MEN WITHOUT HOMES

LISA M. COLLARD/The Times-News

Drew Layne, 43, joins a friend in Twin Falls City Park to find shelter for the evening. Layne, who calls himself a professional tramp, has been homeless and living on the road for more than 20 years. 'Lots of people are just a paycheck away from my life,' Layne said. 'They really need a shelter with beds around here, some people really need it, especially the ones who don't know how to survive out here.'

Experts: They're the 'forgotten homeless'

By Sandy Miller
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS – Some are just passing through.

Others just seem to be drifting, their spirits broken by alcoholism, drug addiction, mental illness or nightmares of wars past.

Homeless men often don't draw the same compassion from people as women and families.

"Historically, the single male has been seen as the stereotypical bum, sometimes with good reason, and viewed generally with more suspicion than other homeless people as a whole," said Steve Hammett, charities coordinator and community services liaison at St. Edward the Confessor Catholic Parish. "Because of those things, homeless men are the group for whom there are the least community resources."

There are homeless men in Twin Falls, but they often keep a low profile.

Ken Robinette, executive director of the South Central Community Action Agency, remembers what it was like back in 1979 when he first came to the agency.

"A lot of people back then thought they were eyesores," Robinette said. "A lot of the folks who were homeless weren't visi-

Homelessness facts

Facts about homelessness

- Single homeless adults are more likely to be male than female. Single men comprise 45 percent of the urban homeless population; single women, 14 percent.
- Research indicates that 40 percent of homeless men have served in the armed forces, as compared to 34 percent of the general adult male population. A survey of 30 American cities found that 22 percent of the urban homeless population was made up of veterans.
- About 20 to 25 percent of the single adult homeless population suffers from some form of severe and persistent mental illness. According to the Federal Task Force on Homelessness and Severe Mental Illness, only 5 percent to 7 percent of homeless persons with mental illness require institutionalization; most can live in the community with the appropriate supportive housing options.
- While there is no generally accepted "magic number" with respect to the prevalence of addiction disorders among homeless adults, the frequently cited figure of about 65 percent is probably at least double the real rate for current addiction disorders among all single adults who are homeless in a year.

Where to go for help

The South Central Community Action Agency at 726 Shoshone St. W. has a number of programs to help the homeless. If the agency can't help, it can refer people to other agencies that can. To learn more: Stop by the agency between 8 and 11:30 a.m. or between 1 and 4:30 p.m. Monday through Friday or call SCCAA at 733-9351.

Homeless task force seeks more shelter space

By Sandy Miller
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS – A local task force says what the homeless in Twin Falls really need now is more short-term shelter and weekend meals.

Social workers, church leaders and their spirits concerned about the issue formed a task force several months ago to better coordinate services to the homeless and to look at their needs.

One of the ideas discussed was a shelter for homeless men, but it has been put on the backburner for the time being. With Valley House becoming more of a long-term transitional shelter, the task force has identified a need for more emergency shelter not only for homeless men, but for women, children and families, too.

"We need to address the needs of a more transient population who need short-term shelter," said Steve Hammett, charities coordinator and community services liaison at St. Edward the Confessor Catholic Parish and a member of the task force.

He said the task force has decided to take a three-pronged approach:

- Pooling resources: The task force is looking at how agencies and churches can combine to make better use of the dollars being spent on motel rooms to house the homeless for short periods of time.
- Finding more space: The task force is looking at providing short-term shelter in church halls and gymnasiums which would be staffed by volunteers.
- A brick and mortar emergency shelter: The task force is looking into buying or leasing a building for a shelter.

The homeless task force is also looking at ways to provide weekend meals for the homeless. The Salvation Army and St. Edward's Catholic Church serve meals during the week, but many homeless people go hungry on the weekends.

"It involves asking different groups and churches to sponsor it on Saturdays," Hammett said. "They would take turns providing food, serving it and cleaning up."

How to help

A task force has been formed to improve services for the homeless in Magic Valley. Those interested in helping can call Phyllis Berg at 735-8787.

Cops nab man in missing girl case

He's in W. Virginia hospital following drug overdose

The Associated Press

SALT LAKE CITY – Bret Michael Edmunds, wanted for questioning in the abduction of Elizabeth Smart, was arrested Friday in West Virginia, where he is in a Martinsburg hospital being treated for a drug overdose and liver failure.

As nurses went through his belongings to find family to notify of his condition, they became suspicious and contacted the FBI, said hospital spokeswoman Teresa McCabe. Agents came to the hospital and confirmed his identity about 3 p.m. Friday.

Three other patients in the intensive care unit have been moved to other areas of the hospital and the unit is "locked down," McCabe said.

Edmunds was conscious, but he will not be moved from the hospital until his condition is stabilized, said Mike Claxton, chief deputy with the U.S. Marshal's Service in Clarksburg, W.Va.

Edmunds checked into the hospital Thursday and was moved to intensive care. He has been in and out of consciousness, said Salt Lake City Police Chief Rick Dinse.

"We are anxious to look at him in all aspects of this case to find out if he's a suspect," Dinse said.

His medical condition is precarious, however. "There is a possibility that he could be criti-

Newest lie detectors put honesty to test

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON – The world is becoming a trickier place for people who tell lies – even little white ones.

From thermal-imaging cameras, designed to read guilty eyes, to brain-wave scanners, which essentially watch a lie in motion, the technology of truth-seeking is leaping forward.

At the same time, more people are finding their words put to the test, especially those who work for the government.

FBI agents, themselves subjected to more polygraphs as a result of the Robert Hanssen spy case, have been administering lie detection tests at Fort Detrick, Md., and Dugway Proving Ground in Utah, bases with stores of anthrax. Nuclear plant workers also are getting the tests in

'Watch out' – wind-whipped fires gobble up Arizona, Colorado homes

The Associated Press

SHOW LOW, Ariz. – Fanned by blowtorch winds, two explosive wildfires took double-barreled aim at Arizona mountain towns Friday as firefighters desperately cleared brush and doused homes with flame-retardant foam.

The frantic work was being done in Clay Springs and Pinedale, where the 128,000-acre Rodeo fire had already destroyed at least a dozen homes. Officials feared the blaze would merge with a fast-moving, 15,000-acre fire farther west, creating an even bigger challenge for already overwhelmed firefighters.

Temperatures rose into the high 80s, and wind gusts neared 45 mph with low humidity. Officials said the mix of weather and bone-dry trees was a recipe for an inferno.

"The forest is burning like you're pouring gasoline on it, and the wind is like taking a blowtorch to it," fire spokesman Jim Paxon said in Show Low, 10 miles east of the threatened towns. "This fire's going to rear its ugly head again and grow."

He added: "It's a situation that shouts, 'Watch out!' It raises the hair on your skin."

Some 8,000 people have been evacuated from Pinedale, Clay Springs, Linden and a community farther west since Wednesday. An additional 11,000 people in and around Show Low were told to be ready to evacuate.

and Clay Springs have refused to leave, Paxon said. He warned that they could become trapped by flames.

"We will not put firefighters at risk to go in and get them out," he said. "When houses burn, it's too late to try to escape. Those people are going to be pretty well pinned in."

On the first day of summer, the wildfire situation across the West already appeared desperate, in large part because of severe drought. The government's National Interagency Fire Center said 1.99 million acres have burned across the country so far this year – double the 10-year average – and fire officials said their resources were stretched thin.

In Colorado, three wildfires have burned more than 205,000 acres and destroyed at least 141 homes. Thousands of people remained out of their homes.

The Rodeo fire began Tuesday and it has simply exploded, racing through parched stands of pine, juniper and pinon trees right to the edge of Clay Springs and Linden.

Shasta Perkins fled Linden with her sister, brother and parents. They have been holed up since Wednesday in Show Low, awaiting word about their home and whether they may be forced to leave once more.

"You get upset and then you hear a bit of good news and you're joyful for that," she said. "Then you hear something else, and it brings you back down."

"I never thought of losing anything to fire," said her grandfather, Pete Peterson, who has lived in the area for 80 years. "Now you realize we should take northern Arizona right off the map. How are you going to sell black land?"

As they spoke, fire crews dug lines around a canyon southwest of Show Low to try to stop the blaze from reaching the town, which serves as the commercial hub of the area 125 miles northeast of Phoenix.

Authorities hoped the Rodeo fire would not merge with the second fire near Heber-Overgaard, which forced fire crews to abandon their efforts Friday afternoon. That blaze has already forced 4,000 people out of their homes, and crews were trying to stop its spread to the south and west – toward the Rodeo fire, only a few miles away.

The second fire was started by a lost hiker signaling for help. The first also was thought to be man-made, though authorities did not know whether it was an accident or arson.

In southwestern Colorado, wind pushed a fire northeast of Durango to 60,000 acres. Fire officials said it burned 14 more homes, bringing the total estimated lost to 47. More than 1,760 homes have been evacuated.

Some firefighters had to retreat. "They saw some stuff they've never seen before," said Bill Paxton, a fire information officer.

About 70 miles away, another fire grew to 8,000 acres and destroyed 11 homes near the community of South Fork. It has forced 300 people from their homes.

Colorado's biggest fire, the 137,000-acre blaze southwest of Denver, was relatively quiet for a second consecutive day. It has forced 8,900 people from their homes since it began June 8 and destroyed at least 79 homes.

cal to the point where he might not survive," Dinse said.

FBI agents from the Martinsburg field office had Edmunds in custody at the hospital. Agents also were seeking a search warrant for Edmunds' car, which is the same green Saturn he was driving when last seen in Salt Lake City on June 9.

Dinse said the agents have checked the outside of the car and the trunk and found nothing. "Let's say the car was used in the abduction. There might be evidence in the car that could support that," Dinse said.

Investigators from Salt Lake City would fly to West Virginia some time Friday, he said.

Elizabeth was taken at gunpoint from her bedroom in the Federal Heights neighborhood of Salt Lake City on June 5. Her 9-year-old sister, Mary Katherine Smart, was the sole witness to the abduction.

Investigators have been seeking Edmunds since the first few days of the investigation as a possible witness.

Ed Smart's brother Dave Smart reacted cautiously to the news of Edmunds' capture.

"You've heard the term 'emotional roller-coaster,' " Dave Smart said. "We're not going to hang our hats on anything until we have Elizabeth in our hands."

A federal warrant was issued Friday for Edmund's arrest on charges of evading arrest and a probation violation – charges unconnected with the Smart case.

Edmunds has been considered a fugitive since last October.

"All along Mr. Edmunds is someone we've wanted to talk to," Dinse said. "He's a question mark, and we want to put a period on that question mark."

In West Virginia, a federal officer said the hospital staff was tipped off because Edmunds gave inconsistent information.

"He did not give them his correct name. He gave them a lot of information. Some of it was accurate. Some of it was not accurate," Claxton said.

Edmunds was living out of his Saturn sedan and had been seen near the Smart neighborhood, where a milkman was able to partly recite his license plates, police said.

Those plates, stolen from another car, were found last week along a road in Centerville, a suburb north of the city. The car now bears Washington state plates.

CORRECTIONS

A news brief on Thursday gave the incorrect date for an Idaho Youth Ranch open house. The event will be from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. on Saturday, July 13.

A Thursday story on the Hansen School Board incorrectly reported the board's action regarding the district's reserve fund.

The board voted to transfer $50,000 from the reserve fund into the general budget.

The story also incorrectly reported the position Ivory Haraden was hired to fill. Haraden will be the district's special education teacher.

A story Friday incorrectly reported that advance tickets for tonight's monster truck show at the Twin Falls County Fairgrounds are available at Les Schwab Tire Stores. The story also gave incorrect information about Sunday's Kiwanis lunch; it will cost $4.50 per person, with proceeds going to serve youth in the community.

Finding the source of deception

Checking the flow

Using magnetic resonance imaging (MRI), scientists can measure blood flow all over the brain to get an indication of what areas are most active. Studies show certain areas of the brain are consistently more active when someone is lying compared with when they are telling the truth.

Checking the waves

Recent research suggests that deception can also be perceived through monitoring brain wave activity. Studies show that the brain produces a positively charged wave when a subject responds deceptively.

A representation of MRI data shows brain areas more active during deception.

greater numbers since Sept. 11.

"There has been a reawakening of our interest in being able to determine the truth from each other," said sociologist Barbara Herick, who teaches a course on lying at the College of Wooster in Ohio. "As technology advances, we may have to decide whether we want to let a machine decide guilt or innocence."

The new frontiers of lie detection claim to offer greater reliability than the decades-old polygraph, which measures heart and respiratory rates as a person answers questions.

They also pose new privacy problems, moral dilemmas and the possibility that the average person will unwittingly face a test.

At the Mayo Clinic, researchers hope to perfect a heat-sensing camera that could scan people's faces and find subtle changes associated with lying. In a small study of 20 people, the high-resolution thermal imaging camera detected a faint blushing around the eyes of those who lied.

The technique, still preliminary, could provide a simple and rapid way of scanning people being questioned at airports or border crossings, researchers say.

But would it be legal?

"As long as no one was being arrested or detained solely on the basis of the test, there is no law against scanning someone's face with a device," said Justin Hammerstein, a civil liberties attorney in New York.

"You could use the device to subject someone to greater scrutiny in a physical search or background check, and it would be hard to argue that it is illegal."

Barry Steinhardt of the American Civil Liberties Union said any technology that isn't 100 percent effective could lead unfairly to innocent travelers being stranded at airports.

"You would be introducing chaos into the situation and inevitably focusing on people who are innocent," Steinhardt said.

At the University of Pennsylvania, researcher Daniel Langleben is using a magnetic resonance imaging machine, the device used to detect tumors, to identify parts of the brain that people use when they lie.

"In the brain, you never get something for nothing," Langleben said. "The process for telling a lie is more complicated than telling the truth, resulting in more neuron activity."

Amtrak warns of looming shutdown

WASHINGTON (AP) – Amtrak warned Friday that a shutdown of its passenger trains also could hit commuter railroads serving hundreds of thousands of people.

Some lawmakers and transportation officials in the Northeast, which would be hit hardest by a shutdown, began preparing even as they urged the federal government to step in.

"The operational chaos that will result from this is incalculable at this point. It's a disaster," said New Jersey Transportation Commissioner James P. Fox.

Unable to close a $260 million budget shortfall without government help, Amtrak says it has only enough cash to operate a normal schedule for several more days.

Amtrak President David Gunn says he will start turning away passengers and moving trains to storage next week unless it gets a grant or a loan. Amtrak's next step after shutting down would be to file for bankruptcy protection, he said.

"Time is of the essence, and we still do not a resolution of this issue," Gunn said Friday.

In a message to Amtrak employees on Friday, Gunn wrote, "You will hear mention of bankruptcy and cessation of service. These are real possibilities. I still believe wisdom will prevail and we will be allowed to operate. ... But as I said, time is running out."

The Federal Railroad Administration is reviewing Amtrak's request for a loan guarantee to help it borrow the needed $200 million. Amtrak has had trouble tapping its existing line of credit because lenders are unsure how long it can remain in business.

Standard and Poor's downgraded Amtrak's credit rating Friday to the lowest investment grade status, citing the agency's financial troubles and the looming shutdown. Moody's placed Amtrak on a watch list for a possible credit rating downgrade.

Idaho Falls shelter helps homeless men

By Sandy Miller
Times-News writer

IDAHO FALLS – The City of Refuge, a 15-bed shelter program for homeless men that opened in 1999 in this eastern Idaho city, was the brainchild of Paul Meigio, now its mission director, and Don Schweitzer, now the shelter's program director.

For Meigio and Schweitzer, it was a spiritual mission.

"We saw a need, and we felt God was calling us to do it," Meigio said.

The two men asked Family Care Center Inc., another Idaho Falls social service agency, to parent the project "so we didn't come off as just two gungho guys out to change the world," he said.

It took a year and a half of planning before the shelter opened its doors. Meigio said the most difficult things were finding a facility that could be turned into a shelter while still meeting the appropriate zoning requirements.

Today, the Christian, independent, non-denominational, nonprofit shelter is always full, and renovations are being made to increase the capacity to 22 men. Meigio says they are forced to turn away about 10 men a month due to lack of space.

The shelter operates on a $110,000 annual budget supported by grants and donations. In addition to Meigio and Schweitzer, there are two other full-time shelter workers.

The City of Refuge is a lot more than just a place to eat and sleep. The heavily structured program helps its clients find whatever other resources are needed, including counseling, help for drug and alcohol additions, education, job skills, affordable housing and mentoring.

He said many of the men who come to the City of Refuge aren't even aware that such help exists, or they just don't know how to ask for help.

"Sometimes it's pride, and sometimes it's not knowing what questions to ask," Meigio said. "Before we opened, we spent a lot of time learning about resources like Job Service, and it was hard for us to learn it."

Meigio said 75 percent to 80 percent of the men who enter the City of Refuge program have addiction problems.

"It complicates matters all the more," Meigio said. "It causes them to lose work or not be able to find work. It's their way to escape and not deal with conflict and life."

But the City of Refuge doesn't turn them away.

"Taking care of the basic needs – food, shelter and clothing – is nice, but in order to make a difference in their lives, you have to do more," Meigio said.

He said most of the men who enter the program have difficulty resolving conflict and making decisions.

"Sometimes they don't think before they act," Meigio said. "They say, 'The boss is a jerk, so therefore I quit.'"

That's one reason the program is so structured – to help them develop some life skills.

"We sit down and talk to them and try to find out how they got here," Meigio said. "We try to get them to take responsibility for their actions and behaviors. We have some basic ground rules. They go to bed at a certain time, and they get up at a certain time. There's zero tolerance for swearing or fighting. We try to instill some basic discipline so they can focus on other things. Basically we try to instill some character. They mind their manners. They can do it – they just need to be asked to."

Meigio said the community has been supportive.

"The community is very good to us," he said. "There was a minority that was resistant because they thought we were going to bring people (transients) in."

But the "build it and they will come" theory hasn't been the City of Refuge's experience. Although the program offers short-term shelter to men just passing through, most of its clients live in Idaho Falls, Meigio said.

"The majority of our people live here," he said. "The strict guidelines and mandatory warrant checks cuts down on travelers."

The program also accepts men coming out of the state prison system.

"They either don't have anywhere to go, or the environment where they would have to go isn't the best one."

Some of the City of Refuge's clients have stayed up to six months.

Does Meigio see many success stories?

"We see quite a few – enough to keep me motivated," Meigio said. "The guy doing our renovation stayed here two years ago. We helped him get his general contractor's license, and he's doing fabulous. That's the reward – seeing people change their lives."

Homeless

ble to us because they knew they weren't wanted."

Back then, some people – Robinette says he doesn't know just who – practiced what's known as "Greyhound therapy" – giving homeless people bus tickets to larger cities.

Out of sight – out of mind.

But whether people want to notice them or not, they are here – sleeping in caves under the Old Towne bridge by night, walking the streets by day.

"The more you're around town, the more you start seeing a lot of folks who have no place to go," Robinette said. "We see a lot of people who come to our agency who don't ask for shelter assistance. They'll just ask for food or salvage bread."

Why, some ask, would anyone want to live like that? Robinette said there are many reasons. Yes, some are veterans, some are alcoholics, and some are mentally ill.

But there are many who just find themselves in bad situations and have nowhere to turn.

"Some folks choose that way of life," Robinette said. "Some are just passing through. But a lot of homeless men are just trying to do the best they can after they found themselves without a home. Maybe they just lost their job and they can't pay the rent. Maybe it was a bad marriage or a medical situation. Those who don't have immediate family have no place to go and no one to help them get from point A to point B."

One man's journey

"John" didn't want to use his real name – the stigma, he says, still follows him around – but he did agree to share his story.

His story is not a pretty one, and for some readers, it won't generate much sympathy. But it does show how anyone is capable of change.

John, who grew up in Twin Falls, encompasses just about all the stereotypes about homeless men. He's a veteran, he had problems with drugs and alcohol, and he has served time in prison.

He found himself homeless in 1993 after being released from prison, where he had served 15 years for assault with a deadly weapon on a police officer.

Unable to hold down a job, and with no place to go, he found himself living in a cave along the Snake River.

"After being locked up all those years, the only solitude I could find around here was the canyon," he said. "The real story (about homelessness) is in the canyon."

He said he worked at a series of odd jobs until his co-workers learned he had been in prison and started treating him differently.

"You can't keep a job, because you feel uncomfortable around people," he said. "People think if you're an ex-con, you can't change. I did 15 years, and I changed."

He said he spent many days "thinking, wanting to change, looking for answers."

He said most homeless people, including himself at one time, just don't think they deserve better.

"The homeless think they're not even good enough for themselves, let alone good enough for other people," he said. "They're harder on themselves than anyone else."

He said one year ago, he had a wake-up call.

"One day something told me I'd had enough of drugs and alcohol, and I just wanted to change," he said. "I hit rock bottom and I knew if I didn't change, I was going to die."

So he found himself at a church, where a kind pastor and his family gave him a job as a groundskeeper and a room in their home. He said he has been clean ever since.

He said the pastor and his family gave him a second chance, a new beginning.

"They cared enough to believe that someone like me could change," he said.

Who are the homeless?

John said drugs and alcohol were a big part of his downward spiral. He said he has been all over the United States, and he believes the drug problem in Twin Falls is even worse than it is in big cities.

People who work with the homeless say many of them use drugs and alcohol to self-medicate.

"Drug and alcohol abuse is more of a symptom than a problem," Hammett said. "It's a way of dealing with past trauma."

Mental illness also plays a big role in homelessness.

"Some studies have said that two-thirds of the homeless have some degree of mental illness," Hammett said. "But what came first, the chicken or the egg? Did the mental illness cause the homelessness, or did being homeless lead to mental illness because of the stress of surviving at such a basic level?"

There are many other reasons people suddenly find themselves living on the street.

"Some are veterans with physical and/or emotional problems, and some are victims of hard economic times, whether it's because of downsizing or finding themselves in their 50s without work," Hammett said. "At the other end of the spectrum, there are people that for emotional reasons or by choice cannot or do not want to remain in a job or in one place."

There were nine single homeless men staying at Valley House this week. Director Brian Coffey said if you saw them in a grocery store, they wouldn't look any different from anyone else.

"I think the problem is we have this notion of the homeless guy walking down the street with the beard and the sunburn and the army jacket and it's become our symbol for homeless men," Coffey said. "But that's just a stereotype. That's less than 1 percent of the single men who have stayed here."

Coffey said there are two common things he sees in the homeless men who come to his shelter.

"One is the simple lack of a plan for their life," Coffey said. "They didn't think ahead when they dropped out of high school in the 10th grade. They might have been able to maintain that for 30 years, but eventually it caught up with them. Another problem people have is a lack of coping skills that has prevented them from holding down a job."

Erasing the stigma

Barbara Reynolds, social services director for the Salvation Army, said there is discrimination against the homeless even among the homeless themselves.

"There are people who live in their cars and their vans who look down their noses at the people who live in the canyon," Reynolds said. "Some are accepted, and some aren't."

Then there are those who see the homeless as lazy, not wanting to change.

Reynolds said although there are certainly people who will try to use the system, it's not the case with the homeless men who live in Twin Falls.

"People passing through expect you to give them shelter, but the people who live here and eat in our lunch line don't even ask for food boxes or help with rent," Reynolds said. "In the winter, they might ask for some warmer clothes or a sleeping bag, but they feel if we've fed them everyday we've done enough."

Hammett said he screens people closely to ensure they're not using the system before trying to find them rooms for the night or helping them with gas or utility bills.

"We ask ourselves, 'What are the chances the assistance we provide will make a difference longer than 72 hours?' What are they willing to do to help themselves?"

Hammett said one reason people might feel some animosity toward the homeless is they fear it could happen to them.

"When we have homeless people in our midst, we are forced to confront the possibility that we could be in their shoes sooner or later," Hammett said. "The vast majority of Americans are one or two paychecks away from being in the same situation. All it takes is a catastrophic illness, the loss of a job or some other unforeseen problem to put them in a similar place."

How can people help?

"People can do an attitude check," Hammett said. "People shouldn't be too quick to judge people who are homeless and put them in a negative box. They may be homeless, but that's not all they are. They're still people who deserve to be treated with dignity, respect and compassion. The bottom line is ignoring the problem won't make it go away. The solution is not to send them somewhere else."

Senate votes to lift abortion ban at some military hospitals

WASHINGTON – Taking up what has become an annual abortion fight, the Senate voted Friday to lift a ban on women using personal funds to obtain an abortion at military hospital overseas.

The House, however, last month rejected for a seventh straight year an attempt to end the prohibition, and the two chambers must address the issue when they meet to work out differences on a $393 billion defense bill for next year.

The Senate vote was 52-40. Idaho Sens. Larry Craig and Mike Crapo voted against the measure.

Opponents said the provision allowing abortions, if left in the bill that approves defense spending programs for the fiscal year starting Oct. 1, could effectively prevent it from clearing Congress and going to the president for his signature.

But supporters, led by Sens. Olympia Snowe, R-Maine, and Patty Murray, D-Wash., argued that it was unfair that women serving their country overseas were denied the rights to a safe and legal abortion available to women at home.

Rumsfeld: Al-Qaida fighters leave through Iran, Iraq

WASHINGTON – Iran and Iraq have served as corridors for al-Qaida fighters going home to Arab countries from Afghanistan, and Iran has sheltered some members of the terrorist organization, U.S. officials said Friday.

Defense Secretary Donald H. Rumsfeld, briefing reporters Friday, accused Iran's government of helping terrorists fleeing the U.S. war in Afghanistan.

"Iran had served as a haven for some terrorists leaving Afghanistan," he said. "It is also true it has permitted the transit of terrorists, and the supporters of terrorists, through Iran."

Some of those allowed to stay in Iran include an al-Qaida leader, Abu Musab Zarqawi, a Jordanian accused of helping plot a bombing at the Radisson SAS Hotel in Amman aimed at killing Americans and Israeli tourists during millennial celebrations, a U.S. official has said.

Jury convicts brothers of smuggling, helping Hezbollah

CHARLOTTE, N.C. – Two brothers were convicted Friday of helping run a North Carolina-based support cell that funneled cigarette-smuggling profits to the militant group Hezbollah.

Mohamad Hammoud, 28, accused of being the leader of the cell, was convicted of 16 counts that included providing material support to Hezbollah – the first conviction under a 1996 federal law prohibiting aid to designated terrorist groups.

Both he and his 37-year-old brother, Chawki Hammoud, were found guilty of charges including cigarette smuggling, credit card fraud, money laundering and racketeering.

Defense lawyers for both men said they planned to appeal the verdicts after the men are sentenced. A date was not immediately set.

FBI warns of possible terrorism in Jewish neighborhoods

WASHINGTON – The FBI is advising law enforcement agencies to be on the lookout for terrorists who could be plotting to use fuel tankers to attack Jewish schools and synagogues, a federal official said Friday.

The law enforcement official, who asked not to be identified further, said the warning was sent to local police agencies Friday.

Another official said the warning was not based on a specific threat, but on interviews with captured al-Qaida and Taliban fighters who indicated such a plot had been discussed. The interviews with detainees did not reveal a target city or time.

Judge awards $15M in case against J.R. Reynolds

KANSAS CITY, Kan. – Accusing tobacco giant R.J. Reynolds of failing to "repent of its ways," a federal judge awarded $15 million in punitive damages Friday to a former smoker who lost his legs to a circulatory disease he blamed on cigarettes.

The order came after a jury in February awarded David Burton compensatory damages of $196,416.

Burton, 67, smoked for 43 years, beginning as a teenager, until 1993, when a circulatory disease forced doctors to amputate his legs. He sued R.J. Reynolds in 1994, accusing it of concealing the dangers of smoking.

U.S. District Judge John W. Lungstrum said Reynolds' concealment of the addictiveness of cigarettes was "particularly nefarious."

Priest faces rape, sodomy charges after arrest in Texas

NEW YORK – A Roman Catholic priest was arrested Friday in Texas on charges of raping a woman two years ago while working in the Brooklyn Diocese.

Cyriacus Udegbulem, 39, a visiting priest from Nigeria, was on a list of about 35 priests that the Brooklyn Diocese gave prosecutors this year because they had been accused of sexual misconduct.

Udegbulem was arrested in Laredo, Texas, where he was living. It was not immediately clear whether Udegbulem was serving as a priest in Texas.

Death penalty ruling should spur appeals

Combined wire reports

Ramon Martinez-Villareal's IQ measures somewhere between 50 and 60, and he can't read or speak in complex sentences. From his cell on Arizona's death row, he spends hours copying Bible passages he doesn't understand and gives them to his attorney.

Martinez-Villareal, who fatally shot two farm workers in 1982, has spent nearly two decades on death row and once came within eight hours of execution. But his attorneys say Thursday's U.S. Supreme Court decision banning the execution of the mentally retarded appears to guarantee that he will live out a natural life in prison.

"It's premature to say it, but I think this is the end of Ramon's case," said his attorney Sean Bruner. "I don't think anyone has claimed this man isn't mentally retarded. ... This is not a person who can be held responsible like other people can."

The high court's ruling – that executing retarded killers violates the constitutional ban on cruel and unusual punishment – immediately sent Bruner and defense attorneys nationwide scrambling to review files in death penalty cases. Prosecutors across the country said they're bracing for a flood of challenges by defendants in pending and even concluded capital cases. State legislators, meanwhile, are starting to think about how they will legally define retardation.

"They've opened a big door, and there's no way to close it," said Doug Moreau, a district attorney in Louisiana and a member of the National Association of District Attorneys. "Mentally retarded according to who? The justices sent it to the states and said, finish out the rest of it."

Supporters and opponents of capital punishment agree that the practical implication of the court's ruling will be decided over the next several months and years by countless debates in courtrooms and state capitals.

Of the 38 states that have capital punishment, 18 bar the execution of retarded defendants. Idaho has no such law. None of the state's 22 inmates on death row have been legally found to be mentally retarded, said Chief Deputy Attorney General Lawrence Wasden, though one inmate is making that claim now in state courts.

> "The real debate is going to be about how we implement this. How do we determine who really meets the definition and who doesn't?"
> – Greg Wiercioch, deputy director of the Texas Defender Service

Wasden wouldn't share his opinion of the ruling, but said the legislature would likely decide on an official state test to judge mental retardation.

Although the legal definition of retardation used in those states varies slightly, most require an IQ under 70 and evidence that the person has difficulty navigating daily life.

Legal experts say the most immediate challenges will come in the 20 states, including Virginia and Texas, that allow the execution of retarded defendants.

"The real debate is going to be about how we implement this," said Greg Wiercioch, deputy director of the Texas Defender Service, a nonprofit group that provides free legal representation to Texas death row inmates who are pursuing appeals. "How do we determine who really meets the definition and who doesn't?"

Mental health experts said the combination of a diagnosis by a medical professional and legal standards requiring evidence of mental disability long before a defendant's crime make it nearly impossible to feign retardation.

"There are very sophisticated tools and batteries of tests," said Cynthia Folcarelli, executive vice president of the Alexandria, Va.-based National Mental Health Association. "The idea that anyone could be diagnosed with a developmental disability is just not true."

Divers search for gang leader's body

ZAMBOANGA, Philippines (AP) – Divers are searching for the body of Abu Sabaya, the notorious leader of a Muslim guerrilla gang that terrorized the southern Philippines with a string of kidnappings, who was presumed dead after a firefight at sea Friday with U.S.-trained forces.

Abu Sabaya

The 39-year-old headed a faction of the al-Qaida-linked Abu Sayyaf group that abducted more than 100 people over the last year. Some escaped, some were freed and 18 died, including a California man who was beheaded and a Kansas missionary who was fatally shot in a rescue attempt.

Military officials said local special forces – with surveillance and communications help from American troops – tracked down Abu Sabaya and six of his men as they appeared to be fleeing Mindanao island in a boat before dawn.

The troops reported they came under fire and shot back. Southern military commander Maj. Gen. Ernesto Carolina said one soldier reported shooting an already-wounded Abu Sabaya in the back as the guerrilla leader tried to swim away, and that the soldier saw his body sinking.

Navy personnel were searching for the bodies, particularly that of Abu Sabaya.

The Philippine military said it had been hot on Abu Sabaya's trail after a June 7 rescue attempt. Martin Burnham of Wichita, Kan., and Filipino nurse Ediborah Yap were killed in the ensuing fight, while Burnham's wife, Gracia, was rescued. The three were the last of the group's hostages.

Armed Forces of the Philippines Chief Gen. Roy Cimatu views a picture of captured Abu Sayyaf members at the Southern Command headquarters in the southern port city of Zamboanga Friday.

Abu Sabaya's trademark sunglasses were left behind as he and his men retreated. Washington recently offered a $5 million bounty for Abu Sabaya's capture.

President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo congratulated the military. "Terrorists will be hunted down relentlessly wherever they are," she said. "Once behaving like kings ... the Abu Sayyaf rebels now are like rats hiding in their holes."

One congressman called for a national holiday. But Defense Secretary Angelo Reyes warned, "We should not open the champagne bottle too early.

"Even if we succeed in neutralizing Abu Sabaya and his cohorts," he said, "we still have to maintain our vigilance because the terrorist threats remain."

In Washington, Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld commended Philippine forces for Friday's engagement and "for their continued battle against the terrorist problems. ... There are other leaders and there are other members of the group, and terrorism is terrorism."

Carolina said the clash took place around 4:20 a.m. between Abu Sabaya's group and a team from the Philippine marines and the navy special warfare group.

He said the soldiers observed a boat "surreptitiously" sailing from a coastal village and followed it for about 45 minutes. The soldiers, using night-vision goggles, decided to intercept it after they saw seven armed men on board.

As they approached, the soldiers came under fire and shot back, hitting three men who fell overboard, Carolina said.

The soldiers then used their speed boat to ram the other vessel, damaging it severely. The four other gunmen surrendered, Carolina said.

He said one soldier fired from only three yards at one rebel trying to swim away in a black sweatshirt. He was identified as Abu Sabaya by the four other gunmen.

Afghan minister vows to clean up police force

GARDEZ, Afghanistan (AP) – Charged with reforming a bankrupt police force rife with corruption, Afghanistan's new interior minister promised Friday to resign after seven months if he fails in his task.

"This is my promise," Taj Mohammed Wardak, 81, told The Associated Press in Kabul. He said that if the Afghan police force is not a professional one by then, "I will leave."

But in the provinces, where law is still decided by men with guns, Wardak – a naturalized American chosen because he is an ethnic Pashtun – faces a nearly impossible task.

"We have no food, no uniforms, no money," policeman Ghulam Sakhi said at the police station, a newly whitewashed fortress on a hilltop overlooking Gardez.

"We're drowning in debt," said fellow officer Farhat Gul. "We are paying for the painting ourselves. We and our families are doing the work."

Conditions in Gardez, where Wardak served as governor until he was appointed to the interior ministry post this week by the grand council, or loya jirga, are little different from those elsewhere in this shattered land.

In Afghanistan's Pashtun-dominated areas, people complain that the ethnic Tajik-dominated police force discriminates against them. Trucker Mohammed Khan, who hauls tires from one end of the country to the other, says he is often forced to hand over money at police checkpoints.

"If I don't pay they say I am Taliban or al-Qaida," he said.

Things aren't much better in the capital, Kabul. A policeman who served during the 1980s communist regime said his house was robbed by new officers who came with the Tajik-dominated northern alliance, which took over the city in November when the Taliban fled.

Taj Mohammad Wardak

The policeman, who asked not to be identified, said he was also stopped twice at a checkpoint where police took his money even after he told them he was a fellow officer.

In Gardez, evidence of the daunting task facing the new administration can be seen everywhere.

Rockets have blasted holes in homes and dozens of people have been killed in factional fighting in the last three months. Morale among the police and the security services is low. Guns are everywhere. "I'm a policemen," Abdul Samad chuckled as he sat barefoot in a restaurant, his Kalashnikov protectively by his side. "All the men in this town are policemen now."

Here, as in most parts of Afghanistan, the police have no uniforms and no training. Most of them were fighters who once battled each other and later fought the Taliban. Wardak calls them "jihadis," or holy warriors, and gave assurance that all they need is one month's training.

The appointment of Wardak, whom some delegates called too weak for such a stressful position, was seen as an attempt to bring an ethnic balance to the government.

His predecessor was Yunus Qanooni, a Tajik from the northern alliance. Wardak, like President Hamid Karzai, is a Pashtun but unlike many of them is untainted by previous association with the Taliban since he was living in California's San Fernando Valley when the hardline militia ran the country. He returned home last year.

The selection of a Pashtun is already causing discontent in Kabul, where police walked off the job Friday to demand Qanooni's return. Qanooni was popular among the Kabul police, most of whom were also northern alliance fighters.

Ruling may help those who fight executions of juveniles

ST. LOUIS (AP) – Advocates for a Missouri death row inmate who killed as a teen-ager hope a U.S. Supreme Court ruling barring executions of the mentally retarded might also apply to condemned juvenile offenders.

Christopher Simmons was eight days from his scheduled execution when the Missouri Supreme Court issued a stay on May 28. The court was waiting for the U.S. Supreme Court to rule in the Virginia case of Daryl Atkins, convicted of slaying a man at the age of 18. Atkins' lawyers said his IQ is 59.

Simmons' attorneys said neither the young nor the retarded should be executed because both have underdeveloped mental capacities.

Soon after the high court's ruling Thursday on the Atkins case, Missouri Attorney General Jay Nixon asked the Missouri Supreme Court to again schedule the execution for Simmons, 26, who was 17 when he killed Shirley Crook of suburban St. Louis in 1993.

Nixon said Thursday's ruling is about retardation – not age – and "has no relevance on this particular case."

The court ruled 6-3 Thursday that executing the mentally retarded was unconstitutionally cruel, but did not address the constitutionality of executing people who killed when they were young.

Pat Berrigan, an attorney for Simmons, said Simmons' legal team would supplement its filings with the state Supreme Court in light of the high court's ruling.

"I hope we can have some meaningful debate about this," Berrigan said. "It doesn't mean Christopher is not responsible for his crime. But responsibility should be measured in terms of his intellectual capabilities."

Judge throws out 11-year-old's conviction

CHICAGO (AP) – A federal judge threw out a teenager's murder conviction in the killing of an elderly neighbor, saying the boy's confession, made when he was 11 years old, was coerced by authorities.

U.S. District Court Judge Rebecca Pallmeyer ruled Wednesday that the boy's arrest was illegal and that his confession should have been thrown out.

The boy was referred to only by initials A.M. because of his age when 84-year-old Anna Gilvis was killed in 1993. He was sentenced to five years' probation, which he has completed. He is now 19.

DRUIDS CELEBRATE SOLSTICE AT STONEHENGE

Steve Wilson of the British Druids Society carries the English flag of St. George as he leaves Stonehenge in Wiltshire, England, where thousands congregated to celebrate the summer solstice Friday. The stones were opened to the public for the solstice two years ago, after being closed following violence between police and revelers in 1985. Stonehenge – the remnants of the last in a sequence of circular monuments built between 3000 B.C. and 1600 B.C. – has become a traditional gathering place at the solstice, the northern hemisphere's longest day and the first day of summer. Exactly how and why Stonehenge was built remains a mystery. Some experts believe it is aligned with the sun simply because its builders came from a sun-worshipping culture, while others believe the site was part of a huge astronomical calendar.

Statements threaten more attacks

CAIRO, Egypt (AP) – Statements on a Web site attributed to al-Qaida's spokesman claim that Osama bin Laden will soon make a televised addressed to the Muslim world.

The remarks, purportedly made by Sulaiman Abu Ghaith, appeared on an Arabic-language Web site that issues daily updates on the war in Afghanistan.

"We assure Muslims that Sheik Osama bin Laden is in good health, and all that has been reported about his sickness or his being injured in Tora Bora is completely false. The sheik will address the (Muslim) community soon in a televised interview," Abu Ghaith was quoted as saying.

There was no way to independently confirm the authenticity of the remarks. The Bush administration has said that it does not know whether bin Laden is alive or dead.

A three-part series signed by Abu Ghaith and entitled "Why we fight America," appeared last month on an Islamic militant Web site which has been up and down for months.

The latest comments were posted Wednesday, according to the site, and include a photo of bin Laden kneeling.

European zone free of polio, WHO says

COPENHAGEN, Denmark (AP) – The World Health Organization on Friday declared its European zone, which includes former Soviet republics and almost a billion people, free of the polio virus.

Southeastern Turkey was the last area in the region to have had polio. The final case was reported there in November 1998 along the Iranian border.

The European zone, which has 51 countries and 873 million inhabitants, was the third WHO region decreed free of polio. The Americas were certified polio-free in 1994, followed by the Western Pacific region three years later.

Israeli troops kill four Palestinians in Jenin

NABLUS, West Bank (AP) – Israeli tanks opened fire Friday on the market in the northern West Bank town of Jenin, killing four Palestinians, including three children, hospital officials said. The Israeli army said soldiers had mistakenly fired on a group of curfew violators.

Palestinian residents said they believed Israeli forces had lifted the 3-day curfew before the shooting. Witnesses said the market area already was full of shoppers replenishing supplies when the Israelis fired tank shells and machine guns into the crowds.

The army said the curfew had not been lifted. Nevertheless, the Israeli army spokesman's office said an initial inquiry "indicates that the force erred in its action," and that an investigation was continuing.

Late Thursday two Palestinian gunmen seized a house in the West Bank settlement of Itamar, killing a woman, her three sons and a security official before soldiers stormed the house and killed one attacker.

On Friday settlers from the community were returning from the victims' funerals when they went on a rampage, killing a Palestinian man, shooting randomly in the streets and burning cars and a home, Palestinian villagers and a hospital official said. Adnan Odeh, 22, died of a gunshot to the chest, said Ohsam Johari, director of the Nablus government hospital.

Israeli police said the victim appeared to have been shot by settlers but that the investigation was complicated because the Palestinians had taken the body. The settlement administrative office did not answering its phones.

Israeli Prime Minister Ariel Sharon's Security Cabinet upheld a major policy decision made earlier this week to gradually reoccupy Palestinian land until terror stops. A Defense Ministry spokesman said after the meeting that Israel would "act more intensively, more deeply" in order to protect itself.

"We have to do a more thorough job of clearing out the areas of terrorism," spokesman Yarden Vatikai told The Associated Press.

Israel Radio reported the military was planning a "wide offensive but smaller" than the massive, six-week military campaign that began in March.

In line with the new policy, about 50 Israeli tanks entered Nablus, the West Bank's largest city, after the Thursday night attack in nearby Itamar.

Israeli forces earlier had gone into Jenin and imposed a curfew after 19 Israelis were killed Tuesday in the deadliest suicide bombing in Jerusalem in six years.

Former head of Milosevic's TV network gets 10 years for deaths

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia (AP) – The former chief of Slobodan Milosevic's television network was sentenced Friday to 10 years in prison for his role in the death of 16 television employees killed by a NATO missile in 1999.

A Belgrade court ruled that Dragoljub Milanovic caused "grave danger to public security" by failing to order the evacuation of his workers during NATO air raids. The families of those killed accuse Milanovic of ordering the employees to remain at work so their deaths could be used as a propaganda tool against NATO.

NATO missiles slammed into the network's Belgrade headquarters on April 23, 1999, killing 16 people – technicians, doormen and a makeup artist.

On Friday, the courtroom was tightly packed with victims' relatives.

Milanovic's lawyer, Branimir Gugl, denounced the verdict as a "setup" and said he would appeal to the supreme court.

Should Congress ban roads in federal forests?

Yes

Ban roads and end logging as well

CHAD HANSON

Nearly two centuries ago, Lewis and Clark observed that a squirrel could travel from the Atlantic to the Mississippi without ever touching the ground. Similarly, in the old West, vast expanses of ancient forests stretched as far as the eye could see. But not today. Logging and road building have taken an incredibly heavy toll on our nation's forests.

Now, the small fraction of America's original forests that remain unlogged and unroaded exist almost entirely on federal public lands. The Clinton administration, to its credit, proposed to protect these wild lands. The Bush administration, to its shame, reversed that policy and invited timber corporations to continue logging in roadless areas.

Outraged, more than 170 members of the House recently co-sponsored a bill to protect these critically important forests on public lands. Congressional leaders should do the right thing and pass this legislation outright, or at least deny funding for any logging in roadless forests.

These are the last, best forests – the wildest and most ecologically diverse places that remain. Severe fires are least likely to occur in such forests because they have many mature trees with thick, fire-resistant bark, and the forest canopy cover creates cool, moist conditions. As the federal government's own National Fire Plan observes, such fires are most likely to occur in areas where logging and road building has been allowed.

At the same time, while protecting roadless forests on public lands is a great step in the right direction, it's not nearly enough.

Congress should also recognize that, due to the habitat fragmentation caused by logging and road building on public lands, most of the remaining old growth stands on our national forests are in tracts too small to be considered "roadless."

Yet protecting these mature and old-growth forests is every bit as important as protecting roadless areas if we are to sustain and restore fully functioning forest ecosystems.

To put the issue in perspective, because of commercial logging, less than 10 percent of forest habitat on federal lands is in roadless condition. In some states, such as Alaska and Montana, that percentage is higher, of course.

The bottom line is that, because of the timber sales program on our national forests, we have lost so much high quality forest habitat that we can no longer simply protect some areas, and not others.

If forest ecosystems are to recover, and imperiled species to survive, we must protect all remaining forests on federal public lands – roadless and otherwise. In short, we must end the timber sales program on federal lands, and redirect current logging expenditures into ecological restoration. This includes reduction of flammable brush where excessive accumulations occur due to past logging and fire suppression.

We cannot delude ourselves into thinking that we can squander our remaining wild lands without losing something as a nation, and as a people.

Therefore, it is up to Congress to express the will of the people, and send a message that the integrity of our national forests is more important than the short-term profits of the administration's big timber campaign contributors.

As John Muir said a century ago, "Since Christ's time, and long before that, God has cared for these trees, saved them from drought, disease, avalanches, and a thousand leveling, straining tempests and floods; but He cannot save them from fools ... Only Congress can do that."

Chad Hanson is the executive director of the John Muir Project and a national director of the Sierra Club.

Roadless areas create tinderbox

BONNER R. COHEN

With the long, hot summer just getting under way, millions of Americans are bracing themselves for the inevitable onslaught of deadly forest fires that have become an annual occurrence in many parts of the country.

Television news coverage of the inferno raging in the Denver area are a daily remainder that the ordeal has already begun.

"This is a potential tragedy of epic proportions, and the fire season isn't even upon us," Colorado Gov. Bill Owens grimly remarked, as wildfires raged out of control near Denver earlier this month.

Prolonged drought in the West, coupled with poor management of America's national forests, has created ideal conditions for catastrophic forest fires to reap their tragic toll.

Yet right in the midst of this looming disaster, a group of Capitol Hill lawmakers has hit upon an idea that is bound to make a bad situation even worse.

Led by Reps. Sherwood Boehlert, R-N.Y., and Jay Inslee, D-Wash., and backed by environmental groups, they are pushing legislation that would put into law a Clinton administration rule barring road construction and logging, as well as most forms of forest management on 58.5 million acres of national forest land in 39 states.

Known as the "Roadless Area Conservation Rule," the rule was blocked from going into effect last year by a federal judge who called it "fundamentally flawed" and who described the rule-making process as "grossly inadequate."

By resurrecting the roadless rule in the name of "protecting" America's national forests, Boehlert, Inslee and their allies are, in fact, writing a prescription for even more disastrous wildfires.

These conflagrations devastate millions of acres of forestland, destroy homes, businesses, and wildlife, and kill firefighters and others caught in their path. They are largely a result of decades of mismanagement by the U.S. Forest Service.

Ill-conceived efforts to prevent all forest fires – including naturally occurring wildfires that have traditionally cleansed the forest floor of excess vegetation – have allowed a combustible under-story to grow and spread. The problem is most acute in the arid West, where the federal government owns most of the land, and where much of the proposed new roadless area is located.

Even though the federal government owns "just" 33 percent of the nation's forests, fully 66 percent of the acreage lost to forest fires since 1997 has been on federal land, according to the Department of Agriculture and the National Interagency Fire Center.

Even worse, the Forest Service determined in a November 2000 report that about half of the 58.5 million acres of newly designated roadless area in the lower 48 states consists of forests in a moderate to advanced state of ill health and ecological deterioration.

These lands are prime candidates for catastrophic blazes unless proper forest-management techniques aimed at correcting the mistakes of the past are applied.

As circumstances warrant, this could include the removal of dead and diseased trees, as well as the construction of roads providing access to firefighters to extinguish out-of-control blazes.

The Forest Service has finally recognized the harm done by decades of misguided fire-suppression policies. The last thing it needs is to have another 58.5 million acres off-limits to the corrective measures it is finally undertaking.

T-N uses BASE jumper's death to further their cause

Not unexpectedly, The Times-News editors have taken the recent death of a BASE jumper to further their cause of denying those who want the right to parachute from the Perrine Bridge. There have been many more fatalities from boating on the Snake River or fishing in it than from BASE jumping into it. Would they made it illegal for people to use the river?

There have been several deaths recently from climbers falling at Mount Rainier and Mount Hood. Would they fence off those mountains, including our own Mount Borah, and deny those who want the right to climb mountains?

We cannot insulate ourselves completely from risk because we live in fear of what could happen. Four years ago, my wife and I BASE jumped from the Perrine Bridge to celebrate our 35th wedding anniversary. A unique, beautiful, once-in-a-lifetime experience. One I am sure we will remember and treasure the rest of our lives. One I am truly glad was not denied us – legislated from possibility because of the fear of what could happen.

While we have not undergone a recent psychiatric evaluation, my wife and I feel we are as sane as most of those who sit on the editorial board of The Times-News.

Let our young children keep learning music

How beautiful the picture of children with violins tucked under their chins (May 17). And how devastating the news that accompanied the picture in its caption; namely, that the music program in the early grades is being eliminated. I hope this cut certainly does not mean that the music program in the elementary and higher grades is in any way curtailed.

So much of curriculum planning in the public schools is in the hands of people whose "education" did not include training in nor appreciation of music. The work-a-day world generally discounts its worth, using it only as a background sound to relax purse strings and promote sales or to lighten the waiting moments of the "on hold" phoner. But after World War II, the therapeutic offices of music in the treatment of shell-shocked victims and neurologically impaired patients are well documented. Even cows give more milk when the chaste and happy music of Mozart fills the milking barn.

To include music in the curriculum, even in the earliest grades, is wonderfully wise. The ancient Athenians considered music to be as basic as the ABCs. Modern educators agree. Many instances are on record where music has benefited the mental, physical and social development of pupils.

Music also plays a very unique and irreplaceable role in the cognitive development of young children. The many tots in Suzuki violin classes attests to this fact. Music is indeed, as Mr. Suzuki aptly demonstrated, another language. The root meaning of "to educate" is "to draw out." Music is a subject so effective as "drawing out" the potential of each child. Music opens many doors into other disciplines, such as mathematics, science, history, speech and languages, to name a few. We must never think that because so few choose to become leading lights in the music world that music programs are a waste of time and taxpayer money. Far from it. Music enriches life. Music promotes health. The intrinsic nature of music is to set boundaries and bring order and meaning to life in the classroom and afterward as well.

A study done in years gone by studied the incidence of music study in the lives of inmates in Alcatraz prison. Not one had been touched by music. Music is good. Music is health and life. Music is often a safety valve for human emotions. Blessed are those whose lives are played in tune.

Birding offers harmless fun and recreation

Congratulations to Karen Bossick for an excellent article in the Outdoor section of the paper on June 13 about birding in the Magic Valley area. This is a fun family activity that doesn't cost any money and helps children to be aware of our surrounding environment and to learn how important it is to keep our open space for our birds and wildlife. It is great to see some diversification in the Outdoor section as it seems to be dominated by the male-supported sports and activities. I hope this encourages some female outdoor writers to submit your stories to The Times-News.

June 8 was the Jerome County Historical Society's "Live History Day." It was a very windy day, but a few of us brave souls ventured over there to the Idaho Farm and Ranch Museum. Grace, my granddaughter, and friend had a great time learning how butter is made, watching the crushing of apples to make apple cider, learning how to make a fiber rope basket, as Indians did. They watched the spinning of wool for making of clothing, how corn was shucked, candles and soap are made, and probably the most enjoyable and fun thing they did was to wash some clothing on a scrub board, operate a hand wringer and hang it up on a line. The food was great and the best dollar I spent in a long time.

Next year, put this day on your calendar as a "must do" for a family outing and let your children see how our grandparents had to work and live.

People put things on graves in remembrance of lost ones

This letter is to the people or person who has the inhumanity to steal from a cemetery. I hope you are proud of yourself.

People put things on the graves for their loved ones as a remembrance. The shepherd's hook and flag holder that was stolen off of my father's grave was not put there for your yard! It makes me sick that people have the nerve to do that. You wouldn't like it if someone took stuff off of your lost one, or maybe you are one of the lucky ones not to have lost anyone. If you are, you are fortunate.

So please have a little common courtesy. This happened at the Jerome Cemetery, so if any of you have anything there, you might want to go and see if it is still there. Good luck.

Minico cheerleaders need help for Hawaii

RUPERT – Minico cheerleaders Andrew Cleverley, Nick Ketterling, Jon Paul, Aubrey Schut and Katie Wrigley have all been accepted to attend Camp U.S. Cheer Hawaii as five of the top 100 cheerleaders in the nation.

Originally, just Schut and Wrigley were selected by the camp, which will be held at the University of Hawaii July 5-13. But Cleverley, Ketterling and Paul were added later. Wrigley won't be able to attend.

Numerous college coaches will be scouting the athletes and Carole Wood, the Tampa Bay Buccaneers cheerleading coach, will be there to offer instruction.

"This camp is for those who are talented enough to cheer at the collegiate level," said Minico coach Vanessa Harper, who is one of five high school coaches selected to go to the camp. "If they go out there and perform like they can, this could mean something pretty big for them."

The trip costs $2,695 for each athlete, so they are looking for help in the form of sponsorships or donations. Call Andrew or Cindy Cleverley at 208 532-4761 or 532-1301 with any questions regarding helping these athletes.

T.F. Cowboys rustle up second win of season

By Joe Palsley
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS – Mountain Home eked out a couple close wins to clinch a spot in the Donnelly Sports Invitational title game while the Twin Falls Cowboys broke through for their second win of the season Friday.

The Pokes (2-10) built a 8-1 lead in the fourth and would need every single one as they held on for an 8-6 win over Marsh Falls, further confusing the Pool A standings with the three top spots on Saturday to be determined by the 8 a.m. pool game between Box Elder and Twin Falls at Bruin Field.

If the Cowboys win, Bear Lake gets a shot at the title for the second year in a row while Twin Falls advances to play last year's champ, Brigham City, Utah, in the second seed game at 3:30 p.m. If Box Elder wins, then Marsh Falls advances to face the Royals and Twin Falls plays the third seed contest at 1 p.m..

Twin Falls hitting was impressive against Marsh Falls, led by a standout inning from Todd Cook, who knocked home the first run to make it 2-1 in the fourth with an RBI double down the left field line that was just fair. He closed out the scoring with a two-run single with the bases loaded to make it 8-1. In between, Todd Rebein complemented his standout defensive plays this weekend with an RBI triple to make it 3-1. HP WOMEN'S CHALLENGE

A pack of racers zooms through Wendell on the way to Buhl in stage seven of the HP Women's Challenge.

Fitness instructor schools field

By Scott Thompson
Times-News writer

BUHL – Anita Valen's specialty as a fitness instructor is as a spinning instructor.

The Norwegian cyclist gave the rest of the field a lesson Friday as she won the seventh stage of the HP Women's Challenge.

Valen, who dropped out of racing after the disappointment of missing the 1988 Olympic Games with a broken arm, and a group of 12 others broke away from the pack at about the 23-mile mark of the 84.5-mile stage, which started at WestCoast Hotel in Twin Falls and ended in Eastman Park in Buhl.

The stage win was special for Valen, who is in the first year of a comeback to competitive cycling after working as a fitness instructor.

"It was now or never," Valen said.

The same could be said of Friday's stage when Valen made her move at about the 400-meter mark and outsprinted the rest of the breakaway group to the finish line in a time of 3 hours, 21 minutes, 47 seconds.

Friday's stage marked a departure from the earlier stages, which have been dominated by race heavyweights.

None of the race's overall leaders was in the breakaway, so the top contenders let them go.

Team Saturn's Judith Arndt is still in the overall lead, holding a 1:20 lead over Team Rona's Genevieve Jeanson, who led the group of overall contenders to the finish, 2:55 back of Valen.

U.S. outplays Germany, loses

The Associated Press

ULSAN, South Korea – The United States lost, its great World Cup ride is over. And yet the Americans felt as if they were winners anyway.

They outplayed Germany, the three-time champions, but were beaten 1-0 in the quarterfinals Friday because of one mistake.

Still, they proved they are no longer the pushovers of U.S. teams past, sending a message to the rest of the world and leaving a calling card for 2006 and beyond.

"We can go home with our heads held high," U.S. goalkeeper Brad Friedel said, proud of the Americans' best World Cup performance in 72 years.

They roused fans back home to get up in the middle of the night to watch their inspired play, and convinced the soccer powers of Europe that Americans are very good at the kind of football that's played outside the United States.

"I think we demonstrated to the world that the United States belonged here," U.S. coach Bruce Arena said. "We expected to be the best team tonight. We weren't surprised at our performance."

Unlike four years ago, when Germany manhandled the Americans during a 2-0 first-round victory in Paris, the U.S. players shoved back against their taller, stronger opponents.

The United States dominated for much of the first half and had numerous scoring chances, with speedy Landon Donovan leading the way. But in the 39th minute, German midfielder Michael Ballack scored on a header, rising between two American defenders.

"I thought I was going to be able to head it away," said Tony Sanneh, assigned to mark Ballack. "I didn't jump high enough or get back enough. That's why we're going home and they're playing."

German goalkeeper Oliver Kahn twice came up with diving saves in the first half to deny Donovan, and the Americans nearly tied the score four minutes into the second half.

Donovan had the best U.S. scoring chance in the 17th minute, going around Thomas Linke and sending a low shot that Kahn, one of the world's top goalies, deflected wide with his fingertips.

"When I hit it, I thought it was in," said a disappointed Donovan. "His hand came out of nowhere."

In the second minute of injury time, with only 90 seconds left in the game, the United States had another great chance, when Sanneh just missed a goal on a header. He hit the side of the net off a cross from Clint Mathis, who had entered early in the second half.

Moments later, Mathis' hard shot in the penalty box was blocked by German midfielder Jens Jeremies.

At the end of the game, half a dozen players from each team collapsed to the ground, exhausted. Donovan, at 20 a symbol of the new breed of American soccer, couldn't believe the game was over.

"I didn't want to leave," he said.

The fans gave the Americans a standing ovation, and Reyna held up a U.S. flag, saluting the crowd that Tournament leaves U.S. fans upbeat despite defeat

The Associated Press

COLUMBUS, Ohio – Thousands of bleary-eyed soccer fans buoyed by the United States' improbable showing in the World Cup tournament woke early again to cheer their team. But this time they were met with defeat.

From Los Angeles to New York City, fans fueled on coffee and hopes of an upset abandoned their televisions at home to watch in bars and stadiums.

More than 7,500 people, some who traveled from as far as Florida, watched on large screens inside and outside Crew Stadium, home of Columbus' professional soccer team.

They stood up during the closing moments as the United States looked for the tying goal and remained on their feet clapping when the Americans fell short, losing to Germany 1-0.

With an American flag draped over his shoulders, Ken Nekic, 37, of Columbus was upbeat in defeat.

"Something like this is a dream come true," he said. "These guys are playing with

IDAHO FALLS – Twin Falls overcame its own errors in Game 1 to down the defending state champion Idaho Falls Russets Friday 9-7, and followed that up with a 10-7 victory for the sweep and a 4-0 record in area C play.

The American Legion baseball twin bill saw the Cowboys (6-6-3) continue a high level of play started at the Chico Fathers Day tournament in Calif. seemingly eons ago.

"This was a pretty big sweep for us," said coach Matt Rasmussen. "We spent 12 hours on the bus to get home last night and this morning we were back on it. It seems like we never ended our road trip."

Although the 1-4-3 record in California may not seem that special, playing high-caliber California teams paid off against Idaho Falls, Rasmussen said.

"We're not going to see teams like that again," Rasmussen said.

Brett Miller, Jake Asher, Derrick Tenney and Carl Blackwod all had two hits.

In Game 2, Twin Falls needed a two-run double by Luke Hawkins to put the game away in the seventh.

Castillo ties Cobb with 35-game hitting streak

MIAMI (AP) – Luis Castillo extended his hitting streak to 35 games, tying Ty Cobb and two others for the 10th-longest in major league history, as the Florida Marlins beat Detroit 4-1 Friday night.

Leading off the third inning, Castillo drilled a 2-0 pitch back at knuckleballer Steve Sparks (3-7). It ricocheted off Sparks' glove and rolled toward second base. There was no throw.

Castillo's streak is the longest by a Latin player, surpassing Benito Santiago's 34-game streak in 1987.

Two other players had one-season streaks of 35 games – Cobb (1917) and Fred Clarke (1895).

Expos 3, Indians 1

MONTREAL – Brad Wilkerson scored the go-ahead run from second on Wil Cordero's sacrifice fly in the sixth inning as the Montreal Expos won their eighth in a row, beating the Cleveland Indians.

Mets 4, Royals 3

NEW YORK – Tony Tarasco hustled home from second base when Kansas City misplayed Mo Vaughn's two-out infield single in the bottom of the ninth inning, and the New York Mets beat the Royals.

Athletics 5, Reds 3

CINCINNATI – John Mabry hit a two-run homer and an RBI single, leading the Oakland Athletics over the slumping Cincinnati Reds.

Gamecocks advance to meet Texas in CWS championship game

College World Series

OMAHA, Neb. (AP) – Steven Bondurant scattered eight hits in a complete game and South Carolina advanced to the College World Series championship by beating Clemson 10-2 on Friday.

The Gamecocks (57-17) beat their state rivals for the second time in three days and won their fourth straight elimination game. South Carolina will play Texas (56-15) for the national title Saturday in a rematch of the 1975 championship, which Texas won 5-1.

South Carolina had 13 hits and took advantage of three errors and three wild pitches while completing a 4-0 run through the CWS that was made necessary after an 11-0 loss to Georgia Tech in the opener.

Kevin Melillo was 3-for-5 with three RBIs, including a two-run single as South Carolina pulled away with a five-run eighth.

Bondurant (7-4), a junior left-hander, had not pitched a complete game since a 4-3 win over Alabama on March 31, when he yielded nine hits. He held the Tigers to five hits through eight innings before giving up a run in the ninth. He struck out seven.

Clemson (54-17) opened the CWS 3-0 and needed to beat the Gamecocks just once to advance to Saturday, but couldn't do it after going 3-1 against South Carolina during the regular season.

Matt Henrie (13-5), who had a win and save in two relief outings, allowed five runs, three earned, over 2 2-3 innings in his first start of the CWS.

The Gamecocks took a 3-0 lead on RBI singles by Landon Powell and Melillo and added two more in the third on an error, a hit and two wild pitches.

Thursday – the leaders were content to take it easier Friday and conserve energy for the final two legs in the Boise area.

"Our team worked very hard yesterday," Arndt said. "It was good that today was a slower pace."

Jeanson said it would have been impractical for her to try to keep pace with the breakway group to try to make up ground on Arndt because Team Saturn was well aware of where she was and would have countered any move.

"I had a Saturn rider on my wheel all day," she said. "They are the best team in the world. They know how to race."

And then after a pause, she added. "For now. They are the best team in the world for now."

Will they be at the conclusion of the HP Women's Challenge Sunday in Boise?

"We'll see," Jeanson's teammate Manon Jutras answered.

made it 4-1 before a wild pitch scored him. Alex Hill added an RBI knock to make it 6-1, setting up Cook's two-run hit.

"We were all into it," Cook said. "(The string of hits) got us pumped up."

A key for the Cowboys was no errors, especially as Marsh Falls rallied to get within two runs with two outs and the tying run up to bat. But a pop up to starting pitcher Tim Mealer, now at third base, ended it.

"The no errors is what I am most happy about," said head coach Jon Axtman. "Mealer played a great game and we (as a team) kept our aggression the whole game."

The Cowboys have been building to this moment, playing well of late, including a 6-2 loss to Bear Lake in the tourney opener.

"We definitely wanted to get back that loss," Cook said.

Wood River may feel the same way this morning.

The Wolverines lost two heartbreakers, sending them into the third seed game at 1 p.m. The Wolverines fell to Mountain Home 4-3 Friday morning with all the Royals runs scored in the top of the first. Three were unearned. In the 5-4 loss to Brigham City, second baseman Blake Horton hit a two-run single in the top of the seventh to win it.

Mountain Home stayed undefeated and secured its spot in the championship matchup. The Royals topped Blackfoot 13-11 at Harmon Park to go 3-0 in the tourney Glenns Fery standout Zach Simons broke the game open in the third for Mountain Home with a three-run long ball over the right field fence. It is the only home run of the wood bat tourney so far.

Simons finished the game 3-for-4 with a home run, a double and a single while Blackfoot was paced by Mati Myhellish, who went 2-4 with a long double and a single.

Love beats the breeze for a 64 at the Greater Hartford

Garcia, Mickelson lurk 4 strokes back

Golf

CROMWELL, Conn. – Davis Love III shot a 6-under-par 64 in breezy afternoon conditions for a share of the second-round lead of the Greater Hartford Open with Briny Baird and Jonathan Kaye at 8-under 132.

Love holed a 27-foot birdie putt on the short par-4 15th after a poor chip from the swale in front of the green, and made four other birdies putts from 12-to-15 feet.

Baird and Kay, both winless on the PGA Tour, shot 67s on the TPC at River Highlands. Scott Hoch (66) and Kaname Yokoo (68) were a stroke back at 7-under, and Len Mattiace (64), David Peoples (65), Peter Lonard (68) and Hidemichi Tanaka (70) were 6-under.

Defending champion Phil Mickelson and Sergio Garcia shot 67s to reach 4-under and Ernie Els was 1-under after a 70.

Kim falls into tie with Webb at Rochester

PITTSFORD, N.Y. – Mi Hyun Kim shot a 5-under-par 67 to move into a tie with Karrie Webb for the second-round lead at the LPGA Rochester International.

Webb, whose 64 broke the record for the best opening round in the tournament's 26-year history, shot an even-par 72 for a two-round total of 136.

Hall of Famer Beth Daniel moved into contention with a 68 that put her just two shots behind. Defending champion Laura Davies had a steady 69 and was in a three-way tie at 4-under 140 with Meg Mallon and Gloria Park.

Kim took advantage of her morning start and had five birdies in a bogey-free round to pick up five shots. Webb, who played in the afternoon, had two bogeys after a birdie on the front nine to drop to 7-under, then rallied with birdie at the par-5 11th and parred out.

Davis scorches back nine to lead Greater Baltimore

HUNT VALLEY, Md. – Rodger Davis made five of his eight birdies on the back nine and shot a 7-under-par 65 to share the first-round lead with Jim Ahern and John Mahaffey at the Greater Baltimore Classic.

Bruce Fleisher, John Jacobs and Mike McCullough were two shots behind, and Bobby Wadkins was among four players at 68.

Seeking his first win on the senior tour, Davis was 2-under after the front nine before using a string of five birdies in seven holes to move atop the leaderboard.

Chi Chi Rodriguez used an eagle on 18 to finish in a group of nine players at 69.

Struever strides to lead at Great North Open

HEXHAM, England – Sven Struever of Germany shot a 7-under-par-65 and held a one-stroke lead after the second round of the Great North Open.

Struever, who is at 8-under 136, birdied seven holes – including four straight after the 12th – after he started on the back nine of the Slaley Hall course.

First-round leader Diego Borrego of Spain shot a 71 to put him one shot behind, while Roger Wessels of South Africa shot his second straight 69 and was third at 136.

England goalie makes familiar goof

Another lofted ball gets by as Brazil bounces Brits from World Cup

SHIZUOKA, Japan (AP) – For a tearful David Seaman, the 2002 World Cup ended with a familiar mistake.

The winning goal in Brazil's 2-1 victory over England in the quarterfinals Friday came on a 35-yard free kick from Ronaldinho that Seaman seemed to misplay.

At the beginning of the second half, the Brazilian midfielder lobbed the ball into a breeze from the right side of the field and Seaman mistakenly took one step forward. The curling, spinning shot came down over his head and settled into the top corner of the goal as he stumbled backward into the net.

Backup England goalie David James called it a "freak goal, a fluke."

"He's had a good tournament. He made so many vital saves in other games," James said.

But the goal also was similar to one Seaman gave up in the 1995 European Cup Winners' Cup.

Playing in the final against Real Zaragoza in Paris, the Arsenal goalkeeper was caught off his line and beaten at the end of the game by a 50-yard lob by the Spanish team's midfielder Nayim. Arsenal lost 2-1.

Just like seven years ago, Seaman dived backward to try to reach Ronaldinho's shot but it dropped in over his head.

Seaman cried openly as he talked briefly with reporters.

"The main thing is I just feel sorry for the fans," he said.

Pressed to describe what happened, the tears flowed.

"It's just so hard," he said as he walked away.

Ronaldinho said team captain Cafu had told him that Seaman "always plays up off his line."

"I tried to put it over his head and got lucky," Ronaldinho said.

England captain David Beckham said it would be an "absolute disgrace" to blame Seaman for the loss.

"I think he's been the best goalkeeper in this tournament.

"It wasn't his fault. It was a fluke goal that was a cross but ended up being a goal."

During the buildup to the World Cup, Seaman acknowledged that something like that could happen again.

"I always know that I am one mistake away from trouble," he said. "As a goalkeeper you can be a hero for 89 minutes and then all of a sudden, Bang! You've made an error and the game's over."

was chanting "U-S-A! U-S-A!"

It was a stellar showing for an American team expected to struggle just to get out of its first-round group.

Four years ago, it lost all three of its games and finished last in the 32-nation field, sparking ridicule around the world and doubts back home over whether the United States would ever be competitive in the world's most popular sport.

This World Cup started better right away for the Americans. They opened with a 3-2 win over heavily favored Portugal, then tied 1-1 against South Korea – which hasn't lost yet. While they lost 3-1 to Poland, they backed into the second round, then stunned Mexico, which had dominated them for decades until just a few years ago.

But the Americans won't advance to the semifinals for the first time since the first World Cup in 1930. Instead, the Germans will go there for the 10th time – their first since winning their last championship in 1990.

Germany will play the winner of Saturday's quarterfinal between Spain and South Korea.

all their heart."

Fans hoped the U.S. team's run to the World Cup quarterfinals and the growing number of fans who turned out in the wee hours to watch the games show soccer is growing in popularity across the country.

At Ben's Half Yard House in Dallas, more than 450 people beat drums and waived noise-makers. The crowd was eclectic. Some draped themselves in American flags and others looked like traditional Texans in jeans and boots.

Wearing a red-white-and-blue beard and an American flag around his waist, Billy Gannon, 22, said in Dallas he was "amazed we made it this far."

He said the U.S. team's performance guarantees respect for American soccer.

"Now, you can't overlook the U.S.," he said. "We've arrived on the world scene."

The Cock n' Bull Pub in Santa Monica, Calif., never closed so about 200 people chanting "U-S-A, U-S-A" could huddle around televisions.

Exchange student Daniela Schuster, of Bonn, Germany, was the only patron supporting the European squad.

"I'm keeping a low profile here," said Schuster, 24.

In Philadelphia, about 30 people lined the street in front of the Irish bar Fado, which opened early at 7 a.m.

"I don't think 10 years ago there would have been a line out the door at 6:30 in the morning," said Reth Katz, 29, of Maple Shade, N.J.

The majority of fans at Crew Stadium in Columbus drank coffee and munched doughnuts, cheering loudly and chanting "USA."

U.S. team member Brian McBride's mother, Maddie McBride-Bisulca, was wearing a McBride jersey at Curragh Irish Pub in the Chicago suburb of Schaumburg on Friday morning.

"This is gravy. This is the farthest they've ever advanced. They've shown they can play with the big boys," said McBride-Bisulca, whose son also plays for the Columbus Crew.

Among the crowd at Crew Stadium were Nick Lewis, 23, and Ryan Dolan, 30, of Cape Coral, Fla., and Dolan's 57-year-old father, Chris Dolan of Haines City, Fla.

They drove 18.5 hours nonstop, about 1,200 miles, from the Fort Myers area to be on hand for the 7:30 a.m. game.

"Crew Stadium is the place to be," Lewis said. "We invited everybody on the way up from Florida. If we stopped at a gas station, we invited them. We talked to people in Kentucky who had never heard of soccer."

They'll discuss the coming closure of Simplot's Heyburn potato plant and economic development.

BURLEY– Idaho Democratic leaders are convinced that strong candidates and an anemic economy will push the beleaguered party into November contention.

Leading the charge are candidates Jerry Brady for governor and incumbent Marilyn Howard, state superintendent of public instruction. Both were in Burley Friday stumping for the party and themselves at the Idaho State Democratic Convention.

The party is banking on the poor-performing economy that has forced lawmakers to withhold public agency money, raid state emergency funds and preside over position cuts at K-12 schools and state colleges.

Brady, a newspaper publisher turned political candidate, exuded confidence that the state's economic stumbling is largely due to Gov. Dirk Kempthorne's misdirection.

Jerry Brady

Marilyn Howard

"Every day I become more convinced that this isn't only winnable, it's inevitable," Brady said. "My greatest strength right now is I'm not Kempthorne."

After weeks of attending many parades and festivals as well as visiting business offices, Brady said Kempthorne supporters have been rare indeed. In fact, he said he received verbal support from countless staunch Republicans.

He twisted the conservative-liberal labels with a new spin, proclaiming himself the conservative governor candidate. That is, he's the man who wants to conserve Idaho's resources and conserve the status of progressive education and not eliminate state surpluses, he said.

"We're going to get Dirk out of a job that he really doesn't enjoy," Brady said. "We're going to make this a great state once again."

Howard might be short on quick, voter-friendly sound bytes or "bumper sticker language," as she likes to call it, but she believes that her years in education have given her the comprehensive understanding of what it takes to successfully lead Idaho's public education system.

Clover Bud club offers 4-H to youngsters

Lorraine Cavener

SHOSHONE – Imagine a group of 46 four- to 10-year-olds all wearing face masks and hats, racing stick horses and drinking tea at a Mad Hatter's tea-party.

That is exactly what happened Friday at the Clover Buds 4-H Camp at the Lincoln County Fairgrounds.

All week the kids had been preparing. One day they made the stick horses. Another day they made the face masks

They invited family members to the party Friday, where they raced the horses and displayed crafts such as picture frames and vases that had been made throughout the week.

Crafts were made with the help of teen volunteers like Trenton Hill, 13, who has been in 4-H for six years.

"You have to have lots of patience," Hill said. "They've got to always be doing something. If not, they do what they want to or just take off."

Hill has been learning first-hand how young children behave, and there has been more than once when he found himself chasing a youngster across the lawn.

"When they are done they just leave," he said.

Cassia planners give gravel pit the green light

By Nate Johnson
Times-News writer

BURLEY – After a lawsuit and years of protests, hearings and appeals, Magic Valley Sand and Gravel will receive a permit to mine the 40 acres at the corner of 16th Street and 100 West, just west of Burley.

Jim and Mike McGill own an existing gravel pit south of that site but don't plan to start mining the northern 40 acres for another 15 years.

Jim McGill's smile grew as the Cassia County Planning and Zoning Commission drew its conclusions Thursday night.

"Looks like you're still in the gravel business Mr. McGill," commission Chairman Jack Hill said.

The decision marks an advance for industry in the balance between economy and logical zoning. The land west of Burley is a patchwork of industrial, commercial, agricultural and residential zones.

The permit will keep the gravel business and the jobs it provides in the area for years to come, but it rankles some of the people who live across the road from the field targeted for mining. The pit will drive down property values and decrease the quality of life in the area, they say.

Giving Mike and Jim McGill permission to mine the land does not coincide with the county policy encouraging people to build houses in and around established cities while maintaining open land for agricul-

Wendell police officer says car crash led to drug bust

WENDELL – A car wreck in Wendell led to a man's arrest and the seizure of a significant amount of methamphetamines, a Wendell police officer said.

Officer Wayne Childers said on Thursday at about 8:30 a.m., he got word of a reckless driver headed toward Wendell from Gooding on Highway 46. He said a short while later, he saw a car matching the description of the reported vehicle enter Wendell and rear-end another car.

Nobody was hurt in the accident, but officers later found almost 19 grams of methamphetamine, syringes and other drug paraphernalia, Childers said.

Todd Borlase, 32, of Twin Falls was arrested on charges of driving under the influence, possession of a controlled substance and possession of drug paraphernalia, Childers said. The Idaho State Police and Gooding County Sheriff's Office helped with the case, which was still under investigation Friday.

South Central District Health offers HIV testing

TWIN FALLS – South Central District Health is encouraging people who are concerned they might have HIV to get out and get tested on the eighth annual HIV Testing Day June 27.

"If you are at risk for HIV infection, we encourage you to take care of yourself and the ones you love by getting tested," said Kent Thibault, AIDS advocate for South Central District Health, in a news release.

HIV testing is confidential and simple, and results are returned within 14 days, the news release said.

In Idaho in 2001, there were 768 people living with HIV/AIDS, and there have been 374 deaths, according to the news release.

"While tremendous progress has been made in treating HIV and related infections, those advances mean little to someone who does not know that they are infected," Thibault said. "Far too many people learn that they have HIV late in their infection, once serious illnesses have already appeared, and they miss years of opportunity for early care and treatment. This should not be happening."

Testing costs are based on a sliding scale, and no one is turned away for inability to pay.

For an appointment, call the district health office nearest you: Twin Falls, 734-5900; Burley, 678-8221; Gooding, 934-4477; Hailey, 788-4335; Jerome, 324-8838; Rupert, 436-7185; and Shoshone, 886-7663.

Parking issue draws small turnout to council meeting

KIMBERLY – Just two people attended a special meeting of the City Council Thursday night to talk about the issue of parking cars on street easements.

An ordinance was passed in 1992 that makes it illegal for people to park on street easements for more than 72 hours without being moved.

Some residents had appeared at an earlier meeting complaining that the ordinance officer had informed them that their two-wheel trailers that were junk depositories, or boats or camp trailers that were parked on the streets for extended periods of time, were parked illegally.

The ordinance says that two lanes for traffic on all roadways are not to be blocked, and no parking is allowed in a lane of traffic.

A computer program for all city ordinances to be entered in the city Web site – www.cityofkimberly.org – has been ordered and is expected to be available later this year. This will make it possible for residents to check on any ordinance by going to the Web site on their computers.

There were no decisions made during the special meeting, and the ordinances will be discussed at future meetings.

Court reverses shooting ruling

BOISE (AP) – A federal appellate panel ruled in favor of Boise Police detective David Smith Friday, reversing a lower court ruling that denied Smith's motion for summary judgment in a civil suit brought by the family of Ryan Matthew Hennessey.

Smith, an off-duty officer, fatally shot 20-year-old Hennessey on Nov. 6, 1996, during a hand-to-hand struggle and after a high-speed chase through the city's southeast side. Smith was cleared of criminal wrongdoing by the Idaho attorney general's office and the police department, and he continues to work in the department.

Hennessey's family sued Smith and the city in state civil court, alleging that Smith violated Hennessey's constitutional rights by recklessly putting himself in a situation that called for the use of deadly force.

The case was moved to federal court, where Smith's attorney's asked District Judge Lynn Winmill for a summary dismissal. Winmill denied the request, saying there were unanswered questions of fact as to whether Smith could have avoided the fatal shooting, possibly by waiting for backup before contacting Hennessey.

"Hennessey's estate's argument is that Detective Smith shouldn't have gotten himself into the situation, so he couldn't constitutionally shoot his way out of it," Judge Andrew Kleinfeld wrote for the three-member panel of the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

Investigators said was Hennessey drunk and belligerent when left a party about 11 p.m. the night he was killed. He had a blood-alcohol level nearly three times the legal limit for drivers.

Smith was with his wife and daughter in an unmarked police car after working as an off-duty security officer at Boise State University for a concert when he got a radio call about a felony suspect.

He saw Hennessey's car and chased it until it crashed into a curb. Smith then approached Hennessey and the two struggled over Smith's pistol. Smith was losing the fight when he shot Hennessey once in the chest. The episode lasted only a few minutes.

The panel ruled that Smith's actions leading up to the shooting were reasonable and did not violate Hennessey's constitutional rights.

"Detective Smith witnessed reckless driving and a car wreck and found himself fighting for his life within 150 seconds. One hundred fifty seconds filled with hot pursuit followed by hand-to-hand combat is not a comfortably ample period in which to consider and evaluate the prudence of alternative tactics," the panel said.

The court was careful to include that "the law does not condemn citizens to death any time they resist arrest." The appeals court remanded the case to the district court.

IDACORP deactivates subsidiary

BOISE (AP) – Apparently convinced that the once-volatile wholesale power market has stabilized, IDACORP is winding down the energy marketing subsidiary that was responsible for the last two years of record and near record profits.

President Jan Packwood said Friday's decision was prompted by changes in liquidity requirements imposed by rating agencies, persisting uncertainty in the regulatory and political environment and a shrinking list of creditworthy parties to deal with in the wholesale market.

Standard & Poors Corp. lowered the corporation's credit rating from A-plus to A-minus last winter as it was contemplating a stock offering. Details of that offering have yet to be released.

Packwood said the power marketing subsidiary, IDACORP Energy, will honor its current contractual obligations but will seek no new customers and will limit its risk exposure to $3 million per trading day. It has been as high as $10 million per day.

The subsidiary's 120-person work force and its working capital of $200 million will each be cut in half by the end of 2003. Spokesman Russ Jones said IDACORP Energy will continue to exist, at least in the short term, but only to buy and sell power for the holding company's core asset, Idaho Power Co., the state's largest electric utility.

Packwood said pulling back the energy trading operation will not affect the company's profit outlook for 2002, which was scaled back dramatically two weeks ago to between $1.35 and $1.70 per share. Last year the company posted a profit of $3.35 a share after hitting a record $3.72 per share in 2000.

"IDACORP is committed to maintaining its credit quality, and consequently we need to take steps to reduce the Company's overall risk profile," stated Packwood.

Analysts surveyed by Thomson Financial/First Call expect earnings for the year at $1.46.

The withdrawal from wholesale power marketing likely will limit IDACORP's membership in the Fortune 500 to last year. It debuted at 312 based on last year's revenue of $5.6 billion, but $4.7 billion of that was from wholesale power trading.

The 500th company on the list last year, The New York Times, had revenue over $3 billion, a threshold IDACORP likely will not reach in the near future.

Lawmaker will examine bull trout claims

RENO, Nev. (AP) – Rep. Jim Gibbons is bringing a congressional hearing to Elko next month to examine claims the Fish and Wildlife Service abused its power by listing the bull trout as a threatened species in Nevada.

Gibbons, R-Nev., accuses the federal agency of listing the Jarbidge River population of the fish under the Endangered Species Act in 1998 solely to block Elko County from rebuilding a washed out Forest Service road along the river in northeast Nevada.

"In my view, it was a misapplication of the law. It is being used as a sort of weapon for purposes other than protecting a species," Gibbons said from Washington.

The House Resources Committee will hear testimony in Elko on July 27 from officials of the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service and the Forest Service. It also will hear from the Nevada Division of Wildlife, which opposed the listing.

"The question is going to be, whether or not the Jarbidge River population of the bull trout is truly threatened," Gibbons said.

"It was clear that some organizations wanted it listed to prevent the opening of the road. But the bull trout shouldn't have been listed just to stop the road building up there if in fact it was not in danger.

"If it truly is an endangered species, we should know that. If not, we should delist it," he said.

The Forest Service initially intended to rebuild the stretch of the South Canyon Road that washed out in a flood in 1995 but withdrew those plans after Trout Unlimited argued the construction could hurt the bull trout by sending dirt into the river.

The county threatened to rebuild the road itself and sent a bulldozer to do the job in 1998, prompting then-Interior Secretary Bruce Babbitt to issue an emergency listing of the fish as endangered. The order was later revised to threatened.

Fish and Wildlife officials said Friday that their studies support the listing decision. They denied any abuse of the law and said they are eager to present the latest data at the congressional field hearing.

"We would not use the Endangered Species Act as a weapon to prevent any project from happening," said Randi Thompson, spokeswoman for the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service in Nevada. "That's a mischaracterization of the activity."

Cassia hospital gets ready for accreditation

By Shari Chaney
Times-News writer

BURLEY – Cassia Regional Medical Center officials are busy preparing for an accreditation survey and hoping for another "seal of approval."

An accreditation team from the Joint Commission on Accreditation of Healthcare Organizations will be at Cassia Regional Medical Center June 24-26. The hospital goes through the voluntary survey process every three years to learn ways to improve and ensure the hospital is meeting commission standards, hospital Administrator Mike Olson said.

"They are the primary or premier accrediting body," Olson said.

The organization establishes a set of standards for the hospitals it accredits. It believes its standards are what "a quality organization ought to be abiding by," Olson said. There is a high focus on safety and ensuring the hospital is "doing things right for the patient.

"It is really valuable for a hospital to be accredited by an entity like this," Olson said.

The public knows the hospital has a set of standards and is complying to those standards, Olson said. Those standards are expected at hospitals across the country.

Quality care, patient rights and leadership of the hospital are all areas the accreditation team evaluates, said Rebecca Harper, an employee in the hospital's quality management department.

A typical survey team includes a physician, a nurse and a hospital administrator, Harper said. They are expected to spend three days at the Burley hospital talking with the chief of every unit and performing a walk-through of the hospital. Olson said the surveying team also reviews the hospital's policies and records.

It is not a "we gotcha" process, with officials looking for ways Cassia isn't operating at the highest level of standards, Olson said. Rather it is an educational tool with suggestions of ways to do things better.

"We learn things from it every time they come," Olson said.

There are also random surveys when commission officials come in and hospital officials don't know they are coming.

Cassia had a random survey in December 2000 and did well, Olson said. No major concerns were found and officials, with the random survey a success, feel well-prepared for the upcoming survey.

While hospital officials have a sense they are providing quality care, it is nice to have someone from the outside who has seen other hospitals to give an opinion.

"They know if you're doing it as well as it can be done," Olson said.

Harper said Cassia Regional Medical Center has been doing voluntary accreditation surveys for 25 years or longer.

Former winner's sister wins Miss M-C

The Times-News

BURLEY – Camille Orton was crowned Miss Mini-Cassia for 2002 at Thursday night's pageant, continuing a family tradition. Her sister, Jennifer Orton, wore the crown in 1999.

Camille Orton also received the interview award and the artistic expression award. The interview award is based on a contestant's interview with a panel of judges. That interview counted for 40 percent of a contestant's total points. The artistic expression award is based on the talent portion of the pageant. Orton performed a piano selection. The talent contest constitutes 30 percent of the points awarded each competitor.

First runner-up was Lacey Sagers, and Tiffany Van Tassel was second runner-up. Van Tassel tied for the presence and poise in evening wear award with Natalie Thompson.

Thompson and Syrah Solis tied for the lifestyle and fitness in swimsuit award. Monicza Oppelt received the title of Miss Congeniality.

Orton is the daughter of Berkeley and Kelly Orton of Heyburn. She graduated from the American Heritage Academy in 2001 and attended the College of Southern Idaho last year. She plans to attend BYU-Idaho this fall. Her platform of advocacy for the pageant was to "educate America and preserve liberty."

Fourteen girls competed in the pageant, sponsored by the Burley Rotary Club. The winner of each division earned a cash prize from the Rotary Club. As second runner-up, Van Tassel also received a $300 scholarship from the club, a $610 presidential scholarship from CSI and $200 cash. First runner-up Sager received a $500 Rotary Club scholarship, a $610 presidential scholarship from CSI and $200 cash.

Orton receives a $1,000 scholarship from Rotary, the $610 CSI presidential scholarship, $200 cash and a $300 wardrobe allowance for the Miss Idaho pageant.

Each pageant contestant also received a $200 scholarship from the Rotary Club.

Orton advances to the Miss Idaho contest next summer. The pageants are preliminary events for the Miss America pageant.

Janelle Byington, Miss Mini-Cassia 2001, wowed the audience with a piano number and video presentation before taking her final walk across the stage Thursday evening. Miss Idaho 2002 Misty Taylor of Boise was on hand for the event too.

Man pleads guilty to murder, gets life term

COEUR d'ALENE (AP) – David "Coon" Merritt could spend the rest of his life in prison after pleading guilty to the first-degree murder of a teenage girl found buried in the forest.

Merritt entered his plea Thursday in the death of 14-year-old Carissa Benway of Coeur d'Alene. He does not admit guilt, but acknowledges the state has enough evidence to convict him.

In exchange, Kootenai County prosecutors agreed to drop kidnapping and rape charges against the 49-year-old man. They will not seek the death penalty, but Merritt has no chance of parole.

"It protects society. It serves justice and hopefully it will give her family some closure," Prosecutor Bill Douglas said of the agreement.

Two hunters found a human jawbone on Oct. 3, 2000, near the North Fork of the Coeur d'Alene River. Search teams and a cadaver dog later discovered an almost complete skeleton.

Benway, whose increasingly longer absences from home worried her mother, was last seen shortly before the Fourth of July weekend. Merritt's son, Cody, eventually told detectives the three were camping and his father killed Benway after raping her.

Vet declares brucellosis scare over

BOISE (AP) – State veterinarian Bob Hillman has declared this spring's brucellosis threat in eastern Idaho over.

In a statement, Hillman said testing in the Fremont County area has been completed and there is no evidence the disease had spread beyond the original infected cattle herd, which has been destroyed.

Confinement of the disease to the original infected herd has preserved the state's brucellosis-free status, which enables ranchers to continue to freely market stock outside the state.

The 110 head in the infected herd were destroyed last month after they were diagnosed with the disease in April. Brucellosis was detected in April. Officials said the cattle were apparently exposed to diseased elk while wintering in the Greater Yellowstone Area, where the herd had been pastured for the past five years.

It is the first incidence of brucellosis in Idaho since 1989.

The disease causes females to abort. It was first noted in the Yellowstone area in 1917. No cure has been found, but livestock are routinely vaccinated against it.

Hillman said that 1,300 head from 38 herds in Idaho, Wyoming and Montana were tested following the discovery in Fremont County, and all came up negative.

Under federal guidelines, the state retains its brucellosis-free status by:

- Testing all cattle that could possibly have been exposed to the infected herd to assure the disease has not spread.
- Identifying the source of the disease.
- Destroying the infected stock.

In humans, brucellosis is known as undulant fever, or Malta fever, and is characterized by severe flu-like symptoms that may last for months or even years if left untreated. But cooking meat or pasteurizing milk from infected animals destroys the disease-causing bacteria.

Dem candidate calls for F&G commissioner's resignation

BBOISE (AP) – Democratic gubernatorial candidate Jerry Brady wants an Idaho Fish and Game commissioner involved in an illegal coyote shooting to resign his seat.

Fish and Game Commissioner Roy Moulton allegedly stood by and watched while an out-of-state trapper illegally shot a coyote on Moulton's southeastern Idaho ranch in March.

Fish and Game Director Steve Huffaker said that despite admissions the animal was shot, a lack of physical evidence precluded any citation.

The department used irregular procedures in its investigation, said Brady, who is challenging Republican incumbent Dirk Kempthorne in the November general election.

"The Fish and Game Commission was unable to investigate the case because it was bypassed by Moulton from the beginning," Brady said.

Huffaker said staff members were disciplined for failing to investigate the reported poaching incident, but he did not outline the specific actions taken or the personnel involved.

Accountant owes family $2.5 million

SANDPOINT (AP) – The beneficiaries of Tillie Ruen's estate are having a hard time collecting a $2.5 million judgment from a relative convicted of stealing his grandmother's holdings.

Spokane accountant Lowell Ruen, former campaign treasurer for Congressman George Nethercutt, filed for Chapter 11 bankruptcy protection earlier this week.

It halts a sheriff's sale scheduled for Wednesday, and also puts on hold another lawsuit filed against him by his sister, Colene Dawson.

A Bonner County jury in November found Ruen committed fraud and violated the federal anti-racketeering act. It ordered him to pay $1.8 million in punitive damages and more than $200,000 in actual damages to his cousin, Darius Ruen, the executor of their grandmother's estate.

Lowell Ruen's attempt to have the jury's verdict thrown out in district court failed, so he appealed to the Idaho Supreme Court.

If Lowell Ruen's Chapter 11 petition is accepted in U.S. Bankruptcy Court, he will maintain control over his assets rather than posting them as bond while he files his appeal. The bond is necessary to prevent plaintiffs from seizing his assets while he appeals.

"This is a case of a legal insider attempting to twist the system to protect himself, which is what Lowell Ruen has attempted to do all along," said Steve Verby, Darius Ruen's attorney.

According to court testimony, Lowell and Kathleen Ruen have assets of about $3.4 million and almost no debt. Verby said they own property with a market value of more than $5 million.

Some of that property used to be part of Tillie Ruen's estate.

The Ruens are descendants of a Clark Fork farming family with large land holdings. While Tillie Ruen was in a Sandpoint nursing home, diagnosed as senile, her personal finances were managed by her son, Vernon Ruen, and his son, Lowell Ruen.

She died in 1992. Shortly after, Darius Ruen discovered that her estate was essentially penniless.

ture, commission member Randy Robinson said. Robinson voted in favor of granting the permit, though he noted the move would not encourage residential development in the area.

Those who disagree with the decision to grant the permit may still appeal to the Cassia County commissioners if they choose to.

Commission members said they were swayed by the cleanliness of existing and reclaimed gravel pits operated by the McGills. Magic Valley Sand and Gravel has finished mining on some of the land immediately south of the 40 acres on 16th Street. The company has restored the land for farming: A 33 percent slope runs from the top to the bottom, where a wheel line irrigates a field.

"I'm impressed with the reclamation Magic Valley Sand and Gravel has done out there," Robinson said.

Jim McGill admits many owners of gravel pits have not done a good job cleaning up after themselves. The McGills hope to restore all the land and sell it when the gravel is gone.

In granting the permit, the commission required the McGills to meet with the neighborhood association to find ways to minimize the impact of the mine. The McGills have already planted willows and other trees along the road. By the time workers start digging, the trees will have formed a visual shield, Jim McGill said.

The struggle of homeowners against miners has stretched longer than two years. The city of Burley denied the McGills' application for a permit in February 2000. Magic Valley Sand and Gravel challenged the city's right to issue or deny the permit and 5th District Judge Monte Carlson ruled Nov. 2, 2001, that Cassia County, not the city of Burley, had authority to issue the permit.

Study: Iodine didn't increase disease risk

RICHLAND, Wash. (AP) – People who were exposed to radioactive iodine releases from the Hanford nuclear reservation between 1944 and 1957 seem no more likely to suffer from diseases of the thyroid than the general population, a federal study has found.

The 13-year Hanford Thyroid Disease Study looked at 3,440 people who were born in seven Eastern Washington counties downwind of Hanford and would have been young children when the iodine-131 was vented into the air from the site's plutonium factories.

"We did not find an increased risk of thyroid disease in study participants from exposure to Hanford's iodine-131," said epidemiologist Paul Garbe, the U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention's scientific adviser for the study.

"If there is an increased risk, it is probably too small to detect."

The CDC and the Fred Hutchinson Cancer Research Center in Seattle conducted the study, which was ordered by Congress in 1988. Results were released Friday, and about 100 people showed up here to listen to a presentation on the report.

Trisha Pritikin, 51, now of Berkeley, Calif., wasn't surprised by the findings.

"I have no trust in the CDC and I have no trust in the Fred Hutch group," said Pritikin, a lawyer who is also a plaintiff in a huge Hanford downwinders' lawsuit over the health effects of radiation releases from the site.

She has thyroid disease as did her mother, and her father died of thyroid cancer, she said.

"An entire family wiped out by thyroid disease," she said.

I do believe that I have the support of the teachers and administrators across the state," she said.

Howard faces competition from Republican businessman Tom Luna, who accuses the Idaho school system of being more concerned about student attendance than student achievement.

"That is such an insult to everyone, to every teacher that ever has taken work home, weekends to make their lesson plans, wakes up in the middle of the night to worry about a kid," Howard said. "It's an insult to every parent who sits at the table to help their kid learn."

What's needed, she said, is respect for every individual who plays a role in a student's education. The teachers, yes, but also to be recognized are the classified personnel such as the bus drivers and the lunchroom people.

"These are the people who smile at the child as they're going through the lunch line. These are the people who call the child by name," she said.

The State Department of Education and its public schools are struggling to do more with less, she said. While the specter of further state holdbacks fades, schools are still forced to operate with lean budgets.

"I can tell you, from a state department perspective, every dollar that is appropriated is accounted for," she said.

She demonstrated how goats eat without bottom teeth – by licking the feed out of their container. She let the children feed the goats out of their hands.

Each day the children visited with a different animal, said Rienstra, who was one of 10 to 12 adults volunteering to help throughout the week:

The animals included calves, rabbits and lambs, and on Friday miniature horses pulled miniature carts and wagons.

Rachel Pantone, 14, one of the volunteering teens, took part in the camp as part of her 4-H leadership project.

While she helped the children make painted T-shirts, she commented on what she was learning from the children during the week.

"Patience," she said.

Jackpot gets another fire chief

Former Elko fire marshall takes over

By Sam Feltman
Times-News correspondent

JACKPOT, Nev. – The new Jackpot fire chief says he wants to make the fire department a respected part of the community.

"We'll even do cats in the tree if we can," Verl Jarvie said.

Jarvie comes from the city of Elko's fire department after 21 years. When Elko began cutting staff, Jarvie, the fire marshall, decided, "Maybe it is time for a new challenge."

Some Jackpot residents expressed concerned that Jarvie's heart won't be in his job. That worry stems from the fact that Jarvie came to Jackpot not because he was searching for a better job, but because his job had been threatened. In addition, his wife has chosen to remain in Elko.

Jim Bentley, Jackpot Advisory Board member, was one resident with such concerns. The last fire chief left because his family members lived elsewhere. Bentley said he didn't feel the city should make the same mistake again.

However, Bentley said he is pleased with the training Jarvie is leading and has heard nothing negative.

"I felt we had two equally qualified candidates, but I felt he came with a much stronger support from the county because of his former position in Elko," said Bentley, who was on the interview committee that hired Jarvie.

For years Jackpot had the same fire chief. But since Carl Marr resigned about four years ago, Jackpot has gone through two new fire chiefs and is now on its third, while a good portion of that time was spent without one.

Jarvie said he hopes to overcome dissension within the department and change some attitudes about him in the process. He said the department is going to have a "Conflict Resolution Class" for the 24 volunteer firefighters and six emergency medical technicians.

"Part of my plan is bringing them back together," Jarvie said. He said he hopes to do this by keeping an open door policy. Jarvie said he will welcome complaints and try to work through each volunteer's problems.

Jarvie said he plans on doing a lot of training. He said it is very tough to maintain an adequate training level in a small-town fire department which is only called to fight a few fires a year.

Gene Frank, advisory board member, said Jarvie is doing "a wonderful job." He said the moral of the department is better.

"He has the department at heart, he has the town at heart, and he is making the department very economically viable," Frank said.

Jarvie said he feels the fire department should also provide community leadership in addition to fighting fires. He said it is the firemen, for the most part, who help with the baseball program. The firefighters are also, along with others, organizing Jackpot Family Day on Aug. 13. All the proceeds from this day will help buy sports equipment for the baseball and soccer teams. Jarvie said the department hopes to make this an annual event.

Authorities announced Friday that the fire racing through eastern Arizona had grown to 120,000 acres, destroyed at least 12 homes in the mountain community of Pinedale and remained an immediate threat to two other abandoned towns.

Kimberly School Board OKs budget

By Margaret Jones
Times-News correspondent

KIMBERLY – The School Board approved a $6.9 million budget this week.

This amount reflects a cut of $165,719 in expected revenue over last year's budget, or about a 2 percent decrease.

The School Board also this week honored three teachers, two classified staff members and a board member who are retiring. These employees represent 100 years of service to the district.

Jim Sorensen has been an agriculture teacher since 1969; Janet Coontz has been the high school English teacher since 1988; Susan Lee has taught elementary school music since 1985; Ken Hodge has been a bus driver since 1986 and the district mechanic since 1990; Dale Vawser, a district employee since 1953, has been the maintenance, operations, transportation and safety director since 1970; Derald and Lois Glenn's time as board members for Zone 1 total 12 years. Derald Glenn replaced his wife on the board in 1999.

• New school resource officer – The board approved the contract for Eric Foster as the new school resource officer. After three years of service, Stacy Buck is returning to regular police work. The officer is a city employee under contract with the school.

• Bid rejection – The board agreed to reject the only bid received for the surplus bus. The bid was for $400, which board members said was too low; the bus would be worth more to the ag class as a concession stand out of which to sell greenhouse plants. The sale of food or plants would pay for the bus and other class activities.

• Athletic budget – The board approved a $36,919 athletic budget. The program is funded by gate receipts from ball games and is used primarily for officials, score keepers, ticket takers and supplies.

While these funds are not part of the district's budget, the funds are annually audited as part of the service from the district auditor.

• Summer hours – Summer hours for the district office will be 8 a.m. to 4 p.m. Monday through Thursday. On Fridays, the office will close at noon.

Evacuees wait, watch the fires and try to develop a routine

Many don't know where they'll stay from night to night

WOODLAND PARK, Colo. (AP) – Knitting an afghan while sitting with her two golden retrievers outside the Red Cross evacuee center, Kim McMurry kept an eye on the wisps of smoke rising over a ridge about seven miles away.

"It's my fire afghan," she said Thursday, explaining how she began knitting the day the 137,000 acre Hayman fire started June 8 near Lake George. "The really dumb thing is I don't have enough yarn to finish it. I forgot to pack the yarn before we left."

Going to the store to buy more of the baby pink yarn wasn't an option.

"If the fire gets out, then I can finish it," she said.

McMurry was one of 7,900 people in Colorado . who remained out of their homes Friday.

At the height of the fire Monday, more than 8,500 people were forced to pack a few belongings and flee the flames rushing through the forests that have been left tinder dry by drought. Firefighters were bracing for dry windy weather expected today that could push the wildfire over containement lines and force the evacuation of more people.

At the height of the fire Monday, more than 8,500 people were forced to pack a few belongings and flee the flames rushing through the forests that have been left tinder dry by drought. Firefighters were bracing for dry windy weather expected today that could push the wildfire over containement lines and force the evacuation of more people.

Many like McMurry and her husband Bob fled to friend's homes and surrounding towns, Colorado Springs and Denver. Others became fire nomads, bouncing from hotel to hotel.

And some returned to work while others tried to develop a routine.

"I've been making phone calls, reservations and wondering where are we going to stay tonight, where are we going to stay tomorrow?" said Stephanie Parisse as she tried to corral her two boys, Joey, 4, and Michael, 2, at the evacuation center in Woodland Park High School. The family was ordered to leave its Valley Hi home in Teller County on Monday.

"I'm also watching the 12 o'clock news, the 6 o'clock news, the 10 o'clock news and trying to find out as much as I can," Parisse said.

Greg Kukowski took two hours off from work Monday to evacuate his wife Wanda and their 18-year-old daughter Amanda. While they are staying with family in Colorado Springs, Kukowski has been sleeping in his Suburban, showering in the evacuee center and going to his job as a custodian at the Cripple Creek court house.

He collected his mail Wednesday at the post office, wrote checks and sent in his bills to make sure they were paid on time.

"It's devastating, it's a tragedy, but life goes on," he said. "I'd go crazy if I wasn't doing this."

Leslie Thomas and her husband Kenny were evacuated June 11.

"A week after it happened you're still different," she said. "It's not any better."

Some, like McMurry, said they are having trouble sleeping.

"Your thoughts are chaotic, they're a jumbled mess," she said. "You can't sleep and when you do, you do it envisioning pictures of the area on fire."

For McMurry, losing her 4,000-square-foot house would be only part of the loss. Her 20-year-old daughter-Sean, was an only child and grew up on their seven-and-a-half acre property.

"She named one tree Treedom and another she called the treasure tree. She even painted the little rocks red and made a path that led to it," McMurry said. "It's so sad. It will never be."

As of Friday, McMurry's house and property in the Ridgewood subdivision had been spared.

Kansas church protests U of I campus

Rights activist says pastor's approach is too forceful

MOSCOW (AP) – The Westboro Baptist Church, whose pastor Fred Phelps has spent over a decade loudly opposing homosexuality, has put the University of Idaho campus on its protest schedule.

The church faxed statements to various points on the Moscow campus this week, saying that on July 6 its supporters would "burn the hybrid Rainbow/Stars & Stripes fag flag at the UI Commons Bldg."

The flyer, also posted on the church's Web site, focused on the four student government leaders who were forced to resign this spring after pleading guilty to charges of misdemeanor theft or malicious injury to property for stealing and trying to burn the Gay Straight Alliance flag.

"God hates UI double-standard hypocrites," the church's flyer said, claiming the university is an enabler of homosexuality.

There was no indication whether Phelps would participate in the July 6 demonstration. Phelps has criss-crossed the nation protesting homosexuality and gay rights movements, gaining widespread attention nearly four years ago when he and his followers picketed the funeral of University of Wyoming student Matthew Shepard. Shepard was murdered because he was gay.

Phelps and church followers also picketed court proceedings of Shepard's killers, carrying signs that declared "God Hates Fags." Phelps said at the time that homosexuals "are sending this nation to hell in a handbasket."

Moscow human rights activist Katherine Sprague, chairman of the Palouse Pride Committee, said a peaceful counter-demonstration will be held downtown in Friendship Square several blocks from the Commons.

"We don't want to be confrontational," she said. "But we don't want to let this pass without standing up."

Sprague maintained that Phelps' activity has encouraged, rather than discouraged, gay rights in Idaho.

"In his own special way, Fred Phelps has actually helped the gay community rise because he's so venomous, and his tactics are so extreme," she said.

Moscow roommates offer topless car washes to raise rent money

MOSCOW (AP) – Out of work and out of cash, three roommates spent the week holding topless car washes at various locations around town to raise rent money.

"We're not trying to be bums or anything," Daisy Mace said. "We are just trying to get some quick cash."

The trouble began for Mace and her roommates, Christiana Anderson, 17, and Michael Cabe, 19, two weeks ago when their car broke down returning from a trip to Seattle to visit Cabe's mother. That kept them out of Moscow two weeks longer then they expected, and when they got home they had been fired.

"We've had a lot of people donate money, both men and women," Mace said between car washes.

"It shouldn't be a sexual thing at all," she said, but one man apparently had another view.

Police have gotten a few complaints, but the topless car wash is not against the law. Four years ago, a judge voided the city's indecent exposure ordinance as too vague, and the city council has not been able to agree on a new one.

The women said he sat in his car while they washed it and then asked for another wash after they completed the first.

'Weather Lady' records days' weather religiously

COEUR d'ALENE (AP) – Retirement often spurs a person to explore favorite hobbies. Golf. Sewing. Knitting. Travel.

For Coeur d'Alene resident Violet Potratz, it's always been about weather.

Potratz has recorded the daily temperature – highs and lows and the rain and snowfall levels – for six decades. She doesn't use high-tech computer equipment and isn't paid to supply media outlets with her data. Potratz uses pencil and paper to record the measurements in calendars and on index cards.

She does it for fun.

"It dumbfounds people that I do this," Potratz said. "I've always been interested in weather and I'm a record keeper. That's it."

Potratz grew up in South Dakota, where watching weather can be a spectator sport. She remembers her father waking her and her 11 siblings in the dead of night to rush them into the root cellar during windstorms.

Root cellars are dug about six feet underground and are used for storage and safety. Potratz remembers her family's root cellar being 10 feet long and covered with a mound of dirt, to keep its contents human or otherwise from freezing.

Snow in South Dakota becomes as hard as concrete when the wind hits it right, Potratz said.

Memories like these contributed to her growing interest in weather.

Potratz married at age 17 and moved to Idaho with her husband, Walter. The couple lived north of Hauser Lake, or "out in the woods," as Potratz refers to it.

Walter Potratz worked in logging and Violet kept his books in order. She filed the taxes and kept the family out of the red. She also tended the garden, raised chickens, cared for their three children and maintained the house. Once she shooed off a bear by bonking him in the nose with the blunt side of a rake.

"It was a crazy thing to do," Potratz laughed, looking up from the diagram she'd created to explain the incident. On her kitchen table an eraser marked where she stood, a magnifying glass was the chicken coop and a clothespin was the bear.

"It dumbfounds people that I do this. I've always been interested in weather and I'm a record keeper. That's it."

– Violet Potratz, 'Weather Lady'

For almost 30 years, the family lived in the woods without electricity. Snow levels often reached four feet. Temperatures sometimes dropped 35 degrees below zero.

Her ability to keep meticulous records, coupled with the experiences with extreme weather led to her daily habit of writing down the day's highs and lows.

Potratz has calendars dating back to the mid-1940s. They're freebies from pharmacies with picturesque Idaho landscapes and advertisements for household products. One calendar from the 1970s offers $2 off a Presto Hot Dogger, which promises to cook a pack of dogs in less than a minute.

Potratz's handwriting is on every date. July 5 in the 1970 Herbes City Drug calendar shows a high of 96 degrees and a low of 56, for example. At the end of each month is a grand total.

Also recorded is snow and rainfall. Potratz has a rain gauge attached to the fence behind her apartment. On snowy days, she measures the white stuff that's fallen on top of a malfunctioning washing machine near the back alley. It's a flat surface and is protected from the wind, which makes for accurate recordings, Potratz said.

Each evening, Potratz records the day's numbers. At the end of each year, she condenses her calendar to a 4-by-6 inch index card, only writing the month and year totals.

So far, 2002 has seen 10.25 inches of rain and 59.75 inches of snow, according to Potratz.

So who records the weather when she's on vacation?

"I don't go on vacation," Potratz said.

Actually, on the occasional week-long church outings she's attended, a neighbor steps in.

Neighbors call her "The Weather Lady" and ask for forecasts. Friends marvel at her odd hobby. Some family members have also taken an interest in recording the weather, but none are as conscientious as Potratz.

Potratz's father who bought her her first barometer in 1967 for $12.95. By then she'd been tracking the weather for 22 years, but the purchase was precious to her. The Fee and Stemweded device looks like something in an underfunded school science lab. She swears by its accuracy, though.

"My father knew I wanted one," Potratz said. "It's something that I'm really close to."

But Potratz has a beef with The Coeur d'Alene Press. The paper's former weather-tracking agency was close to her home. Thus her readings nearly mirrored those in the paper.

Now The Press uses Accu Weather Forecast, a service that measures from the Coeur d'Alene Airport, which is about 10 miles from her house. The numbers don't always match, Potratz said.

She knows weather can be dramatically different from Hayden to Coeur d'Alene to Dalton Gardens, where her daughter-in-law lives.

"Many times I'll be talking with her and it'll be pouring here and doing nothing there," Potratz said.

In six decades of weather watching, a few storms stand out in her mind. The thunderstorm that swept through Coeur d'Alene on a recent Sunday is among them.

"That was a doozy," Potratz said. "I was worried. Lightning strikes were really close."

Did the bear-fighting, energetic great-grandmother get a closer look?

"I didn't step outside," Potratz said.

DEAR ABBY
Abigail VanBuren

DEAR ABBY: I am a college freshman with a roommate problem. Her name is "Sheryl." (From what my friends say, my problem is not unique.)

Sheryl and her boyfriend, "Steve," are very affectionate. They're not shy about displaying their affection for each other in front of me.

The tiny dorm room I share with Sheryl is where I sleep and study, but I am constantly distracted by the sounds of their loud make-out sessions, and their mushy baby talk makes me want to gag! Whether I'm writing an essay, talking on the phone or e-mailing, Steve and Sheryl can usually be found on the next bed kissing and carrying on as though I don't exist. No matter how many hints I drop, Sheryl seems clueless about what a problem her behavior is for me.

I may not be the perfect roommate, but I try to be quiet and considerate when Sheryl is trying to study. And I don't call my boyfriend sickening names when someone else is around.

For the sake of aggravated roomies everywhere, what can be done?

– ANNOYED IN SANTA CRUZ, CALIF.

DEAR ANNOYED: Stop hinting and speak clearly. When people think they're in love, they sometimes tend to tune out the obvious. If you need to study and your roommate's amorous activities are distracting, tell her and her boyfriend they'll have to knock it off or find someplace else to indulge. And don't feel defensive about it. The primary purpose of college is to study and to graduate.

If that doesn't work, apply for a change in roommates – preferably one with similar goals as yours.

DEAR ABBY: I am being married this summer. My fiance and I are having a tropical Hawaiian theme wedding and reception at a beautiful hotel overlooking the Pacific Ocean. Our invitations were mailed two weeks ago.

Yesterday, we received an invitation from my future brother-and sister-in-law. They are having a backyard potluck luau the weekend before our wedding.

Abby, I feel hurt and angry. I don't know whether to attend their party or not. What should I do?

– GOING COCONUTS

DEAR GOING COCONUTS: Your hurt and anger are understandable, considering the fact your future in-laws have co-opted the theme of the wedding. The week prior to your big day is sure to be packed with last-minute details that could prevent you from attending the potluck. Keep it as stress-free as possible. If you are too busy to attend, no one could blame you.

Who said, 'Wisdom is learning what to overlook'?

REVISITED
L.M. Boyd

Q. What age do the French mean when they speak of "a woman of a certain age"?

A. Fortyish. It's intentionally imprecise. What they mean is an experienced sexually desirable woman. That sort of desirability, like beauty itself, is in the eyes of the beholder, so the phrase holds different meaning for different people.

Q. Was there really a merry old soul named Old King Cole?

A. There was a King Cole, all right. He ruled Wales in the fifth century. The Romans had just left, so he was probably merry.

The philosopher Will James said, "Wisdom is learning what to overlook."

Can you support the old contention that women are happier when happy and sadder when sad than men are? Such a simple generality may no longer hold up in today's advanced disciplines. But it was the claim of that pioneer psychologist Lewis M. Terman.

Q. Will a buzzard eat a dead skunk?

A. All but the scent gland.

Each habitual criminal tends to repeat the same crime, sort of, in the same way, sort of. This is said to be what helps police most in the conviction of offenders. Were it not for the modus operandi patterns, it's claimed, the law officers wouldn't have a chance.

If you play bridge, you probably make in any one session about 400 border-line decisions, at least a third of them wrong. Or so contends a bridge authority.

Don't play games with emotions, Pisces

HOROSCOPE
Sydney Omarr

IF JUNE 22ND IS YOUR BIRTHDAY ... you were separated psychologically or otherwise from parents while young; your ideas were unorthodox, and friends today continue to think of you that way. You are drawn to architecture and to unusual subjects that include astrology. Taurus, Leo and Scorpio persons play important roles in your life, could have these letters in names: D, M, V. During July, popularity will be on the rise; your most memorable, romantic month will be December.

ARIES (Mar. 21-Apr. 19): Family discussion tonight involves possible journey to another country. You have it your way if diplomatic. Financial stress will be alleviated. Libra represented.

TAURUS (Apr. 20-May 20): Maintain aura of exclusivity. What might appear to be a defeat will soon be transformed into victory. Keep in mind that discretion truly is better part of valor.

West Star Resort changes management

JACKPOT, Nev. – A Jackpot resort is under new management.

Patty and Ed Youngman purchased West Star Resort and are making changes. Gene Frank, former Jackpot golf pro, is their general manager.

First on the "to do list," the Youngmans said, is to put back in the casino that was taken out a couple of years ago. Ed Youngman said he is in negotiations with a company to take over bar and casino operations.

In the meantime, the new owners have the bar up and running, along with a pool table, dart game, television and snacks. It will take four to six months to acquire all the appropriate licensing for the casino, Ed Youngman said.

A new wedding chapel will be featured, Patty Youngman said. It should be ready in about a month. Couples will still have to go to Wells or Elko, Nev., for marriage licenses, but Jackpot Justice of the Peace Phyllis Black can perform wedding ceremonies. Chapel facilities will be free to hotel guests.

West Star Resort, formerly a Holiday Express, has 77 rooms for rent. Included in the room price are continental breakfasts, swimming at the municipal pool and shuttle service to other casinos. A washer and dryer are available to guests, and the resort will accept pets.

Free fax service and local telephone calls are available.

The resort is on the west side of U.S. Highway 93, on a hillside overlooking the rest of the town, a golf course and the mountains around Jackpot.

Crapo, groups will discuss funding improvements

GOODING – A meeting in Gooding next week will discuss improvements in federal funding for rural economic development stemming from the new farm bill.

U.S. Sen. Mike Crapo, R-Idaho, a member of the Senate Agriculture Committee, is teaming with the rest of the congressional delegation, the U.S. Farm Service Agency, USDA Rural Development and a large group of Idaho farm and commodity groups to sponsor more than a dozen new farm bill "town hall" meetings around Idaho.

Sen. Mike Crapo

The Gooding meeting will be at 8 a.m. Friday at Lincoln Inn.

Among the provisions for economic and rural development in the new bill: funding for new high-speed Internet service in rural areas, low-interest loans for rural business development, grants for promoting the market and sale of farm products for ethanol and other value-added products, creation of federal markets for bio-fuels from farm products, and new opportunities for farmers and ranchers to participate in federal payment programs related to environmental concerns.

Blackfoot chamber takes over potato exhibit

BLACKFOOT – Tourists will get to see a potato signed by former Vice President Dan Quayle any time of the year.

City officials have signed an agreement turning the Idaho Potato Exposition over to the Blackfoot Chamber of Commerce, which plans to make it a year-round attraction.

Since it first opened in 1989, the expo has operated from Memorial Day to Labor Day.

They learn about the potato's history through unique offerings such as the world's largest potato chip and a photograph of Marilyn Monroe dressed in a burlap spud sack.

Landmark business will be missed

Rupert hopes to fill vacant spot soon, offers incentives

By Lorraine Cavener
Times-News correspondent

RUPERT – A Rupert Square landmark for at least 50 years is gone, leaving a hole the city hopes to fill soon.

The Minidoka Pharmacy, which was on the southwest corner of the Square, closed recently. Ridley's Food & Drug in Rupert bought out the business.

Don Toolson, who owned Minidoka Pharmacy with his wife, Kristi, is now a pharmacist at Ridley's. Shelving and store fixtures were moved out of the store this week, and the building is up for rent.

While many in town saw the closing of the last independent drugstore in Rupert as just another hit from the economy, that was not the case, Toolson said.

Business at the pharmacy actually increased over the past few years, Toolson said. But other factors contributed to the closure.

"There is a shortage of pharmacists, and it is difficult to find relief," he said. "It is difficult to get away."

Finding time for a vacation together was nearly impossible, Toolson said.

"The trend is that the small drugstore is becoming a thing of the past," he said.

After 15 years of owning and operating the business it was time for a change in the couple's life.

Most of the customers he had at the pharmacy now patronize Ridley's, he said.

"It was a pretty good-sized customer base," Toolson said. "They were loyal."

Don and Kristi Toolson took over the business in 1984 from his parents, Don and Jeanette Toolson, who were both pharmacists. His parents took ownership around 1958. It had operated since about 1950.

Incentives

To learn more about incentives offered to small businessos by the city of Rupert, call Sherry Miles, economic development specialist, at 436-9600.

Owners of other businesses around the Square said they were sorry to lose their neighbor.

"Naturally I hated to see it close. It's a shame," said Karl Barfuss, owner of Park View Furniture next door. "But you have to do what you have to do."

Whenever a business on the Square closes it affects all of the businesses in the area, he said.

Don Burch, left, and Dennis Dunn, owners of Sage Country Camouflage, model their camouflage patterns designed to blend with sagebrush earlier this month in Nampa.

Nampa hunters fill niche with sagebrush camo

The Associated Press

NAMPA – Don Burch and Dennis Dunn were frustrated by the camouflage clothing they owned.

The two Nampa hunters could blend into the jungles of southeast Asia, the deserts of the Persian Gulf or the hardwood forests of the eastern United States. Unfortunately, they were deer hunting in sagebrush country in Idaho.

"Denny turned to me and said 'I've got an idea,'" Burch said.

Seven years later, they are owners of Sage Country Camouflage, a Nampa-based clothing company that tries only to live up to its name.

"All we claim to be is a sagebrush look-alike," Dunn said.

They sell hats, shirts, pants, jackets, face masks and skull caps, all with their patented sagebrush camouflage design, which they created. Their first items came on the market last fall, and they already are refilling orders.

That is probably because Western hunters have long been frustrated by camouflage that doesn't work in their home terrain. Sagebrush covers hundreds of thousands of square miles across 13 states in the West, as well as two Canadian provinces and parts of Mexico.

But for some reason, the big camouflage clothing makers have largely ignored developing camouflage patterns that blend into it.

"It was needed," Dunn said. "Everybody who looks at (their clothes) says 'It's about time.'"

Designing the camouflage pattern that disappears in sagebrush was harder than Dunn and Burch first imagined.

"Ninety-nine percent of the time you're walking through waist-high concealment, and you have to blend into the foreground and the background," Dunn said.

They started with handmade silk screens of sagebrush patterns.

"It was pretty crude," Dunn said. "It wasn't as easy as it looked."

They kept refining and improving their early efforts until they were satisfied.

Then they had some clothing made and gave it to their hunting friends, who gave it a thumbs up.

"They have really been amazed how well you blend with sagebrush," Dunn said.

And a few complaints were actually offhand compliments.

"We've had guys drop their hats and go back and not be able to find them," Burch said.

Next they had to find a company to make the material, and another to sew the clothes, which required numerous trips around the country. The cloth is printed in Massachusetts, and the clothes are manufactured in Tennessee.

With their clothes on the market for less than a year, they've already gotten attention from a diverse group of people.

Famous hunter and rock-and-roll icon Ted Nugent sent them a postcard thanking them for the clothes. An Israeli Army major showed interest in the camouflage design, and hunters from as far away as Africa have sent them photos showing their clothes in use.

T.F. agency might spend downtown

By Virginia S. Hutchins
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS – A city agency that expected to have empty pockets this year hears a jingle after all.

And it might spend some of that money to dress up downtown for shoppers and tourists. An attractive town center also helps draw new business investment and new jobs elsewhere in town, downtown promoters say.

Twin Falls' Urban Renewal Agency will meet at noon Tuesday in City Hall, 321 Second Ave. E., to consider downtown improvement projects and to say good-bye to the agency's four retiring board members. The meeting is open to the public.

Urban Renewal had expected the first annual payment on its commitment to finance construction of a parking garage for Dell Computer Corp. to wipe out all but about $4,500 of its expected 2002 tax revenue which is in excess of annual debt-related expenses.

But parking garage construction was delayed, freeing up agency money for other things.

So Urban Renewal members Tuesday will talk about whether to contribute money to two projects that are priorities of the Historic Old Towne business improvement district, said Dave McAlindin, City Hall's economic development director. The two projects: dressing up the intersection of Main Avenue and Shoshone Street and fixing downtown's decrepit sprinkler systems.

"I think there's a good sentiment among the (Urban Renewal) members to see the projects go forward," McAlindin said. But members haven't voted on the question.

"The sprinkler system is in a terrible state of disrepair, and the intersection of Shoshone and Main has become in need of repair," he said.

The intersection's landscaping and brick overlay are dilapidated, and people in wheelchairs have difficulty negotiating the bumps, downtown leaders say.

If Urban Renewal members decide Tuesday to proceed, that

Rite Aid execs face fraud charges

The Associated Press

HARRISBURG, Pa. – Three former Rite Aid Corp. executives were indicted Friday for allegedly falsifying the books in a scheme that inflated the drugstore chain's profits by $1.6 billion and forced the biggest restatement of corporate earnings in U.S. history.

The federal indictment also accused a current executive at the nation's third-largest drugstore chain of lying to a grand jury.

Rite Aid, with 3,600 stores in 30 states and Washington, D.C. – including stores in Burley and Twin Falls – joins the list of big corporations to get into trouble recently because of their accounting practices.

"The charges announced today reveal a disturbing picture of dishonesty and misconduct at the highest level of a major corporation," said Wayne M. Carlin, Northeast regional director of the Securities and Exchange Commission. "Rite Aid's former senior management employed an extensive bag of tricks to manipulate the company's reported earnings and defraud its investors."

Rite Aid CEO Martin Grass speaks during an interview in Harrisburg, Pa., in 1999.

Martin L. Grass, 47, former chairman and chief executive; Franklin Brown, 74, former chief counsel and vice chairman; and Franklyn Bergonzi, 57, former chief financial officer, were charged with offenses including conspiracy to defraud and making false statements to the SEC.

Grass and Brown were also accused of tampering with witnesses and obstructing investigations.

Eric Sorkin, 53, executive vice president for pharmacy services, was charged with conspiracy to obstruct justice and making false statements.

A Rite Aid spokeswoman said Sorkin was immediately suspended Friday. The others left the company in 1999 and 2000.

Calls to the homes of Grass, Brown and Bergonzi were not immediately returned. Sorkin hung up when reached at home.

Timothy J. Noonan, Rite Aid's former president and chief operations officer, cooperated with investigators and will plead guilty to withholding information about the fraud from the company's internal investigators, authorities said. Noonan's cooperation was an important part of the investigation, government officials said.

Rexburg nets call center

The Associated Press

REXBURG – Another call center will locate in town, providing work for up to 200 employees who will contact people suffering from anxiety.

Midwest Marketing makes customer-service calls for an Ohio-based company that markets stress-reducing products.

Some Rexburg employees should be making their first calls by Monday.

Richard Parkinson, who grew up in Sugar City, said he chose Rexburg for another branch because of the work force.

"We won't have to spend hours teaching them to love people," Parkinson said.

Employees will contact customers who are dealing with depression and anxiety. Midwest calls customers who already have the products instead of selling or waiting for complaints, Parkinson said.

"We call people to find out how they've done with our product," Parkinson said. "People don't hang up on us. They're surprised to hear from us."

Midwest will be the fourth call center to open in Rexburg. Western Watts and the Rexburg Call Center have been in Rexburg for a number of years. Melaleuca is the most recent to open.

Each center has done well and employs up to 300 people each, said Clair Boyle of the Madison Economic Development Corp.

The 700 Idaho Falls employees of Center Partners call center will be getting pay cuts and losing some benefits this month.

The company, which provides technical support to customers of computer companies such as Hewlett-Packard, Xerox and others, informed employees Thursday it is experiencing an economic slowdown.

Center Partners, which came to Idaho Falls in 1998 after receiving financial incentives from local economic development agencies, is cutting wages by 7 percent and slashing executives' salaries by 20 percent.

It also is doing away with employee health-club contributions, and cutting back on travel, cell phones and pizza parties.

Indexes record new lows for year

NEW YORK (AP) – Stocks tumbled on yet another spate of bad corporate news and fears of terrorism Friday, giving Wall Street its fifth straight losing week and pulling the major indexes closer to their post-Sept. 11 lows. The Dow Jones industrials suffered their third straight triple-digit loss.

Investors shrugged off a bullish forecast from Qualcomm, focusing instead on questions about Merck's accounting and earnings prospects for IBM and United Technologies. Another FBI warning of a possible attack reinforced the market's pessimism.

"There's a total lack of confidence right now," said John Lynch, chief market analyst, Evergreen Investments. "Earnings, the war on terrorism, the crisis in the Middle East, corporate accountability ... all of this is weighing on investors' minds and keeping them away."

The Dow fell 177.98, or 1.9 percent, to 9,253.79, its lowest close since Oct. 31, when it stood at 9,075.14. Over the last three sessions it fell 452.33.

Broader stock indicators dropped to their lowest closes since Sept. 21, the end of the first week of trading following the terror attacks.

The Standard & Poor's 500 index lost 17.15, or 1.7 percent, to 989.14, while the Nasdaq composite index fell 23.79, or 1.6 percent, to 1,440.96.

Market statistics bear out how much stocks have suffered:

- Over the past the week, the Dow has lost 2.3 percent, the Nasdaq has stumbled 4.2 percent and the S&P is down 1.8 percent.
- Since May 17, the last time the market had a winning week, the Dow and S&P have each fallen 10.6 percent, while the Nasdaq has lost 17.3 percent.
- The Nasdaq is just 1.3 percent above its Sept 21 close, and the S&P has 2.4 percent to go. The Dow is in somewhat better shape, standing 12.4 percent above its post-attack low.

Qualcomm delivered the kind of good news the market has wanted, increasing its third-quarter forecast and citing improved demand for its wireless technology. Its stock rose 21 cents to $26.12.

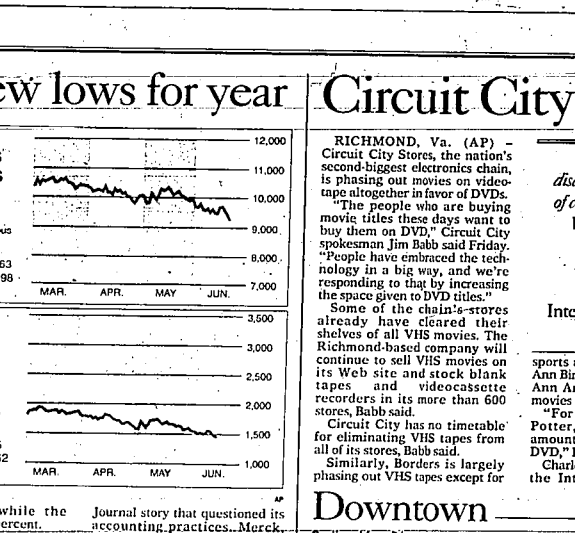
But investors were focused on the negative.

IBM lost $2.83, or almost 4.0 percent, to $68.75 after Lehman Brothers reduced its earnings estimates on the stock. Investors also shunned Merck, sending it down $2.22, or 4.3 percent, to $49.98, following a Wall Street Journal story that questioned its accounting practices. Merck, which denies any wrongdoing, is the latest in a string of companies to come under scrutiny for its bookkeeping.

And United Technologies declined $3.05, or 4.4 percent, to $65.75 after Merrill Lynch downgraded the stock, citing limited growth prospects in the short term.

All three stocks are Dow components, and their declines contributed significantly to the average's slide. But other stocks fell too.

In the tech sector, Cisco Systems tumbled 34 cents to $13.74 and Texas Instruments dropped $1.54 to $22.93. Among blue chips, Target lost $1.05 to $36.80 and Citigroup fell 69 cents to $39.80.



Circuit City phases out video

RICHMOND, Va. (AP) – Circuit City Stores, the nation's second-biggest electronics chain, is phasing out movies on videotape altogether in favor of DVDs.

"The people who are buying movie titles these days want to buy them on DVD," Circuit City spokesman Jim Babb said Friday. "People have embraced the technology in a big way, and we're responding to that by increasing the space given to DVD titles."

Some of the chain's stores already have cleared their shelves of all VHS movies. The Richmond-based company will continue to sell VHS movies on its Web site and stock blank tapes and videocassette recorders in its more than 600 stores, Babb said.

Circuit City has no timetable for eliminating VHS tapes from all of its stores, Babb said.

Similarly, Borders is largely phasing out VHS tapes except for sports and exercise videos, said Ann Binkley, a spokesman for the Ann Arbor, Mich.-based music, movies and book retailer.

"For a big title, like 'Harry Potter,' we'll bring a limited amount of VHS along with the DVD," Binkley said.

Charles Van Horn, president of the International Recording Media Association, said Circuit City's move is premature. He noted that about 90 percent of U.S. households have at least one VCR, while only about 30 percent have a DVD player.

"Circuit City will disappoint the 60 percent of consumers who have a VCR but no DVD," Van Horn said.

He said that while the DVD player is "the fastest-growing video product ever," it will take time to catch up with the VCRs. And even after it does, the two products will coexist in most homes for years to come, he said.

Van Horn said other retailers are trimming their VHS movie inventory to make room for more DVDs, just as music stores cut back on music cassettes to expand their CD selection. However, he said he does not expect other retailers to phase out VHS tapes any time soon.

'Circuit City will disappoint the 60 percent of consumers who have a VCR but no DVD.'

starts a process of assessing the need, researching costs and timing and collaborating with the business district, Mcallin said. The agency has enough money for both projects if they cost what he expects.

"A couple hundred thousand bucks is probably what it's going to take," he said.

But when McAlindn talks sprinklers, he doesn't mean trees or sidewalks. The business district's leader does.

Richard Crowley, Historic Old Towne's executive director, wants to see the district's old, overgrown trees thinned. Their roots have heaved sidewalks and destroyed underground sprinkler pipes.

"The (city) tree commission has identified 150 trees that really should come out now," among the 650 trees in the downtown and Old Towne areas, Crowley said. Some of the 150 outgrew where they're planted, and some are diseased.

It's senseless to simply replace sprinklers, then later rip out big tree roots – pulling out the new sprinkler systems with them – he said. Downtown leaders want to tackle the sprinkler, tree and sidewalk problems together, perhaps one block at a time.

The business district in February requested city help on half a dozen trends, including the central intersection and the district's sprinklers, trees and sidewalks.

"We appreciate their interest in helping us with some long-term landscaping issues," Crowley said Friday. He'll send representatives to Tuesday's meeting to give Historic Old Towne's point of view.

"Great. Let's open that dialogue," Crowley said.

Tuesday's meeting likely will be the last for four of Urban Renewal's seven board members. The terms of agency members Tom Ashenbrener, Sue Burwell, Fred Harder and Donna Brizee expire July 3, and the City Council is looking over prospective replacements.

Merrill Lynch suspends broker who handled Martha Stewart trade

NEW YORK (AP) – Merrill Lynch has suspended the broker who handled a trade for Martha Stewart in the shares of ImClone Systems Inc., a biotech company whose former CEO has been arrested on securities fraud charges.

In a statement released late Friday, Merrill Lynch said it had put Peter Bacanovic, as well as his assistant, Douglas Faneuil, on paid leave following an internal investigation. Merrill Lynch said it has turned over information to the relevant authorities.

Stewart has come under scrutiny from congressional investigators and federal prosecutors over the sale of nearly 4,000 shares of ImClone

Sources: Cable operator will file for bankruptcy

PHILADELPHIA (AP) – Adelphia Communications Corp., the nation's sixth-largest cable television operator, is expected to file for bankruptcy protection on Monday, sources familiar with the matter said, Friday.

The company has reached an agreement with two banks for a $1.5 billion loan that would allow it to continue operating while it reorganizes, said the sources, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

Rite Aid, founded by Grass' father more than 40 years ago, has been trying to recover since the disclosure of accounting irregularities sent its stock tumbling from more than $50 at the beginning of 1999.

The new management switched auditing firms in 2000 from KPMG to Deloitte & Touche, and Rite Aid's earnings were revised downward by $1.6 billion from 1997 to 1999 – the biggest financial restatement ever by a public company. Karen Rugen, a Rite Aid spokeswoman, said the company has "changed the way we do business, include strengthening our financial controls."

"We're a very different company and a much stronger company than we were two years ago," she said.

Rite Aid announced Friday that the SEC investigation into its financial reporting and accounting practices had ended without any fines being levied against the company. The company said it cooperated fully and it admitted to no wrongdoing.

Since the earnings restatement, the company has been hit with a number of official investigations and shareholder lawsuits.

In 2000, Rite Aid agreed to pay $45 million in cash plus about $150 million in secured notes to its shareholders to settle a lawsuit accusing it of releasing misleading information that inflated its stock value.

The SEC said Friday it has sued Grass, Bergonzi and Brown to force them to repay their annual bonuses and prevent them from serving as an officer or director of any publicly owned company.

"We have to see any of the businesses close," he said. "We hope to see someone else in there soon."

But Park View could benefit by one aspect of the closure.

Kathy Hall manages a craft section at Minidoka Pharmacy, which she has now incorporated into Park View.

"I think it will complement our store," he said. "The furniture and crafts go well together."

Employees of the Book Store & Office Supply "were saddened to hear of the closing of Minidoka Pharmacy," said Louise Hale, Book Store manager. "We will miss the Toolsons and their staff and wish them well. We will also miss having the pharmacy as part of the network of businesses that strive to meet the needs of the community."

Roger Bagley, city manager, agreed.

"We're always sorry to see a business go off the Square," he said. "The city will do all it can to work with that."

Bagley encouraged anyone who is interested in starting a business in the vacant pharmacy building or anywhere in Rupert to contact Sherry Miles, economic development specialist, for help.

"If a new business comes in and it creates any new jobs – up to 10 jobs – the city would give a credit of $500 (per job) on the electric bill," Bagley said.

The jobs must pay more than minimum wage and be full-time with employer-provided benefits in order to qualify for the credit, he said.

Other incentives are available to those who are interested in opening a business in Rupert, he said. Grant money is available for training employees, feasibility studies and other business help.

MONEY

Owner's manual offers help, but who has time to read those things?

The Washington Post

It's an old joke, but a spokesman for Gateway swears it's true: The computer maker's technical help line once got a call from a new purchaser complaining that her teacup kept slipping out of the computer's cup holder.

The reason, of course: The "cup holder" was the tray that slides out to hold a CD-ROM.

Americans buy the most sophisticated computers, the coolest digital cameras, the most versatile cell phones and handheld organizers – and then we forget, or decline, or flat out refuse, to read the directions.

It's driving manufacturers nuts – and costing them, and eventually all of us, money.

Consider Lee Battaglia of Vienna, Va., who never reads directions for the computer and camera gear he buys. "It's too time-consuming and I'm impatient," the retired photographer said. "I'd rather watch someone else doing it and then I can ask why."

Battaglia recently bought a computer and took a three-hour course organized by Gateway – for $99. The manual was free.

Marketing experts, customer service consultants and corporate executives agree on the phenomenon. "There's no question that people are averse to reading the full instruction manuals. That's a given these days," said Chuck Westfall, assistant director of the technical information department for Canon Inc., the camera and office-equipment manufacturer.

And that makes consumer-product companies the target of their customers' dissatisfaction. Some manufacturers and retailers say consumers' failure to read directions has prompted returns of perfectly good items on grounds that they don't work – or don't live up to the customer's expectations.

Why doesn't my washing machine start? – (Is the lid closed?)

Why won't my printer work? – (Is it plugged in? Is there paper?)

Those are among the "frequently asked questions" in owner's manuals. But they're also the kinds of questions fielded by manufacturers' toll-free help lines. Companies say the cost of operating the call centers has mounted sharply as call volume has grown. And the help lines even worsen the problem by helping consumers avoid the manuals.

"It appears that when a lot of people see that an 800 number is available, they find it much easier to call than to sit down and read the manual," said Tony Sweers, product quality engineer for Canon Information Technology Services.

Subaru of America Inc. noticed consumer complaints about vehicle quality beginning to rise a few years ago.

"We scratched our heads trying to figure out why," said Joseph Barstys, manager of customer relationships. "As we further explored why, we realized it wasn't so much that things didn't work but that customers didn't know how to work" their vehicle and all the systems in it.

It turned out one in five calls to the Subaru call center involved a question answered in the owner's manual.

So Subaru boiled down its 450-page owner's manual to a glossy eight-panel folder, small enough to fit behind the visor, that addresses the most basic questions, such as how to work the lights and windshield wipers. Subaru still provides the standard manual, Barstys said. "It's required by law, but it's common knowledge that people are typically not reading it. It's too long and sometimes too esoteric."

Experts on consumer behavior say Americans are more likely to read care guides for cars than for other consumer products. "The thing about cars is it's do or die. You have to know how to use a car or how else do you get to work, go on a date?" said Richard Laermer, author of the book "TrendSpotting" and chief executive of the RLM public relations firm, whose clients are technology and publishing companies.

But Americans "won't read cellphone manuals, any kitchen appliance manual – and forget the VCR manual," Laermer said.

All churches must deal with sexual abuse

"We will be accountable."

That was the assertion by U.S. Catholic bishops meeting last week in Dallas in response to the crisis of sexual abuse by priests.

The bishops agreed to remove from ministry any priest guilty of even one act of child sexual abuse and to set up a National Review Board to study the scope of the problem.

They'll also work with religious orders – which are not directly answerable to bishops – to implement the "Charter for the Protection of Children and Young People" and to seek the Vatican's approval of their actions. But their actions didn't satisfy all concerned.

TOM SCHAEFER

Liberal Catholics sought more involvement by laypeople in decision-making and wanted restrictions lifted on who can be a priest. Conservatives wanted the issue of gays in the priesthood addressed. Neither side got its wish.

Moreover, the bishops left themselves open to criticism for their past actions of transferring priests who were known to be child sexual abusers from one parish to another. What's their punishment, many asked?

Lest you think the issue is merely a "Catholic problem," consider last week's meeting of Southern Baptists.

At their national convention in St. Louis, 9,500 of the faithful acknowledged that sexual abuse touches all denominations and urged churches and civil authorities to hold accountable any minister guilty of sexual abuse.

"You know the old economic idea that a rising tide lifts all boats?" said the Rev. Richard Land, executive director of the denomination's Ethics & Religious Liberty Committee. "Well, a flood gets everybody wet. And this is a flood that's going to get everybody wet."

In fact, it already has.

The United Church of Christ reports that in the past 10 years, it has removed on average one minister every two weeks, most of them because of some form of sexual misconduct.

The sad truth is that members of the clergy are as susceptible to sins of the flesh as anyone else. That's why denominations must be mindful of the responsibility to report and prevent sexual abuse of children.

Here is a first step to take: If you're a member of a congregation, urge your leadership to draw up sex-abuse guidelines, especially if your denomination hasn't done so.

It's sad to have to state the obvious, but it needs to be said: Most members of the clergy care deeply about the welfare of their members. They are not preying on children; they're praying for them.

They are outraged and generally disgusted by the crimes of a few. Such responses are appropriate. But actions, not righteous indignation, are required to prevent future crimes and to restore confidence among the laity. Sadly, the guilty and innocent will be hurt as this ugly chapter in the church's life still unfolds.

A New York Times story reports that the Rev. Thomas DeVita, a Catholic priest in Michigan, will likely be forced out because of his admitted sexual misconduct in 1978 with a 15-year-old altar boy. It was, the priest said, the only time he had committed such an act, and he deeply regretted it.

The diocese paid out a settlement to the family years ago, and DeVita underwent psychiatric counseling. Many in the congregation hoped his fresh start was what the church is about. But in the end, no one could avoid the pain.

"This is a time of testing and trial, and faith will sustain me and you," DeVita told his congregation.

He pointed to the one truth that is central to the Catholic Church and to every other church: "You're not here because of me. You're here because of him," Jesus Christ.

It may have been DeVita's last, perhaps best, sermon for all who are Christian:

Ultimately, Christ will provide the needed healing and forgiveness, and Christ will hold each of his followers accountable for their actions.

Building on history

Jerome Mormons prepare move to new stake center

By Dixie Thomas Reale
Times-News correspondent

BRUCE SHIELDS/The Times-News

Mac McKenney, who compiles histories of Jerome LDS churches, said much of the rock used to build the old LDS Church was taken from a project to straighten North Lincoln.

JEROME – Mormons in Jerome are getting a new meeting hall because their current building doesn't meet earthquake standards.

Members of the Second, Fourth and Seventh wards of the Jerome Stake of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints will move into a new building located at 100 South 50 East when it's completed.

The new church will be built on one level, with storage space in the attic. The structure will be wood frame with a brick facade.

The 17,588-square-foot facility is being constructed on about four acres of land and is valued at $1.01 million. The floor plans include a gymnasium, a chapel, office space for the clerk and the bishops and 14 classrooms.

The building permit filed with City Hall lists Nov. 1 as the target completion date. But Stake President Leon Leavitt said the project may take up to a year to complete.It's the fifth LDS church to be built in the city of Jerome.

Once the congregation is moved into the new building, the old church house located on Lincoln Street North will probably be torn down.

"It may cost as much as $100,000 to demolish the old stone and brick building and haul it away," Leavitt said. "We would rather spend the money than take a chance on what might become of the building. The first owner or the first two owners may be great, but someone down the road might buy the building and turn it into a bar or a nightclub and that would bother the parishioners.

"I hate to see the gymnasium on North Lincoln go because in my opinion it is the best gym in town ... Maybe someone will step forward and offer to refurbish the old building and save it as a historical site. That would be welcome news," he continued.

Longtime Jerome resident and historian Ralph Peters said in the 1930s and 40s the high school was located about a block away and across the street from the church, in what is now the Lincoln Elementary School building. Students would walk over and line up on the steps of the LDS church building to have their class pictures taken against the backdrop of the stone wall and building.

Mac McKenney, a bishop in the Third Ward in 1978, wrote "Jerome LDS Church Growth," a history of Mormons in Jerome. According to McKenney, the area that would become Jerome was incorporated into the Tooele, Utah, stake in the late 1870s – nearly 40 years before the town was founded. Jerome was named a dependent branch of the Twin Falls Ward in 1914 and became a separate ward in 1916. (Jerome became the name of the stake when the Gooding Stake was renamed 1974.)

Early Mormons in Jerome met in members' homes before any meeting house was built. The first LDS church building in Jerome, a small white building located on the corner of Birch and A Street West, was dedicated in June 1914. The congregation grew and soon the little white church was too small.

Samuel Smith, the first Jerome Ward Bishop, was an early contractor in the area. Russell E. Shepherd of the Northside Development Co., offered Smith land on which to build a new larger church.

The property where the LDS church building now stands at Fifth Street East and Lincoln Street North was a hill of volcanic rock at the time. Shepherd told Smith that the Northside Development Co. would donate the site if the congregation would agree to blast the top off the hill and straighten the road.

The rock removal and road work was done in 1919 and 1920. Rock from the hill was used to build the church building, the cooperative creamery and several other stone buildings around Jerome. The handiwork in lava rock can still be seen in the stone retaining wall around the church building and in the third-story window located on the west side of the building on North Lincoln.

In July 1923, Smith was killed in a car wreck. His funeral was held in the recreation hall of the partially completed rock church building. Once the stone church was finished, the little white building at the corner of Birch and A Street West was no longer used as a meeting place by the LDS church.

By the middle 1950s, the congregation had grown so much the rock church was again too small. Two wards filled it and more room was needed, so the building was expanded and remodeled in 1960.

The old rock structure is still there, but it was remodeled on the inside and covered with brick on the outside to match the new addition.

In 1970, a third church was built at the east end of Avenue B and Avenue C. The first and third wards meet in that building.

A fourth church house and state center was built in Jerome just north of the high school. The Fourth and Sixth wards meet there.

The historic stone church on North Lincoln now serves the Second, Fifth and Seventh wards. McKenney said a ward is estimated to be about 400 people, so roughly 1,200 parishioners will move into the new church house when it's finished.

Where you sit in church says a lot about you

Knight Ridder News Service

Twenty-three percent of people sit in the front quarter of the church, 23 percent sit in the back quarter and 54 percent sit in the two center quarters.

Dixie Fischer, her father and stepmother have staked out the last pew on the right side of their church, facing the pulpit.

In the same church, Michael and Ann Doyle always slide in the center of the third pew, center section.

These are their preferred spots at Nall Avenue Baptist Church in Prairie Village, Kan. Please don't ask them to move. They're happy where they are.

Where people sit may not be the burning ecclesiastical question of the day – compared, perhaps, to clergy sexual abuse – but a professor in Washington, D.C., thought it would make an interesting study of social behavior.

Preachers and parishioners often joke about how churchgoers like to head for the back pews, said D. Paul Sullins of The Catholic University. In the survey he noted that "underlying this humor is the perception, rarely stated as such, that the occupants of a church's back pews are less fully engaged in the church's worship and life than those seated farther forward."

So for three semesters at The Catholic University of America, sociology students of D. Paul Sullins surveyed seating preferences and arrival times of 3,426 worshippers in 35 Southern Baptist, United Methodist and Episcopal churches in Washington.

When the survey was done, Sullins said, "it pretty much confirmed that those who sit in the front, in lots of settings (not just worship services), tend to be more engaged."

The sociology students also discovered that no matter how full or how empty a church might be, those who attend prefer certain locations: 23 percent of people sit in the front quarter of the church, 23 percent sit in the back quarter and 54 percent sit in the two center quarters.

In addition, Sullins' researchers tried to find out if churchgoers also were regular about what time they arrived at services. The results: 15 percent of people arrive very early (20-29 minutes early), 25 percent arrive early (10-19 minutes early) and 60 percent arrive just in time.

Sullins then combined the elements and outlined some of the conclusions:

- People who come the earliest tend to sit toward the front.
- Those who come later and sit in the back tend to sit on the end of the pew. "That's the prime real estate, the end, so they can get out of there."
- People who arrive just in time may be more concerned about things that are "externals" in the worship service, such as being near exits, what they were doing before the service and what they will be doing afterward.

To Sullins, worship isn't the only reason people attend services.

"Religion is very much a socially approved behavior in American society," he said. "People want to appear to be religious.

"Despite all the sense of secularization that people talk about in our society, we perceive ourselves to have better status when we are religious. I think this is the motivation for those who come to the service but don't want to be invested in it."

Reaction to the survey from churchgoers and pastors was mixed.

For Dixie Fischer of Kansas City, the choice to sit in back was practical. She and her dad sat there so they could leave early to get to the nursing home when her mother was having lunch. Her mother has since died and her dad is remarried. But they still sit in the back.

"I think it's just habit," Fischer said. "And it's convenient because I can get out of the parking lot before it gets congested.

"It might be true about involvement, because I am not as involved in the church. I enjoy the service and the sermons, but that (coming to the service) is all I usually do."

The front-sitting Doyles from Overland Park, Kan., attend Sunday school, then head to their favorite third pew in the center section. They move toward the center of the pew "so people won't have to climb over us," Michael Doyle said.

"The advantage of being up front in worship is that you don't have the entire church distracting you."

The Rev. James Reynolds, Nall Avenue pastor, is one who believes the survey has lessons for church leaders. He has observed that parents crowd into the front rows for a children's concert, but many are far from the front during the regular worship service.

"Some may feel that the worship service is something that is like a social obligation, but that they are not really going to get involved in the life of the church," he said. "But we as church leaders have to bear some of the responsibility because we have departed from some of the biblical norms."

As he described it, "The Bible model is that God is the audience; the worshippers are the actors, and the worship leaders are the prompters."

In many churches, that's changed, Reynolds said: Worshippers are the audience; worship leaders, the actors, and the Holy Spirit, the prompters.

"We have turned the service into a performance. So if we make the congregation the audience, they are just there as spectators. They are just deciding what they like and what they don't like.

"We've changed the service trying to please people, and a lot of times many still don't like it, when we should be trying to please the real audience, who is the Lord."

In contrast, the Rev. Susan Cox-Johnson of Broadway United Methodist Church in Kansas City, Mo., didn't read too much into the survey results. She said there are many reasons for people sitting in the back or up front. For instance, parents may sit in the back so they can make a fast exit to take a child out of the sanctuary. Some people sit in the back if they have to leave early.

Older people may sit in the back or the sides so they can get up if they need to, and some may sit up front to hear better.

Likewise, people many arrive late for many reasons, she said. Families with children, especially babies, may run late, and some people come late because they are busy. "But these may be faithful people," she said.

"The survey made me think

Twin Falls LDS West Stake honors 19 young women

TWIN FALLS – The Twin Falls LDS West Stake honored 19 young women on May 1 for receiving their Young Womanhood Recognition awards.

The Young Womanhood Award is the culminating honor in the Young Women's program for the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, said Sondra Pocock, Twin Falls West Stake Young Women's president.

Young women honored at the special program were Stephanie Berrett, Crystal Blau, Lara Boyle, Heather Burkars, Corinne Casperson, Christie Deagle, Desaree Harding, Sheila Leavitt, Courtnie Maughan, Myisha Mueller, Stephanie Myers, Jennifer Peterson, Kendra Pocock, Lilly Spencer, Alesha Stanzak, Elise Straubhaar, Emily Thomas, Monserrat Vargas and Jolyn Walker.

The evening's program was based on the theme, "Stand Ye In Holy Places." Each of the 19 young women spoke about one of their projects that was particularly meaningful to them and told how the experience had helped them to commit to always "stand in holy places," Pocock said. Each girl set up a display of their completed goals and projects representing numerous hours of service and personal improvement.

Various projects completed include baby quilts to be shipped to Third World countries, athletic participation, pursuing musical talents, making corsages for single mothers on Mother's Day, letters to missionaries, developing skills by participating in rodeo competition, a brother's mission scrapbook, girl's camp Christmas stockings, sharing Books of Mormon with friends, participating in a community musical, becoming involved with Charity Anywhere and building homes for the homeless in Mexico, planning and conducting a musical Christmas fireside and more.

The medallion the girls earned is a symbol and reminder of the commitment they have to accomplishing righteous purposes, Pocock said.

Catholic reform group gains new ground

Chicago Tribune

When U.S. Catholic bishops convened last week for their spring conference in Dallas, the 25-year-old Chicago-based reformist group Call to Action was on hand, armed with proposals it wants the church to adopt.

Among them: that dioceses should establish independent boards to review sex abuse cases; take steps to end cover-ups; establish national hotlines; and name active priests with a history of abusing minors.

"There are some bishops who are genuinely trying to do something to change the way the church handles these cases," Call to Action spokeswoman Linda Pieczynski said in a phone interview from the conference. "But my fear is that it will ultimately be window dressing, because the Vatican will not approve what they come up with. I know that's the fear of the survivors I've spoken with. And as I'm watching the debate, I still see many bishops who don't understand the scope of the problem – and that's scary since these are the people who will implement the policies, if the Vatican approves them."

In any other year, the Dallas pilgrimage might not be news. Call to Action, after all, has been around 25 years – its philosophies flying in the face of those advanced by Pope John Paul II, who has occupied the Holy See for 23. But with unraveling sex scandals in the clergy, Call to Action and its liberal Catholic agenda have garnered unexpected time in the limelight.

"It's brought us to the consciousness of normal Catholics in the pew," Pieczynski said. "As much as we get interviews, there are thousands of people who don't know we exist, and we don't have millions of dollars to run ads, like the Gap."

As a former assistant state's attorney in DuPage County, Illinois, Pieczynski knows a clerical sex abuse case when she sees one. "I told the Hinsdale Police Department in 1985 that Father Fred (Lenczycki) had been accused of molesting altar boys," said Pieczynski, a Hinsdale resident who is also a past president of Call to Action. The matter had a personal resonance too: The priest had baptized her middle daughter, Jenna.

"This has eaten away at me for 17 years," Pieczynski said. "But when things started to break in Boston, I said, '(The Joliet archdiocese) is going to blow up.'"

Her reaction? "I was thrilled," she said. "I don't see how an institution is going to fix itself until everything is aired out."

In the last three months alone, the group's ranks have swelled by about 1,000 to more than 25,000, according to Pieczynski. How those numbers will add muscle is impossible to say, but the optimism is palpable among Call to Action's ranks.

"Things are happening," she said. "Who knows where they're going, but I have a lot of faith that the spirit is guiding this process. We're in a transformative period, like the Protestant Reformation. But this time, the dissenters are in the laity."

Yet despite the groundswell, conservative opponents remain plentiful. They blast Call to Action's open support of ordained women, wedded priests and birth control for married couples. One critic has even derided the group as "Call to Insanity."

In 1996, Bishop Fabian Bruskewitz of Lincoln, Neb., excommunicated members of his flock who joined the organization, and threatened to do it again in April. And a spokesman for Call to Holiness, formed in 1996 as a reaction to Call to Action, sounded like a hellhound when talking to the National Catholic Reporter. He vowed "to follow Call to Action wherever they go into eternity."

> 'Within this crisis, I'm hoping Call to Action takes its place among the mainstream Catholic laity. We're just ordinary people who have felt called to be advocates.'
> – Call to Action spokeswoman Linda Pieczynski

"You go to a Call to Action meeting and you see a lot of graybeards," said Leon Suprenant, president of Catholics United for the Faith in Steubenville, Ohio. "I think it's spiritually sterile in that regard. I certainly don't see it as a healthy movement in the church, and I see it as a dying movement."

Suprenant goes a step further, arguing that Call to Action's incessant appeals for reform may have contributed, at least indirectly, to the church's woes. "The dissent, the lax morality, the push led by Call to Action for greater acceptance of homosexual lifestyles – all these things are coming home to roost in the current scandal," he said. "I just see them as using the scandal as a springboard for their very extreme views."

Try telling that to Pieczynski, who in many aspects is your textbook Catholic. Set to celebrate her 30th wedding anniversary in July, she has three daughters with Catholic school backgrounds. She earned undergraduate and law degrees from DePaul University. She's at church just about every Sunday and would probably work the bake sale if asked.

"Within this crisis, I'm hoping Call to Action takes its place among the mainstream Catholic laity," she said. "We're just ordinary people who have felt called to be advocates."

Call to Action traces its roots to the Second Vatican Council (1962-65), which Pope John XXIII dedicated to constructive renewal of the church. American bishops then launched the first "Call to Action Conference" in Detroit in 1976, after two years of consulting with some 800,000 Catholics. Three days of debate went further than many delegates had expected, hitting hot-button issues such as celibacy and homosexuality.

Call to Action then went local, moving to Chicago and challenging the policies and practices of Cardinal John Cody. With Cardinal Joseph Bernardin, Call to Action found a sometime ally – one who backed some of the group's ideas, but not enough to support them back in 1976 when, as president of the Detroit conference, he buried them in a bureaucratic maze.

In 1990, Call to Action issued a "Call for Reform" – a full-page ad in The New York Times with 4,500 signatures. Soon, 25,000 people had signed the document, launching the group as a national entity.

"Within this deep embarrassment and this awful moment for the church are the seeds for growth and reform," said Tom Roberts, editor of the National Catholic Reporter. "And I think whether bishops are wont to admit it or not, those reforms are along the lines of what the people in Call to Action have been discussing for a long time."

The question, though, may boil down to who is listening. Some people regard Call to Action as too idealist, too stuck in the past – even too Midwestern.

"In all the efforts for groups to get their names out in the wake of the scandal, I'm surprised I haven't seen more of them," said Margaret O'Brien Steinfels, editor of the Catholic magazine Commonweal. "I suspect they're a very Chicago kind of group, which is good; they're probably more responsible than many others. I'm sure they have members in Boston or New York, but they don't have a great presence here on the East Coast, which is quite conservative."

Sit

about the reasons, but I don't buy the conclusions," she said. "If I got up in church and said, 'This is saying you people in the back are not as committed as those in the front,' it would offend a lot of people because many in the back may be as committed as those sitting in the front. They just have other reasons for where they are sitting."

One survey result that seemed accurate to the Rev. Alan Tilson was that Episcopalians are the least likely to arrive early, with 77 percent of them coming just as services start.

The majority of his congregants at St. Paul's Episcopal Church in Kansas City, Kan., are, he said, "fashionably late or just about on time."

"People who come early want to know what is going on, or they're extroverts and want a little party before the service."

He's also thought about why people sit where they sit.

"People in the back pew are one of two kinds. They want a personal, private space or otherwise they may be newcomers and are much more comfortable in the back.

"People in the front are one of two kinds – either fearless or want to be seen."

RELIGION LETTER

Accuracy, completeness of Bible are guaranteed

Mr. Haffner:

I must say I found your latest letter a bit disingenuous, considering your reputation as a Bible skeptic.

You assert that many are misguided because of their ignorance. If you are so concerned for the "misguided," why do you quote scripture out of context? We need to understand the Bible's deeper meaning before we quote it to others.

When God inspired the disciples to pen the Bible, they had already been witness to prophecy fulfilled by Jesus' death, burial and resurrection. Regardless of when the word was written, its inerrancy and completeness was guaranteed.

While it's true there are many false religions which mislead people, the Bible offers hope, peace and truth you can bet your life on.

I will continue to pray for your salvation.

Reader finds modern ways of worship distasteful

The Kansas City Star

Reader's question: I think some of the contemporary ways of referring to God and worshiping are disrespectful to God. What do you think?

The Rev. Brian D. Ellison, Parkville Presbyterian Church, Parkville, Mo.: Certainly the Christian, as well as Jewish, tradition offers many wonderfully rich – and sometimes very old – ways of describing and approaching the Almighty. Images of God from Scripture – loving parent, strong shelter, triumphant ruler, beloved friend – still are part of our worship every week. Ancient creeds, medieval chants and hymns from the 17th and 18th centuries can offer surprising depth and modern relevance beyond expectations. Neglecting the traditional ways of thinking about God would be a loss.

Faith Q&A

But at the same time Christians have always expected that our message and ways of approaching God would change based on our situation. In fact, we believe God, the Holy Spirit, is always working to make sure God's Word is a fresh word, vibrant and full of meaning. Contemplating how the ever-present God is here for us and how people in each new time and place can approach God, is far from disrespectful – it is central to what it means to have and practice faith.

And, finally, Christians have great confidence in God's graciousness. God does not sit on the heavenly throne with a checklist to make sure we are using all the right words or singing all the right songs. God cares far more about our hearts. God is never offended – even if some people are – when we commit our lives to God with open hearts and genuine love.

High and inside: Churches foster faith on softball field

Knight Ridder News Service

COLUMBUS, Ga. – It's the bottom of the seventh inning. The focus in the dugout has shifted away from the coach's toddler son wandering the dugout to the action on the field. The team wearing black shorts and red shirts is up by two runs. Only two more outs and they, the members of the St. Luke United Methodist women's softball team, can call it a night.

Coach Ray Davis leans against the fence in the dugout, watching his pitcher. A Palm Pilot rests on his right hip. His blue ball cap has the Superman insignia on it. "We're only up two!" he yells to no one in particular, "Come on!"

Other players chime in, shouting encouragement.

Church-sponsored softball can be just as competitive as any other sports league. But the St. Luke women's team, playing in a tournament last year, suddenly got called to the field after a long delay.

"We realized we hadn't prayed yet," recounted Davis, the St. Luke women's coach since 1996. "The other team stood beside us and let us finish. I do think that can be a great witness – that people can be athletes but also have faith."

Church-sponsored teams in Columbus play in one of two leagues: the church league, or the open league. As the names suggest, the church league is solely for churches; and the open league contains teams from area businesses, or simply friends who organize a team. The St. Luke women play in the open league because, they say, the competition's better.

In the church league, as well as the open one, there are men's teams and women's teams and co-ed teams. With spring and fall seasons combined, participants play on area fields up to nine months of the year. There are four church divisions, the first being the most advanced. All are sanctioned by the Amateur Softball Association of America.

J.C. Hartman, the coach of a secular team in the open league, described the open league as generally a better group of athletes.

"Most church teams are not as advanced," said Kathleen, who coaches the J.C. Express.

Nemrod Kendrick of the Columbus Parks and Recreation department dispels the myth that the church teams are a bunch of Mother Teresas running around in cleats. Sitting in a golf cart on a recent night, he makes sure the games run in a timely manner. On the field, behavior-wise, he doesn't see much difference between the church teams and non-church ones.

"They're all about the same," he said.

Charles King, 24, pitches for Hilton Terrace Baptist Church and acknowledges that tempers can flare.

"Most of the time it's a good Christian atmosphere but we can get carried away if you know what I mean – just guys being guys," said King, whose team is in the habit of praying after every game. "If you get a bad call, sometimes people slip with the mouths or yell at the umpire: 'That's a bad call!' I've heard that sometimes church league can be worse than regular sports with that. You can forget you're out there for the fun and Christian fellowship."

Even the women's games can be pretty heated. A player for the Pierce Chapel United Methodist women's team recently referred to their opponent, Mount Tabor Baptist, as "our nemesis. We only lost one game this season and it was to them."

With reason. Mount Tabor's 15-member team has its pastor, the Rev. John Mabry, keeping stats most nights. The team has three coaches – one head coach and two assistants. All four men typically stand at the dugout fence, yelling encouraging words to the women on the field. "Remember, it's got to be fun!" Mabry shouts. "Keep those big smiles on your faces!"

Mabry prays for the women before the games and sometimes during. Some of the players' children attend. One child, 6-year-old Tiffany Jones, plays T-ball and explained to a visitor that she got hit in the nose by a ball once but didn't cry.

Jackie Hammond, No. 23 for Mount Tabor, iced her right shoulder on Tuesday night in the dugout. She's 23 years old and has played softball since age 8. A member of Words of Wisdom Christian Center, which doesn't sponsor a team, Hammond said she plays for Mount Tabor for the "sportsmanship and the love we have for the sport, the willpower that pushes us to do better."

Mabry agrees.

"The love bond and a sense of oneness" helps keep the team on the right track, said Mabry, whose wife Linda pitches. "We're not out there to win at all costs. It's no big deal if we lose. It's actually to bring people together."

That sense of family has kept Betsy Covington, 40, playing for the St. Luke team for six years. She's considered hanging up her glove for several years now, but she can't seem to pry herself from the team just yet.

"I've been saying for some time that this is my last year," said Covington, who two nights a week puts on her No. 8 uniform and plays third base. "This is something I've always done. Now I'm a 40-year-old running around the bases, trying not to get run over by the person behind me."

If that's her biggest challenge, then the second-biggest for the wife and mother of two is keeping her teammates "from calling me ma'am."

She's all for the ministry aspect of church-sponsored softball. Some have joined her church after first joining the team. And, the team members apparently see one another as more than people who can make a winning play at home base.

"We've been there for each other's tough times," Covington said. "These are my friends."

A year after Ray Davis started coaching the St. Luke team, he got baptized in the church. He also plays on the St. Luke men's team in the church league, which means South Commons has become his home away from home. St. Luke sponsors a national tournament every spring. It raises money for all the team's expenses.

"It's my extended family, basically," said Davis, who by day is a network administrator. Davis and his wife Terri have a 2-year-old and a 3-year old. His family usually accompanies him to the field.

"The majority of the players came to the hospital at the birth of both our children," Ray Davis said.

On the field, Davis admits, tempers can flare. One team in particular, half of whose players came from a now-defunct church team, sparks the competitive spirit in the St. Luke women more than most, he said.

"It gets pretty heated," said Davis. "But we have a tremendous amount of respect for one another."

What separates church teams, participants and coaches say, is the sense of family, the support and, oh by the way, the prayer.

'Most of the time it's a good Christian atmosphere but we can get carried away if you know what I mean – just guys being guys.'

Religious books

"As I Lay Dying," by Richard John Neuhaus (Basic Books).

"Do all your praying before you get really sick. When you're sick you can't really pray." Such is the advice presented in these "Meditations Upon Returning." Neuhaus, pastor, priest and pundit, almost died. Suffering from cancer and botched surgery, he was "at death's door" – an intensive-care unit – unable to move except to wiggle his nose. In this profound little book, he shares "snatches of philosophy, theology, biography, poetry, and heaven knows what else, all churning around the question of what was happening to the me I call 'I.'"

There are so many references to others' reflections on death that you could call the book a bibliography, but one written in poetic language. From Scripture to Shakespeare to Simone Weil to sources from the Age of Prozac, the author pondered thoughts on death as he lay "touching the burlap of disappointments and running my fingers over the velvet of joys recalled." Neuhaus places before us our own end. Along the way, he says, we can learn here about the "embarrassment" of it, the humiliation of helplessness. "Death with dignity is a delusion."

Neuhaus' honesty includes the acknowledgment that a point came in which he did not fear death. He does not claim courage, rather a "holy indifference." But the whole picture that he reveals includes the awful, ultimate trauma. He cites the thought of St. Thomas Aquinas: "Of all human evils, death is the worst." And he recalls the death of a friend, a deacon dying at 43. "Through the blood that bubbled up from his hemorrhaging lungs he formed his last word. Very quietly, not complaining but deeply puzzled, he looked up at me and asked, 'Why?'"

–Robert Plocheck

"Women, Faith, and Work," by Lois Flowers (Word Publishing).

This isn't merely another treatise on women's issues or roles. It's an upbeat, quick-paced account about what it looks like to be a woman and a Christian in today's marketplace. The author interviewed 10 women who represent a cross-section of ages, professions and ethnic backgrounds.

From the first interview with a Hollywood producer to the closing chapter about a bank CEO, the author captures the pain, honesty and faith of these seemingly ordinary yet amazing women. Although they have differences, the women have three things in common: a deep faith in Jesus, an acute sense that God has had his hand on their careers, and a belief that they were called to their jobs.

The book includes an appendix of "bottom line" lessons learned from the women, and Scriptures that helped them meld their faith and work.

Children celebrate communication

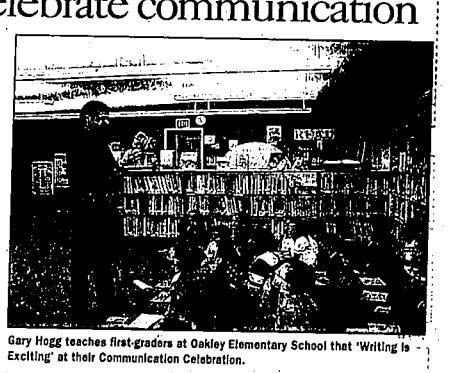
OAKLEY – Children learned to celebrate communication through writing and reading.

Oakley Elementary School's "Communication Celebration" featured activities throughout the day involving reading, writing and creativity. Each classroom had a different activity, and students rotated to each area.

Activities included "Haiku and You," which focused on parts of a story; "Take it Back to Self," where students used graphics to collect and organize details to build a story about themselves; "The Never-Ending Story," where students read the beginning of a story and wrote their own endings; In "Make it and Take It," students made paper plate animals; and in "The Land Before Time Then and Now," students discussed the value of the characters.

Special guest was children's author Gary Hogg, who told the children a story from one of his books. He also held a workshop entitled, "Writing is Exciting" and helped the children to understand the importance of details.

As a group, the children brainstormed for ideas, and each wrote their own story using the details they listed.



Gary Hogg teaches first-graders at Oakley Elementary School that 'Writing is Exciting' at their Communication Celebration.
