather – more days like Wednesday would delay the start of the irrigation season.

"The later it can start, the longer in the summer (the water supply) will last," said Ron Abramovich, hydrologist with the Natural Resources Conservation Service's Snow Survey in Boise.

Abramovich and officials from the National Weather Service, the U.S. Bureau of Reclamation, U.S. Geological Survey and Idaho Department of Water Resources detailed the latest grim statistical information on snowpack, streamflow and reservoir storage.

Though the outlook for much of Idaho is the second-worst water year – 1977 holds the record – it is only the seventh-

Architects whittle down plans for Wood River High School

By Barb Nelwert
Times-News correspondent

HAILEY – Architects heeded the Blaine County School Board's advice Tuesday and reduced the size of the new Wood River High School by 4 percent.

Architect Nate Turner told the School Board his team reduced the size of the school from 188,000 to 181,000, but the board was still not satisfied with the plan as presented. The architects will go back to the drawing board to work on the plans, possibly angling the footprint of the building and redesigning the two wings of the building so they are interconnected.

Original plans included two 300-foot-long, two-story wings. But the classroom wings seemed too long, Turner said. By connecting the two wings, rather than having them built as separate buildings, the architects could make better use of the land available and students would not have to go outside to get to the other building.

While still in the design stage, the new high school will have 808-square-foot classrooms and a teacher's office for every two rooms. In addition, the core area of the high school should be adequate for student growth for some time into the future.

The gymnasium will seat 2,200 people, while the commons area used for a lunch room will seat 400, with potential for more seating on the second level above the commons area.

Space for an auditorium has been set aside at the front entrance to the school, but that project will not be included until a later date. The new high school will be situated where the current football field is located, with the 50-yard line running down the center of the school. Since the elevation of the football field is about 10 feet higher than the existing school, landscape architects are working to provide appropriate grading throughout the site.

Parking needs to accommodate up to 1,100 cars. Paved parking will be included in several lots surrounding the school, while parking on the grass field west of the school will be available for event parking.

The $19.6 million high school is one of the projects that will be paid for by the $40 million plant facilities levy passed in May. The district plans to break ground on the project in early June and complete the project in 2003.

In other School Board business:

• Approval was given to name the library at Hemingway Elementary School the John Dominick Children's Library. The request was made by Hemingway teachers to recognize Principal John Dominick's dedication to reading during his 13-year tenure at Hemingway. The staff will pitch in to pay for the sign that will hang above the library door and pay tribute to his retirement in June.

• Social worker Todd Gunter received approval to begin an After School Club at Wood River Middle School. Through a partnership between the Blaine County Youth Partnership, Blaine County and the school district, funding will be provided for a coordinator and assistant to run the program. Gunter said the program will begin next week and will target kids who are at risk academically or have no supervision after school. Up to 30 students can participate this year. The After School Club will feature tutoring, snacks and recreation activities.

• WRMS Athletic Director Jim King presented a proposal for WRMS to sponsor a seventh-grade Optimist Football Team under the direction of middle school coaches. This year the seventh-grade boys football team turned out 44 players, making it difficult for every player to have field time. The school would coach two teams, one through the Southwest Central Idaho Conference and one through the Optimist program. Board members will discuss the possibility of sponsoring the Optimist program for fourth- through sixth-graders at next month's meeting.

• Honors went to Blaine Tingey of the Carey School who was named the Division A-4 Athletic Director of the Year and Jan Gripne, director of School Food Services who was elected vice president of the Idaho School Services.

• The district will call for bids for three 14-passenger school bus vans. These vans, new to the market, include enhanced safety features and provide safer travel than using passenger vehicle vans, said transportation director Rex Squires. One van will be used for Carey, one for Hailey, and one will replace the school bus currently used to transport six students in the Yale area of Blaine County.

CSI will match scholarships

The Times-News

TWIN FALLS – Some college freshmen at the College of Southern Idaho will have all but about $200 of their first semester of college paid for because CSI will match new state scholarships.

CSI announced Wednesday that it will match the $250 Idaho Promise Scholarships the Legislature funded this year for students in their first two years of college. With CSI's match, the program gives students who graduate from the state's high schools with a 3.0 grade point average, or receive a 20 on the ACT, $500 a year when attending an Idaho college or university.

The Legislature appropriated $3 million annually from the state general fund for the scholarships. It's up to colleges and universities to decide whether to match them. CSI will partially fund its match with scholarship money from the CSI Foundation and the college's Presidential Scholarship fund.

CSI President Jerry Meyerhoeffer said the scholarships make CSI even more accessible to students. A semester at CSI costs $705 for full-time students. For students who receive a Promise Scholarship, one semester at CSI will be just $205.

"We are excited to match these $250 scholarships to help good students continue their education," Meyerhoeffer said in a news release.

In other CSI news Wednesday, Meyerhoeffer gave the Twin Falls Rotary Club a rundown of college statistics:

• Because of new legislation, 53 percent of the college's annual budget now will be supported by the state. This school year the state funded 41 percent of the college's budget. The difference means property tax relief for residents in Twin Falls and Jerome counties. Because property tax relief for both of the state's community colleges combined keeps state community college funding below 49 percent, both colleges can continue to enjoy local control.

• Between 1990 and 2000, the percentage of full-time students at CSI grew by 63.4 percent, faster than growth at Boise State University, Idaho State University, Lewis-Clark State College, University of Idaho, and North Idaho College. NIC was second with about 40 percent growth in the number of full-time students.

• CSI's debt load is about $4 million, which is less than any of the other five colleges.

• Between 1990 and 2000, the percentage of Idaho's lower division students attending CSI grew from 11.4 percent to 16 percent.

• In 2000, 12.7 percent of the residents 16 and older in Camas, Blaine, Gooding, Lincoln, Jerome, Minidoka, Twin Falls and Jerome counties took a class at CSI. More than half of CSI's students are from Twin Falls and Jerome counties.

Twin Falls students focus on violence prevention

By Jennifer Sandmann
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS – Twin Falls students brought a "bodyguard to the stars" to school Wednesday to talk about school violence.

Dan Heidt, of Caldwell, stood on stage at Roper Auditorium among a string of photos of Jennifer Lopez, Tom Cruise and the many other actors, models, and singers he has worked for over the past 30 years. Heidt has visited the sites of the past 29 school and workplace violence incidents in the United States, including Columbine High School in Littleton, Colo., and the scene of one of the most recent shootings – Santana High School in Santee, Calif.

He told Twin Falls students that if they remembered one thing about what he said Wednesday, he hoped it was that "all of you have a responsibility."

"If you see someone who is being humiliated, you just can't walk by and think, 'gee, I'm glad it's not me,'" Heidt said.

He encouraged students to find help for their peers who are being taunted or harassed. Part of Wednesday's message was that this type of behavior is a form of violence that is either subtle or ignored. He said students he has met who have acted out violently at school have gotten to the point that they hate everyone. So Heidt encourages teens to make efforts to be friendly to outsiders or loners who might be the ones being harassed to try to help them feel connected at school.

Twin Falls senior Meghan Annis, 17, is president of the high school's chapter of Family Career and Community Leaders of America. FCCLA students had heard Heidt speak and invited him to Twin Falls. Annis said she hoped that students would get the message that if they see violence happening, even in subtle forms such as degrading behavior toward another student, to tell an adult about it.

Despite all of the attention to school violence, Annis said she doesn't dwell on it much. She said she still wakes up in the morning with typical teen-age thoughts such as, "so what am I going to wear. How should I do my hair? Not what kind of violence is going to happen at school today."

For John Delia, 17, attending his first day of school in Twin Falls Wednesday was somewhat of a relief. He moved here from California, where he said one student at school had been stabbed in the kidney because he spit on someone and that police roamed the grounds with metal detectors.

"You come here and it's like, wow, what a change," he said. "You worry about if it could happen to you – what you would do if it did happen."

Besides wondering if it could happen here, student Nick Rodabaugh, 18, said publicity surrounding school shootings has generated awareness but also school gossip about students people suspect could be potentially violent.

Kidnapping case heads to district court

By Gina Mulder
Times-News correspondent

GOODING – A Shoshone man facing first-degree kidnapping and aggravated assault charges waived his right to a preliminary hearing on Wednesday.

The next scheduled court appearance for Ricardo Lara-Gonzales will be at 9 a.m. April 17 for arraignment before District Court Judge Barry Wood. At that time, Woods will set a jury trial date.

Lara-Gonzales, 19, sat quietly as his defense attorney, Calvin Campbell, told Magistrate Judge Kevin Cassidy that after weighing his options, Lara-Gonzales "decided it was in his best interest to waive the preliminary hearing then to proceed to a district court level."

Cassidy reminded Lara-Gonzales that the purpose of the preliminary hearing is to determine if there are sufficient facts for Lara-Gonzales to stand trial in district court on the first-degree kidnapping and aggravated assault charges.

The charges stem from allegations that Lara-Gonzales on March 13 threatened Jamie Lopez, 18, of Bliss with a knife and kidnapped Gloria Lemus, 17, of Wendell at knifepoint, taking Lemus against her will to Utah, court records say.

Police in Midvale, Utah, found Lara-Gonzales and Lemus and arrested Lara-Gonzales. In an interview after Wednesday's hearing, Gooding County Prosecuting Attorney Philip Brown said that he had added a notice to seek the enhanced penalty of use of deadly weapon in the commission of a crime. Brown added that first-degree kidnapping carries a maximum life sentence.

Lara-Gonzales is being held in Gooding County jail in lieu of a $200,000 bond.

Hog farm appeals decision

By Ruth Streeter
Times-News writer

BURLEY – Just two days before deadline, Big Sky Farming Group LLC filed an appeal after Cassia County commissioners denied the group a permit application for a large-scale hog farm.

Big Sky partner Ron Achs hand-delivered the appeal and a $200 fee Tuesday, according to the county planning and zoning office.

Big Sky is appealing a March 1 decision by the county Planning and Zoning Commission. The commission unanimously denied a county permit for Big Sky's proposed 595,000-animal hog farm.

Now, county commissioners have between 30 and 60 days to hold a hearing. At the hearing, Big Sky will have an opportunity to argue why it thinks the denial was groundless.

If the elected board of commissioners grants the appeal, Big Sky's application would be remanded to the planning and zoning commission for reconsideration.

The five-page appeal cites several findings made by the planning and zoning commission with which Big Sky disagrees. Big Sky disagrees with some of the board's findings, as well as the P&Z's conclusions that sufficient evidence in some cases hadn't been provided.

One of Big Sky's strongest opponents said Tuesday that's he's not alarmed by the notice of appeal.

Former Gov. John Evans, a Burley banker, said it seems unlikely that a unanimous decision would be reversed. The chance of a successful appeal seems "illogical," he said.

"At this point, I feel rather comfortable with the planning and zoning commission's decisions," Evans said.

The county's permitting process is not affected by the recent decision by the state Department of Environmental Quality to suspend the state's permitting process for Big Sky.

The DEQ announced April 3 that Big Sky had not met an extended deadline to provide necessary financial guarantees. The DEQ is now requiring Big Sky to start the permit process.

In the event the planning and zoning commission reverses its decision upon appeal, a county permit can still be granted, County Administrator Tim Hurst said.

But the planning and zoning commission could place conditions on the permit that requires Big Sky to obtain a state permit before construction of the facility, Hurst said.

Under state rules regulating swine and poultry facilities, new swine facilities are required to provide financial assurance for the operation, closure and remediation of facilities before a final permit can be issued.

Kimberly finishes up sewer work

KIMBERLY – Construction is nearly complete on Kimberly's sewer improvement project, Maintenance Supervisor Rob Wright told the City Council Tuesday.

Subcontractors working for Bodiford Construction are patching excavation holes in the pavement this week as weather permits, Wright said. The cost of the project to date is $331,940.

Also Tuesday, the council approved a lease purchase agreement on a new patrol car. The $21,000 vehicle will be paid off in four years.

Public information officers to discuss agencies

TWIN FALLS – A public information meeting is scheduled today at the state Department of Health and Welfare office.

Public information officers from the Twin Falls County Sheriff's Office, Twin Falls Clinic and Hospital, Department of Health and Welfare and the American Red Cross will be on hand to answer questions and hear concerns. Public information officers help provide information to the public and the media.

The meeting will begin at 12:15 p.m. in the conference room of the state Department of Health and Welfare regional office in Twin Falls, 601 Pole Line Road.

For more information, call Jackie Frey at 736-4087 or page her at 735-2855.

Students need used cell phones for service project

TWIN FALLS – Students at Robert Stuart Junior High School in Twin Falls need used cellular telephones for a community service project, said Twin Falls County Sheriff's Office spokeswoman Nancy Howell.

Students on Friday plan to clean up and recharge worn out cell phones and hand them over to the sheriff's department, Howell said. The department will then give the phones – which will be programmed to dial only 911 – to needy senior citizens for emergency use, she said.

Phones can be dropped off at the school office, 644 Caswell Ave. W, until 10 a.m. Friday, Howell said.

Heyburn annexation stalls again

By Aaron Brock
Times-News writer

HEYBURN – The J.R. Simplot Co. annexation is still at least 12 days away.

"We have accepted another 14-day standoff with Simplot to further the negotiations we have going on with them," Heyburn Mayor Cleo Cheney told the City Council Wednesday night.

The halt to the proceedings was agreed to on Tuesday, and will last until May 24, Cheney said.

This marks the second such stand-down between Simplot and the city. Some of Simplot's property is already within the city limits, and Heyburn is attempting to annex the remaining 32 rough acres of the company's land.

Simplot has contested the city's right to add the property to the city. If the annexation does go through, Heyburn stands to gain about $185,000 annually in property taxes.

A group of about 15 Simplot employees attended the meeting. They did not address the council, but they will voice their concerns at the May 25 meeting, according to Simplot worker Jeannette Sawyers.

Cassia County waits for drought declaration

By Dan Fields
Times-News writer

BURLEY – Cassia County is still waiting to see if it's going to be declared a disaster area like its neighbor to the north. If so, farmers and ranchers in Cassia County could receive federal financial help.

H.D. Palmer, the communication director for Idaho Gov. Dirk Kempthorne, confirmed the governor has forwarded the disaster request to U.S. Agriculture Secretary Ann Veneman, but that Veneman has yet to provide a response.

Kempthorne's office has said severe drought conditions in Cassia County prompted the governor to act on the request last week. Recently, Veneman declared Camas and Minidoka counties primary agriculture disaster areas, making farmers eligible for low-interest loans through the Farm Service Agency.

Camas County was granted the status because extreme drought and grasshopper infestation ruined many farmers' crops. In Minidoka County, the declaration was granted because of the freezing temperatures that damaged beet crops during the November 2000 farming season.

Cassia County Administrator Tim Hurst said this isn't the first time Cassia County will have applied for such a declaration, but noted "it doesn't happen that often." Hurst said that declarations have been made in the past for many reasons, including hail damage.

"Because we're such and agriculture-basic community ... when weather becomes so adverse to grow crops, we ask for that declaration for low-interest loans or for federal assistance," Hurst said.

Ceremony marks completion of bridge

By Aaron Brock
Times-News writer

BURLEY – Flags flew, bands marched and fireworks exploded into the sky, as dignitaries from around the state gathered on the Overland Bridge.

In a rededication ceremony Wednesday, the opening of a four-lane bridge spanning the Snake River between Minidoka and Cassia counties was celebrated.

"This is a great river; it's one of the greatest rivers in the world," Idaho Gov. Dirk Kempthorne said. "And it happens to be between two great communities."

Delayed by bad weather in Hailey, Kempthorne arrived late to the ceremony and said he had to rush off to sign some legislative bills. All bills had to be signed by 4 p.m. Wednesday.

"One of the bills that I need to sign before 4 o'clock is the largest tax cut in the history of Idaho," Kempthorne said to the cheers of roughly 100 local citizens who attended the ceremony.

Mayors, county commissioners, state representatives and other local officials gathered for the event. Rep. John "Bert" Stevenson, R-Rupert, said he remembered the last time the bridge was replaced, in 1947.

"I was a kid when the last one opened," Stevenson said. "We thought that one was going to last forever."

Crime

the county in 1999, but only 51 in 2000, according to reports.

"I wish we could take all the credit for that, but there's probably lots of factors involved," Tousley said.

For one thing, county residents might have started doing more to protect themselves from theft, he said.

DeVore and Johnson said early statistics indicate that property crimes were a growing problem in their cities during 2000. Both said that can probably be linked to drugs.

"Narcotics users are infamous for their property crimes," DeVore said.

Fraud has also increased in recent years, DeVore said. There have apparently been more scams launched against the elderly and other vulnerable people, he said, and a steady rise in check fraud.

That's probably because technology – such as the Internet and sophisticated computer graphics programs – has made it easier to forge documents and play con games, DeVore said.

Reports of crimes against children have also risen steadily, he said.

That could be because more people are coming forward to report those crimes and sex offenses against adults, Tousley said.

The murder wrap

There were no murders in Twin Falls city or county in 2000, making it the first murder-free year since at least 1995, according to crime statistics compiled by the Idaho State Police.

Between 1995 and 2000, the bloodiest year was 1997, with five murders reported, including two in the county. None of the three murder cases in the City of Twin Falls and only one of them in the county were cleared that year, reports show.

There were no other murder cases handled by the Twin Falls County Sheriff's Office between 1995 and 2000.

The City of Twin Falls saw four murder cases in both 1996 and 1998, with three of the 1996 cases and two of the 1998 cases cleared during those years. 1995 and 1999 each saw two murders, and all those cases were cleared during the years they were reported.

Some of the other crimes reported in 2000 included:

Crime	Twin Falls city	Twin Falls County	Flier
Aggravated assault	129	10	0
Burglary	402	51	4
Vandalism	761	66	10
Kidnapping/abduction	22	2	0
Total offenses reported	4,613	526	40
Cases cleared	1,373	239	14
Percent cleared	30 percent	45 percent	35 percent worst for irrigators on the perennially water-short Salmon Tract.

The Salmon River Canal Co. expects to deliver about half of the average amount of water, said Glenn Meyer, canal company board president.

"If we start May 15, it probably wouldn't make it past Aug. 4," he said. Most growers plan to raise grain and hay, but a few are considering some corn, which takes more water and water later in the season, Meyer said.

The company plans to deliver about 0.36 acre-feet per share – the long-term average is 0.78 feet per share.

But on the Salmon Tract, like elsewhere in the state, the next 30 to 45 days are critical.

If the cool, wet weather persists, the start of the irrigation season would be delayed – and that would delay the depletion of stream flows. But that would only put off the inevitable shortage, Larsen said.

"There's no snow anywhere," he said.

Across the entire Columbia Basin snowpack and forecast stream flows are at record or near-record lows, Larsen said.

"There really is a serious water picture this year," he said.

About all that water managers and forecasters can do is "keep our fingers crossed and hope for a wet few months, like today," Abramovich said at Wednesday's meeting of the Idaho Water Supply Committee.

Hal Anderson, the committee's chairman and administrator of the Department of Water Resources' Planning Division, urged agency officials to help update the state's drought response plan by mid-May.

It was last updated in 1995 after the last string of desperately dry years. Now Anderson said some of the information it contains is outdated, and it includes few of the Internet resources now available to planners.

"This is an unusual year. It's one that we need to stay on top of, most definitely," he said.

With about 80 percent of the moisture accumulation for the water year that begins Oct. 1 accounted for by April 1, officials compared conditions with those in such previous drought years as 1992, 1977 and 1931. They said conservation measures and help from the weather would be necessary to help ensure against dire consequences for agriculture, fisheries and hydropower generation.

"A cool wet spring, April-May-June, would delay the onset of snowmelt, provide much needed additional water, delay initial irrigation demand, and provide additional soil moisture," the Natural Resources Conservation Service said in a report on the outlook. "A dry spring and summer like last year will only tax the system even more and could possibly set the stage for another severe fire season."

April 1 snow-water content levels were at record lows from the Clearwater basin north and the second-lowest ever across central and eastern Idaho and the Bear River basin. The situation is aggravated by dry soil, meaning more of the precipitation than usual is being absorbed into the parched ground rather than running off into reservoirs.

The lowest streamflow forecasts are for 20 percent to 40 percent of average in the Bear, Payette, Boise, Big Wood and Little Wood and Owyhee river basins, some of which anticipate near record-low volumes. The highest forecasts are only 65 percent of average in eastern Idaho's Henrys Fork basin, which also would be near a record low.

The one relatively bright spot may be river recreation. Officials said rafters can expect a longer season than usual on the main Salmon River due to the lack of high water. The main Payette River also will see a longer rafting season because of steady releases of water from Cascade Reservoir after natural stream levels subside.

Meth

or cold remedies bought in such ordinary places as the corner grocery. But for users, the initial euphoria gives way to paranoia and violent behavior, as well as ugly defects on the body, such as rotting of teeth and brain damage.

Reducing the impact of meth on juvenile users to economic terms, Kempthorne said that it costs the state $60,000 per year to incarcerate a juvenile, while a year in college costs only $10,000.

Idaho State Police have reported that 171 meth labs were broken up in 1999, and by last year, the number had jumped to 186.

By far the most electrifying speech was made by Monte Stiles, assistant U.S. attorney for the Idaho district, described by his boss, U.S. Attorney Betty Richardson, as something of an evangelist in the assault on meth. Stiles styled his presentation as "a call to arms."

Meth labs, Stiles said, can produce the illegal substance with a street value of $1,000 for about $70 worth of ingredients.

But the havoc of that cheaply manufactured substance is almost indescribable, Stiles said.

He listed horrible crimes committed by meth addicts who had been transformed into almost mindless terrorists – three children burned to death in a meth home after the mother fled; a mother stabbed to death in her home in front of her 1-year-old child; two police officers seriously injured by a bomb intended for a meth addict's rival.

"Cocaine and heroine pale in comparison" to the devastating physical and mental effects of meth, Stiles told the workshop audience.

Stiles, who has spoken to audiences of more than 100,000 people about the meth menace, compared the growth of meth labs and meth addiction to the leak in an earthen dam. Can the leak be plugged, or will it erupt, unleashing a cascade of floodwaters, or, in this case, a flood of new meth addicts, Stiles asked.

He also alluded to the heavy financial burden of meth – the cleanup of toxic waste at just one meth home is equivalent to the cost of two expensive laptop computers that could be bought for schools.

A number of communities have formed meth enforcement task forces that not only include police and prosecutors but also children's social service workers and hazardous waste technicians. One of Thursday's sessions will demonstrate how a meth lab is set up and operated.

bond election, the levy with the $1.5 million from the state will essentially save the taxpayer a little over $2 million and not raise taxes as much."

Howerton was optimistic that Wendell's condemned middle school would qualify for the grant, but final approval may be a few weeks away.

In most plant facility levy situations, a simple majority is needed for passage. However, Howerton said that because of the size of the levy, a super majority will be required.

If the levy passes and the district receives the grant, the money would used to construct a 57,000-square-foot middle school and a 3,000-square-foot vocational-technical building. The buildings would be built on district-owned property on East Main Avenue next to the existing high school.

Wendell lost its middle school a year ago after the main building was condemned and closed because of a deteriorating foundation. Since then, the school district made due by having some sixth- through eighth-grade students attend classes in the remaining buildings on the east and north side of the campus and busing other students to classrooms in Gooding at the Idaho School for the Deaf and Blind.

Times-News correspondent Gina Mulder can be reached in Wendell at 536-6637.

One-way party invite hurts feelings

DEAR ABBY
Abigail VanBuren

DEAR ABBY: My son, "Brad," is in first grade in a small private school. When birthday time rolls around, I always invite all the kids. They all show up, but when it comes to returning the invitation, some do – but most don't. Brad is very hurt when he is excluded from their parties. It seems to me that when you accept an invitation, you should reciprocate.

It's not a matter of money, Abby; the parents can afford to invite all the children. One parent told me she lets her son decide whom to invite and she stays out of it. Isn't this teaching a child that bad manners are acceptable and getting along with each other is not important? My child has also wanted to exclude a particular child. I always say, "No one likes being left out."

I know I can't control what other people do, but I hope this letter reminds parents what it was like to be a child. Life isn't always fair, but at least we can teach our kids proper etiquette.

– PERPLEXED IN VIRGINIA

DEAR PERPLEXED: Even more important than teaching children proper etiquette is teaching them empathy for other people. Unless young people are taught respect for the feelings of others, all the etiquette lessons in the world are wasted.

DEAR ABBY: I am a 73-year-old single lady. I've been alone and lonely for 14 years, ever since my husband died. I recently met a man, "Gerald," who is five years younger than me. His wife died a year ago. Our chemistry is wonderful – he seems to be the answer to my prayers.

So what's my problem? Gerald wears a vial around his neck that contains some of his wife's ashes. While the thought is sweet and touching, it makes me uncomfortable when he is making love to me.

– SECOND TIME AROUND

DEAR SECOND: Tell Gerald you don't want his wife's ashes to come between you. So when he's making love to you, he should remove them from his neck and put them in a place of respect. That should do the trick.

DEAR ABBY: Last Easter, an unfortunate incident occurred in our home. I would like to share it with your readers so they won't suffer the heartbreak we did.

Like so many people, I bought an Easter lily for the holiday. My 6-month-old kitten chewed the ends off a couple of the leaves – and died on Easter morning.

A few days later, I learned from the poison control center that Easter lilies are highly toxic to felines and cause acute renal failure that results in certain death. They are not toxic to dogs or humans.

Several veterinarians were unaware of this plant's toxicity to cats, and my own veterinarian has it listed as a safe plant.

The plant industry should label toxic plants as such on the care labels so that pet owners won't lose a beloved member of their household in such a preventable way as we did. Your animal-loving readers should write to their state representatives and demand that these warnings be made law.

– SUE VON ESCHEN, ROCKFORD, MICH.

DEAR SUE: Please accept my sympathy for the loss of your pet. Your letter is an important one, because many experts are unaware of the danger Easter lilies can pose to felines. I called the Los Angeles poison control center to confirm what you've written: Cat lovers, listen up!

Work begins to wire Rexburg schools, businesses to Internet

REXBURG (AP) – The city is getting wired and MAD-NET could be extended to the soon-to-be Brigham Young-University-Idaho and local businesses.

Salt Lake City-based Federal Communication will spend this week in the Madison School District installing equipment to connect district facilities to the high-speed world of fiber optics.

Burying the fiber lines will take place later this year, said Janet Goodliffe, district communications specialist. The district borrowed $600,000 against its plant facility levy to pay for the addition this year.

MAD-NET, the nickname for the citywide project, is working with the Idaho Department of Commerce to secure $500,000 from the state and $100,000 from the U.S. Department of Agriculture's Rural Development Program. MAD-NET has $350,000 in local support as well.

The school district will be hooked into the existing fiber-optic lines that will also run past the economic development office and the Rexburg Business Park.

Officials hope to eventually loop the connection to other areas of the community including BYU-Idaho, the old Ricks College.

"These kids are doing so much these days with graphics, multi-media, sound and video, high-end Web development – it's college-level work," she said.

How you are treated is as important as your cancer treatment. And being close to home contributes to healing.

That's why St. Luke's Mountain States Tumor Institute (MSTI) has cancer care facilities in many locations throughout southern Idaho and eastern Oregon. That means you spend less time traveling, which allows you more recovery time in the comfort of your own home.

In cooperation with area hospitals, St. Luke's MSTI operates clinics and facilities in the following locations:

Caldwell • Nampa • Ontario
Boise • Meridian

Physician clinics are operated in Emmett, McCall, Mountain Home and Twin Falls. And our mobile mammography coach travels to cities throughout the region.

Governor inks police, parks budgets into law

COEUR d'ALENE (AP) – A $52 million budget that puts more state troopers on Idaho's highways and increases manpower to fight drugs and computer crime was signed into law on Tuesday by Gov. Dirk Kempthorne.

As Kempthorne continued his post-legislative session swing around the state, he also signed a $33 million budget for the Parks and Recreation Department that includes significant park investments that one lawmaker suggested recognized the 14 years of service by retiring department Director Yvonne Ferrell.

But a day earlier and without comment, the governor who took office pledging himself to "The Generation of the Child" signed a $1.1 billion Health and Welfare Department budget that prohibits anything but minimal promotion to let working poor families know their children are eligible for subsidized health care.

The restriction was imposed on nearly all of the health and welfare programs during the final days of the session last month as a way to save money. Only programs encouraging families to immunize their children were exempted.

But the target was the Children's Health Insurance Program. The state-federal health care subsidy has grown from 2,000 to 10,000 participants in the past two years. But the aggressive promotion of the program – $658,000 in advertising this year – was also uncovering four times as many children eligible for basic Medicaid. And the budget of that federal entitlement has skyrocketed.

Advocates said less promotion means less participation, which means the cost will increases more slowly.

Critics, citing the state's high level of uninsured children, called that shortsighted, warning that taxpayers will just pick up a bigger bill later when children have to be treated for emergencies because of inadequate preventive care.

A week and a half ago, Kempthorne said he wanted to evaluate the restriction.

At the same time, however, he proclaimed that "children are a priority for this administration" and acknowledged the participation growth in the program for the working poor. "So where you have children that need to have help and assistance then we need to be there," he said.

But in signing the budget and its restrictions on letting eligible people know services are available, Kempthorne apparently was relying on what he suggested would be a moderating letter from key lawmakers "which further defines just how they're suggesting we proceed."

Sleeping under the stars

Students raffle autographed quilt for skate park cause

TWIN FALLS – A class project 10 years ago has lead to a quilt that would make anyone have stars in their eyes.

Students at Pam Hartley's third-grade class at Sawtooth Elementary were working on letter writing skills when the teacher had them chose a celebrity and ask for an autograph, said John Pohlman, with the Magic Valley Skatepark Association.

The class decided they would request that each autograph be returned on a swatch of quilting material to turn into one big quilt of celebrity signatures.

In only two weeks they received their first of 73 autographs from the late John Candy, along with an autographed picture of himself. It would be two years before the last one came back. Raymond Burr regretted that it had taken so long, but he had been sick and no one was allowed to sign for him, Pohlman said.

The original fund-raiser set for the quilt was canceled and 10 years later, the youthful creators of the celebrity quilt were now young adults. Hartley, whose wall the quilt had adorned since its completion, said she knew that some day a special need would arise. That need was the construction of a skate park in Twin Falls, Pohlman said.

Shyla Thompson, now living in Denver, was recently reunited her third-grade teacher by Pohlman, whose own son had graduated with the class of 2000.

"This whole thing brings back a time in my life that I hold very dear to my heart," Thompson said. "Mrs. Hartley did a splendid job on the quilt, and seeing her and the quilt together again is like reliving one of my most favorite childhood moments. I remember that I was so excited about being able to write to John Candy, and I was equally excited when my letter was the first to be answered."

Former classmates who also contributed to the quilt's creation include Travis Beutler, Kate Groom, K.C. Maxwell, Chris Stafford, Amanda Willie, Kristin Dodds, Jade Hatfield, Sean McCarthy, Megan Stallings, Ryan Yager, David Dodds, Chris James, Jaime McClymonds, Laurie Strand, Andy Ebbs, Jenny Kassis, Tasha McCuley, Melissa Stubbs, Matt Eilers, Kendra Keim, Steve Owings, Robert Thomas, Tyson Fiala, Anthony Lopez, Mark Rangel and Sara Webster.

Shyla Thompson was an elementary student when she wrote for John Candy's autograph in teacher Pam Hartley's class. The quilt she and other students helped create will be raffled Saturday.

Want a ticket?

The drawing is, at tentatively 4 p.m. Saturday at the Country Gift Garden on Main Avenue. There will also be a drawing for a Fender Strat-Pak electric guitar package donated by The Music Center. The quilt is on display at A Stitch In Time. The skatepark is scheduled for completion on June 30.

Jefferey is easy to know and love

Thursday's Child

Jeffery
Age 10

Personality: Jeffery is an easy child to know and to love. He is very friendly and likes to give compliments. Described as full of life, Jeffery approaches new experiences with apprehension at first, then quickly adapts. He is very obedient and willing to please his foster parents and teachers. He helps out with daily chores around the home, especially when he receives little prompts. His foster parents utilize lists, which allow for more independence.

Interests: Jeffery enjoys watching videos, playing computer games and riding his bike. He likes to play with pets. He feeds several stray cats and the neighbor's dog when they come by his foster parent's home. For the past 18 months, Jeffery has participated in weekly scouting and LDS Church activities with his foster parents.

Needs: Jeffery responds to structure, consistency and affection. He needs a single parent or couple with flexible expectations and who will build on the developmental and social progress he's made in his present placement. In a regular school setting, Jeffery receives special services for reading, language and math. He also receives speech therapy services. His adoptive parent(s) will need to maintain regular weekly contact with teachers to monitor homework assignments and follow up on academic progress. Jeffery would do well in a family with older children, but he is also comfortable playing with children in the age range of 7 to 8 years old. He is eligible for Adoption Assistance and support for needed services.

Jeffery is available for adoption through the Idaho Department of Health and Welfare. To find out more, call the Idaho CareLine number, 1-800-926-2588.

CSI offers walking tour of historic Twin Falls homes

TWIN FALLS – The College of Southern Idaho will offer a new class featuring a walking tour of historic Twin Falls homes from 4-6 p.m. April 26 at 361 7th Ave. E.

Students will explore the history of Twin Falls by touring old homes on the original town site. Students will see different architectural styles common to the early period of the community and learn about the settlers. After a brief overview lecture on early Twin Falls by Russell Tremayne, students will view 10-15 homes and then go to Tremayne's home for refreshments and discussion. The class requires students to walk over a mile for more than an hour.

The cost is $20.

For more information or to register, call 733-9554, Ext. 2290.

Businesswomen: Make sure your benefits are secure

SOCIAL SECURITY AND YOU
Maria Gonzalez

What you don't know about Social Security could keep you from being eligible for benefits. To illustrate the point, I have a sad, but true story about a woman and her husband, who worked side by side on their farm for many years.

When in her mid-50s, this woman learned she had cancer and could no longer continue working. She came into our office to file for disability benefits. She and her husband learned that none of her earnings from the business were listed on her Social Security record. Although she had worked and paid into Social Security shortly before her marriage, this woman did not have enough Social Security work credits to qualify for disability benefits.

How did this happen? For some reason, although the couple filed a joint income-tax return each year, they did not know they needed to file separate self-employment schedules with their tax return for both partners to get Social Security credits. And so all the earnings were reported under the husband's Social Security number.

The couple had not known what their earnings records contained. Although they could amend their tax returns for the three previous years, there were not enough work credits to qualify the wife for benefits.

Unfortunately, this is not an isolated case. Many women lose eligibility for benefits because they don't know their earnings are not being posted to their records. And, some couples choose to have only the husband pay Social Security taxes. While that may save money at tax time, it's costly when the wife wants to file for retirement or disability benefits.

If you and your spouse own and operate a business together, be sure you each protect your earnings record and your eligibility for Social Security benefits. Now that you automatically receive a Social Security statement every year, it's easy to keep track of your earnings record.

For more information, go to the publications section on our Web site www.ssa.gov and read or print this booklet, Social Security: What Every Woman Should Know. You can also call 1-800-772-1213 to order a copy or get one at your local Social Security office. And remember, Social Security rules apply to men the same as they do for women.

Woman's corazon is with helping people

By Coreen Hart
Times-News correspondent

BURLEY – Maria Jensen has a heart for helping people.

She began by working as a licensed practical nurse at Cassia Regional Medical Center and is now a bilingual substance-abuse and family counselor in the Mini-Cassia area.

"There were only three of us in the hospital who could speak Spanish fluently," said Jensen, who was born in Mexico and raised in Texas. "If none of us were there, the doctors couldn't speak to Spanish-speaking people. Someone might remind them that there was a person in housekeeping who could translate for them, but they'd just wait until one of us came in."

Jensen worked her schedule around raising a family, taking classes, eventually earning a nursing degree. She could see that despite competent medical knowledge, medical experts were at a disadvantage with the language barrier. But with her translation, people could more freely explain why they sought medical help.

"I could see their relief when I would arrive," she said. "There is that comfort."

After 27 years with the hospital, she felt it was time to continue improving her education in the hope of being more helpful. Her marriage to William Jensen was a marriage of two people with similar goals.

"Several months after we got married, she went to part-time at the hospital and in the fall of 1991 we began taking classes in substance abuse and alcoholism (counseling)," Bill Jensen said. "I changed over to the Port of Hope and I needed someone to translate for me. I'd ask the question, she'd translate and then they'd talk for awhile before she gave me the answer. I could see Maria was catching on pretty quickly. If she could do it on her own, I could work with someone else."

COREEN HART/The Times-News

Maria Jensen is a substance-abuse and family counselor, Spanish interpreter and community activist.

Eventually, she became certified by the state.

In 1997, Bill and Maria Jensen went into private practice together as Options Counseling.

The couple also is involved in the community. Maria is chairman of HealthNet, a program devoted to helping young people grow up healthy, caring and responsible. She also does a radio program on Fridays on KBAR and is developing a monthly program for Radio Fantastica aimed at educating the public on domestic violence.

She and Bill are founding members of a new domestic violence and relationship violence task force, along with Cpl. Dan Bristol of the Heyburn Police Department.

She is the Mini-Cassia representative to the Governor's Coordinating Council for Families and Children to identify the state's priorities toward its children, member of the advisory board at the College of Southern Idaho for addictions counseling certification training and affiliated with the Idaho Migrant Council, providing counseling through her office.

She also belongs to the steering committee for the Enough is Enough program and is a member of the Human Rights Committee.

Why does she give so much?

"I like to be involved. I care about everybody, but I especially want the Hispanic people to know what services are available out here. The language barrier creates problems. Small things like not knowing they need a driver's license can create big problems. I want to help the women, but everything I do reflects on the kids," she said. "Education is just so vital. It all ties in together."

Gladys Esquibel, whose own community service record is impressive, has known Maria Jensen for about 25 years.

"I think she's very committed," Esquibel said. "She was the first Hispanic registered nurse in this area and she is so caring. Since those early days, she has had a passion for service."

Maria Jensen remembers the days when racial prejudice hurt her children.

"I would tell them, just prove them wrong," she said. "They don't think you're smart, just prove them wrong."

Curators discover frescos in the Alamo

By Michelle Koidin
The Associated Press

SAN ANTONIO – Alamo curators were standing in the sacristy of the famed mission-turned-fortress, trying to decide where to put new exhibit cases, when a splotch of color seemed to jump off the beige wall.

Like archaeologists stumbling upon a fossil, the curators couldn't wait to dig for more. They summoned specialists to peel away layers of whitewash on the limestone walls.

Soon, red flowers and pomegranates appeared atop one arched wall. A band of burnt orange shapes – diamonds, tear drops, an "E" on its back – surfaced on two walls.

After seven weeks of work to expose the markings and stabilize the walls to prevent crumbling, the sacristy is open to the public, providing yet another glimpse into the past for the 2.5 million people who visit the Alamo each year.

"This wasn't just the scene of a battle – it has a much larger role," says Alamo director Brad Breuer, who was among the group that made the discovery.

The frescoes, likely painted in the mid-1700s, contribute not only to the immense historic value of the Alamo but to its mystique.

Historians are stunned – and delighted – that the Spanish mission-era artwork has withstood the challenges of the Alamo.

Historians work at the newly discovered frescoes at the Alamo, which are fine examples of the era.

Census tells only part of the story behind florescent Hispanic culture

and Peggy Harris
The Associated Press

They are united by language, but do not always understand each other. They came to America ages ago and yesterday. They are of every race, yet passionately claim to be their own race or even none.

The story of the new and unfolding census so far is the story of Hispanic growth.

But the question of who Hispanics really are – what this quilt of 20-plus national origins has in common and does not – cannot be answered by any head count, even one as curious as the census.

Imelys Samsores, 19, born of Mexican and Cuban parents, takes a stab at the question while batting away unruly red, green and white balloons – the colors of Mexico's flag – at a windy multicultural festival outside Miami.

"We all have different cultures and traditions but in the end we are all Hispanic," said the political science student at Florida International University.

A sense of family and community: If one thing unites the many Hispanic cultures besides language and the Roman Catholic faith, that may be it.

"The family ties are much stronger," says Marcela Ogle, 40, who came to Miami from Peru in 1989.

But there are keen differences among Hispanics, too.

America's Hispanic population has ballooned almost 60 percent in the past decade, surpassing 35 million, according to the census. Hispanics make up 12.5 percent of the population now.

Couple fills void by publishing kids' stories with Latino themes

When Felix and Rebecca Padilla went searching for books with a Puerto Rican theme for their young daughter, they quickly learned there were very few. They did find Spanish translations of Anglo children's classics and stories from places other than Puerto Rico, but neither was quite right.

So the Padillas decided to write their own.

The couple wrote "Mami Amor's Little Stories," based on Felix Padilla's grandmother's "cuentitos," little stories about her life when she left the countryside for work in the San Juan factories and, later, the mainland. They also wrote "My Two Lights," about a young boy learning pride in his culture through a popular Puerto Rican song. Felix's older daughter, Eren Star Padilla, illustrated both books.

The stories became fast family favorites, and Felix Padilla came to believe that the culturally relevant books could serve others as well. Padilla, a visiting scholar at Yale University who lives in New York, was convinced that if more Latino children saw their culture reflected in books, they would be more interested in learning and in staying in school. And if those children weren't so influenced by literature from other cultures, they would be less likely to lose their own.

Vida Latina

So he and his wife used the books as the basis for an early-reading and cultural identity program called "Libros, Encouraging Cultural Literacy."

Univision makes some switches in programming

Univision has made a few changes in its 10 p.m. programming. Mondays stay the same with "Cristina Edicion Especial." On Tuesdays, the investigative newsmagazine "Aqui y Ahora" replaces "A Millon," which was unplugged. On Wednesdays, it's the talk show "Hasta en las Mejores Familias." On Thursdays, the network airs "El Gran Blablazo," which will be canceled, and on Fridays it offers two half-hour shows, "Estamos Unidos" and "Lente Loco."

CSI puts international business course online

TWIN FALLS – The College of Southern Idaho will offer an International Business course (BUSA 256) for the first time this summer.

The course will be delivered to students completely online, and they will be able to access it at their own scheduled times.

Under the supervision of CSI's Business Department, Informational Technology Center Director Edit Szanto will teach the course using Blackboard technology. She said this may be the first time a CSI instructor has used the relatively new Blackboard program exclusively to teach an academic credit course. Students will be able to access the interactive site at their convenience as long as they have home computers with certain capabilities.

Szanto said the course will provide the background, basic knowledge and skills to understand international business.

The course will introduce an analysis of international business operations; basic characteristics of business; growth and magnitude of international business; and international economic and political institutions. Topics will include multinational business, the national interest of host countries, investments and special emphasis on trade restrictions and direct foreign investment.

International Business is a three-credit course. CSI credits cost $66.50 per hour until the fall semester, at which time they will increase to $70.50. The class will run from June 4 through July 28.

Jewelry retailer names new division presidents

IRVING, Texas – Zale Corp., which has a jewelry store in the Magic Valley Mall, named four new presidents Tuesday as part of the jewelry retailer's rebuilding process that returning chairman and CEO Robert J. DiNicola started in February.

Charles Fieramosca is joining Zale as president of Bailey Banks & Biddle Fine Jewelers. Fieramosca has 30 years of merchandise, sales and marketing experience with apparel firms and retailers including Jones New York and Macy's.

Charleen Wuellner was promoted to president of Gordon's Jewelers from president of the smaller Zales Outlet division. Wuellner is credited with developing and expanding Zales into a chain of 81 locations.

Steve Strong becomes president of Zales Outlet from senior vice president of operations for the division. Strong has been with Zale for 20 years.

Sue Davidson was appointed president of Zale.com. Davidson had been president of Gordon's. She will now be responsible for leading the Web-based businesses for all the Irving-based company's brands.

ConAgra to close New York flour-milling plant

BUFFALO, N.Y. – ConAgra Maple Leaf Milling said it will shut its flour-milling plant on the Buffalo waterfront in late June, eliminating about 70 jobs.

High energy costs and the facility's inefficiency due to its old age contributed to ConAgra's decision to close the Childs Street site, officials of the Omaha, Neb.-based company said. ConAgra also said overcapacity in the industry was a factor.

"This is a tough decision and does not reflect upon the skills and capabilities of our ConAgra Maple Leaf Milling work force," said Darek Nowakowski, president of ConAgra Flour Milling Co., in a statement.

The facility, which was built in 1925, provides products to bakeries and bakery distributors and has a daily milling capacity of 2.85 million pounds of flour.

ConAgra – which has various operations in the Magic Valley – acquired the Buffalo mill and seven others around the country 13 years ago from International Multifoods Corp. The Buffalo mill employed about 185 people then.

In 1992, the mill became part of a joint venture that ConAgra formed with Maple Leaf Milling, a Toronto-based food processing company mainly involved in animal protein and bakery products. ConAgra is the managing partner of that joint venture.

Twin Falls sales jump

County registers $360M in fourth quarter

By Virginia S. Hutchins
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS – Twin Falls County businesses rang up a remarkable 43.9 percent more fourth-quarter sales than a year earlier – by far the county's best growth in years for October through December.

Certain sales in the county totaled a stunning $360.32 million in the quarter that ended Dec. 31, compared with $250.36 million in fourth quarter 1999.

The county's fourth-quarter sales improvement was particularly remarkable because many indicators of the valley's economy posted a negative showing in the final three months of 2000.

Telephone customers in Twin Falls County cut the number of phone lines in use. Twin Falls County dealers sold fewer new automobiles than a year earlier. Local builders and home buyers trimmed back both new-home values and the closing prices on house sales. The valley's central labor market lost jobs. And certain potato and wheat prices hit their lowest point for any fourth quarter in the past decade.

In the face of all that, a 43.9 percent leap in sales.

According to records from Twin Falls' city economic development office, Twin Falls County sales haven't jumped that far in a long time.

Fourth-quarter results in 1999 actually were down 6.3 percent from year-earlier sales, an unusual trend for the '90s. In fourth quarter 1998, they gained 1.6 percent from a year earlier; in 1997, 4.1 percent; in 1996, 3.7 percent; in 1995, 9 percent; in 1994, 6.9 percent; in 1993, 14.2 percent; and in 1992, 11.6 percent.

Those totals and growth percentages exclude sales by businesses that have locations in more than one county. (Those companies each file just one

LUXURY STORES WORRY

AP photo

Handbag designer Darby Scott, right, shows customer Mary Ellen DeSerio a few of her new bags Thursday at Bergdorf Goodman department store in New York. Retailers hope for more customers like DeSerio who says 'If I really like something I will buy it.'

Retailers brace for spring

The Associated Press

Until earlier this year, Sue Crowgey, a 40-year-old mother of four, was a regular at the restaurants and malls around her North Carolina town. But the slowing economy and volatile stock market have scared her.

"I rummage through my closets and ask myself, 'What do we actually need?'" said the Sanford, N.C., resident, who was spotted checking out $15 sketches on a sidewalk in New York City. "I've given up eating out, and now eat macaroni and cheese and frozen pizza."

"I'm nervous," Crowgey added. She said her investments are dwindling, and her oldest child is going away to college.

Crowgey has joined a wave of consumers who are pulling back on their spending.

The market downturn and the rash of layoffs are hurting consumers' willingness to spend. And that's causing headaches for stores.

Even discounters, which typically weather economic slowdowns better than full-priced stores, are getting bruised.

Wal-Mart, the world's largest retailer, has already said that same-store sales in March may fall below the projected 3 percent to 5 percent increase. Target Corp., which operates Mervyn's, Target Stores and Marshall Field's, and Kmart Corp. are also seeing March sales falling below expectations.

Most retailers will report their March sales figures today.

"This is going to be a very dismal year for retailing," said Carl Steidtmann, chief economist at PriceWaterhouseCoopers.

To spur sales, many stores are offering deeper-than-usual discounts on spring merchandise. Gap Inc. is offering $19 cotton shirts, marked down from $34. And Brooks Brothers is offering $100 off on spring suits.

Still, not everyone is getting pummeled by the souring economy.

Teen retailers such as Hot Topics and Pacific Sunwear of California continue to generate robust results, while drug chains, including Walgreen Co. and CVS Corp., recently reported strong earnings. Drugstores fare better in slowdowns, since historically more people tend to get sick.

Meanwhile, Best Buy, the nation's largest consumer electronics chain, turned in a 16 percent increase in fourth-quarter earnings last week, reporting strong sales of high-priced digital products. Its rivals RadioShack and Circuit City, however, are reporting declining profits.

Luxury stores such as Neiman Marcus and Saks Fifth Avenue believe their customers are spooked, too.

"The affluent consumer has the wherewithal to continue to shop, but they seem to be buying less," said Burt Tansky, president and chief operating officer of The Neiman Marcus Group. "It ties back to the psychology of the stock market."

Luxury stores are hoping more people will be like Mary Ellen DeSerio, 43, from Waccabuc, N.Y., who was examining $4,895 crocodile handbags and $2,550 lizard handbags at Bergdorf Goodman.

"If I really like something, I will buy it," she said.

C. Britt Beemer, chairman of America's Research Group, a Charleston, S.C., market research firm, said those in the middle to upper middle-income class are feeling the biggest burden on several fronts: the big corporate layoffs; high gas prices; and the plummeting financial market, which has deflated consumers' 401Ks and eroded their confidence.

The lowest-income consumers, who typically do not own stocks, are getting hard hit by rising utility bills, he added.

Consumer advocates call attention to privacy notices

The Baltimore Sun

Bank, mutual fund and credit-card statements may appear a little fatter than usual when they show up in mailboxes in coming weeks.

That's because, in addition to the statement and usual advertisements stuffed in the envelope, companies are inserting privacy notices.

Be careful not to toss a notice before reading it, consumer advocates warn. The notice should tell you the kind of information that is collected about you, how it's used and how the company will keep the data secure.

And, in some cases, you will be able to prohibit the company from sharing or selling your personal financial information – such as income, employment or account balances – to outside businesses and organizations.

The 1999 law that broke down barriers among financial institutions now requires them to send privacy notices to customers by July 1. Thereafter, customers will receive privacy notices annually.

Financial institutions range from banks and insurers to retailers and car dealers that gather and share information when obtaining credit for customers.

Millions of notices will be sent in coming weeks. The American Bankers Association estimates a middle-income household can expect 10 to 15 notices.

"The biggest challenge for consumers is to actually recognize the notice," said Tena Friery, research director for Privacy Rights Clearinghouse in San Diego. "Generally, what people do when they get a credit-card bill is they take out the bill and the return envelope and the rest of it goes in the trash."

Even though the law provides some protection, there are still plenty of cases when customers' information can be shared without their consent.

Outgoing CEOs get lovely parting gifts in 2000

Knight Ridder News Service

In keeping with recent generous packages for departing chief executives, former Sears, Roebuck and Co. Chief Executive Arthur Martinez walked away last year with nearly $13 million in compensation, a period in which Sears' net income declined.

Martinez, who spent eight years trying to turn around Sears' retail business, received a $9.1 million lump sum payment as part of his retirement agreement, according to Sears' proxy statement, which came out late last month. That's in addition to his $1.2 million salary, $2.4 million annual bonus and $295,668 in other compensation.

In comparison, the former chief executive of Sears' rival, J.C. Penney Co., didn't do nearly as well. Both retailers have Magic Valley stores.

James Osterreicher, who failed to revive Penney's franchise, received a retirement package valued at only $3.2 million, according to Penney's proxy statement filed Wednesday.

Although that may sound like plenty given his track record,

Pocatello plant will lay off more than expected

The Associated Press

POCATELLO – Astaris will lay off nearly half the work force at its elemental phosphorus plant in response to the energy crisis.

Spokesman Arlen Wittrock said the 203 employees will be released in three phases through June 1, 2002. The payroll reduction is more than double earlier estimates, leaving just 225 workers at the plant.

"It's a necessary step for the business to take, but it's a very painful step for the business and for the employees," Wittrock said.

Astaris will permanently idle two of its four furnaces and put a third on standby.

Pocatello Mayor Greg Anderson acknowledged the negative impact of losing jobs that average $52,000 a year with another $18,000 in benefits.

"Those kinds of high-paying jobs are hard enough to replace in today's national economy, let alone in Pocatello," he said.

On June 10, Astaris will let 91 employees go followed by 25 more on Sept. 1 and the final 87 on June 1, 2002.

Although some of the layoffs will come through attrition, Wittrock said, "the majority, we anticipate, will be forced reductions in employment."

He said original layoff estimates based on rising power costs, environmental expenses and market conditions were magnified by the skyrocketing price of electricity. Astaris, formerly FMC, is Idaho Power Co.'s largest customer.

Released salaried employees will receive 12 weeks of severance pay. Severance packages for hourly workers will be subject to negotiations with the Machinists Union and the Tribal Employment Rights Ordinance Commission since the plant is on the Fort Hall Indian Reservation.

Paul Zelus, director of Idaho State University's Center for Business Research, predicted the loss of such high-paying jobs will translate into a significant drop in demand for big-ticket items such as cars, boats and appliances. Real estate could be affected as well if some laid-off workers decide to relocate.

"You put 30 homes on the market," Zelus said, "and the prices start falling like a stone."

Technology shares lead a mixed market

NEW YORK (AP) – In a rare display of optimism on Wall Street, high-tech stocks posted solid gains to overcome a poor earnings report by Motorola. Blue chips suffered, however.

The Dow Jones industrials closed down 89.27 at 10,013.47, giving up some of the 257-point gain Tuesday that resulted in its first close above 10,000 since March 15.

The market's broader indicators finished the session mixed. The Nasdaq composite index rose 46.92 to 1,898.95, while the Standard & Poor's 500 fell 2.49 to 1,165.89.

Analysts were also pleased that the market held onto a chunk of Tuesday's advance despite disappointing earnings news, including a warning from data storage company EMC.

"We have been taking two steps forward and one back. And, this is just one back," said Hugh Johnson, chief investment officer for First Albany. "It's sort of a pattern that seems to be evolving; taking two steps forward and one back. ... It does give you some confidence."

Another uplifting sign came from Yahoo!, which announced after the market closed that it beat analysts' estimates, earning a penny a share in the first quarter. Yahoo rose 59 cents in extended-hours trading after losing 16 cents in the regular session when it closed at $15.86.

But with first-quarter earnings reports just coming out and the prospect that profits will suffer into next year, Johnson said it's too soon to say when stocks will keep gains for longer than a couple sessions.

Analysts anticipate tech stocks will rebound first, because they have been beaten up the most, pulling the Nasdaq down more than 60 percent from its high of 5,048.62 posted in March 2000.

The Dow fell below 10,000 last month, skidding on investors' worries that the slumping economy has hurt most businesses, not just high-techs.

Market observers have also cautioned against thinking that any rally will be long-lived or that the bear market has ended. It will take a while for the economy to recover, for earnings to rebound and for investors to regain confidence in stocks.

companies within the same corporate family. Institutions can provide outsiders with customer data if it's needed to conduct day-to-day business, such as giving account numbers to the company hired to print checks. And an institution can share information with an outside business provided that they have a marketing agreement to offer the same products or programs.

"You can't put a stop to all the sharing. There are any number of exceptions there," said Ken Baebel, assistant director for the Division of Compliance and Consumer Affairs at the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. "It does provide the consumer with a little more knowledge and a little more authority over the use of their own information."

Some companies don't share customer information with outside groups seeking to sell products or services. But in cases where a company provides personal information to third parties that don't fall within the exceptions, the company must give customers the right to opt out of having their information shared.

Customers are to be given a reasonable amount of time to opt out, which many have interpreted to be about 30 days. If you're using another bank's ATM and your information is captured and will be shared with outsiders, you may have to respond on the spot whether you want to opt out, Baebel said.

If you don't opt out within the time permitted, it will be presumed that you gave permission to share your information. "Responding is a must," Friery said. "If you say nothing, it means yes."

If you miss the deadline, you can always opt out later. But the request will apply only to future disclosure and won't retract any information that's already been circulated. Customers also may be told that under the Fair Credit Reporting Act they may request that certain information, such as a credit report, cannot be shared with affiliates, Baebel said.

Those with joint bank accounts should read the opt-out instructions carefully. Each person may be required to opt out, and if only one does, the other account holder's information can be shared, according to the FDIC.

Customers can't sue a company for privacy rights violations under the 1999 law. Complaints should be made to the federal agency that regulates the institution or to state authorities, which may be able to take action against an institution, experts said.

Notices will differ from company to company, although they are supposed to be clear and conspicuous. If not, contact the company and ask for an explanation of any confusing terms, Friery said.

You also can use the notices to shop around for another bank or brokerage that provides the type of privacy you want, she said.

Privacy notices will be used as a marketing tool by lenders, said Richard H. Harvey Jr., chief compliance and privacy officer at Chevy Chase Bank. It's a chance for banks to show off the measures they take to protect privacy, and also a way for a bank to stand out from its competitors, he said.

Some of the largest financial institutions in the United States will need to provide opt-out notices to customers, which means they are providing customer information to outsiders that may be selling products and services that have nothing to do with finances, Harvey said. Many people won't want such solicitations, he said.

"It's an opportunity to sell privacy," Harvey said.

Accolades

Borders hands business to Amazon

NEW YORK (AP) – Borders Group Inc., the nation's second-largest book retailer, is abandoning its money-losing online business and turning it over to Amazon.com Inc. as part of a new partnership between the two companies.

A new Borders.com Web site, bearing the Amazon as well as the Borders brand, will launch in August, the companies announced Wednesday.

Amazon.com will become the seller of record, providing inventory, fulfillment and content and customer service. Amazon.com's Web site will continue to operate independently.

Borders will eliminate all 70 jobs in its Borders.com operation but will seek other posts for those workers, said Greg Josefowicz, president and chief executive officer of the retailer based in Ann Arbor, Mich.

CEOs

neither Osterreicher nor Martinez made out like bandits by today's outsized severance packages, compensation and corporate governance experts say.

"The year 2000 was the best in history to leave a company," said Nell Minow, editor of The Corporate Library.com, an Internet site focused on corporate governance issues and CEO pay. "People who did much worse got much more," she said, referring to Martinez's package.

Indeed, former Mattel Inc. Chief Executive Officer Jill Barad set the standard when she received a $50 million exit package after the toymaker's stock price had declined 74 percent. As part of her package, Barad was forgiven a $3 million mortgage on her house and the company even paid her tax liability on the debt forgiveness, Minow said.

Martinez didn't get anything quite like that, but he was well taken care of, the proxy shows.

In addition to his cash compensation, Martinez's pension was sweetened and his vesting on more than 819,000 stock options was accelerated, the proxy states.

Even though he spent less than a decade at Sears, Martinez was credited with 21 years of service, a Sears spokeswoman said. Ten of those years were given to him as part of his original employment contract back in 1992, and another three years was tacked on at the end as part of his retirement agreement, she said.

Martinez elected to take his pension as a $12.1 million lump sum, according to the proxy, which means he departed Sears with more than $25 million in cash.

Among his other going-away gifts from Sears, Martinez was provided with a furnished office and a secretary for up to nine years along with tax and financial planning services for five years.

Such long-term perks have become common, experts said. Nevertheless, it's "ludicrous" that shareholders pay for such services, Minow said. "CEOs shouldn't need financial planning, and they're more capable of paying for it than anyone else on earth," she said.

But Sears' shareholders got a break when it comes to the salary package of Martinez's successor, the proxy shows. Alan Lacy, who assumed the CEO job in October, took home $1.7 million in salary, bonus and other compensation last year, less than half his predecessor's. He was also granted 603,750 stock options expiring in 2010, with a present value of $6.4 million under the Black-Scholes options pricing model.

In contrast, Penney's paid its new CEO, Allan Questrom, $2.0 million in salary, bonus and other compensation and granted him 3.5 million options worth $89.6 million, assuming a 10 percent annual appreciation rate. Questrom got more, compensation experts say, because he is an outsider who previously headed a major retail chain and is considered a turnaround expert.

Sales

sales tax return and aren't included in the county-by-county numbers.) Also excluded from county totals are sales by businesses headquartered outside of Idaho.

In the fourth quarter, Twin Falls County again was No. 6 in the state, trailing behind Ada, by far Idaho's biggest seller; Canyon; Kootenai; Bonneville; and Nez Perce counties, in that order.

Here are other Magic Valley sales totals for the fourth quarter, reported by the Idaho State Tax Commission:

- Blaine – $144.37 million, up 22 percent from $118.36 million in fourth quarter 1999.
- Cassia – $100.58 million, down 20.4 percent from $126.35 million a year earlier.
- Jerome – $79.01 million, down a slight .5 percent from $79.41 million.
- Minidoka – $76.3 million, up 11.3 percent from $68.57 million.
- Elmore – $50.57 million, down 4.4 percent from $52.87 million.
- Gooding – $30.04 million, down a startling 74.4 percent from $117.38 million. That drop was similar to the third quarter's 69.1 percent drop from year-earlier sales in Gooding County.

There are a couple of possible explanations, a tax policy specialist said earlier. Large businesses in the county might have stopped reporting nontaxable sales – which are included in the total sales figures if they're reported. The tax commission asks businesses to disclose nontaxable sales, but because no tax is due there are no tax consequences or other penalties if they don't.

Another problem is inherent in the tax commission's reports. If a dairy – or some other business – is purchased by a company headquartered elsewhere, its sales start to show up in multicounty or out-of-state categories instead.

If the state required multicounty and interstate businesses to report sales amounts by individual county, administrative costs would be higher and businesses' reporting paperwork more complicated.

- Lincoln – $4.89 million, up 2.3 percent from $4.78 million.
- Camas – $2.16 million, up 4.9 percent from $2.06 million.

The old ways are the best

The cloud of condensation billowing into the morning sky meant just one thing: Dave Rogotzke was boiling sap.

Rogotzke runs a 1,000-tree sugarbush operation northeast of Duluth, Minn. and Tuesday of last week marked his first strong sap harvest of the season. On Wednesday morning of last week, six gallons of amber maple syrup already lined the windowsill of his garage in stylish glass bottles, and more was on the way.

Rogotzke, 41, wasn't working alone. His dad, Bob Rogotzke, 69, and his dad's friend LeRoy Vait, 71, both had come up from Fairfax, Minn., to lend their hands.

Vait was splitting wood for the hungry woodstove used to evaporate water from the raw sap. The senior Rogotzke was the utility infielder of the crew, feeding the woodstove, monitoring the sap's temperature and drawing off the finished syrup when it hit the magic mark of 219 degrees Fahrenheit.

BEND IN THE RIVER
Sam Cook

All of this took place in a breezeway attached to Dave Rogotzke's garage. Condensation rose from the bubbling sap and hovered over the evaporator only until it was ushered out of the building and into the woods by a soft north wind. The air in the breezeway was humid and carried the sweet, delicate scent of sap becoming syrup.

This wasn't assembly-line work. Making syrup is one of those delightful activities that, like fishing, demands enough attention to make you feel useful but allows you time to think about how lucky you are to be doing it.

It may be this relaxed pace, or maybe it's the pleasant aroma of syrup and woodsmoke, but sap-boiling often draws a small crowd. Sure enough, Rogotzke's friend Don Johnson arrived at midmorning to lend moral support. Not much later, Gene Bryce, one of Rogotzke's neighbors, stopped by as well.

Now there were six of us standing and talking and splitting wood and watching the thermometer and wondering if it was time to load the stove again. The conversation, like the condensation, drifted about in the breezeway. We talked of life and death. The virtues of various woods as fuel. Commercial fishing off Alaska. White-tailed deer movements. Ostrich farming.

Vait raises ostriches at his Fairfax farm, and he happened to have brought some ostrich summer sausage along. Rogotzke went to the house to get some ostrich sausage for the assembled syrupers.

Johnson happened to have brought some smoked salmon, and we all had a pleasant time sampling these treats.

Then Rogotzke said it was time to make some maple taffy, which he did by heating a small batch of finished syrup to precisely 255 degrees, then pouring it into the snow and swirling the snow and the syrup onto a popsicle stick.

It was tempting to think that all of this pleasantness was somewhat effortless, but that would be to disregard the hundreds of hours that Rogotzke had spent across the road, in his maples, measuring trees and tapping trees and stringing wires and taking transit readings and running plastic lines to streamline the sap-gathering process.

It would also disregard the three trips he's made to Ottawa, Ontario, to visit a family in the maple-syruping mecca of North America to learn more about the syrup-making process.

But for the moment, none of us was thinking about that. We were just chopping wood and feeding the stove and watching the thermometer.

"Two-eighteen," Rogotzke said. "We're getting back to syrup."

Which was a good thing to be getting back to on an April morning in the north woods.

Sam Cook is a thoughtful old tracker who writes for the Duluth News Tribune (Duluth, Minn.).

Bruce Weber is all smiles (and you would be too!) as he hefts a magnificent 37 1/2-inch steelhead from the Salmon River.

Spring Steelhead

Annual migration yields some of Idaho's best fishing

By James J. Krunich
Times-News correspondent

Idaho's steelhead are on the move, heading upstream to where they were spawned. As of Tuesday, the Pahsimeroi Hatchery had 2,455 fish within its confines. The Sawtooth Hatchery, near Redfish Lake and the most-distant hatchery from the Pacific Ocean, had received 993 fish by Tuesday.

The fish are in the river. The trick is to catch one.

Popular fly patterns vary, but no one should make a Salmon River trek without a variety of egg patterns. Stick with natural egg colors, such as red or orange, but also toss in a pink few flies. Remember that egg patterns can be tied in numerous ways, sometimes as a double egg pattern or with flashy material added to attract additional attention. The most-popular sizes are in the 4 to 6 range, but bring a selection so you'll have what they're biting.

Traditional patterns such as green-butted skunks always are useful, but leech patterns tied in various colors also should be in the fly boxes. You can never have too many patterns because you never know what the steelhead will be eating on any specific day.

Rods for Salmon River steelhead must have enough backbone to cast flies and some additional weight. The rod also must be able to withstand the strain of a large, powerful fish. At a minimum, a good steelhead rod must be a fairly fast to fast action 7 weight; an 8-weight rod is probably ideal if the angler is limited to one rod under a variety of conditions.

A stout rod and a sturdy reel are essential if you're trying to land a big steelhead.

Reels for this demanding sport must have a reliable drag since steelhead are strong fish that can rip yards of line off a reel in a heartbeat. The reel must function smoothly because any restriction of line spells disaster when you're fighting a big fish and a strong current. If you're under-powered, the leader will break or the hook will pull out.

Neoprene waders are ideal for spring steelhead fishing because the water is cool; waders made of other materials require bulky layering

Wild turkeys provide Idaho hunters unique challenges

By Roger Phillips
The Idaho Statesman

BOISE – There is no better time than now to hunt wild turkeys in Idaho.

After years of aggressive transplanting, turkeys are flourishing and providing hunters a unique opportunity to hunt birds in the spring. The general hunting season opens April 15 and runs through May 25 in most units in central and western Idaho.

Hunters are allowed two turkeys during the season, however, they cannot harvest a second turkey until May 10.

Idaho Department of Fish and Game first introduced wild turkeys in 1961 near Riggins and held the first hunting season in 1967. The department has continued transplanting turkeys around the state, and lots of vacant habitat combined with recent mild winters and favor-

Fish & Game, club transplant Seven Devils mountain goats

BOISE (AP) – The Big Mallard Creek area near the Salmon River has a new herd of mountain goats transplanted by the Idaho Department of Fish and Game and the local Safari Club International chapter.

Those members recently helped state biologists capture and radio-collar 11 goats near Riggins. The Inland Empire chapter also donated five aluminum crates to ship the goats throughout the state.

"It's very satisfying to work alongside others who are so dedicated to helping wildlife," chapter president Roly Weinhandl said.

The goats were moved from the Seven Devils Mountains, an area noted for its prolific mountain goat herd, and released in the Big Mallard Creek drainage near Dixie, a relatively unoccupied, yet high-quality habitat for them.

After being darted with tranquilizers from a helicopter, the goats were blindfolded, hobbled and quickly slung to a lower elevation where Fish and Game wildlife health technician Julie Mulholland measured their temperature and pulse.

A group of Safari Club volunteers helped her by documenting the information, cooled the animals with ice and labeled the collected blood, saliva and fecal samples. They will be analyzed for various bacterial or viral diseases.

The goats received ear tags and were fitted with radio collars so their movements can be monitored and the transplant success evaluated. The animals were inoculated to deter infections and parasites.

Finally, a chemical to reverse the tranquilizers was given and the captives were gently placed into transport crates.

Forest Service personnel and Fish and Game conservation officer Larry Willmott released them the same day.

"Projects like this are very important in securing the future of trophy species like mountain goats," said wildlife biologist George Pauley, who oversaw the operation.

Idaho's mountain goat population has declined from a high of 3,000 in 1995 to a current low of 2,400. Fluctuations are normal, but recovery can be enhanced by moving them into unoccupied habitat.

CSI offers whitewater safety course

The Times-News

TWIN FALLS – Anyone interested in a weekend of whitewater safety and river rescue instruction should mark their calendar for April 21-22. The College of Southern Idaho's Outdoor Program is offering a course for guides and serious river runners. The lead instructor is Les Bechdel, who is a nationally recognized expert in the field; certification is available.

The cost is $160 per person. Anyone interested must attend an orientation at 1 p.m. on April 20. For more information, call 733-9554, extension 2697.

Montana bird watcher follows his favorite fowl

KALISPELL, Montana (AP) – For Dan Casey, birdwatching is more than just a pleasant way to get outside and commune with nature; it's his life.

Last week, as he often does, Casey spent a morning with local senior citizens, pointing out the arrival of swans and pintail ducks. In winter, he leads hawk-viewing trips to Ninepipe, and in summer, he focuses on songbirds.

Later this month, Casey will take a Flathead Audubon group to Freezeout Lake, near Choteau, to witness the annual stopover of 200,000-300,000 migrating snow geese.

"It's really a spectacle," he says. "They all arrive and leave together."

In spite of all this field activity, Casey these days spends much of his time deskbound in Kalispell, coping with 50 e-mails a day, and attending meetings around the state and country.

After 16.5 years with the Montana Department of Fish, Wildlife and Parks, Casey last year took "a new job for the new millennium." He is the first American Bird Conservancy coordinator for the Northern Rockies Bird Conservation Region. The region includes western Wyoming, western Montana, Idaho, British Columbia and parts of Washington and Oregon.

Casey jokes that he is "a designated meeting-goer."

More seriously, he describes himself as "a behind-the-scenes guy. I try to help local partnerships get their own projects done."

Currently, he is writing a grant for a riparian-habitat project on the Missouri River near Cascade.

A junior high science teacher in Casey's hometown in New Jersey sparked his fascination with birds when he was a teen-ager. He lived in a wooded area that was favored by migrant birds.

When it was time for college, Casey chose Colorado State University, "out of curiosity, more than anything." By 1979, he had earned both a bachelor's and a master's degree in wildlife biology with an emphasis in ornithology.

He had hoped to work for the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, helping maintain favorable habitat for birds. But instead, he joined a Denver environmental consulting firm, where he studied prospective mine sites. He did bird surveys, small-animal trapping and mapping of wildlife habitats, as required for mine permits.

Casey and his wife, Susannah, whom he married in 1982, decided they didn't want to live in Denver, so he applied to the Montana Department of Fish, Wildlife and Parks. By 1983, he was in Kalispell, working on a nine-month analysis of habitat loss resulting from the construction of Hungry Horse Dam. The findings served as a basis for mitigation work later.

Casey then moved on to a study of the effects of Kerr and Hungry Horse dams on the goose population. The study, ranging from Bad Rock Canyon to the north shore of Flathead Lake, indicated that, if anything, Hungry Horse Dam was helping the geese.

That was followed by research on eagle and osprey nests.

"You learn things that aren't what you started out to investigate," Casey commented.

Geese, he discovered, often nest in osprey nests before the osprey arrive in spring. He found one goose guarding her eggs atop a 113-foot tree. The goslings, he said, jump out of their nests the second day after hatching and sort of float down to earth.

Sometimes an eagle and a goose would squabble over a nest – and the goose would win, simply by being so defensive that the eagle would give up and build a new nest.

Casey was a member of a large team that spent a couple of years on the relicensing of Kerr Dam. Participants included Fish, Wildlife and Parks, Montana Power Co. and the Confederated Salish-Kootenai Tribes.

The work resulted in creation of the Lost Trail National Wildlife Refuge in Pleasant Valley. Montana Power bought the land and turned it over to the state in mitigation for lost habitat on Flathead Lake.

Companies like Montana Power Co. and Plum Creek Timber Co., as well as the Forest Service, have cooperated in "some neat things" related to habitat preservation, according to Casey.

He takes particular pride in a timber sale and prescribed fire plan to improve elk range on Firefighter Mountain along Hungry Horse Reservoir. The idea was to create openings for elk in the dense forest.

Selective cutting and burning were carried out on 700 acres in many small units.

"It was one of the few timber sales on the Flathead National Forest that was not appealed," Casey said, and the elk population has responded in the 10 years since.

A couple of studies of nongame birds on national forest lands led to improving habitat for birds, particularly by leaving snags that many species like.

"All breeding birds are a good monitor of habitat health," Casey observes.

"If you don't have the specific thing a bird needs, you don't have the bird."

Turkey

able spring weather have allowed turkeys to flourish.

Interest in turkey hunting has been growing dramatically in the past decade. Fish and Game sold 28,733 turkey tags last year, and hunters harvested a record 4,862 birds. By comparison, the department sold 5,769 tags in 1990, and hunters harvested about 200 birds that year. Larry Lansdowne of Idaho City remembers his first contact with an Idaho turkey. Years ago, he was elk hunting and heard an animal moving through the brush. Expecting an elk, he was dismayed when a large bird walked into view.

"I had never seen a turkey in the wild before," Lansdowne said. "It was kind of an odd deal." He called the state wildlife office, and a biologist verified the department had transplanted wild turkeys in the area he was hunting.

The encounter piqued Lansdowne's curiosity, and he set out to learn more about turkeys. Unfortunately, he could not find even the most basic turkey hunting equipment in Boise.

He rounded up some calls from a friend in Louisiana and started learning to call the birds. A couple years later, Fish and Game offered a clinic on turkey hunting, and Lansdowne attended.

"That was the first time I was around people who had firsthand knowledge of turkeys and calling," he said.

He went out that year and tried turkey hunting for the first time.

"They got the best of me, but I did harvest a turkey," he said. "Ever since then, it's been a total addiction."

Lansdowne continued hunting turkeys and studying the birds.

"The first three years were complete trial and error," he said. "As soon as you think you've got them figured out, they show you just how wrong you are."

Lansdowne has seen interest in turkey hunting explode since the days when calls were nonexistent in Boise. Now almost all sporting goods stores sell turkey hunting calls, clothing, guns and accessories. Lansdowne teaches clinics every week where he works at Sunset Sports in Boise.

Most hunters agree the ethical, safe and sporting method of hunting turkeys is calling them. Spotting and stalking turkeys is legal, and so is shooting them out of a tree, but those methods are not considered ethical, according to the Idaho Fish and Game Department and the National Wild Turkey Federation.

Last year, the clinics attracted about 12 to 20 people each time. This year, 50 to 70 people per week pack in to his clinics.

Jim Peterson of Boise is one hunter who is going to try turkey hunting for the first time this spring. "It's a way to extend the regular hunting season," he said.

Peterson was invited on a turkey hunt in Alabama, where he hopes to learn more about the birds before returning to Idaho to hunt. He is learning the art of calling turkeys, which he said provides as much enjoyment as trying to shoot one.

Most hunters agree the ethical, safe and sporting method of hunting turkeys is calling them. Spotting and stalking turkeys is legal, and so is shooting them out of a tree, but those methods are not considered ethical, according to the Idaho Fish and Game Department and the National Wild Turkey Federation.

Paul Waldon, president of the Gem State Chapter of the National Wild Turkey Federation, encourages people to learn about calling and use that method rather than wandering through the woods looking for turkeys.

"Turkey hunting is not a deep-rooted tradition here," Waldon said. "We want to send people out to do it the right way."

Most turkey hunters select a spot near a turkey roost, then set out a decoy or decoys and position themselves where they have a clear line of fire. Then they try to call in a male turkey.

Lansdowne says the most common mistakes beginning hunters make are being impatient and poorly equipped. Full camouflage clothing, a shotgun that will shoot a tight pattern, and a variety of calls are the basic equipment for turkey hunting. Lansdowne recommends that hunters attend a turkey hunting clinic to learn the basics, then strive to learn more about the birds in the field.

"Every time you're out there, it will be a learning experience," he said. "Even if you hunt in the same place every day, you're going to learn something new every time."

He encourages people to test their shotguns before the season to ensure they are patterning correctly. Most gun manufacturers offer shotguns built specifically for turkey hunting. Special shotgun loads designed for turkey hunting also are available.

Steelhead

underneath. The added bulk makes for clumsy and awkward wading, which is bad news when you're astream. Felt-soled wading boots are good, but felt-soled boots with studs are the wisest choice. The studs provide much more traction on wet, slippery rocks.

Once you have all your gear together, the last major consideration is finding the steelhead.

Because steelhead are steadily moving upstream, they will be dispersed throughout the river. Steelhead often move out of the heavier current to rest in deeper holes before resuming their journey to spawning sites.

In terms of the "depths," some depths are more productive than others. Logic dictates that the fish will be tired after navigating a long series of rapids. For this reason, steelhead will frequently be concentrated in the first or second deep pool immediately above a long series of rapids. Concentrate on these locations, not every deep pool in the river.

Another tactic is to find the back of a pool where the water is shallow, then watch with polarized glasses as steelhead move upstream. Very often, the fish will hang at the back of the pool before moving into deeper water. This is an ideal opportunity to sight cast to a specific fish.

Another good ploy is to locate spawning gravel and look then for redds. Fish on the spawning redds are relatively easy to spot on sunny days because they are darker than the riverbed. Don't waste your time on cloudy days.

Try scanning the river slowly and methodically, foot by foot, when the sun is shining. Be smooth, because the fish are edgy and will bolt at the slightest hint of trouble.

New phys ed classes goes outside

BEAVERTON, Ore. (AP) – Instead of calisthenics and wind sprints, a new physical education class tests students' skills at casting with fly rods, ice skating, rock climbing, fencing and rafting the Deschutes River.

"It's great because you get out of the school and get to learn something new," said Laura Forrest, a junior at Westview High School.

Still uncommon in the Portland area, such outdoor recreation classes are catching on across the country as fitness experts push schools to teach sports that will stick with students for a lifetime.

"We get away from the everyday scene of lining up for roll call, stretching and running," said Jeff Shull, a Westview teacher who helped create the class when the school reworked its physical education program two years ago.

Now Shull has two outdoor recreation classes, with nearly 30 students each.

"This class challenges inhibitions and builds confidence like nothing else," said Shull, who admits he has had to get in shape for these classes.

From backpacking and wilderness survival to mountain biking and in-line skating, outdoor recreation classes can connect students with a school's natural surroundings. But at Westview, students are bused to activities – a financial burden that might keep other schools from starting similar classes.

"There are a lot of reasons that districts may be hesitant about these classes. Transportation, cost and liability are just a few," said Margaret Bates, an education specialist in physical education for the Oregon Department of Education.

"But nationwide," she said, "this is where P.E. is going."

Westview's outdoor recreation class is offered as an elective that students can take after passing an introductory physical education class that most students take in their first years at the school.

But the half-credit class is expensive. Last year, students were charged about $150. This year, the school helped pay, and students shelled out only $75. Shull hopes to apply for a grant that would eliminate the fee.

Fencing is the most recent addition to Westview's outdoor recreation curriculum. Classes are held two or three times a week at the Northwest Fencing Center in Beaverton, a 10-minute drive that students can make during Westview's 95-minute class periods.

The focus on new experiences helps students who have tired of sports such as volleyball and basketball. "I don't like team sports because I don't like depending on other people or being blamed if the whole team does something wrong," Forrest said.

Fitness experts say that when physical education programs move from team sports, students who don't consider themselves athletes may get more involved.

"We try to show kids that you don't have to be competitive to exercise," said Bane McCracken, a physical education teacher from Milton, W.Va. McCracken's book, "It's Not Just Gym Anymore," was recently published.

A mountain bike course McCracken designed has grown into a national model for outdoor education that includes archery, downhill skiing and wilderness survival. "Old-style P.E. was geared more to athletes, but a lot of kids aren't athletic," McCracken said. "Now we teach things that kids can use long after they leave school."

Westview's new class already has provided an interest that may last Forrest a lifetime. The 17-year-old fell in love with fencing after her first match last spring.

She now practices several times a week for as long as five hours at a time. She hopes the skill will lead to a college scholarship, and she plans to fence after she graduates.

Officials consider looking for energy under Great Lakes

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON – As President Bush calls for more domestic oil and natural gas drilling, some people are looking to the Great Lakes, the nation's largest supply of freshwater, as a possible power source.

A small amount of oil and gas already is being extracted from seven sites along the Michigan shoreline. The eight Great Lakes states have kept energy companies from digging for more, but Michigan and Ohio officials now are discussing changing their policies.

"The fact is there is an energy shortage out there and the technology is out there," said Lynne Boyd of the Michigan Department of Natural Resources. "The time is now."

Environmentalists say the lakes should not be threatened for what could turn out to be a relatively small amount of oil and gas. They say a drilling accident could foul drinking water supplies for millions and disrupt fishing, tourism and other industries.

"We don't need to be causing environmental damage to our Great Lakes for a short-term solution," said Tanya Cabala of the Lake Michigan Federation. "And really it will be the oil companies that will benefit from it, it won't be the people."

The debate over drilling in the Great Lakes is not new, but there are new pressures as Bush warns of an impending energy shortage.

Environmentalists and their friends in Congress strongly oppose the president's plan to drill in the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge in Alaska, so the Bush administration has been looking elsewhere. Protected lands in the Rocky Mountains are now under consideration.

Experts believe there are between 5.6 billion and 16 billion barrels of oil under the Alaskan refuge, and perhaps enough natural gas under the Rockies to supply the country for six years.

No one is sure how much is under the Great Lakes.

Since the first well was drilled under Lake Michigan in 1979, only 438,000 barrels of oil and 17.7 billion cubic feet of natural gas have been produced, a fraction of what is produced in the United States each day.

Energy Secretary Spencer Abraham has not said whether he supports Great Lakes drilling, though he opposed it last year when he campaigned for the Senate in Michigan, where opinion polls show most voters don't like the idea. When asked about it during his confirmation hearing, Abraham would only say it's important to balance energy needs with environmental concerns.

The Great Lakes states – New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Illinois, Michigan, Indiana, Wisconsin and Minnesota – do not allow drilling from rigs on the water, although Canada allows some drilling on its side.

It is up to each state to decide whether to allow drilling to reach deposits under the lake from the shore. Michigan is the only state that allows it.

Drilling down and over

Amid calls for increased domestic production of oil and natural gas to offset the nation's energy crisis, some people are looking to largely untapped reserves beneath the Great Lakes. While offshore drilling is employed on the Canadian side of Lake Erie, the practice is not permitted on parts of the lakes within U.S. territory. Michigan, however, allows onshore rigs to drill down and horizontally to extract oil and gas from under Lake Huron and Lake Michigan.

Report: Utility gouged users

The Associated Press

LOS ANGELES – Private power wholesalers have been blamed for driving up California's electricity prices but even government-owned utilities allegedly manipulated the market, maximizing profits and inflaming the energy crisis, according to a document obtained by the Los Angeles Times.

The document shows that the power providers, including the Los Angeles Depart ment of Water and Power, influenced the spiraling costs of wholesale electricity between May and November 2000.

The DWP was eighth on the list of alleged price gougers for seeking high prices during periods of high demand, which helped inflate costs across the entire spot market, the document said.

The document decodes the identities of unnamed power providers in a recent study by the California Independent System Operator.

DWP General Manager S. David Freeman called the findings "outrageous. We have consistently charged (CISO) our cost plus 15 percent," Freeman said.

In addition to the DWP, the document singles out two other government-run agencies that it said consistently inflated prices: the federally owned Bonneville Power Administration in the Pacific Northwest, and the trading arm of Canada's BC Hydro in British Columbia.

STATE OF IDAHO) ) ss COUNTY OF TWIN FALLS)

YOU ARE HEREBY NOTIFIED, that a delinquent entry was entered as of January 1, 1998, in the records of the County Treasurer as Tax Collector of Twin Falls County, State of Idaho, for the following property, and that said delinquent entry was made in respect of unpaid taxes assessed for the year 1997.

YOU ARE FURTHER NOTIFIED, that if said delinquent entry is not redeemed on or before February 28, 2001, by payment of said unpaid taxes together with late charge, interest and all unpaid costs and expenses up to the date of said notice at my office at Twin Falls County Courthouse, I shall thereupon, as required by law, make application to the Board of County Commissioners of Twin Falls County, State of Idaho, for a hearing to be held on May 18, 2001, at 10:00 A.M., or as soon thereafter as said application can be heard at County Commissioners Office, for a tax deed conveying the following described property to said Twin Falls County, State of Idaho, absolute title, free of all encumbrances, except any lien for taxes which may have attached subsequently to the assessment herein referred to.

YOU ARE FURTHER NOTIFIED, that the record owner or owners or any party in interest as defined by Section 63-1005, Idaho Code, may appear in person or by counsel, and if appearing, shall have adequate opportunity to be heard for the purpose of protesting the procedures used in taking this tax deed. NO OTHER TYPE OF PROTEST WILL BE HEARD.

YOU ARE FURTHER NOTIFIED, that inquiries and objections concerning this notice or the information contained therein shall be directed to the Twin Falls County Treasurer at 425 Shoshone St. N., Twin Falls, ID 83301; or by calling (208) 736-4008 no later than 5 working days before the hearing date.

NOTICE OF TRUSTEE'S SALE

On Friday, the 27th day of July, 2001, at the hour of 10:00 o'clock a.m. of said day (recognized local time), at Twin Falls County Courthouse, located at 425 Shoshone St. N., Twin Falls, ID 83303, in the County of Twin Falls, State of Idaho, Michael L. Schindele, as Successor Trustee, will sell at public auction, to the highest bidder, for cash, in lawful money of the United States, all payable at the time of the sale, the following described real property, situated in the County of Twin Falls, State of Idaho, and described as follows, to-wit:

Lot 2 in Block 1 of VILLA DEL RIO ESTATES, Twin Falls County, Idaho, recorded in Book 12 of Plats, Page 30.

The Trustee has no knowledge of a more particular description of the above-referenced real property, but for purposes of compliance with Idaho Code, Section 60-113 Idaho Code, the Trustee has been informed that the address of 1730 Camarillo Way, Twin Falls, ID 83301 may sometimes be associated with said real property.

Said sale will be made without covenant or warranty regarding title, possession or encumbrances to satisfy the obligation secured by and pursuant to the power of sale conferred in the Deed of Trust executed by REX ALLEN BURNETT, a divorced man, as Grantor(s), to TitleFact, Inc., as Trustee, Michael L. Schindele, as Successor Trustee, for the benefit and security of The Associates Financial Services Co., Inc., as Beneficiary, said Deed of Trust dated December 28, 1999, and recorded December 29, 1999, as Instrument No. 1999022781, Mortgage Records of Twin Falls County, Idaho.

THE ABOVE GRANTORS ARE NAMED TO COMPLY WITH SECTION 45-1506(4)(A) IDAHO CODE. NO REPRESENTATION IS MADE THAT THEY ARE, OR ARE NOT, PRESENTLY RESPONSIBLE FOR THIS OBLIGATION.

The default for which this sale is to be made is the failure to pay when due, under Deed of Trust dated December 28, 1999, the monthly payments for principal, interest and impounds of $959.08, for the month(s) of July 15, 2000, through the current month and year, and all subsequent payments until the date of sale or reinstatement with all accrued interest, late charges and expenses. The principal balance owing as of this date on the obligation secured by said Deed of Trust is $78,899.71, plus accruing interest. All delinquent payments are now due, together with accruing late charges and interest, unpaid and accruing taxes, assessments, trustee's fees, attorney's fees, and any amounts advanced to protect the security associated with this foreclosure and that the Beneficiary elects to sell or cause the trust property to be sold to satisfy said obligation.

c. Date Filed: February 7, 2001
d. Applicant: City of Twin Falls, Idaho
e. Name of Project: Auger Falls Project
f. Location: On the Snake River, in Twin Falls County, Idaho. No federal facilities or land would be used.
g. Filed Pursuant to: Federal Power Act, 16 U.S.C. §§791(a) - 825(r)
h. Applicant Contact: Mr. Tom Courtney, City Manager, 321 Second Avenue East, PO Box 1907, Twin Falls, ID 83303-1907, (208) 735-7271
i. FERC Contact: Any questions on this notice should be addressed to Robert Bell at (202) 219-2806
j. Deadline Date: 60 days from the issuance date of this notice.
k. Competing Application: Project No. 11871-000, Date Filed: January 11, 2001, Due Date: April 12, 1999.

All documents (original and eight copies) should be filed with: David P. Boergers, Secretary, Federal Energy Regulatory Commission, 888 First Street, NE, Washington, DC 20426. Comments, recommendations, interventions, and protests may be electronically filed via the Internet in lieu of paper. See, 18 CFR 385.2001(a)(1)(iii) and the instructions on the Commission's web site at: http://www.ferc.fed.us/efi/doorbell.htm

The Commission's Rules of Practice and Procedure require all interveners filing documents with the Commission to serve a copy of that document on each person in the official service list for the project. Further, if an intervener files comments or documents with the Commission relating to the merits of an issue that may affect the responsibilities of a particular resource agency, they must also serve a copy of the document on that resource agency.

l. Description of Project: The proposed project would consist of: (1) a proposed 340-long, 12-foot-high concrete diversion structure; (2) a proposed impoundment having a surface area of 50 acres with negligible storage and a normal water surface elevation of 2,118 feet msl; (3) a three proposed 670-foot-long, 12-foot-diameter steel penstocks; (4) a proposed powerhouse containing three generating units having a total installed capacity of 43.6 MW; (5) a proposed 0.75-mile-long, 138 kV transmission line; and (6) appurtenant facilities.

Applicant estimates that the average annual generation would be 157.6 GWh and would be sold to local utility.

m. Locations of the application: A copy of the application is available for inspection and reproduction at the Commission's Public Reference Room, located at 888 First Street, NE, Washington, DC 20426, or by calling (202) 208-1371. This filing may be viewed on the web at http://www.ferc.fed.us/online/rims.htm (Call (202) 208-2222 for assistance). A copy is also available for inspection and reproduction at the address in item h above.

n. Preliminary Permit - Public notice of the filing of the initial preliminary permit application, which has already been given, established the due date for filing competing preliminary permit applications or notices of intent. Any competing preliminary permit or development application or notice of intent to file a competing preliminary permit or development application must be filed in response to and in compliance with the public notice of the initial preliminary permit application. No competing applications or notices of intent to file competing applications may be filed in response to this notice. A competing license application must conform with 18 CFR 4.30 (b) and 4.36.

o. Proposed Scope of Studies under Permit -- A preliminary permit, if issued, does not authorize construction. The term of the proposed preliminary permit would be 36 months. The work proposed under the preliminary permit would include economic analysis, preparation of preliminary engineering plans, and a study of environmental impacts. Based on the results of these studies, the Applicant would decide whether to proceed with the preparation of a development application to construct and operate the project.

p. Comments, Protests, or Motions to Intervene - Anyone may submit comments, a protest, or a motion to intervene in accordance with the requirements of Rules of Practice and Procedure, 18 CFR 385.210, .211, .214. In determining the appropriate action to take, the Commission will consider all protests or other comments filed, but only those who file a motion to intervene in accordance with the Commissioner's Rules may become a party to the proceeding. Any comments, protests, or motions to intervene must be received on or before the specified comment date for the particular application.

q. Filing and Service of Responsive Documents-- Any filings must bear in all capital letters the title "COMMENTS", "NOTICE OF INTENT TO FILE COMPETING APPLICATION", "COMPETING APPLICATION", "PROTEST" AND "MOTION TO INTERVENE", as applicable, and the Project Number of the particular application to which the filing refers. Any of the above-named documents must be filed by providing the original and the number of copies provided by the Commission's regulations to: The Secretary, Federal Energy Regulatory Commission, 888 First Street, N.E., Washington, D.C. 20426. An additional copy must be sent to Director, Division of Project Review, Federal Energy Regulatory Commission, at the above-mentioned address. A copy of any notice of intent, competing application or motion to intervene must also be served upon each representative of the Applicant specified in the particular application.

r. Agency Comments-- Federal, state, and local agencies are invited to file comments on the described application. A copy of the application may be obtained by agencies directly from the Applicant. If an agency does not file comments within the time specified for filing comments, it will be presumed to have no comments. One copy of an agency's comments must also be sent to the Applicant's representatives.

NOTICE OF TRUSTEE'S SALE

On the 31st day of July, 2001, at the hour of 10:00 A.M., of said day, (recognized local time), in the Office of, First American Title Company, 260 3rd Avenue North, Twin Falls, in the County of Twin Falls, State of Idaho, First American Title Company of Idaho, Inc., an Idaho Corporation, as successor trustee, will sell at public auction, to the highest bidder, for cash, in lawful money of the United States, all payable at the time of sale, the following described real property, situated in the County of Twin Falls, State of Idaho, and described as follows, to-wit:

Lot 10 in Block A HIGGINS SUBDIVISION, Twin Falls County, Idaho, according to the plat thereof, recorded in Book 6 of Plats, page 17, records of said County.

The Trustee has no knowledge of a more particular description of the above referenced real property, but for purposes of compliance with Section 60-113 Idaho Code, the Trustee has been informed that according to the County Assessors office, the address of 465 Heyburn Avenue West, Twin Falls, Idaho, is sometimes associated with said real property.

Said sale will be made without covenant or warranty regarding title, possession or encumbrances to satisfy the obligation secured by and pursuant to the power of sale conferred in the deed of trust executed by MATTHEW S. SHELTON, a married man as his sole and separate property, as grantor, to FIRST AMERICAN TITLE COMPANY OF IDAHO, INC., an Idaho Corporation, as successor trustee, for the benefit and security of Oncall Mortgage aka Crossland Mortgage Corp., as beneficiary, recorded April 30, 1998, as Instrument No. 1998008081, and assigned to NORWEST BANK MINNESOTA, NATIONAL ASSOCIATION, as Indenture Trustee for registered holders of American Residential Eagle Bond Trust 1999-1, as beneficiary, by assignment recorded November 22, 1999, as Instrument No. 1999020770, Mortgage Records of Twin Falls County, Idaho.

THE ABOVE GRANTORS ARE NAMED TO COMPLY WITH SECTION 45-1506(4)(A), IDAHO CODE, NO REPRESENTATION IS MADE THAT THEY ARE, OR ARE NOT, PRESENTLY RESPONSIBLE FOR THIS OBLIGATION.

The default for which this sale is to be made is the failure to pay when due, under Deed of Trust Note, the monthly payments for Principal, Interest and Impounds of $742.58, due per month for the months of November, December, 2000 and January, 2001 and all subsequent payments until the date of sale or reinstatement, with a monthly late charge accruing at $37.13, uncollected late charges are due in the amount of $276.96, with interest accruing at an adjustable rate, the current rate is 13% per annum, and continuing to accrue from October 1, 2000. Also due are beneficial advances of $100, and delinquent and unpaid taxes for 1999 and 2000. The principal balance owing as of this date on the obligation secured by said Deed of Trust is $66,609.49, plus accruing interest, costs and advances. All delinquent amounts are now due, together with accruing late charges and interest, unpaid and accruing taxes, assessments, trustee's fees, attorney's fees, and any amounts advanced to protect the security associated with this foreclosure and that the beneficiary elects to sell or cause the trust property to be sold to satisfy said obligation.

Opening lead: Diamond deuce

Today's East was a man of action. The kibitzers leaned closer to the table after his startling play at trick two. However, when the game was defeated, the reasons for East's decisive play became clear to all.

West's led the diamond deuce, East winning his king when South ducked in dummy. What was East's next move? He cashed the club ace!

To appreciate why, one must review the information available to East. West's lead, coupled with South's duck in dummy, strongly suggested that South had two diamonds, most probably including the queen. South's bidding told East the rest. His rebid in hearts, after North's preference to spades, confirmed five cards in each major. And since South had two diamonds, he could hold no more than one club. Clearly, it was now or never to cash the club ace.

A passive East would not have defeated the game. Assuming East exits in spades at trick two, South refuses the finesse and wins his ace. After he cashes his diamond queen, he crosses to dummy's trump ace to unload his losing club. Now he can afford to surrender his two major-suit losers and still make his game.

Might South have held three diamonds and a void in clubs? Possible, but very unlikely. In that case, West may well have led a "top-of-nothing" diamond rather than the deuce.
