SOUTHERN IDAHO WATER DISPUTE

Schroeder sides with trout farms

Judge recommends state close wells

By Matt Christensen
Times-News writer

Widespread Magic Valley well closures are possible again following a recommendation issued late Friday afternoon by former Chief Justice of Idaho Gerald Schroeder.

Schroeder, picked to resolve a dispute between groundwater and surface water users, has suggested the state close some groundwater wells to free up water for two Magic Valley trout farms.

The ruling is a significant victory for the fish farmers, who say they've lost millions of dollars in recent years because they could not get their full share of spring water under Idaho's first-come, first-served water law. It's a major blow to groundwater pumpers, who've argued that well closures could mean economic disaster in southern Idaho if the state dries up thousands of acres.

Groundwater pumpers annually draw about a quarter of the water that moves through the Eastern Snake Plain Aquifer, an underground network of waterways that stretches from Ashton to King Hill.

Clear Springs Foods and Blue Lakes Trout Farm, the fish farms involved in the dispute, rely on the water to produce the majority of commercial trout in Magic Valley, a leader in the nation's aquaculture industry.

Burley feedlot manager indicted

By Matt Christensen
Times-News writer

The owner of a Burley cattle feedlot has been indicted by a federal grand jury for allegedly injecting manure into the aquifer and lying to investigators.

Cory L. King, manager and part owner of Double C Farms, 203 E. 1100 S. in Burley, was indicted Tuesday in U.S. District Court in Boise on three felony counts of violating the Safe Drinking Water Act and one felony count of lying to an Idaho State Department of Agriculture inspector.

If convicted on all counts, King faces up to 14 years in prison and $1 million in fines for violations officials say jeopardized drinking water in Cassia County.

DELIVERING THE METH MESSAGE

Idaho Meth Project hits Magic Valley

By Cassidy Friedman
Times-News writer

We interrupt your lives, which may be slowly slipping toward meth addiction, to bring you this important message:

Watch as about a dozen billboards and newspaper ads crop up across Magic Valley this week and the next, radio spots fill the airwaves and graphic advertising saturates prime time — all decrying the plague of methamphetamine.

The Idaho Meth Project has launched. And Idahoans — especially teenagers — are its test subject.

"I was 13 the first time I put a needle in my arm," a 20-year-old woman from Boise told the IMP in an e-mail. Since Monday, about six Idahoans have already pitched their stories to be disseminated by the IMP on the project's Web site. "I was addicted from that moment on. Beware: one is too many, and 1,000 is never enough."

Voices such as hers could be heard soon. But for now, the Idaho Meth Project is using other testimonials — from the Montana Meth Project.

Otter aide says former Ed Board head broke accounting standards

By John Miller
Associated Press writer

The former director, Karen McGee, lasted less than five months on the job before quitting Sept. 12.

An Associated Press review of hundreds of e-mails related to the budget crisis shows McGee last July authorized a payment to Minnesota-based Data Recognition Corp. for services in fiscal year 2007 — even though the money had been set aside by state lawmakers for use only in 2008.

Wayne Hammon, Otter's budget chief, wrote in a Nov. 14 internal memo to Otter that McGee's move saddled her agency with a $1.4 million deficit. The Board of Education was forced last month to cancel the ninth-grade Idaho Standards Achievement Test in early December to remedy the budget shortfall.

"This large payment made early in the fiscal year set them on a road of no return," Hammon told the governor, adding paying for 2007 services with money from another year will likely mean the Board of Education — overseen by eight trustees — will be censured during a Legislative Services audit due next month.

McGee is now a policy adviser for Otter, but has been shifted off education issues.

"I wish I had done a better job with the finances," McGee said, adding she made the payment on the basis of staff assurances it was appropriate. "My heart is still with ninth-grade testing, for the students' sake. But Wayne was right, I was wrong. I should

Ringo Starr returns to Liverpool to headline Capital of Culture opening spectacular

LIVERPOOL, England — With a little help from his friends, ex-Beatle Ringo Starr returned home Friday to kick-start Liverpool's year in the spotlight as a European Capital of Culture.

"Destiny was calling, I just couldn't stick around," he sang. "Liverpool I left you, but I never let you down."

The Fab Four's drummer will star again Saturday in "Liverpool, The Musical," a showcase of the city's rich musical heritage that also features the Royal Liverpool Philharmonic Orchestra, Echo and the Bunnymen, The Farm and up-and-coming rockers The Wombats.

The yearlong festivities are seen as an important step in attempts by the northwest England port to shake off its image of economic deprivation, social unrest and gang violence.

More than 350 other events are planned throughout the year.

Each year two cities in European Union nations hold the title of culture capital, a designation that provides a boost for jobs and tourism. Britain last had its turn in 1990, when Glasgow was honored.

Stavanger, Norway, is the other culture capital for 2008.

House of Commons motion on the Church of England draws No. 666

LONDON — The beast of the Book of Revelation intruded into the banter of the House of Commons on Thursday when a motion calling for the disestablishment of the Church of England was numbered 666.

The last book of the Bible says 666 is the number of a beast that "had two horns like a lamb, and ... spake as a dragon," and that "doeth great wonders, so that he maketh fire come down from heaven on the earth in the sight of men."

"It is incredible that a motion like this should have, by chance, acquired this significant number," said Bob Russell, a Liberal Democrat lawmaker.

"It looks as though God or the devil have been moving in mysterious ways," he said.

The motion simply states: "That this House calls for the disestablishment of the Church of England" — in other words ending its status as the country's legally established, official faith.

Such motions rarely result in any action, but are used by members to publicize issues. Other members may sign the motion as an indication of support.

By Thursday afternoon, the number of the signers was three.

TERRE HAUTE, — Searchers spent days looking for Julius "Butch" Nesbitt after his empty 14-foot boat was found beached along the South Carolina coast. Now, sitting in a jail 600 miles away, he admits faking his death as he fled from drug charges.

Nesbitt spent more than six weeks on the run before authorities tracked him to a friend's home in western Indiana, where police say he had a fake driver's license and thousands of dollars in counterfeit cash.

Nesbitt said he orchestrated his "death" after South Carolina authorities filed drug charges against him, then threatened him with a long prison term by turning over the case to federal authorities.

"It was pretty much spur of the moment. It was either that or face prison the rest of my life, is how I saw it," he told The Associated Press during a jailhouse interview Thursday.

Nesbitt, 58, was reported missing Nov. 24 after he didn't return from a fishing trip. His boat was found in an inlet about 30 miles south of Myrtle Beach. Inside were his wallet, some clothes and one shoe.

The Coast Guard and South Carolina agencies searched by boat and aircraft for him in an effort that cost at least $170,000.

Nesbitt's sister, Julie Clark, said she learned he was alive in text messages sent Tuesday night from his girlfriend. "We've got(t) caught. In jail," the first message said. "Me and B in jail," another said.

"First I just thought she was playing a joke or mixed up or something," Clark said.

Word that Nesbitt was alive shocked the family, which spent weeks looking for him.

"They were out there night and day searching for him and it was really cold," Clark said. "So, you hate that they went though all of that for him staging this or whatever he did."

ST. JOHNSBURY — Faced with a shrunken jury pool, a judge resorted to some sidewalk justice in hopes of filling it out. It worked.

Judge Harold Eaton Jr., discouraged when a 34-person pool of potential jurors for a sex case was reduced to 20 people, sent sheriff's deputies into the street Wednesday to summon people to join them.

Caledonia County Sheriff Michael Bergeron and three uniformed deputies stopped people on a sidewalk in front of the post office, asking if they lived in the county. Those who did and were 18 or older were given a summons to report to the courthouse.

Accordingi to Bergeron, "99.9 percent were just excellent" about being summoned.

"They were great. We certainly appreciate that," he said. "We hope it won't happen again."

Defense attorney David Sleigh objected to the impromptu jury pool, telling Eaton he should postpone the draw and start with a new pool. Eaton denied the request.

The 12 jurors selected will hear the case of a man charged with two felony counts of lewd and lascivious conduct with a child.

Astronomers' findings portray rogue black holes, orphaned stars

WASHINGTON — The deeper astronomers gaze into the cosmos, the more they find it's a bizarre and violent universe. The research findings from this week's annual meeting of U.S. astronomers range from blue orphaned baby stars to menacing "rogue" black holes that roam our galaxy, devouring any planets unlucky enough to be within their limited reach.

"It's an odd universe we live in," said Vanderbilt University astronomer Kelly Holley-Bockelmann. She presented her theory on rogue black holes at the American Astronomical Society's meeting in Austin, Texas, earlier this week.

It should be noted that she's not worried and you shouldn't be either. The odds of one of these black holes swallowing up Earth or the sun or wreaking other havoc is somewhere around 1 in 10 quadrillion in any given year.

"This is the glory of the universe," added J. Craig Wheeler, president of the astronomy association. "What is odd and what is normal is changing."

Just five years ago, astronomers were gazing at a few thousand galaxies where stars formed in a bizarre and violent manner. Now the number is in the millions, thanks to more powerful telescopes and supercomputers to crunch the crucial numbers streaming in from space, said Wheeler, a University of Texas astronomer.

YouTube video reveals brief use of Hannah Montana body double

NEW YORK — It was ever so brief, but the use of a body double by Miley Cyrus on her sold-out "Hannah Montana/Miley Cyrus 'Best of Both Worlds'" tour is creating plenty of buzz.

A video posted on YouTube shows the 15-year-old entertainer as "Hannah" dancing onstage with a group of dancers and the Jonas Brothers, also on the tour. During the song, someone ushers her offstage via a trap door. Immediately, another girl dressed like the character "Hannah" in the same pink trench coat with blonde hair covering her face dances around, runs up the stage set, and then quickly leaves.

While the double is holding a microphone for her less than a minute, the girl motions like she is singing. However, a rep for Miley said the switch was only for costume purposes.

"To help speed the transition from Hannah to Miley, there is a production element during the performance of 'We Got the Party' incorporating a body double for Miley," according to statement Friday from the public relations firm PMK.

pumpers made various arguments against curtailment. Schroeder rejected most of them.

"It is inescapable ... that spring flows have declined over time and that a portion of that decline is attributable to groundwater pumping," Schroeder wrote in a 30-page opinion released late Friday.

However, Schroeder indicated he was aware the curtailment — likely to be the largest series of well closures in state history — will have dramatic economic impact.

" ... There is harm to groundwater users who are curtailed," Schroeder wrote, "but it is reasonable considering priorities and the effects of their pumping."

The Idaho Ground Water Appropriators, representing groundwater pumpers, has estimated farmers could lose between $1,000 and $1,200 an acre. The fallout is likely to cost farmers nearly $20 million and have wide economic ripple effects.

The ruling could also affect many Magic Valley cities such as Shoshone and Wendell, which rely on groundwater for town services.

To help soften the blow, Schroeder recommends the state phase in curtailment over the next five years.

Schroeder's suggestions are not legally binding; they're recommendations to state water director Dave Tuthill, who has final say. But water directors have traditionally followed the guidelines of hearing officers, and many of Schroeder's suggestions mirror opinions Tuthill expressed last spring when he first announced plans to close wells.

Tuthill is expected to make his decision early this year. Groundwater users will likely appeal, and most experts close to the issue expect the case is headed to the Supreme Court.

It is unclear if the state could proceed with curtailment this spring if the matter is tied up in court, which could complicate farmers' planting plans, loans and equipment buys.

Both sides of the issue were quiet Friday evening following the ruling. Attorneys and spokesmen for each side did not answer calls to offices, homes and cell phones.

Board

have checked with" the Division of Financial Management.

Lawmakers now aware of McGee's out-of-year payment say they would have stopped it, had they known.

The crisis over the tests began in December 2006, when former Board of Education Director Dwight Johnson decided to continue assessments for both second- and ninth-graders in a new ISAT testing contract with Data Recognition Corp., in addition to the third-through-eighth grade and 10th-grade tests required by the federal No Child Left Behind Act.

"The federal grant did not cover ... all of the costs from the second- and ninth-grade tests," Johnson told the AP. "So if we wanted to continue the tests, we needed state resources."

Johnson said he had assurances the money was forthcoming. But the 2007 Legislature refused to go along after Otter didn't support paying the extra costs. In May, Johnson resigned just as the budget crisis was brewing.

McGee, a former Board of Education trustee, was named interim director. Two months later, in July, McGee approved the Data Recognition Corp. bills from 2007 with her agency's 2008 appropriation.

"This action has resulted in the ongoing budget problem," Hammon wrote in his memo to Otter.

In September, the State Board of Education announced it was eliminating the test for second graders, to save about $2.4 million over the life of the contract.

But it tried to save the ninth-grade tests — in part at the urging of Superintendent of Public Instruction Tom Luna.

E-mails obtained by the AP show why: He feared eliminating ninth-grade testing would undermine his own Idaho State Teacher Advancement and Recognition System, or "iStars" — a plan that proposes to pay teachers more money, in part based on students improving their academic performance.

Being able to measure ninth-grade performance was so important to iStars that Luna promised to shift $600,000 from an English-language proficiency assessment program to help make up the Board of Education's shortfall, if lawmakers approved. But Luna's offer was rejected.

"Tom's iStars program is in jeopardy concerning all Idaho high schools if we stop the test, so he is very interested in saving it," wrote Margo Healy, Luna's ISAT program manager, in a Dec. 1 e-mail.

As Board of Education leaders scrambled this fall for ways to keep the ISAT test for ninth graders afloat, an e-mail trail shows how Board of Education Chairman Milford Terrell suggested that Otter and members of the budget-writing committee allow the agency to defer testing payments of more than $1.2 million to Data Recognition Corp. into 2009, 2010 and 2011.

"They don't have the ability to borrow money," Cameron said.

By November, Otter's office was so displeased with the Board of Education and its handling of its finances that Hammon, his top budget aide, suggested replacing trustees.

"We shouldn't bail them out but wait and see what they come up with," Hammon wrote in a Nov. 15 e-mail. "If they are not successful, then perhaps we give them the money on the condition that we replace a few board members."

So far, no trustees have been ejected, though two — Terrell, a Boise businessman, and Richard Westerberg, a county commissioner from southeastern Idaho — will likely face testy state Senate confirmation hearings in coming weeks. Laird Stone's term ends March 1.

When the ninth-grade test was canceled on Dec. 10, it provoked outrage among educators.

"Of all the decisions the State Board of Education has made over the years, eliminating the ninth-grade ISAT is the most asinine thing I have ever heard," wrote Heidi Lyons, a Pocatello 10th-grade teacher.

It still had to make up a remaining $316,254 deficit, largely from unrecoverable money spent on the ninth grade contract.

To do it, it's been forced to keep positions vacant, including abandoning a $30,000 national search for a new full-time director.

Still, Mike Rush, who replaced McGee as interim director, said his agency is on its way to recovery.

U.S. immigration agency will no longer sedate deportees without court order

By Peter Prengaman
Associated Press writer

LOS ANGELES — U.S. immigration agents must not sedate deportees without a judge's permission, according to a policy change issued this week.

Immigration officials have acknowledged that 56 deportees were given psychotropic drugs during a seven-month period in 2006 and 2007 even though most had no history of mental problems.

The American Civil Liberties Union filed a federal lawsuit over the practice.

An internal Immigration and Customs Enforcement memo dated Wednesday and obtained by The Associated Press on Friday said effective immediately, agents must get a court order before administering drugs "to facilitate an alien's removal."

"There are no exceptions to this policy," said the memo written by John Torres, detention and removal director of Immigration and Customs Enforcement.

To get a sedation order from court, officials must show deportees have a history of physical resistance to being removed or are a danger to themselves.

"Medical sedation will only be considered as a last resort," she said.

The ACLU sued the agency in June to stop the practice, alleging it could constitute torture and violates the Bill of Rights and federal laws regarding the medical treatment of detainees.

WASHINGTON — Millions of air travelers may find going through airport security much more complicated this spring, as the Bush administration heads toward a showdown with state governments over post-Sept. 11 rules for new driver's licenses.

By May, the dispute could leave millions of people unable to use their licenses to board planes, but privacy advocates called that a hollow threat by federal officials.

Homeland Security Secretary Michael Chertoff, who was unveiling final details of the REAL ID Act's rules on Friday, said that if states want their licenses to remain valid for air travel after May 2008, those states must seek a waiver indicating they want more time to comply with the legislation.

The deadline is an effort to get states to begin phasing in the REAL ID program. Citizens born after Dec. 1, 1964, would have six years to get a new license; older Americans would have until 2017.

Chertoff said that for any state which doesn't seek such a waiver by May, residents of that state will have to use a passport or certain types of federal border-crossing cards if they want to avoid a vigorous secondary screening at airport security.

"The last thing I want to do is punish citizens of a state who would love to have a REAL ID license but can't get one," Chertoff said. "But in the end, the rule is the rule as passed by Congress."

The plan's chief critic, the American Civil Liberties Union, called Chertoff's deadline a bluff — and urged state governments to call him on it.

"Are they really prepared to shut those airports down? Which is what effectively would happen if the residents of those states are going to have to go through secondary scrutiny," said Barry Steinhardt, director of the ACLU's technology and liberty program. "This is a scare tactic."

So far, 17 states have passed legislation or resolutions objecting to the REAL ID Act's provisions, many due to concerns it will cost them too much to comply. The 17, according to the ACLU, are Arkansas, Colorado, Georgia, Hawaii, Idaho, Illinois, Maine, Missouri, Montana, Nebraska, Nevada, New Hampshire, North Dakota, Oklahoma, South Carolina, Tennessee and Washington.

Maine officials said Friday they were unsure if their own state law even allows them to ask for a waiver.

"It certainly seems to be an effort by the federal government to create compliance with REAL ID whether states have an interest in doing so or not," said Don Cookson, spokesman for the Maine secretary of state's office.

The Sept. 11 attacks were the main motivation for the changes: The hijacker-pilot who flew into the Pentagon, Hani Hanjour, had four driver's licenses and ID cards from three states.

The Homeland Security Department and other officials say the only way to ensure an ID is safe is to check it against secure government data; critics such as the ACLU say that creates a system that is more likely to be infiltrated and have its personal data pilfered.

Feedlot

According to the grand jury indictment obtained Friday by the Times-News, the facility installed backflow-prevention valves backward at three irrigation wells, which allowed the facility to drain a waste retention pond into the aquifer.

Investigators also say King buried an irrigation valve moments after it was inspected and lied to investigators about its existence.

The violations were discovered in May and early June of 2005 during routine inspections. The incidents led to a three-agency probe by ISDA, the Idaho Department of Environmental Quality and the Idaho Department of Water Resources that eventually found dozens of violations.

The state alleged the feedlot had pumped groundwater and diverted surface water without a valid water right, sprayed chemicals and manure into nearby Willow Creek and allowed the berm at a waste retention pond to collapse, in addition to the well violations.

Well samples gathered at the site during the investigation showed fecal coliform and E. coli bacteria present in the water.

At one point in late 2005, Double C Farms and Lambert Produce, which also does business at the feedlot, faced nearly $1 million in fines between the agencies.

The Environmental Protection Agency announced then it would begin its own investigation of alleged federal Safe Drinking Water Act violations. Tuesday's indictment is the culmination of that investigation.

A trial date is yet to be scheduled, according to online court information.

stories on average 150 times per week on KEZJ and KSNQ radio stations. On the television, KMVT, KSAW, KTFT, KXPF and on cable stations FX, MTV, Spike TV and Animal Planet, the Meth Project is airing 180 graphic dramatized slots on average per week. And 36 billboards across Idaho currently depict Montana meth abuse cases.

The Times-News runs the project's ads at less than half-price. The hard-hitting content is second-hand: The faces of addiction are Montana kids. But as the project kicks off, they could soon be replaced by young burned-out faces of Idahoans.

"During this first phase, we were in such a big ramp-up to get this going we used the ads that were running in Montana," said Megan Ronk, director of the Idaho Meth Project. "We went in and swapped out the logos, so it says Idaho Meth Project instead of Montana Meth Project. This is a campaign that has been extremely successful in Montana. There's no need to reinvent the wheel. But now that the project is live, we have a tab on our Web site that says share your story."

The tab allows Idahoans who want to share their stories to become next in line for producing the localized content that drastically reduced meth use and meth culture in Montana, Ronk said.

As of Friday, the project has fundraised $1.6 million in private contributions. It still needs another $1 million to run the media-saturation program for a full year. It's soliciting that money both from private donors and the Millennium Fund — $4 million made available annually to the state from the tobacco industry.

There's one man at Lamar Outdoor Advertising who is responsible for all the company's Magic Valley billboards. He's swamped, to put it mildly. Of the 11 billboards, which were expected to be posted by Friday, most have been stalled by snowy weather.

"Sometimes mother nature doesn't cooperate," said Todd Jones, Lamar's Magic Valley district manager, who's spent 17 years in local billboard advertising. "It's definitely the biggest statewide buy I've seen."

• Ronk claimed there are already signs that the project's message is working, but there's also been some misinterpretation about the project's strategy.

She said she received a call from a parent who said he was driving his kid back from basketball practice when a slot came on the radio. The parent was shocked; his kid, who was usually averse to having the "drug talk," wanted to talk about the drug.

The advertisements, "They sort of almost leave you a little breathless, speechless," Ronk said. "They are, I think, very shocking to a lot of people and we are already amazed at the discussion it's sparking."

Ronk said, these people are tuning in to the wrong channels.

"It's important to remember we're not on talk radio," Ronk said. "We are where the kids are watching and where the young adults are watching."

The staging is happening now, but the social scientific experiment hit the ground months ago in fall.

The project discovered through a survey what thousands of randomly selected teenagers, parents and young adults thought about meth and what sort of contact they'd had with the drug. Data gleaned through that survey will likely be made available to the public this month, Ronk said. Next fall, expect a second evaluation conducted the same way.

Work place drug testing, data from law enforcement are among the other ways the project will measure progress.

"We have already received a number of e-mails from Idahoans that have shared their personal story," Ronk said. "Our plan is to now capture those, and to start working with those folks to see if we can produce some of our own radio ads. And you would know where they were from."

PHOENIX (AP) — A woman leaving an eyeglass store is grabbed in the parking lot by four men who force her, kicking and screaming, into a pickup truck. The kidnappers demand a $900,000 ransom.

But police soon realize her family is holding something back and isn't fully cooperating with them. Later, investigators find out that relatives have arranged the woman's release on their own. And they discover that members of the family are heavy into marijuana trafficking.

The case illustrates how a terrifyingly common crime in Latin America has moved across the border into the United States: Criminals and their family members are being kidnapped by fellow criminals and held for six-figure ransoms.

The abductions are occurring in the Phoenix area at the rate of practically one per day, and police suspect they have led to killings in which bound and bullet-riddled bodies have been found dumped in the desert.

The kidnap victims are typically drug- or immigrant-smugglers, who are seen as inviting targets because they have a lot of money, they can raise large sums of cash on short notice, and they are unlikely to go to the police, for fear their own shady dealings will come to light.

"We have never had a victim that we have investigated that has been as clean as the new driven snow," said Sgt. Phil Roberts, who investigates the kidnappings. "There has always been some type of criminal element to it. Either they are criminals, drug dealers or human smugglers — or a close family member is."

The kidnappers themselves are fellow traffickers who are doing it for the money or to punish their rivals.

Phoenix had more than 340 reported such kidnappings last year, but police said the real number is much higher because many cases go unreported.

The San Diego area has also seen a rise in kidnappings over the past year, with two or three reported during busy weeks, and some victims were mixed up in drug smuggling. But the hostage-taking appears to be most prevalent in Phoenix, the nation's biggest base of operations for immigrant smugglers.

Kidnappings are common in Mexico, and the victims often include criminals as well as legitimate businessmen, such as bankers. Phoenix police said they believe the kidnappers here are not going after legitimate businessmen for fear their families will go to the police.

The kidnappings first came to light in Phoenix three years ago but are rising as overall violence associated with immigrant smuggling intensifies in Arizona.

Immigrant smuggling is a lucrative line of work: A ring that moves a load of 30 illegal immigrants through Arizona can gross $45,000 to $75,000.

And smugglers can quickly get their hands on large sums of money — sometimes in the middle of the night. In one case, someone who turned to authorities about a kidnapping brought more than $300,000 in ransom money to the police department in cereal boxes.

Many of the abductions begin in "drop houses" — homes where immigrant smugglers hold customers until they pay up. Typically, the kidnappers storm drop houses or relatives' homes at gunpoint, smack the victims around, tie them up and speed off to a hiding place.

Hostages are often tortured as the kidnappers try to force families to meet their demands. A victim's finger might be cut off. A man might get a phone call in which he is forced to listen to his wife getting raped. Two smugglers were blindfolded and forced to stand in buckets of water while captors zapped them with an electrical cord.

Police know few details of the release of the 44-year-old woman kidnapped outside the eyeglass store in Phoenix in May.

Initially, the woman's husband told police that he didn't know why his wife was seized, and that his family wasn't involved in anything illegal.

Investigators suspected her husband and son were holding back. Her son had recognized the voice of a kidnapper who called him but was evasive when pressed for details.

Eventually, investigators learned the family's produce and meat-processing business had been investigated in 2003 as a possible drug-trafficking front.

Confronted with that information, the husband said that two sons had about 150 pounds of marijuana stolen from them and that they owed money to the people who sold them the drugs. They eventually made good on their debt, but the sellers were demanding an additional $50,000.

JEERS: A snow shovel will cost you about 15 bucks at the home improvement store. Buy one. Use it.

Far too many Magic Valley homeowners, landlords and retailers never give a second thought to shoveling snow off their sidewalks, as this week's storm vividly demonstrated. As a consequence, there are hundreds of miles of ice-glazed concrete across south-central Idaho — and accidents waiting to happen.

Twin Falls has an ordinance requiring property owners to clean sidewalks, but the city says enforcement would be too expensive.

That means the only legal incentive to shovel snow is the risk of getting sued if someone takes a spill.

For an elderly person, falling and breaking a hip is life-threatening. Shoveling snow isn't a question of being a good neighbor; it's a matter of being a decent human being.

CHEERS: To Hailey attorney Keith Roark, who succeeds Richard Stallings as chairman of the Idaho Democratic Party.

Roark is tough. The former prosecuting attorney is one of the most effective trial lawyers in Idaho, and he doesn't often back down from a challenge.

CHEERS & JEERS

His new job will offer plenty of them. Democrats are outnumbered 3-1 in The Legislature and 4-0 in the congressional delegation. All statewide elected officials are Republican.

Whether you like Democrats or loathe them, Idaho needs two viable political parties. And a Democratic revival, if there is one, will only come through electing more county commissioners and state legislators.

That's long, tedious and unglamorous work, but Roark is suited for it.

JEERS: It's embarrassing enough that the state of Nevada still permits brothels in some counties. Now they get to advertise.

A federal judge's recent ruling that lifted a ban on advertising by the state's legal bordellos has the Elko City Council considering a repeal of its own local ordinance.

It's likely to be replaced by another law restricting advertising for any business.

We hope the council acts quickly; one brothel owner is thinking of putting ads on the top of taxis, according to the Elko Daily Free Press.

Lots of Nevadans think it's time for legal bordellos to go away, but the Legislature has always resisted. In a state that faces plenty of real issues, maybe it's finally time to drag lawmakers out of the 19th century.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

We need a change to help this nation, ourselves

New year; bad times.

The nation is in the worst mess in my lifetime. I am 81 years old now. Can't recall a time when I have felt like I do today. I have been called a paranoid, optimist. The problems of today are almost impossible to do anything with. The USA has almost all of the God-given resources used up; 90 percent of them wasted forever. They are nonrenusable, i.e., oil, timber, even the fertile land. Each day, we are caretakers of the land, cover it up. Billions of acres taken out by homes, buildings, highways and just erosion itself.

We are using the homeless people of the world's resources now with no regard for their interest. Europe has made a wasteland of Africa; the USA is doing the same to America.

The modern man is destroying what he can't use for what he can use. Everywhere, the ocean itself is being robbed of its beauty also. These things have caught up with all the world's so-called civilized part of this world.

As I write, the election results are on TV. Obama has come out shining. He is a true minority. Finally. Maybe the stars on the majorities will bring a new approach to Washington. The last man to act truly like he cared for the planets, the majority of the people, was FDR.

President Roosevelt put in force the CCC to save the soil, the WPA and the PWA to try and look after the land and resources along with the people. The world today is used by all the people and managed that way is a must for damn sure.

I hope Obama will try in the short time if he becomes the president to try to do this for the sake of all of us.

Pay attention!

Farmland is going to waste in developments

This letter is to those developers that purchase good farm ground around us to build houses on.

While waiting for their development plans to come together, they neglect their responsibility to maintain their property. As farmers, we take pride in our property by spraying, mowing and cultivating to keep the weeds under control so that it looks good and so it doesn't become a problem for anyone else.

After the wind this last week, I'd like to thank my neighbor for all of his weeds in my yard, for the piled-high weeds in my flower beds and for the huge pile of weeds that the wind has deposited on the back side of every building, shrub, tree, haystack — everything I have has a pile of weeds behind it. Every fence for a mile is piled 5 feet high with weeds, all because one property owner thought he could get by without any weed management.

I can't wait until spring, when the weather permits, I can clean up my neighbor's mess on my property. Meanwhile, my place looks as trashy as theirs. So thank you for the extra work and the trashy look.

Illegal immigration has a lot of hidden costs

We have, as a country, become blind and deaf to the problems of illegal immigration. Examples:

- $11 billion to $22 billion spent on welfare to illegal aliens each year.
- $2.2 billion a year spent on food assistance programs and free school lunches for illegal aliens.
- $2.5 billion a year spent on Medicare for illegal aliens.
- $12 billion a year spent on school education for children here illegally, and they cannot speak a word of English.
- $17 billion a year spent for education for the American-born children of illegal aliens.
- $3 million a day spent to incarcerate illegal aliens.
- 30 percent of all prison inmates are illegal aliens.
- $90 billion a year spent on illegal aliens for welfare and social services by U.S. taxpayers.
- $200 billion a year in suppressed American wages are caused by illegal aliens.
- The illegal aliens in the United States have a crime rate that's 2.5 times that of white non-illegal aliens.
- During the year 2005, there were 4 million to 10 million illegal aliens that crossed our southern border; also as many as 19,500 illegal aliens from terrorist countries. Millions of pounds of drugs crossed into the United States from our southern border.
- The National Policy Institute estimated that the total of mass deportation would be between $206 billion and $230 billion or a cost of between $41 billion and $46 billion over a five-year period.
- In 2006, illegal aliens sent home $45 billion in remittance back to the countries of origin.
- The dark side of illegal immigration: Nearly 1 million sex crimes committed by illegal immigrants in the United States.

Total cost: $338.3 billion a year. Are we that stupid?

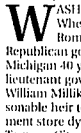
Mitt Romney's road not taken

WASHINGTON — When George Romney was the Republican governor of Michigan 40 years ago, his lieutenant governor was William Milliken, the personable heir to a department store dynasty in Traverse City.



DAVID BRODER

They were partners in a socially progressive, business-oriented state administration, notable for its involvement with the economic struggles of heavily Democratic Detroit.

When George Romney challenged Richard Nixon for the GOP presidential nomination in 1968, Milliken and his wife, Helen, gave Romney their full support. And when Romney left the governorship the next year to become Nixon's secretary of housing and urban development, Milliken became his successor. He won election three times — serving for a record 14 years as a popular chief executive until he retired in 1983.

When I reached Milliken by phone at his home five days before Tuesday's Michigan primary, I asked whether he was involved in the current GOP campaign. "I haven't been," he said, "but I'm about to jump in. I'm waiting for a phone call from John McCain so I can tell him I'm endorsing him."

Milliken's decision is not a surprise. He did the same thing eight years ago, when McCain followed up his victory over George W. Bush in New Hampshire by winning Michigan — the last significant state the Arizona senator won before the battle turned against him in South Carolina.

Nonetheless, for anyone with a sense of history, Mitt Romney's inability to persuade his father's closest political ally to join him in what has become his own last stand is a poignant moment.

Though Mitt Romney chose Massachusetts, his business headquarters, as the place to root his political ambitions, running first for the Senate and then being elected governor, it is Michigan that has been his favorite venue.

He announced his candidacy for president at the Henry Ford Museum in Dearborn and has long believed that he has a personal base in the state where he spent his boyhood years.

Milliken told me that his decision to go with McCain once again was primarily a reflection of personal admiration. "Though I don't agree with him on a couple issues, he is so honest and straightforward," he said. "I just respect his integrity."

On immigration, Milliken said, McCain "has been steadfast, even though his legislation was unsuccessful. He has resisted the effort to demagogue the issue. I like him for that. He's been very good on the environment and global warming. He's taken a position on Iraq that I don't happen to agree with, but he's been straightforward and steadfast.

"There is an overall sense of integrity superior to everyone else in the field, even at the risk of taking positions that are not politically popular."

Bill and Helen Milliken are known in Michigan as advocates both of civil rights and abortion rights — the latter being another issue on which they differ from McCain, who has always opposed abortion. These policy differences could be decisive, but the character traits clearly loom larger.

When I asked Milliken about Mitt Romney, he said he had not known him well before this year. "He was quite a young fellow when his dad and I served together, and he left Michigan as a youth. But I met with him at his request a couple months ago when he was here campaigning."

What did you think? "He has switched positions quite regularly."

Milliken replied, "He has become much more conservative than his father ever was. I doubt his father would approve his hard swing to the right."

Mitt Romney, who idolizes his father, would certainly disagree with that assessment. And his campaign was quick to note that Milliken has deviated so far from Republican orthodoxy that he endorsed John Kerry for president in 2004 over Bush.

At the time, Milliken noted that he had worked tirelessly to help the elder George Bush carry Michigan against Ronald Reagan in the 1980 primary.

But he criticized the current president for "pandering to the extreme right wing," and for having "rushed us into a tragic and unnecessary war that has ... alienated this nation from much of the world."

Milliken is in some respects a throwback to a vanished generation of Republican moderates. But he is hardly alone in wondering about the many shifts in policies and tactics that have marked this Romney campaign.

It is somehow fitting that in Michigan — with Milliken — the pattern may finally cripple Romney's candidacy.

Alpine Manor residents thank Santa's helpers

On behalf of all the residents at Alpine Manor, I would like to thank the Santa's helpers that brought gifts, cookies, candies and fruit. The amount of love and thoughtfulness that went into each of the gifts was greatly appreciated. During the Christmas season, it is very important to remember those that are alone or less fortunate, whether they are young or old.

The people of Magic Valley are especially thoughtful. Thanks again to all who brought gifts and to the Cub Scout troop, church choir and Pioneer Club for all they did.

Flat-tire assistance restores woman's faith

On the way home to Twin Falls from Burley on Interstate 84 on Nov. 20 at approximately 4:25 p.m. when I had a flat tire on my gold Honda. It was a very cold 25 degrees with the wind blowing hard. I pulled to the side of the road and sat there about 10 minutes when a van from Magic Valley Business Systems stopped in front of my car and a very kind gentleman named Tom Jones approached and asked if he could help me.

Without Mr. Jones' assistance in changing my tire, I would have had to call a towing service or a tire company to help me with my vehicle.

I want to say how very much I appreciate Mr. Jones' kindness in stopping on a miserable day to help a stranger in trouble. It is acts like his that restore one's faith in human compassion and kindness.

Business, individuals made Christmas Basket a success

The Wendell Christmas Basket Committee would like to express deep appreciation to all who donated or helped in any way for another successful year.

Each year business and individuals so willingly sacrifice to see that families in need are taken care of in the Wendell area.

We especially want to thank KMVT for its huge donation to all children of Magic Valley. We also express thanks to Simerly's for its many years of generosity. The Christmas basket program owes a lot of its success to the great students of Wendell who have donated toys, food and many hours of their time to see that each family has the opportunity to have a great Christmas.

Without the support of the business, individuals and especially the students, this program would not continue to exist.

Sincere thanks to all!

Christmas blessings found in community kindness

I sat at my home on Christmas morning thinking of blessings I enjoy, I thought first of friends and neighbors in Lincoln County. Shoshone is a great place to live and work. Thanks to many of you, we were able to fill and deliver more than 100 boxes of food and gifts.

Many of you donated money or gifts, some sorted gifts and filled baskets, some carried turkeys and boxes to vehicles to be delivered and others delivered boxes to thankful families. Dietrich and Shoshone girl's basketball teams held a fundraiser and shopped for gifts. Thank you to Glanbia for cheese, L.M. Davenport for beans, West Magic Dam Fools for food, Boy Scouts, Girl Scouts and Shoshone School for food. Thanks to Idaho Power and employees, plus many more who donated money. There are too many to thank individually, but you know who you are, and I thank you all.

Christmas council thanks all who donated

Friends and neighbors:

Once again we have finished another successful year of Christmas Council activities. There is no way to thank everyone who has helped us to accomplish this.

We wish we could thank everyone personally, but this is impossible. If you were involved in the "Super Bowl" or at the movie theater, helped deliver and sort food, dropped off donations, helped organize toy drives, volunteered time, donated money, helped deliver boxes to people who couldn't get out or saw a neighbor needed help and alerted us, we thank you.

We live in a wonderful community where people are caring and giving. It takes many people to carry out a project so large and we know that we couldn't have done it without all of you. We look forward to being of service in another few months and know that we will once again be feeling of your giving spirit. Thank you from the bottom of our hearts.

Community helped rebuild home after fire

We would like to thank all those people that helped rebuild our home after a house fire we had on July 1, 2007. Our family and friends and many businesses donated things to make it happen. We are very thankful to all of you. We want to thank the following for their donations. There are a lot of people who helped, and we thank you. Our home is very nice and warm.

Thanks to Brizee Heating and Josh McClimans for all his time installing the duct work and furnace and to all our family for their help. Thanks also to Wilson Bates, Rick's Electric, Banner Furniture, Wholesale Carpet, The Show Room, Pioneer Floors, Idaho Carpet Liquidators, Breman's Carpet, South Central Community Action Partnership, Dunken's, Red Cross and The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

Two weeks in hospital were very enjoyable

I would like to extend my deepest heartfelt gratitude to the staff and doctors at Minidoka Memorial Hospital.

I recently spent two weeks there. The staff went out of its way to take care of not only my needs but also visiting family's needs. After they got me well enough, I was moved down to the extended care wing. While there, my care did not diminish.

I really enjoyed the staff at Minidoka Memorial Hospital — such a small place it felt very family oriented. Everyone's bedside manner is to be commended. The staff and doctors worked hard to help me achieve my goal to be home for Christmas. I love how the doctors work together to increase your chance of survival and how my care was coordinated throughout the hospital.

I would like to extend my warmest thanks from the bottom of my heart to all of you.

Democratic presidential race is still all about the Clintons

KATHLEEN PARKER

WASHINGTON — Hillary Clinton's "surprising" win over Barack Obama in the nation's first primary — in defiance of what polls had predicted and political prognosticators had projected — has had pundits puzzled.

It must have been the tears, goes the conventional wisdom. She choked up and women raced to the rescue, voting for Clinton over Obama 46 percent to 34 percent. But were they real tears?

They were real to the extent they were there at all. What Americans witnessed wasn't the studied tear rolling all the way to the jaw line, an image of emotion perfected by Hillary's husband. It was more a catch in the throat and the hint of tears welling behind eyes that betrayed a flagging spirit.

Women recognized it right away — a mixture of fatigue and vulnerability. "It was the first time I've ever thought she was someone I'd like to have a glass of wine with," said a female friend of mine, who is no Clinton fan.

That sentence alone was more predictive than any poll of what was about to happen. When a woman says she's ready to pour wine with another woman, she means all previous misunderstandings are forgiven. Symbolically, it's assent to the question, "Can we talk?" and recognition of an ancient consensus: Girls stick together when boys gang up.

But let's get something straight: Clinton wasn't emotional because she cares deeply about the country. She was near tears because she cares deeply about becoming the first woman president.

Thwarted ambition is the politician's waterboard.

Hillary's human moment was sparked when a woman at a Portsmouth, N.H., event asked a personal question: "How do you do it? I mean, as a woman, I know how hard it is to get out of the house and get ready. Who does your hair?"

Clinton laughed and said she gets help with her hair most days. Then came the emotion as she segued into her deeply held conviction that she is the only person who can save this country.

"I couldn't do it if I didn't passionately believe it was the right thing to do. I have so many opportunities from this country, I just don't want to see us fall backwards."

What she meant, of course, was that she doesn't want to see herself fall backward. That subtext was clear as she continued:

"You know, this is very personal for me. It's not political. ... I see what's happening. ... It's about our country. It's about our kids' futures.

And it's really about all of us together."

Well, yes and no. It's about those things, but it's mostly about Hillary and Bill, who cut their deal and sealed their fates long ago. Bill had his turn at the presidency and now it is hers. We're talking destiny here. And dues.

Hillary has paid hers and then some. She endured the humiliation of Bill's serial philandering and supported his career, while nursing the knowledge that she was the smarter one, if not as charming.

For this moment, she has hided her time and bitten her lip.

There are lots of ways to be married and it's no one's concern how couples manage their own in private. But in public, the Clintons' fate is also our nation's. Their marital vows included a blueprint for leading the country, first as a "two-fer" and later with the former president slated to star as "first laddie."

Then along came that upstart Obama — from Hillary's hometown of Chicago, of all places — and African-American, too. How does a woman tell a black it's not his turn?

No one's face was longer than Bill Clinton's in Iowa as Hillary conceded Obama's victory. Looking aged and depressed, he was a portrait of the optimist miscast as a stoic.

After Hillary's win in New Hampshire, Bill was back to his old boyish self, wiping away fake tears as he thanked voters for their support. The comeback kids were once again on familiar turf, basking in the glow of affirmation, released for a time from the insult of a public that doesn't mirror their own self-regard.

So yes, Hillary's choke was as real as Bill's relief, but both are tied to something bigger than our country's or our kids' future. They're tied to the Clintons' future. The question in defeat is: How do Bill and Hillary live the rest of their lives?

YMCA embarks on anti-obesity crusade

By David Crary
Associated Press writer

NEW YORK — Founded in the mid-19th century, the Young Men's Christian Association has expanded far beyond its name in the United States. It welcomes all faiths, half the 20.2 million people it serves are female, and more than half are adults.

With that diverse clientele in mind, the Y is again redefining itself. A new strategic plan envisions the organization as America's paramount fitness and anti-obesity crusader, combatting what it calls "the nation's ongoing lifestyle health crisis."

While maintaining its varied youth programs and vast child-care network, the Y is aggressively expanding health-related initiatives, notably through a program called Activate America.

At hundreds of local Ys nationwide, officials are retraining staff, redesigning facilities and revising activities to better serve the millions of Americans who find it hard to stick with weight-loss and fitness regimens.

"Our history has been one of taking a lead on key issues facing our society," said Neil Nicoll, who since May 2006 has been president of the YMCA of the USA — the parent group that coordinates activities of the 967 independently run YMCA associations across the country.

Founded in Britain in 1844 by Christian evangelicals, the YMCA opened its first U.S. branch in Boston in 1851 and soon adopted as a goal "the improvement of the spiritual, mental, social and physical condition of young men."

It established hotel-like residence halls, organized summer camps, and oversaw the invention of volleyball and basketball. During both world wars, it deployed thousands of volunteers to provide services for U.S. troops and war prisoners.

One by one, barriers to participation fell — women and non-Christians were welcomed, and in the 1960s the Y greatly expanded inner-city operations. By the 1980s, it was embracing the fitness boom, and building many new facilities.

Now, more than 370 of its associations already have joined Activate America, which Nicoll said is targeted at the 40 percent of Americans who crave a healthier lifestyle but waver in their pursuit of it.

"A lot of our population doesn't respond to what your gym teacher told you," he said.

"They're looking for personal support, done in a more holistic way. We want programs geared to group activity so people can develop connections instead of just running in and out."

One example: the YMCA of Greater New York in September began offering a 12-week, personalized exercise program — free to members — that includes four individual sessions with a fitness coach.

In Anderson, S.C., the Y is holding monthly weigh-ins as part of a communal weight-loss drive. Other Ys are reassessing the nutritional value of food offered in their vending machines and at their child-care centers.

Karen Leslie, CEO of YMCA of Greater Providence in Rhode Island, said the initiative means her nine-branch association will focus less on gung-ho fitness buffs and more on those who struggle to achieve good health.

"We have to retrain our staff so they will actively listen to what the needs are," Leslie said. "We want to move away from prescribing what we believe individuals need."

In a related effort, Pioneering Healthier Communities, the Y is working with other civic groups in more than 110 cities and towns to combat obesity, poor nutrition and physical inactivity community-wide.

"When the YMCA looked at a changing America, what they saw was a lifestyle that was getting out of control," said Wes Alles, a Stanford University School of Medicine researcher who has helped design the Y's initiatives.

David MacLeod, a Central Michigan University historian who has studied American nonprofits and youth groups, said the new health initiative might baffle some of the Y's 19th century founders but suggested it fit with a long tradition of change.

"The YMCA is an excellent case study of adaptation and survival," he said.

By Beth Harris
Associated Press writer

LOS ANGELES — Christopher Bowman soared to the heights as U.S. figure skating champion. He crashed off the ice, though, ending up dead on the floor of a cheap motel room 1½ months after being arrested for misdemeanor theft.

The 40-year-old skater's death initially was reported as a possible drug overdose, but "we don't have anything that points specifically" to that as the cause, assistant chief Ed Winter of the coroner's office said Friday.

Bowman in 1992.

Investigators also were considering Bowman's death Thursday was the result of an accident or natural causes.

The two-time Olympian was 6 feet and weighed an estimated 300 pounds.

"There was some prescription medication present" at the scene but no evidence of illegal drugs, Winter said.

He didn't know the type or quantity of medication found.

An autopsy on Bowman was to be done this weekend.

He battled drug problems, and underwent treatment at least twice — once before the 1988 Olympics and then again after the Albertville Games in 1992.

He was an admitted cocaine addict.

The skater was alternately nicknamed "Bowman the Showman" for his flair on the ice and "Hans Brinker from Hell" for his hard partying and lack of discipline in training.

Bowman was one of figure skating's biggest personalities in the late 1980s and early 1990s. Immensely talented, with a gift for performance that few others could match, he won U.S. national titles in 1989 and 1992, and was runner-up in 1987 and 1991.

He also won a silver medal at the 1989 world championships, and a bronze the next year. He was seventh at the 1988 Winter Olympics and finished fourth in the 1992 Games.

Bowman's body was found by a male friend who had shared his $55-a-night room at the Budget Inn in the hard-scrabble North Hills area of the San Fernando Valley, police Sgt. Greg Houser said Friday.

Bowman and his friend spent the night in the motel. The friend told police that he awoke the next morning to find Bowman on the floor not breathing, Houser said.

He called 911 and paramedics pronounced Bowman dead at the scene shortly after noon Thursday.

Houser said there was no evidence of foul play or illegal narcotics in the room.

"Everything seemed to be in order," he said. "There was no indication that there was anything criminal. There wasn't any indication there that there was drug use going on."

The two-story stucco motel along one of the busiest streets in the Valley is one of a half-dozen budget motels in the area, located across from an indoor swap meet, gas station and Hispanic supermarket. Historically, the area has been frequented by gangs and prostitutes.

Cassia Co. seeks public's input on vote by mail

By Sven Berg
For the Times-News

BURLEY — Cassia County Commissioners say they are considering opening as many as three additional precincts to vote by mail and want to know what voters think about it.

County Election Deputy Donna Bush said commissioners are considering a proposal to add the Elba, Almo and Heglar-Yale precincts to the three — Bridge, Sublett and Parsons — where vote by mail is already in place. Heglar-Yale is the precinct east of Albion and north of Malta.

Vote by mail is available to any Idaho precinct in which the total number of registered voters is less than 125. County election officials automatically send pre-stamped, preaddressed ballots to registered voters in vote-by-mail precincts. Voters fill out the ballots and can return them any time before 8 p.m. on Election Day.

Voters who mail in ballots must certify their votes by signature. Election officials then compare the signatures to the voters' registration cards.

Voters who do not wish to mail ballots can vote in person on Election Day or hand deliver their ballots to election officials at the county courthouse any time before that.

Bush said vote by mail has been successful so far. According to statistics she provided, voter turnout in vote-by-mail precincts was significantly higher in 2006.

"It does increase voter turnout," Bush said. "You vote in the comfort of your own home."

Bush said vote by mail seems to be popular with voters in remote precincts.

"We received two letters complaining that we've taken away their right to go to the polls and vote," she said. "Going to the polls isn't necessarily a right. The right is to vote."

Asked if she is worried vote by mail is vulnerable to voter fraud, Bush said there are some concerns, but the pros outweigh the cons.

"The one concern I do have is, say Mr. and Mrs. Smith are voting, does Mr. Smith influence Mrs. Smith and how she votes?" she said.

Voters can call Bush at 878-1004 with questions or comments.

U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service photo

A state Fish and Game official said Friday that the wolf population is increasing at a 30 percent to 40 percent annual rate. But senators said constituents still have many concerns before wolves are delisted in less than three months.

F&G director briefs lawmakers on species

By Jared S. Hopkins
Times-News writer

BOISE — As Idahoans look for a day when wolves in the state will no longer be endangered, the animal's population continues to increase — as do concerns about how the animals will be managed.

Year-end statistics show Idaho has almost 800 wolves, their population is rising 20 percent annually, and they are causing more problems for livestock, said Idaho Department of Fish and Game Director Cal Groen. Wolves multiply by 30 percent to 40 percent while they decrease by 10 percent for various reasons, he said.

But some members of the Senate Resources and Conservation Committee who heard Groen's report questioned not only the accuracy of the agency's conclusions, but also the process by which the agency came to them.

Sen. Monty Pearce, R-New Plymouth, said the agency's statistics for impact on livestock, including 52 dead calves, were so underestimated that they were a "joke." Pearce, who represents a district in the heart of the wolf reintroduction area, asked for the agency to investigate unconfirmed cattle attacks because his constituents are losing animals.

"Are you guys really recording the reality of what happens in Idaho? Because these numbers don't reflect that," he said. "This is really phony."

Sen. Dean Cameron, R-Rupert, who supports the delisting of wolves, said the sportsmen he associates with would disagree with how the state agencies determined conflicts with ungulates, such as elk and deer.

Avalanche danger predicted this weekend

By Hilarey Johnson
Times-News correspondent

The Sawtooth National Forest Avalanche Center has issued an early alert avalanche condition warning for today and Sunday.

Human-triggered avalanches are likely where one to two feet of new snow lies on top of loose or weak snow.

The threat is considerable in the central and south Wood River Valley and is estimated to be moderate where there is a deeper snowpack in the north Wood River Valley and the Sawtooth Mountain Range, according to a press release issued Friday by the avalanche center.

About 18 inches of snow was distributed in the Wood River Valley over the past five days, according to the release. Fragile structuring within the snowpack, new snow loads and wind are responsible for the threat.

Recent sunshine will help stabilize conditions in the long term, said Janet Kellam, director of the avalanche center. But "because the newer snow we have is sitting on such weak snow, it puts it under a little more stress (in the short term)," she told the Times-News Friday.

It is important to approach all areas as though the threat were considerable due to the large amount of snow. The avalanche alert is expected to persist through the weekend, even though the National Weather Service office in Boise said there is little chance of precipitation over the weekend.

Jerome man gets 12 years for child porn

By Andrea Gates
Times-News writer

A Jerome man was sentenced in federal court Friday to more than 12 years in prison for transporting and possessing child pornography through his computer.

Thirty-year-old Andrew Charles Tennant pleaded guilty in October to charges that he transported and possessed sexually explicit images of minors after he was caught through an Internet chat room by a Secret Service agent based in Miami.

Tennant

Tennant had tried to solicit sex with two children ages 12 and 9, the undercover agent found. He offered to fly the children and their guardian to Boise for the encounter, according to a release from U. S. Attorney's Office in Idaho.

Tennant was identified from his screen name and traced to Jerome, where authorities from the Secret Service, Immigration and Customs Enforcement, the Idaho State Police, Twin Falls Police and FBI all became involved, the release shows.

During a police interview Tennant told them he frequently viewed child porn. He was a local dairy delivery man at the time of his arrest, and he would go online by "wardriving," or stealing Internet access from wireless facilities, including some dairies he delivered to.

Tennant was fired in 2004 from Micron for looking at child pornography at work, according to a federal court document.

But that incident was never forwarded to police, said Assistant U.S. Attorney Jim Peters of Boise. Peters said his office subpoenaed prior employment information from the company.

The child porn that police found in Tennant's possession was awful, said Peters. "The nature of the material ... was the worst of the worst, very sadistic, very brutal," Peters said.

Police found about 5,000 images and 180 videos of pornographic material in Tennant's possession — the people in 16 videos and 625 images were identified, said Peters, but some of those victims were the same.

During the online chats with an undercover agent, Tennant "bragged" that he had victimized a child family member. But police didn't find evidence that he had molested kids, Peters said, adding that's "always a concern."

Tennant could have received up to 40 years in prison or a minimum possible sentence of 10 years for the crimes, Peters said.

Peters said Friday he was pleased with the sentence Tennant received. Tennant is being held in the Ada County jail until he is transported to prison, Peters said.

Jerry Gee to replace Buettner at CSI

The College of Southern Idaho has named a successor to replace Claudeen Buettner, the number two administrator at the school, who will retire.

Jerry Gee of Coeur d'Alene will begin at CSI as interim executive vice president and chief academic officer on Monday. Gee is an education consultant and has worked with such clients as the University of Idaho, the Idaho Division of Professional Technical Education, Mountain States Early Head Start, and College of Western Idaho.

He was also vice president for instruction at North Idaho College in Coeur d'Alene from 1992 to 2006, a position very similar to the job Buettner is leaving.

"I'm looking forward to this," Gee said of the position, which is scheduled to last through the current semester that ends in May. "In my position at NIC, I worked closely with Dr. Jerry Beck and Dr. Buettner and with the lawmakers, agencies, and other contacts that are vital to Idaho's community colleges. This is a great opportunity and I'm honored to be asked to fill it."

"Dr. Gee will join Dr. Buettner and me in Boise on Monday and Tuesday, his first two days on the job, as we meet with Idaho lawmakers and members of the State Board of Education," said CSI President Jerry Beck. "His excellent administrative experience will inspire confidence among our administrators and faculty, which is important to our mission to serve our students."

Buettner's last day at CSI will be Jan. 25.

He was born July 27, 1934, to George Chris Klundt, father, and Ethel L. Klundt, mother, in Twin Falls, Idaho. Of this family, he had six sisters and brothers. George attended Twin Falls schools and the College of Southern Idaho. When young, he worked for West Five Point Market stocking shelves and delivering groceries. He later worked as a baker for Walter's and Electric Bakery in Twin Falls. He also worked on the new Highway 93 for his uncle who was in charge of the new highway, and also worked at a coal yard. He met Arizona Flame Silver and they started dating. Flame's father, Neal (Nevada) Silver, hired George to help take hunters into the Selway area. There he learned about packing, horse riding and hunting. On May 4, 1952, George married Arizona Flame Silver.

He then worked at the Rogerson Hotel in maintenance and engineering, and did welding on the side. He then went to work for the Pepsi Cola Company and attended bottling and management school in Seattle, Wash. Upon completion, he became bottler and assistant manager for the plant in Twin Falls and was there for seven years. He was then hired by Intermountain Gas Company and retired in 1999 after 35-plus years. While at the gas company, he served in many positions including reading meters, servicing, installing new gas lines and surveying for gas leaks in 20 surrounding towns. In that time, he received several awards for safe driving, installing new gas lines, leak survey, and mapping 20 towns for new gas lines.

He was a very accomplished welder and made many steel projects for contractors, friends and family. George enjoyed big game and pheasant hunting and fishing, which he would never tire of. He was a member of the Loyal Order of Moose and Ducks Unlimited. George also enjoyed spending time with his family at barbecues, camping trips, or just a good visit. He was a stern and compassionate man and always willing to help out if called upon. He loved working with his hands on personal projects, rentals, silver jewelry, and helping his boys with Boy Scout projects. He also enjoyed good western music. George was an excellent cook and loved making cookies, and was called on quite frequently to make them for family, friends and businesses. He loved outdoor gardening of fruit, veggies and roses. (He loved city farming) and chatting with his sisters, Kathy and Julie. He loved all of his kin.

George enjoyed attending his kids and grandkids many sporting events and cheering them on in his special way. He bowled and supported Flame in bowling many years. He had a passion for his little dogs Kodi-bear, Fluffy and Lucky and big dog Sonny, his daytime companions. He also loved Flame dearly and called her constantly to make sure she made it to work okay and was fine.

George is survived by his wife, Flame; sons, Shane (Julie), Kody (Cindy) and Waylon (Julie); five grandchildren; two step-grandchildren and four great-grandchildren.

May the Lord bless George J. Klundt always.

The funeral will be held at 11 a.m. Monday, Jan. 14, at White Mortuary "Chapel by the Park" with Pastor Dale Metzger officiating. Interment will follow at Sunset Memorial Park. A viewing for family and friends will be from 4 to 6 p.m. Sunday, Jan. 13, at the mortuary.

AP photographer Charles Tasnadi dies

By Randiph E. Schmid
Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON — Charles Tasnadi, who braved minefields and barbed wire to escape communist Hungary and went on to spend three decades as a top Associated Press photographer, died Thursday following a stroke.

Famed for his skills as a photographer and revered as a great gentleman, Tasnadi was born Karoly Tasnadi on March 1, 1925, in Ajka, Hungary.

During his career, Tasnadi covered seven presidents, including a return to his native land aboard Air Force One, accompanying President George H.W. Bush.

Bush called Tasnadi into a forward cabin on the jet just before landing and told him it was fitting and proper that this was how he should return home for the first time

On the ground, Tasnadi hid his emotions behind the camera, determined to get good pictures, colleagues recalled.

He also traveled to Cuba more than 40 times, gaining access to Fidel Castro and other leaders of that country. A former editor credited Tasnadi with helping pave the way for AP journalists to return to Cuba.

His dangerous escape from Hungary in 1951, Tasnadi later remarked, "really helped me put a better perspective on deadline pressure."

In winter snow, Tasnadi, his then girlfriend and others escaped to Austria, slipping past guard towers and one border guard who simply looked away, said his daughter, Diana.

Tasnadi later recalled crawling across a minefield, making sure to place his knees and elbows in the same spots as the man ahead of him.

Settled in a refugee camp in Salzburg, Tasnadi married his girlfriend, but they were unable to get into the United States, so they headed to Venezuela, where a cousin lived.

His mother gave him his first camera and he worked for a Hungarian news agency before leaving the country.

In Caracas, he told a taxi driver to take him to the newspaper, launching a long and successful career that included a stint with Time-Life before finally coming to America and joining the AP.

Students learn to work together during Robert Stuart speech

Sherry Ritchie, a ninth-grade speech teacher at Robert Stuart Junior High School recently taught her class a unit on self-esteem and the power of the collective (how everything we do in life affects everyone else).

Her efforts in teaching the lesson, she had hoped, would be life altering for her students. She presented the same idea as the philanthropic magazine, "World Visions," which was to purchase a goat for $75 that could feed a starving family in Africa more than 1,000 meals per year.

She informed her students that if each one of them contributed 25 cents and she contributed $30, they could buy one goat.

Over the course of the next 10 days her students began handing her $5, $10 and $20 bills.

Almost everyone donated 25 cents or more. To her surprise, her students began shouting with enthusiasm, "Let's shoot for two goats and some chickens, not just one goat!"

The money kept pouring in and they were able to order multiple goats and chickens.

Her students had learned the concept that together they can make a difference.

Ritchie said she believes test scores are important, but equally important is sending compassionate people out into the world. She said she is extremely proud of the students in her speech classes.

Senior Giuliani campaign staffers forgo January paychecks

By Liz Sidioti
Associated Press writer

MYRTLE BEACH, S.C. — About a dozen senior campaign staffers for Rudy Giuliani are forgoing their January paychecks, a sign of possible money trouble for the Republican presidential candidate and last year's national front-runner.

"We didn't ask anybody to do it," Giuliani told reporters Friday after a town hall meeting at a charter school in Coral Springs, Fla.

"Some people volunteered to do it because they wanted to stretch out the money," he said. "We've got quite a bit of money and they wanted to make sure that we had even more money for the end of this situation in Florida, so we could have enough on the air or whatever."

At the end of December, the campaign had $12.7 million cash on hand, $7 million of which could be used for the primary, said Mike DuHaime, Giuliani's campaign manager and one of those who now is working for free. He disputed the notion of a cash-strapped operation and said Giuliani continues to bring in money; several fundraisers are scheduled this week in Florida.

Giuliani

The former New York mayor has yet to win a contest and is counting on a victory in delegate-rich Florida on Jan. 29 to prove his candidacy is viable heading into the multistate contests slated for Feb. 5, where he believes he can prevail in states such as California and Illinois.

"We'll win Florida," Giuliani said. "It's an unconventional strategy, but I've never followed conventional wisdom before — it's always worked. We think that Florida is a perfect place for us to sort of play out our entire campaign. All the themes in our campaign fit Florida. It's a big state. It's a big test. It's a test that's a microcosm of the country in many ways."

It's also a costly strategy: Florida and states that follow have some of the most expensive media markets in the country. And with so many states voting in such a short time period, candidates can do little else but rely on paid media — and news coverage — to get out their messages.

Republican strategists estimate that it will cost roughly $35 million to run one week of heavy levels of ads in the two dozen states that hold contests on Feb. 5.

"Florida is real important to us, so we're going to put if not everything into Florida, almost everything," Giuliani said.

Giuliani has struggled to grab his share of the spotlight from rivals Mike Huckabee, winner in Iowa, and Sen. John McCain, the victor in New Hampshire, as well as Mitt Romney. Recent polls show Giuliani, the undisputed leader in most 2007 national surveys, losing his top spot.

O.J. Simpson jailed on bail violation

By Ken Ritter
Associated Press writer

LAS VEGAS — O.J. Simpson returned to jail on Friday, where he will spend several days before a judge hears allegations that he violated terms of his bail in an armed robbery case here, officials said.

Simpson, 60, arrived in Las Vegas on a commercial flight from Florida with his bail bondsman, Miguel Pereira. He was taken in handcuffs by a police escort to the Clark County Detention Center, where both he and Pereira ignored questions from reporters.

Police said Simpson would be kept isolated from the other 3,300 inmates until a court hearing Wednesday, when Clark County District Attorney David Roger plans to request that Simpson's bail be revoked and he be kept in jail until trial.

The prosecutor alleges that in a November voice message, Simpson told Pereira to contact co-defendant Clarence "C.J." Stewart and express frustration about testimony given at the hearing where Simpson, Stewart and a third man were ordered to stand trial.

"I just want, want C.J. to know that ... I'm tired of this (expletive)," Simpson is quoted as saying in a transcript that was included in Roger's motion to revoke bail, filed Friday. "Fed up with (expletive) changing what they told me. All right?"

Simpson had been instructed by Las Vegas Justice of the Peace Joe M. Bonaventure in September not to have any contact with anyone involved in the case — not even by "carrier pigeon."

Simpson's lawyer denied the allegations.

"O.J. did not try to persuade anybody to contact a witness," Yale Galanter told The Associated Press.

Simpson was freed Sept. 19 on $125,000 bail following his arrest on allegations he and several friends burst into a Las Vegas hotel room and robbed two sports memorabilia dealers at gunpoint.

His bond was revoked Friday by his bail bond company, said Officer Ramon Denby, a Las Vegas police spokesman.

Authorities believe they have found body of pregnant Marine

By Mike Baker
Associated Press writer

JACKSONVILLE, N.C. — Authorities said Friday they believe they found the shallow grave of a pregnant Marine in the back yard of a comrade she accused of rape, along with evidence inside his home that suggested she had been killed.

Investigators are treating the case as a homicide, said Onslow County Sheriff Ed Brown. But the prime suspect left a note insisting Lance Cpl. Maria Frances Lauterbach had killed herself, Brown said.

Lauterbach

After some slight digging in a fire pit discovered in the yard of Marine Cpl. Caesar Armando Laurean, detectives found what "appeared to be burnt human remains," Onslow County District Attorney Dewey Hudson said Friday night.

Laurean

"We think we have found what will (contain) the skeletal remains of Maria Lauterbach," Hudson said. Authorities placed a tarp and two white tents over the area and planned to begin slowly scraping the earth with garden tools this morning.

Lauterbach, 20, vanished three weeks ago, days after she talked to military prosecutors about a rape case against Laurean, who remains at large. Authorities said Friday that information from another woman, a former Marine, left them certain that she is dead.

But crime scene investigators found blood stains and obvious signs of that a cleanup had taken place inside the home, Brown said late Friday.

"Evidence now is showing that what he claimed happened didn't happen," Brown said.

Authorities learned about the note from Laurean's wife, a person familiar with the investigation told The Associated Press on condition of anonymity because the investigation is ongoing. In the note, the person said, Laurean wrote that he had nothing to do with Lauterbach's suicide, but that he had buried her body.

"I feel sorry for the other family," Shifflet said. "It's horrible what they're going through. My heart goes out to them."

Authorities on foot and all-terrain vehicles searched Laurean's neighborhood near Camp Lejeune on Friday. Megan Melton, who lives nearby, said dozens of vultures had descended on the area in the past few weeks.

Although the outdoor search was suspended for the night, investigators from the State Bureau of Investigation moved indoors and began a search for blood and other evidence inside his one-story, brown brick ranch home.

The search continued late Friday for Laurean, a 21-year-old from Clark County, Nev., who had refused to meet with investigators and apparently left the area without telling his lawyers where he was going, the sheriff said.

Lauterbach met with military prosecutors in December to discuss pursuing rape charges against Laurean, said Kevin Marks, supervisory agent with the Naval Criminal Investigative Service at Camp Lejeune. He said military prosecutors believed they had enough evidence to argue that the case should go to trial.

In court papers filed this week, prosecutors said the anticipated birth of the baby "might provide evidentiary credence to charges she lodged with military authorities that she was sexually assaulted." Lauterbach reported the rape in April and was due to give birth in mid-February, authorities said.

In a brief interview with reporters outside the family's home in Vandalia, Ohio, Lauterbach's uncle, Pete Steiner, said the rapist was the father.

Authorities said they were not concerned that Laurean would flee because they had information the pair carried on a "friendly relationship" even after she reported the assault to military authorities. There is no indication Lauterbach asked the military to protect her after she leveled the rape allegations, investigators said.

Steiner, however, said his niece didn't have any kind of relationship with her attacker, and that Lauterbach had been forced to rent a room off base because of harassment at Camp Lejeune.

"She was raped," Steiner said. "The Marines, unfortunately, did not protect her, and now she's dead."

Originally from Dayton, Ohio, Lauterbach was reported missing Dec. 19 by her mother, who last spoke with her daughter on Dec. 14, authorities said. Her cell phone was found Dec. 20 near the main gate at Camp Lejeune, and she missed a Dec. 26 prenatal care appointment.

Lauterbach was assigned to the 2nd Marine Logistics Group of the II Marine Expeditionary Force, based at Camp Lejeune. She joined the Marines in June 2006, and had not been sent to either Iraq or Afghanistan. Laurean worked in the same unit, where both were personnel clerks.

Hunt resumes for two snowboarders; 3rd person missing in avalanche

CREEDE, Colo. (AP) — The Wolf Creek Ski Patrol and at least one helicopter resumed the search Friday for two snowboarders missing for nearly a week in the southwest Colorado mountains.

A third person was reported missing after an avalanche in southern Colorado.

Michael George and Kyle Kerschen were reported missing on Jan. 5 near the Wolf Creek ski resort about 170 miles southwest of Denver. Both are 27 and both are from Albuquerque, N.M.

Their car was found in the ski area's parking lot.

George's father, Marc George, said the family is beginning to question whether the two men are on the mountain.

"For two healthy young men to disappear without a trace doesn't make sense," he said. "It might be time to start thinking about foul play."

Mineral County Sheriff Fred Hosselkus said his agency began a missing-persons investigation Thursday, checking credit card and cell phone records and contacting law enforcement agencies around the country. Nothing has turned up so far.

"We haven't seen any evidence that they are on the mountain," Hosselkus said. "That's our first assumption, but we can't rule out other ways they might have disappeared."

Hosselkus asked anyone who may have seen the men before they disappeared to contact authorities. Sheriff's spokeswoman Sandy Kroll said missing-person fliers were being distributed in surrounding communities, and skiers and others were asked to look for any sign of them.

Kroll said Hosselkus has not said how long the search would continue. The men's families have asked authorities to keep looking.

New Mexico Gov. Bill Richardson on Friday ordered state police to send their helicopter and 40 search and rescue members to assist with the search. He said Hosselkus had accepted the help.

"I want to ensure that we are all doing all we can possibly do to assist law enforcement with this urgent search," Richardson said.

Wolf

"It's what we see," said Jim Unsworth, a biologist with Fish and Game. "We're not seeing everything. I can be sure of that."

Groen said the state is trying to be "responsive" and "aggressive" with an issue that has been dormant for years in Idaho. Gray wolves were first placed on the endangered species list in 1973, and reintroduced into central Idaho in 1995.

So far, it's unclear whether Idaho will manage wolves at a minimum level since the population grows so fast. Regulations, as well as hunting season, are expected to be set by the state's Fish and Game Commission in coming months.

Cameron, who is also chairman of the Joint Finance-Appropriations Committee, also raised concern about whether there is enough funding or state personnel for wolf management. Currently, funding is only coming from the federal government, and Groen said that traditionally funds hunting management with user fees.

And by the end of January, the federal government will publish changes to the 10(j) rule to give more flexibility to dog owners to kill wolves off of their property and make it easier for the federal government to come in for assistance, said Jeff Allen, a policy advisor in the governor's office of species conservation.

Both the federal delisting of wolves and the changes to the 10(j) rules will likely be contested in court, Allen said.

Many sportsmen have expressed concern on the effect wolves might have on elk and deer herds.

Most of the wolves are in central and northern regions of Idaho, but Groen said they will likely migrate to the south — farther into the Magic Valley — as time goes on.

"As they go into the Magic Valley, into agriculture, there'll be conflicts," he said.

GOP chair pushes bill to require party registration for primaries

By John Miller
Associated Press writer

BOISE — Idaho Republican Party Chairman Kirk Sullivan told lawmakers Friday that Republicans and Democrats should have to register by party to vote in the state's primary, though some of his intraparty rivals described his bill as nothing more than a political ploy by the GOP boss to stall the effort.

Sullivan, who previously opposed a closed primary on fear that it would alienate Idaho's independent voters, said he was acting on a directive of the GOP Central Committee. He said the bill, if enacted, could cost taxpayers $800,000 to register voters according to political affiliation and keep track of them in the counties.

Members of the Senate State Affairs Committee agreed to consider the bill, which would make a registered voter's political affiliation a public record.

But Rod Beck, a conservative former state legislator, said Sullivan may be trying to scuttle efforts to close the primary by promoting a bill that has no chance of passing.

"I'm opposed to it because it has such exorbitant costs," Beck said. "The other reason is, it's unconstitutional. It will infringe upon the Democratic Party's right to choose how it runs its own primary. If they want to have an open primary, they are constitutionally permitted to do so."

Beck was among more than 70 GOP members who unsuccessfully sued Idaho in U.S. District Court last year to try to force the state to close the GOP primary to all but registered Republicans.

Even though all seven of Idaho's statewide offices are in GOP hands and the Legislature has 79 Republicans to just 26 Democrats, Beck fears that Democrats switching sides in primary elections are skewing the results toward more moderate candidates who don't share conservative GOP ideals.

He has an alternative bill that's far cheaper and plans to bring up the matter at a GOP meeting in Boise on Saturday.

Since the early 1970s, Idaho has had an open primary in which voters can choose a ballot from any party they want, without having to register with that party. The U.S. Supreme Court, however, ruled in 2000 that states can't force political parties to associate "with those who don't share their political beliefs."

At the 2006 Idaho Republican Convention in Idaho Falls, hundreds of Republicans voted in favor of closing the primary.

When the 2007 Legislature failed to act, the Idaho GOP's Central Committee last summer passed a formal rule that its primary elections should be closed.

Beck then sued the state to require that, but Sullivan refused to join in, saying the matter should be decided by the Legislature.

In December, a federal judge threw out the case, saying Beck's group didn't have standing to file a claim.

On Friday, Sullivan told lawmakers this was his best attempt to follow his party's wishes to close its primary.

He declined to say if he still personally opposes a closed primary.

"I have to not answer that question because I represent the party," he said.

At least five of them — Democratic Sens. Kate Kelly, of Boise, and Clint Stennett, of Ketchum, and Republican Sens. Bart Davis, of Idaho Falls, Joe Stegner, of Lewiston, and Mike Jorgenson, of Hayden — made skeptical or negative comments during the hearing where it was introduced.

Idaho, growers, environmentalists reach deal on field-burning

By Todd Dvorak
Associated Press writer

BOISE — State officials have reached an agreement with environmentalists to allow north Idaho bluegrass growers to resume the decades-old practice of torching their fields after harvest.

The deal, which still needs approval from the Legislature and federal government, follows a 2007 federal court ruling that declared field burning illegal and in violation of the Clean Air Act.

Under the best case scenario, state officials say farmers could resume burning next fall under new rules that require smoke levels to stay below federal clean air standards.

"This is a significant accomplishment that will meet farmers' needs and protect public health and the environment," Toni Hardesty, director of the Idaho Department of Environmental Quality, said in a statement.

The deal was brokered by state agriculture and environmental officials, along with grass seed groups, growers and representatives from Safe Air for Everyone, the group that challenged field burning over public health concerns. Settlement talks were mediated by Francis E. McGovern of the Duke University School of Law.

Under terms of the deal, the state must develop a smoke management program modeled after the one used by the Nez Perce tribe. Under tribal rules, field burning is prohibited if air quality levels exceed or are projected to exceed 75 percent of national ambient air quality standards.

Other key provisions include:

— Transferring the smoke management program from the Agriculture department to the Environmental Quality department, to ensure that public health is a priority.

— Developing a better system to notify the public when and where burning is planned.

— Evaluating Idaho's air quality monitoring network, and conducting monitoring and exposure studies.

— Conducting annual reviews of the program and doing extra study if more than 20,000 acres of bluegrass are burned in any year.

Patti Gora, executive director of SAFE, said the agreement signals a major policy shift to make public health the state's top priority when managing field burning. SAFE, along with the American Lung Association of Idaho, complained that smoke exacerbated health problems across the northern half of the state, especially for those with asthma and other respiratory problems.

"In the past, Idaho's smoke management plan has been 'get it done,'" Gora said. "We always felt that protecting the public health is the most important factor. In large part, I think we can all agree we're headed in the right direction."

The new regulations still need approval by the Legislature.

Spartans meet Falcons for first Super Saturday

By Bradley Guire
Times-News writer

The Minico Spartans football squad will face the Colfax Falcons on Saturday, Sept. 13, for the inaugural Super Saturday: California vs. Idaho event at Holt Arena in Pocatello. It's just one of four matchups that pits a Gem State team against a team from The Golden State. Del Oro will face Coeur d'Alene's Lake City. Whitney will play Idaho Falls and the Grant vs. Highland game caps the day.

"What a great opportunity," Minico athletic director and football coach Tim Perrigot said. "It'll give us an idea of where we're at in Idaho. I think it's perfect."

Minico's opponent, Colfax, is located 50 miles northeast of Sacramento. The Division III Falcons went 10-2 in 2007, losing in the second round of the playoffs, and shared part of the Pioneer Valley League crown with Whitney. Colfax's uniform scheme closely resembles the Philadelphia Eagles, but the team's offense looks more like the University of Nevada's "Pistol" scheme, a short shotgun formation focused on putting the ball in the air often.

California vs. Idaho Super Saturday

Saturday, Sept. 13
At Holt Arena, Pocatello

Game 1: Colfax vs. Minico
Game 2: Del Oro vs. Lake City
Game 3: Whitney vs. Idaho Falls
Game 4: Grant vs. Highland

Super Saturday is the brainchild of Matt Williams, who organizes the annual Idaho All-Star football game.

"Like the all-state game, I saw a niche and tried to complete it," he said. Williams lived in California for 10 years, during which time he published a football magazine and organized an all-star game. His contact with California coaches, who have been known to travel out of state for games — Del Oro has played in Seattle, and Grant went to Utah recently — gave him the perfect avenue to set up an Inter-state event.

The event was originally pitched as a way to showcase teams from the Treasure Valley at Bronco Stadium in Boise, but scheduling issues with the schools and Boise State — Western Athletic Conference games were not set at the time — sent Williams looking east.

"He called me and asked if there were teams close to Poky that could draw a nice-sized crowd," Perrigot said. "I help a lot with schedule on that side of the state, and I knew that we could get those teams on that weekend."

Once the teams and Idaho State's Holt Arena were locked, Super Saturday was born.

Everyone involved is hoping that Super Saturday turns into an annual football showcase.

"We want to do it yearly, maybe with teams from other states," Williams said. "Just get great schools to come and have the Idaho athletes showcased. If we go 2-2, it could open eyes to recruiting (Idaho athletes)."

Locals spring a few surprises at Classic

By David Bashore

WENDELL — It was very much the status quo in the team standings, but local wrestlers dished out more than a few surprises at the opening day of the Magic Valley Classic on Friday evening.

After coming in second to Minico at the Buhl Invitational, Challis picked up where it left off by taking the overnight team lead with 101 points, 14 ahead of second-place Malad. Filer leads the way for the locals with 66.5 points, good enough for seventh place. Kimberly is ninth, six points behind.

The Wildcats surged into the top 10 on the strength of 171-pounder Dustin Morris, who sprung a 5-4 upset of second-seeded Challis wrestler Brian Pierson in the second round. Morris then pinned West Jefferson's Elijah

Bruin girls rip Madison

Matkin scores 19 in win

By Bradley Guire
Times-News writer

Strong shooting and aggressive defense were again key elements as the Twin Falls Bruins bruised Madison Friday in a 72-39 thumping at Baun Gymnasium in Twin Falls.

The High Country Conference game, a far cry from the Bruins' narrow conference victory against Idaho Falls on Wednesday, was done by the end of the first quarter as the Twin Falls girls took a 17-point lead and the game grew closer than that margin thereafter.

"It was nice to see them hang onto a lead and not let it slip away," Bruins coach Nancy Jones said.

Madison scored the opening bucket, but the Bruins followed with a 7-0 run, which turned into a 15-5 lead as the Bobcats (1-14, 1-5) called timeout at 3:31.

The Bobcats put up comparable points during the middle quarters, but the fourth belonged to the Bruins in a similar fashion as the first — an 18-3 edge — even with the running clock rule in effect.

"We have to do more of the little things," junior guard Devan Matkin said. "It's the difference between a close game and (this game)."

Senior post Sheree Haggan said that taking risks was a key phrase for the game, and that much was evident in some of the statistics: Twin Falls forced 11 of Madison's 27 turnovers and took 29 boards to the Bobcats' 18. Haggan led the rebounding effort with eight. Matkin led scoring with 19 points and forced five Madison turnovers. Kelly Vriesman followed up with 14 points, and forward Amber Petersen also reached double figures with 10.

"The last one was so close. We were so pumped for this game and ready. We know the consequences," Haggan said, alluding to the Bruins' 5-2 conference record (13-3 overall).

It's something that's always on their minds, but even more so given next week's slate of games. Twin Falls will travel to Century on Tuesday before hosting Highland Thursday. The Rams broke the Bruins' 14-conference game winning streak in December.

"We're preparing for Highland," Jones said. "We're going to have a different game plan, and it'll help that it's at our place. A good crowd makes a difference for these girls."

Pop quiz: What's the most anticlimactic 20 minutes in all of college basketball?

ERIC LARSEN

Heading into today's Scenic West Athletic Conference showdown against the College of Eastern Utah, the 16-0 Golden Eagles have entered halftime leading by an average of 25 points. They've never met the break leading by less than 11, which has equated to roughly five hours and 20 minutes of garbage time over the course of the season.

CSI's penchant for blowout wins has led to two things: Abject second-half boredom and enough grumbling throughout the Magic Valley to provide the source material for a new "Grumpy Old Men" trilogy.

Here's a sample: The Golden Eagles win too much, and by too many points. The team is full of merciless mercenaries who are misrepresenting the Magic Valley with their utter disregard for sportsmanship, for which they should be ashamed.

And now, here's a simple truth about competitive sports: No one is going to apologize for winning.

The New England Patriots didn't send out condolences for beating the Miami Dolphins 52-7 this season. The UCLA Bruins weren't embarrassed by their seven straight national basketball titles. And CSI head coach Barret Peery isn't about to apologize for his 71-17 record with the Golden Eagles, or the way his team wins.

It's true that the Golden Eagles' frenetic full-court attack steps on the neck of the unwritten rules of the game. Peery doesn't call off the press with his team up 30. The end of the CSI bench doesn't file onto the floor until the five-minute mark.

But unwritten rules aren't rules. As such, the Golden Eagles will continue to break them, mainly because they have to.

After all, the Golden Eagles led all of college basketball in scoring last season — and lost seven games, a regular-season SWAC title and two NJCAA Division 1 National Tournament games in doing so.

Tigers exact some revenge, dominate Minico

By John Derr
Times-News writer

JEROME — Don't come knocking on their door.

The last time Minico visited Jerome was 11 months ago in the district tournament, and the Spartans left town with the victory. The game ended the Tigers' season, and to make matters worse, they had to listen to the celebration in the locker room. They didn't forget.

With constant in-your-face defense, Jerome jumped out early and never let up, routing Minico 59-33 in Great Basin Conference West girls basketball action Friday night.

"Last time they came here it didn't go so well for us. We had four days of practice and we were pumped up," said senior guard Molly Reid who got things going early for Jerome.

It was a close game the last time the teams met in Minico with Jerome coming away with a 55-50 victory. This time it would be very different.

Reid hit a pair of jumpers and added two assists off steals for easy fast-break baskets as the Tigers went on a 13-0 run early in the first.

Sophomore Aubree Callen took over from there. A nice spin move in the paint was followed by a pair of three-pointers as Jerome led 19-4 after one.

"We all came together. It was one of our best performances, but it won't be our best," said Callen, who had a game-high 20 points. "After the first shot fell I had my rhythm and they kept falling."

The Tigers (15-1, 4-0) kept the pressure on, getting production from the bench. Hailey Long grabbed a pair of steals they led to baskets, then added a trey. Carrie Thibault and Baylie Smith both converted a pair from the charity stripe.

Brecka Fetzer, who led the Spartans with 12 points, knocked down one from beyond the arc and added a drive through the key late in the second, but Minico trailed by 28 at the half.

Minico (5-8, 1-3) didn't shoot poorly in the first half, hitting 7 of 15, but the problem was turnovers. The Spartans tallied 18. Part of that was due to a long layoff. Minico had played just one game in the last 21 days, and last were on the floor eleven days ago as weather led to a pair of cancelled games.

"We looked like a team that just started the season," said Minico coach Clint Straatman. "We were very passive on offense and that didn't help our defense."

Fetzer scored the first basket of the second half, but Jerome responded with a 12-0 run. Jordan Burnham, who spent much of the first half on the bench in foul trouble, scored six straight while finishing with 13 points.

With Jerome up by 34 heading into the final period the mercy rule was in effect. It would be the only quarter the Spartans would outscore the Tigers. Fetzer nailed her second trey and added a pair of free throws.

Jerome assistant coach Scott Burton, who led the team as Brent Clark was out of town, was pleased with how the team played.

"I told them to imagine what they could accomplish if they were not afraid to fall. They played with reckless abandon and tons of energy," said Burton.

Both teams are back on the court today. Jerome hosts Mountain Home in a matinee contest while Minico travels to Wood River in a make-up conference battle.

Bobcats win ugly contest

By Zach Kyle
For the Times-News

BURLEY — It wasn't pretty, but the Burley Bobcats girls basketball team dispatched the visiting Wood River Wolverines 38-19 Friday night.

The game crawled at a small's pace with the score 22-13 heading into the fourth quarter. Wood River was overmatched against Burley's aggressive man-to-man defense, registering more turnovers (25) than points. Only two Wolverines converted field goals, led by the 12 points of 6-foot-3 center Lauren Morganthaler, who used her height to shoot over shorter defenders.

BURLEY

However, Burley struggled against Wood River's 2-3 zone. The Bobcats scored only two points in the second quarter until the final forty seconds, when Taresa Waymen slipped a lay-in under Morganthaler then stole a pass and scored a layup in transition to give Burley a 17-8 lead going into halftime. Burley then went nearly eight minutes without scoring a point in the third, a drought ended by Kassi Kerbs' 3-pointer with 42 seconds left in the quarter.

Burley took the cork out of the hoop in the fourth quarter, rattling off 16 points to win easily.

Burley coach Gordon Kerbs was surprised to learn the Bobcats managed to shoot 35 percent. He said the low scoring was a result of the pace of the game.

"We shot the ball better than I thought we did," Kerbs said. "We played well, but when a team plays zone, it slows things down, and when you don't make shots, it really slows things down."

With only 12 turnovers, Kerbs said the Bobcats' mistake was not putting up more attempts.

"We didn't take shots," Kerbs said. "That was what was most disappointing. We go and jack 18 3s up against Century, which is too many, and tonight we don't even look to shoot. It's a loss of confidence."

With the win, Burley improves to 11-5 on the season and 3-1 in GBW conference play. The Bobcats host Preston next Thursday.

"We've got four games to get better," Kerbs said. "We're doing a lot of things right. We need to do some things better, like executing and attacking the zone with the dribble and flashing the gaps."

Bulldogs rebound in 2nd half, top Wendell

Times-News

The Kimberly Bulldogs' concerted second-half effort on the offensive glass pushed them over Wendell, 52-45 in Kimberly Friday night. After recording only two offensive rebounds in the first half, and trailing 27-19 in the process, the Bulldogs hustled for 13 second-chance opportunities after the break.

"We had a lot better effort," Bulldogs head coach Roger Keller said. "Jared Munum had nine rebounds in the second half and Evan Jerke did a nice job on the boards."

Jerke, Mumm and Eric Marvin each scored 12 to pace the 6-5 Bulldogs who remained at 2-1 in Sawtooth Central Idaho Conference play with the nonconference win. The Trojans were led by Eric Lopez' game-high 13 points, while Justin Brandsma added eight. The Bulldogs' improved effort led to a 33-18 second-half scoring advantage.

"We had to do a much better job rebounding and defensively," Keller said. "After the first quarter, it wasn't bad."

Cameron, Brewers reach preliminary agreement on $7 million, 1-year deal

MILWAUKEE — Free-agent outfielder Mike Cameron and the Milwaukee Brewers reached a preliminary agreement on a $7 million, one-year contract that includes a club option for 2009.

Cameron must pass a physical for the agreement to be completed, a person with knowledge of the deal said Friday. The person spoke on condition of anonymity because the deal wasn't final.

Cameron, who turned 35 earlier this month, is suspended for the first 25 games of next season after testing positive a second time for a banned stimulant. At the time his suspension was issued, Cameron blamed the positive test on a tainted supplement.

In 151 games with the San Diego Padres last season, Cameron batted .242 with 21 home runs and 78 RBIs.

Cameron gets a $1.25 million signing bonus and $5 million next season. Milwaukee has a $10 million option for 2009, with a $750,000 buyout.

In addition, Cameron can earn $750,000 annually in performance bonuses. He would get the full amount for 475 plate appearances next year and for 575 in 2009.

Baseball establishes drug use investigations unit

NEW YORK (AP) — Major League Baseball launched a department of investigations Friday, a permanent branch of the commissioner's office responsible for looking into drug use in the sport.

In his report last month on drug use in baseball, George Mitchell had recommended the formation of the unit. Adopting another of Mitchell's recommendations, MLB is establishing a tip line for team employees to make the commissioner's office aware of violations of drug, betting and other rules.

"The department of investigations will have critically important responsibilities in protecting the integrity of our sport," commissioner Bud Selig said.

Dan Mullin, a former New York City Police Officer who had been in baseball's senior director of security operations, was appointed vice president and head of the unit.

Major League Baseball Commissioner Bud Selig launched a department of investigations Friday, a permanent branch of the commissioner's office responsible for looking into drug use in the sport.

George Hanna, a former FBI employee currently in baseball's security department, was appointed senior director of investigations.

MLB said the unit "will have broad authority to conduct investigations." The limits of the unit were not immediately clear. Will it become a spy unit that places moles in clubhouses? Will it secretly tail players away from ballparks?

Bob DuPuy, baseball's chief operating officer, said the department "will be given the freedom to do what is appropriate ... in the context of acceptable and customary investigative and business practices."

Mullin was not available for comment, baseball spokesman Rich Levin said.

It was unclear whether the activities the unit could participate in would have to be negotiated with the players' association.

"We learned about this late last night. We had no role of any kind or sort in it," union head Donald Fehr said. "After we digest it, to the extent we have questions and things we want to raise, I'm sure we'll be doing that."

Under labor law, terms and conditions of employment are subject to collective bargaining.

"We are free to investigate employee misconduct without bargaining," said Rob Manfred, executive vice president of labor relations in the commissioner's office.

Manfred said he notified the union this week that MLB intended to act unilaterally on the investigations unit, which will not deal with any on-field matters. The new department will be in contact with the 30 teams.

"I'm sure that there will be a regular liaison so that the department has whatever information it can garner," he said.

MLB will require all team employees and the commissioner's office to report any information on the possible use of performance-enhancing drugs to the head of the department of investigations. All team baseball operations employees will be required to sign an annual statement that they have no undisclosed knowledge of drug use, possession or distribution by players or other team employees.

This week, MLB adopted several other recommendations made by Mitchell, such as background checks and random drug tests for clubhouse employees; logging all packages sent to clubhouses; and permanent credentials for drug testers.

Selig has said some of the recommendations are subject to collective bargaining, such as moving responsibility for drug testing to an outside body. Lawyers for MLB and the union had a preliminary discussion this week.

Selig, Fehr and Mitchell are to testify Tuesday before the House Committee on Oversight and Government Reform.

Jones sentenced to 6 months in prison

Gold medalist punished for lying about steroids and check-fraud scam

WHITE PLAINS, N.Y. (AP) — Marion Jones said she was scared. She said she was sorry. With a catch in her voice, she said her young sons needed her.

"I ask you to be as merciful as a human being can be," she implored the judge.

To no avail.

The former Olympic track gold medalist was sentenced to six months in prison Friday for lying to investigators about using performance-enhancing drugs and her role in a check-fraud scam.

And so ended a long fall from grace for the one-time fastest woman on earth.

Jones' speed, along with a dazzling smile, pleasant personality and unmatched style, made her an international superstar even before she won five medals at the 2000 Sydney Olympics. The medals and her riches are gone now, and she has been "put through humiliation with great fanfare," said U.S. District Judge Kenneth Karas, who sentenced her.

He said Jones damaged two federal investigations with lies that came years apart, so "I don't think the criminal conduct can be written off as a momentary lapse of judgment or a one-time mistake, but instead a repetition of an attempt to break the law."

The check-fraud scheme was a major crime and the wide use of steroids "affects the integrity of athletic competition," he said. If Jones had told the truth from the start, he said, it would have been a great help to the ongoing BALCO investigation.

Later Friday, the judge sentenced Jones' former coach, Olympic champion Steve Riddick, to 5 years and 3 months in prison for his role in the check-fraud scam. Riddick also was given three years' probation and must pay back $375,000.

Riddick's lawyer, Bryan Hoss, said Riddick would appeal.

Jones pleaded with the judge not to separate her from her sons "even for a short period of time," saying she was still nursing the younger one. Although she is happily married now to Olympic sprinter Obadele Thompson, she said she knew from experience the problems of bringing up children in a one-parent household.

Karas acknowledged the children were victims, but said criminals "have to realize the consequences of their actions on others."

"We wouldn't be here today talking about the possibility of incarceration if Ms. Jones-Thompson had told the truth," he said.

A prison sentence, he said, might make others "think twice before lying. It might make them realize that no one is above the obligation to tell the truth."

The judge said he stayed within the six-month maximum suggested by prosecutors because of Jones' sons, her eventual acceptance of responsibility and the good she "can do to debunk the worldwide lie" perpetrated by performance-enhancing drugs.

He said 400 hours of community service in each of the two years following her release would "take advantage of Ms. Jones-Thompson's eloquence, strength and her ability to work with kids." He suggested she teach children that "it's wrong to cheat and to lie about the cheating."

Karas sentenced Jones to six months on the steroids case and two months on the check fraud case but said the sentences could be served at the same time.

After long denying she ever had used performance-enhancing drugs, Jones admitted last October she lied to federal investigators in November 2003, acknowledging she took the designer steroid "the clear" from September 2000 to July 2001.

Majerus' Billikens set record for futility

ST. LOUIS (AP) — Rick Majerus came out of retirement for this?

The charismatic coach who guided teams to 11 NCAA tournaments in 20 seasons and led Utah to the 1998 Final Four has seen some painful things in his first year at Saint Louis University, a 41-point loss to Kent State among them.

But Thursday night was something else. The Billikens set a record for scoring futility in a 49-20 loss to George Washington in their Atlantic 10 opener.

The 20 points were the fewest in Division I since the shot clock was introduced in 1985-86. The previous record was 21 by Georgia Southern in a 40-point loss to Coastal Carolina in 1997 and matched by Princeton in a 41-21 loss to Monmouth in 2005.

Rick Majerus has seen some painful things in his first year at Saint Louis, including a 49-20 loss to George Washington.

The Billikens were 7-48 (14.6 percent) from the field, including 1-for-19 from beyond the 3-point line. Their top scorer, reserve Bryce Husak, had five points. Tommy Liddell was 1-for-12, Kevin Lisch 1-for-9, Paul Eckerle 1-for-8.

Saint Louis missed the first nine shots and didn't score until Husak made a free throw nearly six minutes into the game. The Billikens trailed 25-7 at the half.

After the game, Majerus credited George Washington (5-6) with strong defense but admitted his undersized team had "some issues."

"Anyone can look at us and see we don't have height, we don't have depth," he said.

Northwestern Community Colleges of the world but it will need to do just that to beat the College of Eastern Utah tonight. The Golden Eagles will need to do even more to top Salt Lake Community College on the road in two weeks, let alone avoid a repeat of last year's final-four flop at nationals.

If Thursday's 146-96 win over an undisciplined CNCC team illustrated anything, it's this: While CSI's press is effective in creating turnovers, it can be frequently scored upon, especially if the Golden Eagles suffer any lapses in motivation. If CSI's traps and double-teams are a split-second slow, the end result is often a two-on-one against Art Parakhouski or Bocar Ba for the opposition.

That's who the Golden Eagles are though. If CSI was going to play half-court or zone defense this season, it would have started doing so in August, not January. Sixteen games into the season, it's too late for any team — even one this talented — to change its identity without disastrous results.

If this full-court frenzy is going to be the Golden Eagles' style in coming seasons, it would be nice to see it tested early against improved nonconference competition. However, talking about bringing the nation's elite to Twin Falls, and getting them to risk perfect records and preseason rankings are two separate beasts.

"Just to beat (Pierson) is a major boost," said Morris of a major confidence lift. "I pulled a move that I'd never pulled before. If I were the second seed and someone did that to me I'd be surprised. But it's great just to beat the second seed. I don't intend on losing this whole weekend."

Morris is joined by teammates Arlo Shaddy (160 pounds) and Andrew Juarez (103) in the championship semifinals, but he wasn't the only local to pull off a major upset.

Kimberly's 140-pound wrestler Nolan Ward registered perhaps the shock of the tournament so far, pinning top seed Cory Arenson of Challis in the quarterfinals to become one of 11 locals still in the running for individual glory.

About the only thing that didn't go right for Mulberry in his 10-3 win was the unusual call of a full nelson against him while he was in the down position, which prompted a wry smile. But the confidence boost was what Mulberry took the most satisfaction from even though it was a big win.

"It feels really good. I've got a lot of people pushing me to be better," Mulberry said, crediting anyone and everyone but himself for his success. "I'm taking satisfaction in improving, win or lose. In the past it wasn't a big deal but I really see myself improving and it makes me feel good."

The host Trojans got in on the success as well, as top-seeded 145-pounder Cody Slade easily advanced to the semifinals with a pair of wins. Slade credited the home fans, some of whom lingered essentially matside, in spurring him to the semis.

"We've got a lot of fans out here and it feels great," Slade said. "You can't really perform at your best without a bunch of people cheering you on."

Also reaching the semifinals were Kevin Vanhooser (103) and Andrew Ringling (125) of Wendell, Koltin Kenney (112) of Kimberly, Ryan Kingsland (119) of Raft River/Oakley and Dakota Smith (215) of Declo.

Wrestling action continues today at 9:15 a.m. with consolation action, with the championship round slated to start at around 1 p.m.

New England Patriots linebacker Tedy Bruschi takes in the warm sunlight as he stretches before practice in Foxborough, Mass., Thursday.

FOXBOROUGH, Mass. (AP) — The clock ticks down and the pressure builds. Often, the final minutes of a game are the most important.

The Patriots stayed undefeated with a touchdown with 44 seconds left in their 12th game. The Jaguars won their playoff game last weekend on a field goal with 37 seconds remaining.

On Saturday night, the final minutes of the AFC divisional playoff game between those teams will be the final minutes of the season for one of them.

"Whoever is playing their best football at the end is going to be winning the game," New England cornerback Ellis Hobbs said. "They're a team that obviously is not going to back down and we're not going to back down from them."

Jacksonville (12-5) advanced with a 31-29 win at Pittsburgh that was decided by Josh Scobee's 25-yard field goal followed by a recovery of Ben Roethslisberger's fumble.

"When we bring that intensity and energy to the game for 60 minutes," Jaguars cornerback Terry Cousin said, "I like what we are going to do."

Even if the Patriots, two-touchdown favorites, are way ahead, don't expect them to let up.

They put Tom Brady back in the game in the fourth quarter of a 49-28 win after the Miami Dolphins made it 42-21 on an interception return for a touchdown against backup Matt Cassel. Brady didn't leave a 52-7 win over Washington until it was 45-0.

Coach Bill Belichick's message was clear: play all-out no matter what the score. It will become second nature when the games are tight.

In last year's AFC championship game, the Patriots coughed up an 18-point lead and lost to Indianapolis 38-34 on Joseph Addai's touchdown with 60 seconds to go, followed by Marlin Jackson's interception with 24 seconds left.

So from the first play of this regular season until the last, Belichick's "60 Minutes" mantra was implanted in their minds.

"Teams are too good and athletes are too good at this level to not finish the game off," Patriots linebacker Mike Vrabel said. "We've seen other teams come back on us."

Jags remove asterisk next to Pats' record from web site

JACKSONVILLE, Fla. (AP) — The asterisk the Jacksonville Jaguars had on their web site next to New England's perfect record, a mark indicating the Patriots were caught cheating in one game this season, has been removed.

The Jaguars, who play at New England in the divisional round of the AFC playoffs Saturday night, decided to removed the asterisk Friday.

Jaguars.com senior editor Vic Ketchman put the asterisk next to the Patriots in his weekly "power rankings." Ketchman said he put it there in "an attempt at subtle humor." It remained there, mostly under the radar, for four months.

That changed this week, when several media outlets turned the asterisk into a story.

"All of a sudden, the subtle humor was gone," Ketchman wrote Friday. "All of a sudden, the asterisk was being treated as though it was critical commentary."

Seahawks have experience, but Packers have Favre and Lambeau

GREEN BAY, Wis. (AP) — It was the kind of question Al Harris probably was supposed to answer no to, even if he didn't really believe it.

Instead, the Green Bay Packers cornerback chose to acknowledge the obvious: Yes, the Seattle Seahawks' postseason experience gives them an advantage in Saturday's divisional playoff game at Lambeau Field.

"There is a big difference and I think it will play a factor," Harris said. "The teams who constantly go to the playoffs and have been to the playoffs, and the players who've been in these situations, you see come up big and play well. So I think it will be a big difference."

Seattle's 53-man roster has a combined 240 games of postseason experience. Green Bay, the NFL's youngest team, has a total of 94.

On Saturday, the Seahawks will start 10 players — including kicker Josh Brown and his battery powered heating pants — who started the Super Bowl 23 months ago. Bobby Engram will make it 11 if receiver D.J. Hackett isn't able to start after aggravating a sprained ankle late in the week.

A total of 12 Packers starters, including kicker Mason Crosby and punter Jon Ryan, will be playing in their first playoff game.

But the Seahawks aren't sure their top-to-bottom experience advantage outweighs the fact the Packers have wily old Brett Favre. And they're playing at Lambeau after a bye week.

"Even though they don't have a lot of guys who have been in the playoffs, we're still playing at Lambeau Field. Against Brett Favre," running back Shaun Alexander said, chuckling at the absurdity of Favre's experience alone.

And Favre, who will make his 21st postseason start, said some of the Packers' unexpected success this season can be attributed to the fact their young players don't get caught up in what they're not supposed to be able to do.

"Not knowing any better sometimes worked in our favor — not realizing the odds that you're up against," Favre said. "Sometimes you get a veteran team that's been around a while. They kind of go, 'I don't know, we don't stand a chance.' A younger team's like, 'Bring them on.' We've made mistakes at times that I think show our inexperience, but we've been resilient, too."

Among Packers starters making their first postseason starts Saturday will be wide receiver Greg Jennings, running back Ryan Grant, linebackers A.J. Hawk and Brady Poppinga and safeties Atari Bigby and Nick Collins.

Seahawks coach Mike Holmgren has coached in 33 postseason games. He won a Super Bowl for Green Bay to end the 1996 season, and has reached two others.

He has seen what the playoffs can do to first-timers.

"I've seen guys with their eyes pretty wide open for a while, then they settle in and it's a football game," Holmgren said. "The intensity level in playoff games — and the farther you go along in the playoffs, and of course in the Super Bowl — it can affect you. But then it's the coaches' jobs to settle people down, and make them realize that it is a football game, an important one, but another football game."

Packers coaches have spent this week prodding young players to make the most of this opportunity because there's no way to know when it might come again. They brought up quarterback Dan Marino, who went to the Super Bowl in his second season but never got back there.

"I'm not one to try to live in the past," Jennings said. "I'm here. I'm not worried about what happened in the past. I don't care about the regular season anymore. That's all null and void now. We're all starting from scratch, so I just feel like if we can go out there and continue to do the things that we've been doing to get to this point and try to continue to be successful and continue to jell as a team, then who knows where the future lies for this ballclub?"

Aside from their graying quarterback, the Packers are a young team on the rise. But the window to win a championship might be closing for the Seahawks, who are making their fifth consecutive postseason appearance.

"If you had the choice between an experienced playoff group, and an inexperienced group, you'd pick the experience," Holmgren said.

Colts, Bolts keeping emotions in check

The practice schedule, the pregame warmups, even the way he prepares for a kick remain the same. He figures that's why he earned the title of NFL's best clutch kicker, with consistency, and if the four-time Super Bowl winner has learned anything about the playoffs, it's this: Don't change anything for the postseason.

Chargers at Colts

11 a.m., Sunday, CBS

"Nothing changes, except that it's single-elimination," he said. "So it adds a little more excitement and pressure, but as far as playing, it's still 11-on-11 and you have to go out and win the game."

For players like Vinatieri who make annual playoff appearances, getting ready for postseason play is just part of the norm, which may well explain why Vinatieri holds NFL career postseason records for most field goal attempts (49) and most field goals made (40).

With the enhanced spotlight and the definition of an entire season potentially looming on every play, many players struggle to cope with the pressure.

Even experienced playoff teams such as San Diego and Indianapolis, who square off in Sunday's second-round game at the RCA Dome, aren't immune to mistakes.

"When you get to the playoffs, you don't know what to expect," Dungy said. "There's a lot of ways you're going to have to win in the playoffs. Really, a lot of it comes down to making the same mundane plays you've been making all season and playing hard for 60 minutes."

Dungy's Colts (13-3), the defending Super Bowl champs, and the Chargers (12-5) have both learned that lesson the hard way.

After earning the AFC's top seed in 2005 and 2006, respectively, both teams lost at home in the second round on seemingly improbable plays. The NFL's most accurate kicker, Mike Vanderjagt, shanked a potentially tying field goal to the right for Indy, and Marlon McCree lost a fumble after intercepting Tom Brady to give the Patriots a second chance.

T.O. practices again, coach says 'he's going to play' on Sunday

IRVING, Texas (AP) — Terrell Owens warmed up for practice Friday, then went to see a trainer about his injured ankle.

Problem? Nope, quite the opposite.

Owens felt so good he wanted the protective tape he'd been wearing cut off. Then he ran to join his teammates who were lined up to stretch, slapping hands and practically doing a victory lap on his way to his spot, complete with waving his right index finger.

"I'm good," Owens said later, at his locker. "See you Sunday."

The team's official report listed his participation in practice as limited and his game status as questionable. Coach Wade Phillips was more hopeful about having his All-Pro receiver in the lineup Sunday against the New York Giants. Phillips said if Owens can play, he'll start.

"Terrell said he's going to play and I believe him," said Phillips.

Giants defense: 2 sacks in 2 contests vs. Romo

There were club records for touchdown throws and yards passing. There was the highlight-reel scramble of a ball snapped over his head that he somehow turned into a first down.

Petty as it may seem, Romo's avoidance of Osi Umenyiora, Michael Strahan and Justin Tuck was quite an accomplishment considering the Giants led the NFL with 53 sacks. Take out the games against Romo and their ratio is even better, 51 in 14 games.

Sure, New York's total was boosted by 12 sacks in one game against Philadelphia. But that actually enhances the point. The Giants got to Donovan McNabb so often in part because they see him twice a year. Ditto for Romo, yet they still haven't figured out how to get him down, despite facing him more than any other team has.

Giants at Cowboys

2:30 p.m., Sunday, FOX

Romo replaced Drew Bledsoe at halftime of the first Dallas-New York game last season, then was a starter when the teams played again. Add in the two meetings this year and that's plenty of background to help the Giants build a game plan for the first-ever postseason meeting between these NFC East rivals on Sunday.

So, what will it be: New York going all out to try finally getting to Romo? Or will the Giants decide it's not worth it and start backpedaling instead?

Said Umenyiora, who led New York with 13 sacks, "I think now we are just going to take our shots and whatever happens, happens."

Valley Co-op issues record dividends

Dividends rise on increased sales performance and cost controls

By Joshua Palmer
Times-News writer

Valley Co-op issued a record $1.5 million in patronage Dividends to its members for the 2007 fiscal year.

According to Donn Bordewyk, Valley Co-op general manager, the record Dividends were the product of increased sales performance and cost controls.

"The cost controls have really been across the board, but one example is how we have been more efficient in our deliveries," Bordewyk said. "We deliver to several places out in rural areas, so we are very much affected by fuel prices."

Valley Co-op, which was founded in 1991 after Wendell Grain Supply joined with Idaho Grain Supply, has about 3,000 members.

The co-op has branch locations in Buhl, Gooding, Jerome, Shoshone and Wendell. Since the company was founded in 1991, it has issued more than $4.4 million in patronage refunds to its members.

Although most members contribute to the agricultural industry, Bordewyk said that members are not required to work in agriculture.

"We also have many non-ag members who buy things like heating oil for the homes from us, or gasoline from our co-op stores," Bordewyk said.

Bank of America to buy Countrywide for $4.1 billion in stock

By Ieva M. Augstums
Associated Press writer

"Their balance sheet can take a shock much better than Countrywide. When you take the shocks at Countrywide, they have a big, busting consequence that's negative."

— CreditSights senior analyst David Hendler

CHARLOTTE, N.C. — Bank of America said Friday it will buy Countrywide Financial for $4.1 billion in stock, a deal that rescues the country's biggest mortgage lender and expands the financial services empire of the nation's largest consumer bank.

The acquisition will make Charlotte-based Bank of America Corp. the nation's biggest mortgage lender and loan servicer.

Bank of America said it initially plans to operate Countrywide separately under the Countrywide brand, with integration occurring no sooner than 2009.

The transaction represents a 7.5 percent discount to where Countrywide shares ended Thursday, after they soared on news that a rescue plan was in the works. It also effectively leaves Bank of America with a big loss on its $2 billion August investment in Countrywide Financial Corp. during the height of the summer's global credit crisis.

An aggressive dealmaker who has already snapped up behemoths FleetBoston Financial and MBNA, Bank of America chief executive Ken Lewis this time isn't buying a financial winner. Delinquencies and loans in pending foreclosure are rising in Countrywide's loan portfolio, and Lewis said Friday "there are near-term challenges" in the nation's housing market.

"Countrywide presents a rare opportunity for Bank of America to add what we believe is the best domestic mortgage platform at an attractive price and to affirm our position as the nation's premier lender to consumers," Lewis said in a statement.

It also places Lewis in the position of a market savior. By buying Countrywide, he's keeping the industry and regulators from the messy task of figuring out who would take on the responsibility of collecting payments for the 9 million U.S. home loans serviced by the Calabasas, Calif.-based lender. Lewis said Friday

BUSINESS BRIEFS

Trade deficit rises

WASHINGTON — The U.S. trade deficit in November rose to the highest level in 14 months, reflecting record foreign crude oil prices. The deficit with China declined slightly while the weak dollar boosted exports to another record high

The Commerce Department reported that the trade deficit, the gap between imports and exports, jumped by 9.3 percent, to $63.1 billion. The imbalance was much larger than the $60 billion that had been expected.

Consumer confidence

WASHINGTON — Consumer confidence fell as worries about jobs, energy bills and home foreclosures darkened people's feelings about the country's economic health and their own financial well-being.

According to the RBC Cash Index, confidence tumbled to a mark of 56.3 in early January. That compares with a reading of 65.9 in December — and a benchmark of 100 — and was the worst since the index began in 2002.

Gold futures increase

NEW YORK — Gold futures briefly rose above $900 an ounce Friday for the first time as high oil prices, a weak dollar and fears of a U.S. recession led uneasy investors to keep buying the precious metal.

An ounce of gold for February delivery on the New York Mercantile Exchange jumped $6.50 to $900.10 in morning trading, an all-time high and a psychologically important milestone. Gold later slipped to $898.70 an ounce on profit-taking but remained in record territory.

Still, when adjusted for inflation, gold remains well below its all-time high. An ounce of gold at $875 in 1980 would be worth $2,115 to $2,200 today.

Oil prices decline

NEW YORK — Oil prices extended their slide Friday on a growing sentiment that the country might be headed for a recession that would depress demand for oil.Energy investors remained focused on recent government jobs reports that suggest the economy is struggling to make headway against the challenges posed by a troubled housing market and high oil prices.

Montana's Big Sky Airlines continues to drop routes

BILLINGS, Mont. (AP) — Big Sky Airlines continues to drop routes as it nears a planned closure.

The troubled airline said it will stop flying to Bozeman; Boise, Idaho; and Portland, Ore., after Tuesday.

"We'll continue flying to Helena, Billings, Missoula and the seven eastern Montana cities," of Havre, Lewistown, Glasgow, Wolf Point, Sidney, Glendive and Miles City, said Fred deLeeuw, president of Big Sky Transportation Co.

In mid-December, a Minneapolis holding company called MAIR Holdings Inc., which has owned Big Sky Transportation Co. since 2002, announced that it would liquidate Big Sky Airlines' assets and transfer its western routes to another company.

Big Sky flights east of the Mississippi River and service to Sheridan, Wyo., and Denver ended Jan. 7, and about 140 workers were laid off. The company ended its service to the east coast cities due to bad weather, disappointing revenue and record-high fuel prices.

Great Lakes Aviation, based in Cheyenne, Wyo., is scheduled to take over the company's Essential Air Service routes to the seven eastern Montana cities beginning Feb. 1.

This week, Big Sky Airlines gave its remaining 150 Montana employees, including about 50 pilots, a required 60-day notice that their last day of work will be March 8.

DeLeeuw said Big Sky pilots are being recruited by at least 10 other carriers, including Great Lakes.

"They are all interviewing our pilots and interviewing them on the spot," deLeeuw said. "We have a bunch of great pilots we've hired through the years."

"We have all the employees who are willing to stay. We have the ground equipment and personnel, like our mechanics union," said Bruce Tall, a pilot captain who heads Local 15 of the United Transportation Union. "The airplanes are painted, and if we can buy the company, we're ready to fly."

However, the employees must raise enough money — no sales price has been disclosed — and they must persuade the Transportation Department to give back the EAS contract.

DeLeeuw said he has been talking with the pilots.

"I fully support someone trying to buy Big Sky and keep it going. We'll see if they can pull it off," he said.

Buyout

there was no government support for Countrywide's loan portfolio.

"There's still plenty of risk involved," said Bart Narter, senior analyst at Celent, a Boston-based financial research and consulting firm. "He's brave to do it. But I think that it's very likely down the road to be profitable, maybe not immediately, but long-term."

There was no immediate work on job cuts, but analysts said they expect some among the ranks of Countrywide's 15,000 employees. Lewis said he would like Countrywide chairman and chief executive Angelo R. Mozilo to stay with the combined companies until the deal is done.

"Angelo has told me that he will do anything that we want him to do," Lewis said. "I would guess that he'll want to go have some fun. I will talk with him next week about his personal desires. Many of the senior people will have big operating roles in this company."

Shareholders of Countrywide will receive 0.1822 of a share of Bank of America stock in exchange for each share of Countrywide. The deal is expected to close in the third quarter and to be neutral to Bank of America earnings per share in 2008 and lift earnings per share in 2009, excluding buyout and restructuring costs.

Bank of America expects $670 million in after-tax cost savings in the transaction, or 11 percent of the expense base of the two companies' mortgage operations.

The agreement has been approved by both companies' boards and is subject to regulatory and Countrywide's shareholders approval.

Shares in Countrywide hit record lows in recent days on persistent rumors that a bankruptcy was imminent, a condition brought on by the widespread spike in mortgage defaults and foreclosures, especially in subprime loans — those made to borrowers with weak credit.

Countrywide shares plummeted more than 13 percent, or $1.04, to $6.71 at the open of trading Friday. Bank of America shares fell 19 cents to $39.11.

Countrywide shares have fallen 57 percent since Bank of America made its $2 billion deal in August at $18 per share. That purchase of preferred stock was convertible into a common shares of Countrywide at $18 per share, for roughly a 16 percent stake in the company.

Along with the $2 billion investment from Bank of America, Countrywide was forced to draw on an $11.5 billion line of credit to steady itself in August.

It also tightened its credit guidelines and stopped selling some types of adjustable rate loans.

But analysts said it wasn't enough, with one noting this week that Countrywide needed an infusion of $4 billion in capital within the next two weeks to save itself.

Lewis' bank holds $1.5 trillion in assets and is the nation's largest bank by market capitalization

"Their balance sheet can take a shock much better than Countrywide," said CreditSights senior analyst David Hendler. "When you take the shocks at Countrywide, they have a big, busting consequence that's negative."

Forget the Wii: Next wave of gadgets sense the whole body

LAS VEGAS (AP) — Nintendo Corp.'s Wii game console is a breakout hit in large part because users control the play by waving around a motion-sensing wireless controller.

Many new gadgets are taking the idea of such an intuitive interface several steps further. Soon, you may be able to control computers, television sets, even cell phones with hand gestures alone.

JVC, also known as Victor Company of Japan Ltd., demonstrated a prototype TV with controls based on the same idea: gestures and sounds like snaps and claps turn the set on or off, control volume or change the channel.

The prospect of never again having to search the sofa for a remote is sure to be welcome in many homes, but the traditional fight over the remote could become worse: imagine two kids engaged in a sign-language duel to control the set, with the picture and sound changing frantically to keep up.

K.J. Choi follows his drive off the No. 10 tee at Waialae Country Club during the second round of the Sony Open in Honolulu, Friday.

Choi enjoying the view from the top

HONOLULU (AP) — A different week, a different island and a much different view for K.J. Choi.

Seven days ago, Choi was bringing up the rear in the Mercedes-Benz Championship, last among 31 winners at Kapalua going into the weekend. On Friday, he closed with three straight birdies for a 5-under 65 and a two-shot lead in the Sony Open.

"I knew that I was going to play better than last week, but I didn't really think about being in the lead or anything," Choi said.

Na saw that Choi was at 11-under 129 while on the putting green and was determined to get in the final group with him. Then he hooked his opening tee shot into the trees, and his next tee shot in the bunker, scrambling for par both times.

"I settled down after that," he said, laughing.

Stephen Marino was atop the leaderboard for most of the morning until his momentum stalled with a bogey on the easiest hole, although he recovered for a 67 and was three shots behind.

Fred Funk, aided by a tip from his wife, finished birdie-eagle for a 64 to give the 51-year-old a decent chance before leaving the kids to play on the Champions Tour in Hawaii the next two weeks. He was at 7-under 133 with Jimmy Walker (68).

Choi is off to his best start ever at Waialae, where the second round has derailed him in the past. He was only 1 under for his round with five holes remaining until making four birdies, the last one a tap-in putt on the par-5 ninth from some 25 feet.

"After the third round (at the Mercedes), I really found my rhythm coming back," Choi said. "My putting was getting better, and I was actually motivated."

Fujikawa, who turned 17 this week, last year became the youngest player in 50 years to make the cut on the PGA Tour when he shot 66 in the second round at the Sony Open and wound up in a tie for 20th. His encore didn't go as he had hoped.

Needing a 66 to make the cut, his hopes ended with a double bogey on No. 6, his 15th hole. He shot 70 for a 4-over 144, missing the cut no matter how it was decided.

That became a hot issue Friday afternoon with a new rule on the PGA Tour to limit the size of fields on the weekend.

While the top 70 and ties still make the cut, when the number of players exceeds 78 players, the closest number of players to 70 advance to the weekend. Eighty-seven players made the cut at even-par 140, but only 69 players will compete on the weekend.

The other 18 players received $9,699 in official money and 46 points toward the FedEx Cup.

Most of them were unaware of the change, and it was hard to find anyone who liked the new policy.

MICHAEL JONES/Washington Post

Last January, Annandale, Va., minister Steve Reynolds put his congregation on a diet. One year later, they lost a total of 2,100 pounds. Author of 'Bod4God: Four Keys to a Better Body,' he has become a diet guru to Christians seeking to lose the pounds.

Members of congregation shed pounds at minister's urging

By Jacqueline L. Salmon
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — Last January, Annandale, Va., minister Steve Reynolds told his congregation that they were praying too much at the altar of fatty foods, and he put them on a diet.

One year later, how did they do?

Very well, Reynolds said. About 250 people, most of them members of Reynolds' Capital Baptist Church, joined in his Bod4God weight-loss program that combined Christian principles with a low-fat diet and exercise. They lost a total of 2,100 pounds.

"It was wonderful," said Diane Cornell, a Falls Church, Va., homemaker who shed 46 pounds. "It was like you got your life right with God and the weight just came off."

The program was so successful that Reynolds is starting it up again, launching the 2008 version of Bod4God with a kickoff luncheon Jan. 19 at the church. As many as 300 people are expected to enroll for the first of three sessions this year.

Bod4God has also spread to other communities. A dozen churches and community groups in North Carolina, Texas and New York are launching their own versions of Bod4God this year.

Reynolds credits a story in The Washington Post in January 2007 for attracting widespread interest to his homegrown program. A former college football player, he developed it during his quest to lose the weight he'd packed on during 25 years of preaching, high-fat church suppers and little exercise.

After losing 70 pounds, he looked around his church and concluded that plenty of its members could also benefit.

Now, he has lost 108 pounds, published a book, "Bod4God: Four Keys to a Better Body," and has become something of a diet guru to Christians seeking to shake off extra weight.

His new direction comes as a bit of a surprise to him.

"I really wouldn't have postured my life this way if it was by my own design," said Reynolds, 50. "But I feel like it's a calling that God has given me, and I'm going to step up."

In Bod4God, participants meet weekly at the church for weigh-ins, a motivational rally and a speaker. Then they break up into groups of 12 (like Jesus' disciples), where they discuss their challenges and pray for one another. During the week, the teams stay in touch to offer encouragement and prayer.

They also study the Bible, focusing on verses that appear to apply to issues of health and body image, such as Romans 12:1-2 — "I beseech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that you present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable to God, which is your reasonable service."

As the program grows, Reynolds said he's relying on God to direct him.

"I want to take it as far as He wants it to go," he said. "I want it to be huge."

'Golden Compass' irked some, but flopped on its own

CARY MCMULLEN

One of my holiday activities was to see "The Golden Compass," the movie that for a brief while was the object of controversy. The subject may be dead or dying now, for financial reasons as much as anything, but it's worth reviewing as an exercise in cultural politics.

Even before the film was released in early December, it was the object of criticism from conservative Catholic and evangelical culture watchers.

That's because "The Golden Compass" is based on the first book in Philip Pullman's "His Dark Materials" trilogy. Pullman's books — a fantasy series for young and adult readers — contain ideas that contradict orthodox Christian teaching. In short, you could consider the books heretical.

Pullman's big idea is that individual free will should triumph over every force that tries to restrain it, especially organized religion and the doctrines it lays down. The bad guys in the book are a theocratic organization known as the Magisterium — a name borrowed from the teaching authority of the Roman Catholic Church. Along the way the books characterize God as a decrepit and powerless angel who finally expires.

Christian critics were convinced the movie, billed as a holiday blockbuster, would lead young people to want to read the books.

So it was something of a surprise when Harry Forbes and John Mulderig, of the U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops' Office for Film and Broadcasting, gave the movie a glowing review. The anti-clerical elements in the books had been toned down or disguised, they wrote, so that the Magisterium is merely a sinister authoritarian group.

AP photo

'The Golden Compass' cost about $200 million to make, but as of Christmas Day, it had earned only about $51 million.

Forbes and Mulderig wrote: "To the extent ... that Lyra and her allies are taking a stand on behalf of free will in opposition to the coercive force of the Magisterium, they are of course acting entirely in harmony with Catholic teaching. The heroism and self-sacrifice that they demonstrate provide appropriate moral lessons for viewers."

The review drew sharp criticism from, among others, William Donohue of the Catholic League, who accused Forbes and Mulderig of being insufficiently concerned about protecting the church. Then, shortly after the review was released, it was taken down from the conference Web site (www.usccb.org). It appeared at first there was censorship or at least a caving-in to pressure.

But Catholic blogger Amy Wellborn said the review was apparently taken down because the film studio, New Line Cinema, used a couple of quotes from the review in their advertisements.

"I think what tipped the situation over the edge was the use of the (quotes) in advertising, with the implication that the bishops of the HUGE CHANGE, OR NOT?

Debate surrounds single word change in Book of Mormon intro

By Jennifer Dobner
Associated Press writer

SALT LAKE CITY — The introduction to the 2006 edition of the Book of Mormon has a new word: among.

It sounds trivial, but to some it represents a huge change to teachings that have been passed on for generations within The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

The new wording comes in a passage about American Indians, who have long been presented by Mormon leaders as direct ancestors of a lost tribe of Israel known as the Lamanites.

"After thousands of years all were destroyed except the Lamanites, and they are among the ancestors of the American Indians," the new introduction reads.

What's the big deal? Church defenders say there is nothing important in the change.

But skeptics view it differently. The issue is that church missionaries have long portrayed Book of Mormon stories as fact. To them, it looks like the new wording is a quiet concession that DNA research accurately contradicts the scriptural claim.

"Now they're going to say, 'We got that wrong?'" said Edmonds Community College professor of anthropology Thomas Murphy in Lynnwood, Wash.

A Mormon, Murphy said he predicted the church would ultimately concede the Lamanite story was folklore and not science in a 2002 essay that appeared in "American Apocrypha," a collection of writings about the Book of Mormon.

Murphy said the use of "among" makes a somewhat deceptive change. It gives the appearance that the institutional church is moving to a position more consistent with science.

"In a way, this is a mask for a more serious problem," said Murphy, who was also threatened with excommunication in 2002. "The Book of Mormon is entirely inconsistent with the archaeology, the DNA, actually with all the evidence we have from the ancient Americas."

Hand-written pages from the original Book of Mormon are displayed in the church's history museum Wednesday, in Salt Lake City. The introduction to the 2006 edition of the book has a new word: among. Some say the alternation represents a huge change.

On the Web:

http://www.lds.org

Mormons believe the Book of Mormon was translated with a seer stone by founder Joseph Smith from a set of gold plates buried in upstate New York. The faithful consider it the word of God and a valid testimony of Jesus Christ's work in the ancient Americas. First published in 1830, it has been translated into 105 languages.

The introduction — where the change has been made — was added in 1981 and thought to be drafted by the late Bruce R. McConkie, a member of the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles, the second-most powerful church governing body.

John L. Sorenson, professor emeritus of anthropology at the church-owned Brigham Young University, said that altering what's understood to be an opinion doesn't change the church or the text of the book itself.

"Some people may want to twist this matter of a slight word change into something that they themselves want to communicate," said Sorenson. "An editorial commentary is all that has been changed. ... They might have decided to put more commas in."

Sorenson's own scholarship preaches a "limited geography" theory of Book of Mormon stories. Its premise is that the book chronicles the lives of people who lived in a small region of Central America. Mormon scholars moved away from any absolute beliefs about the ancestral lines of Indians, said Sorenson, who called the change a "backhanded" acknowledgment from church leaders of the scholarly drift.

"It's impossible for me to see what all the fuss is about," he said.

Bob Rees, a retired UCLA literature professor and a former editor of the Mormon Dialogue quarterly, is also puzzled. A central tenet of Latter-day Saint beliefs includes the principle of continuing revelation and an open religious canon, so change should be expected, Rees said.

"God speaks of the (Mormon) church as being a living church and if it is, that means it's not static, there's an opportunity for change," he said. "The history of science is the history of revising axioms. The things that we know and were certain of 100 years ago, 50 years ago, even 10 years ago, we now have to say, 'Wow, we didn't know.'"

As a believing member, however, Rees said he would have liked church leaders to explain the decision and eliminate the "great opportunity for rumor and innuendo."

Church officials have offered only a limited explanation.

"That change takes into account details of the Book of Mormon demography which are not known," church spokeswoman Kim Farah said, adding that the change will also appear in future editions of the book.

A church Web site also addresses the issue. "The scientific issues relating to DNA," it says, "are numerous and complex."

Christian Exodus leader says group expanding to Idaho community

ANDERSON, S.C. (AP) — Christian Exodus leader Cory Burnell says his group is expanding its mission to create a community of people working to limit government to Gem County, Idaho.

The organization targeted Anderson County as its first community, but only about 15 families have relocated here.

"The Idaho contingent is an expansion, not a redirection, of our project," Burnell told the Anderson Independent-Mail in an e-mail. "We had several committed CE members approach us about the good things happening in their Idaho communities and the number of Westerners they're running into who'll not ever move to S.C., but who agree with our strategy of focusing on county and state reform as a means of achieving federal reform."

> — Cory Burnell, Christian Exodus leader

Burnell, who lives in California, founded Christian Exodus in 2004 in the hopes of moving "thousands of Christians to South Carolina to re-establish constitutionally limited government founded upon Christian principles."

He has said he chose Anderson because there already were so many like-minded people here.

Paul Smith, the volunteer organizer of Christian Exodus in Idaho, says the expansion is made up of a few families already involved in the movement in Idaho. The group's members there all are families who already were in the Gem County area.

Vatican official hopes to meet with acting president of Cuba during trip

VATICAN CITY (AP) — The Vatican's No. 2 official said he hopes to meet with Raul Castro, Cuba's acting president, when he visits the island early this year.

The trip by Cardinal Tarcisio Bertone, the Holy See's secretary of state, will be the highest level visit by a Vatican official to Cuba during Pope Benedict XVI's tenure. It will mark the 10th anniversary of the historic pilgrimage there by the late Pope John Paul II.

"I really hope to meet Fidel Castro's brother, Raul, who runs the country today," Bertone told the Italian religious affairs weekly Famiglia Cristiana. Excerpts of the interview were released Dec. 29, ahead of publication.

It was not clear whether Bertone planned to visit with the ailing Fidel Castro, who welcomed John Paul in Havana in January 1998.

The trip will take place in February, Bertone said, but no date has been announced. The cardinal said he will attend the inauguration in the central city of Santa Clara of a monument dedicated to John Paul that marks the anniversary of the late pope's visit.

Many predicted that John Paul's pilgrimage would trigger changes in the Communist-run state. The pope urged Castro to increase freedom on the Caribbean island for both the church and society, and denounced U.S. efforts to isolate Cuba.

But in the decade that has passed, Cuba's Catholic Church has made only some gains. Catholic leaders can speak or write in state media at times, but religious schools remain closed as they have been since the early 1960s when hundreds of foreign priests were expelled.

ST. JOSEPH, Mich. (AP) — A man who wants to build a 30-foot, illuminated cross on property he owns on a bluff facing Lake Michigan is being blocked by the city because of zoning rules.

Ervin Wagner's cross would stand atop a stone foundation across from his home. He wants to place a camera nearby to provide streaming online video of the view.

"I feel like it's a kind of sacred ground to me," Wagner, a retired construction worker, said. "The Lord has been after me to do this for many years."

But John Hodgson, the assistant city manager, said the land is considered a part of the property's front yard, and such accessory structures are prohibited in a residential area.

The city also has a 14-foot limit on accessory structures.

Hodgson said the zoning issue raised by Wagner's cross plans has come up before. Several years ago, the city denied a man's plans to build a deck on a detached front yard across the street from his home.

Alaska Old Believers spend Russian Orthodox Christmas planning funerals for crash victims

By Mary Pemberton

People arrive at the Russian Orthodox Church in the Old Believers village of Razdolna near Homer, Alaska, Tuesday to attend the funeral of church members who were killed when their small plane crashed Saturday in Kodiak as they were returning to Homer to celebrate the Russian Orthodox Christmas. Five followers of the Russian Orthodox Old Believers along with their pilot were killed in the crash.

ANCHORAGE, Alaska — Alaska's Old Believers are accustomed to struggle. But even for them, these are the most trying of times.

Five followers of the Christian sect, which broke from the Russian Orthodox Church in the 17th century and has been persecuted since, were killed along with their pilot when their small plane crashed Saturday as they returned to Homer to celebrate the Russian Orthodox Christmas.

Ivan Basargin, 38, a married father of five, lost two brothers and two cousins. Instead of celebrating the holiday Monday, he was preparing for the four funerals that will be held Tuesday in his village of Razdolna.

"We are getting coffins ready," he said. "It is difficult, but what can we do? It is part of life."

His brother Stefan, 36, was married with nine children, and the newly-married Pavel, 30, had one. His relatives were going from one side of the village to the other to visit and grieve the loss of Basargin's brothers and his cousins, brothers Zahary Martushev, 25, and Iosif Martushev, 15.

The other two victims were passenger Andrian Reutov, 22, and pilot Robin Starrett, 50.

They were returning from fishing near Kodiak Island. Four people survived the crash Saturday, and one of them told investigators that the door to a baggage compartment in the nose of the small plane had popped open.

Alaska has between 1,500 and 3,000 Russian Orthodox Old Believers. Their sect broke from the Orthodox Church at a time when its patriarch wanted to standardize rituals and consolidate power within the church.

"The Old Believers are those believers who said no," said Roy Robson, a professor of history at the University of the Sciences in Philadelphia, who grew up in an Old Believer family in Erie, Pa. "We want to make decisions about our religious lives ourselves."

Alaska's Old Believers live in several small communities on the Kenai Peninsula, about a four-hour drive from Anchorage. Most of them make a living by commercial fishing.

Basargin said when his father died in 1985 he took over the family fishing operation.

"My younger brothers were my skippers. They helped me to build my boat. When they were ready, I helped them," he said. "We were all together until this tragedy happened. I still have three more brothers. We are kind of trying to hold together."

Old Believers were persecuted in Russia for hundreds of years. They reacted by first moving to the outskirts of the Russian empire and then to points beyond — including Alaska.

"In doing so, they became famous for being sort of a tough guy ... being able to live through a lot," Robson said. "They also became famous for their ability to work together."

Old Believers initially either settled into big cities in Russia, where they could hide in plain sight, or went as far away as Lithuania, Siberia and China. Some even went to Brazil.

In the 1960s, they came to the United States, where some settled in New Jersey and New York. They eventually established themselves in Oregon's Willamette Valley.

The Old Believers that moved to Alaska near Homer represent the ones that chose to distance themselves from the outside world, Robson said.

Basargin said at least 15 Old Believers had arrived from Oregon and Washington to lend support and prepare for Tuesday's funerals. Friends from Anchorage were arriving. Help was coming from Canada, too, he said.

Robson said Old Believers rely on rituals from the 17th century to bring real meaning to their lives. When his own father died, each of the children took part in the ritual washing of the body that included washing his hands and combing his hair. That helped the children understand the finality of death and the importance of it, he said.

Polygamist sect members have the chance to buy own homes

By Jennifer Dobner
Associated Press writer

> "My whole life growing up, you weren't really allowed to own property. If you owned it, it was a disobedient act."
>
> — Roger Wyler, former member of the Fundamentalist Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints

HILDALE, Utah — Roger Wyler has something almost no one else here does — a deed to his home.

For more than 60 years, all the land and all the homes in the dusty, side-by-side towns of Hildale, Utah, and Colorado City, Ariz., belonged not to the residents, but to a trust set up by their church, a Mormon splinter group that practices polygamy.

Now the trust arrangement is being dismantled under court order, and past and present members of the church are being offered the opportunity to secure title to a house and become real homeowners.

"It's good to be home," said Wyler, 32, a disaffected former church member who recently came back to town to buy a house. "My whole life growing up, you weren't really allowed to own property. If you owned it, it was a disobedient act."

The beginning of the end of the trust came after Warren Jeffs, the leader and self-proclaimed prophet of the Fundamentalist Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, went underground, first to escape lawsuits, then to avoid arrest on sex charges related to marriages of underage girls to older men. ...

State attorneys argued that Jeffs and other leaders used the United Effort Plan Trust for their own benefit — essentially, stealing from the faithful — including selling off undeveloped land to support Jeffs while he was a fugitive.

A Utah judge responded in 2005 by appointing an accountant, Bruce Wisan, to oversee the dissolution of the trust and turn Jeffs' theocracy into a secular community.

Nestled against jagged, red spires of rock, Hildale and Colorado City are home to about 6,000 people, most of them faithful church members. Life here is a strange confluence of the 21st century and the 19th.

Women drive minivans and talk on cell phones but wear ankle-length pioneer-style dresses and braids. Children ride horses and ATVs through town, with its combination of paved streets and tamped-down dirt roads. The men and teenage boys are often absent, traveling across the West doing the construction work that has been a cornerstone of the community's wealth.

It is essentially a company town, except that the company is the church. The trust, consisting of real estate valued at $114 million, owns everything: the land, the homes, the parks, school buildings and, once, even a zoo. It has been that way since the 1940s, when church members formed the trust as an extension of their faith.

Just before entering into marriages arranged by the church, men were typically awarded land on which to build a home. Never believers in mortgages or bank loans, sect members built their homes with money out of their own pockets, after tithing to the church.

The homes were considered trust property, and residents were subject to eviction by church leaders for disobedience — something that happened frequently under Jeffs, who exercised authority to arrange marriages and reassign partners.

Jeffs was captured in 2006 and is now serving up to life in prison for being an accomplice to rape.

Many of the houses were built to accommodate large polygamous families and are strange, haphazard-looking structures because they were often expanded piecemeal, as money became available and more wives and children joined the household. There are grand, turreted mansions of brick and stone behind 14-foot fences, and boxy, ramshackle buildings with plywood siding.

Many of those who broke with the church or were cast out have embraced Wisan's work and are returning to live here.

Those who want title to the house they built can get it by paying $5,000 plus recording fees. Others, like Wyler and his wife, are buying houses others erected but abandoned.

The Wylers bought a six-bedroom, four-bath home in August for a bargain-basement $115,000 plus some back taxes, in what was Wisan's first sale. Forty-two more former church members are in negotiations with Wisan to secure homes.

So far no church members in good standing are cooperating with him and some say the takeover of the UEP has cast a pall on the community.

Once vibrant and bustling, there are few signs of economic development or growth. Large buildings and FLDS-run industries, such as a grain elevator and machine shop, have been disassembled and moved, sometimes overnight.

Already reluctant to interact with outsiders, some people have further withdrawn. Some have moved away leaving notes and keys taped to front doors. Those who've stayed have erected fences and posted no-trespassing signs.

They remain obedient to Jeffs' order to "answer them nothing," engaging in silent, passive resistance, dropping mailed notices from Wisan on the post office floor and delaying the payment of taxes until threatened with eviction.

The faithful refuse to speak for attribution but say the court's intervention amounts to a hostile government takeover by authorities trying to end polygamy.

Even ex-members who are returning aren't happy about all Wisan's done. They are put off by his strong authority — some say he is no better than Jeffs — and have questioned why people should have to pay anything for their own homes.

"They helped build and buy and create it. The way they see it, a political agenda is at work trying to end the fundamentalist culture," said Merril Stubbs, who left the church in 2002 when Jeffs became its leader.

In reworking the towns' property arrangements, "one of the things we can't consider is whether there is more than one wife," Shields said. "You could argue that by not looking at it, we're promoting polygamy."

The FLDS tie their religious roots to the early teachings of the mainstream Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. Mormons abandoned plural marriage as a condition of statehood in 1890.

The church now excommunicates members found practicing polygamy and disavows any connection to fundamentalists who continue to believe it brings glorification in heaven.

Catholic Church Approved This Movie, when in fact, it's no such thing..." Wellborn wrote:

A report in L'Osservatore Romano, the official Vatican paper, used the words "godless" and "hopeless" to refer to the film. Whether this reflects Pope Benedict's views is not clear, but it only adds to the perception that the Catholic hierarchy from the very top disapproved of the film.

While the books contain ideas that orthodox Christian parents would consider potentially dangerous, the controversy about the movie is overblown. First of all, from a film-going perspective, "The Golden Compass" is not very successful.

I saw the film with my 17-year-old daughter and my mother. My daughter and I, having read the book, were able to follow the plot. My mother, who knew nothing about the story, was lost. Pullman's story is quite complex and a bit abstract, and in an effort to preserve as much of it as possible, the filmmakers made the movie more confusing than compelling.

That's a pity, in a way, because visually the film is stunning and the performances are quite good. It could have been an enjoyable adventure movie.

There are plenty of worse movies that have made money, but for whatever reason, "The Golden Compass" isn't drawing audiences. It cost about $200 million to make, but as of Christmas Day, it has earned only about $51 million — roughly half of what "Alvin and the Chipmunks" has earned — and it is fading.

That's good news for the critics and for the Catholic leaders who hoped to see it fail. But I doubt they can take much credit for it. Sometimes a flop is just a flop.

Pentagon releases video of clash between US and Iranian forces

By Lolita C. Baldor
Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Recent clashes between Iranian and U.S. Navy forces in the Persian Gulf reflects Iran's shifted military strategy to use its Revolutionary Guard's fast boats more aggressively in the region, the top U.S. military officer said Friday.

In a confrontation Sunday — captured on a 36-minute video the Pentagon made public Friday — military officials said boxes were thrown into the water by the Iranians, triggering concerns about potential mine threats. And in an incident last month, a U.S. ship fired warning shots at a rapidly approaching Iranian boat.

Mullen

While there are lingering questions about the origin of menacing verbal threats heard during the confrontation, Sunday in the Strait of Hormuz, Adm. Mike Mullen, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, said Friday that the clash was the most "provocative and dramatic" he has seen.

"The incident ought to remind us all just how real is the threat posed by Iran and just how ready we are to meet that threat if it comes to it," Mullen said.

Iran denied its boats threatened the U.S. vessels and accused Washington of fabricating its video. A five-minute video released by Iran shows a man speaking into a hand-held radio, with three U.S. ships floating in the distance. That footage did not show any Iranian boats approaching the U.S. vessels nor any provocation.

Adm. William J. Fallon, the top U.S. military commander in the Mideast, told The Associated Press that Iran runs the risk of triggering an unintended conflict if its boats continue to harass U.S. warships in the strategic waterway.

Both Mullen and Fallon said they could not tell if the verbal threats heard in a Pentagon-released audio tape came from the Iranian boats. In the recording, a man with an accent can be heard warning in English: "I am coming to you" and then, "You will explode after ... minutes."

The United States has lodged a formal diplomatic protest with Iran over Sunday's incident, underscoring the increasing tension between the two countries.

Also Friday, the Navy for the first time described the December encounters in detail.

The USS Whidbey Island fired the warning shots on Dec. 19 in response to a small Iranian boat that was rapidly approaching, said a Navy official, who spoke on condition of anonymity because of the sensitivity of the issue.

Three days later, the USS Carr encountered three small Iranian craft, two of which were armed, said the official. The USS Carr did not fire warning shots but sent warning blasts on the ships whistle, which caused the boats to turn around.

Sunday's incident, in which five Iranian fast boats swarmed a convoy of three U.S. warships, caused the most concern in the Pentagon and also heightened interest in the grainy video shot by a crew member on the destroyer USS Hopper.

The video, which Pentagon spokesman Bryan Whitman said was unedited, showed U.S. sailors answering radio calls from the Iranians and monitoring the five fast boats.

US President George W. Bush, centre, listens to Franciscan priests as they look at the Sea of Galilee, in the ancient village of Capernaum, Israel, Friday. Capernaum is close to where Jesus is said to have miraculously fed 5,000 people with a few loaves and fishes.

Bush visits Holocaust memorial, Sea of Galilee on Mideast trip

By James Gerstenzang
Los Angeles Times

CAPERNAUM, Israel — President Bush speaks freely about the importance of religion in his life. He also has made it clear that he does not favor playing the tourist.

On Friday, the spiritual side won out.

After two days of meetings with Israeli and Palestinian leaders, Bush took the day to focus on the horrors of the past — as well as the joy delivered by his religion, brought to life during a walk through remnants of its earliest days.

On a five-hour emotional excursion, the president visited Yad Vashem, Israel's memorial to the 6 million victims of the Holocaust. Then, walking where Jesus is said to have tended his ministry, he stood on the shores of the Sea of Galilee in northern Israel, nearly within sight of Lebanon and Syria.

After his visit to the Holocaust memorial, he expressed himself in much the same language he uses when he talks about Osama bin Laden and Saddam Hussein.

"I would hope as many people in the world would come to this place. It would be a sobering reminder that evil exists, and a call that when we find evil, we must resist," he said.

Bush walked through several chambers at Yad Vashem, among them a memorial to the 1.5 million children who died in the Holocaust and the Hall of Names, a conical room that evokes the interior of a smokestack, its walls filled covered with snapshots and formal photographs of 600 victims.

Among the photos were images of five children and a young woman, a teenage boy on a motorcycle, a man in a navy uniform, a wide-eyed boy of perhaps 6, a very old man with white beard.

Beneath the photos are hundreds of binders containing the accounts of survivors and relatives of victims. Bush stood at the room's entrance, taking it all in as a guide spoke quietly, his expression almost a grimace, lips clenched, mouth turned down at the sides.

The president, who visited Yad Vashem in 1998 on his only previous trip to Israel, spent two minutes in the room, was accompanied by Israeli Prime Minister Ehud Olmert and President Shimon Peres.

In the Hall of Remembrance, two Marines carried a wreath of red-and-cream Gerber daisies to a stone slab covering victims' ashes taken from six camps. The president, wearing a yarmulke, bent to adjust it on the stone.

Later, the memorial's chairman, Avner Shalev, said the president's eyes grew moist twice during the tour, and that he asked Secretary of State Condoleezza Rice why the United States had not bombed Auschwitz to stop the slaughter.

At the Sea of Galilee, he walked onto a pier accompanied by two Franciscan friars and pointed south over the waters on which, according to the Biblical account, Jesus walked.

Shiite leader boosts appeal for Iraqi unity across sectarian lines

By Steven R. Hurst
Associated Press writer

BAGHDAD — One of Iraq's most powerful Shiite political and religious figures on Friday issued a stunning call for the government to set aside differences with Sunni Muslim politicians and entice them back to help lead the country.

The appeal by Ammar al-Hakim, the son and heir-apparent to the head of Iraq's main Shiite political bloc, sharply increased pressure on Prime Minister Nouri al-Maliki to bring Sunni factions back into the fold as part of Washington-backed efforts at sectarian reconciliation.

It also could push al-Maliki's government to accelerate steps to integrate armed Sunni groups that have joined the fight against al-Qaida in Iraq and other extremists. The United States has credited the so-called "Awakening Councils" with helping uproot insurgents and has urged Iraq's Shiite leadership to reward the new Sunni allies with security force posts.

The Awakening Councils have played a role in a major U.S. offensive launched this week, an operation that included one of the most intense airstrikes of the war.

A top U.S. commander said Thursday's bombing blitz south of Baghdad destroyed extremists' "defensive belts" and allowed American soldiers to push into areas where they have not been in years.

The United States is also counting on political support from al-Hakim and his father, Abdul-Aziz al-Hakim, the leader of the Supreme Islamic Iraqi Council — the country's pre-eminent Shiite political grouping.

Iraqi men warm themselves by a fire in central Baghdad, Iraq, Friday. After weathering nearly five years of war, Baghdad residents thought they'd pretty much seen it all, but Friday morning, as muezzins were calling the faithful to prayer, the people here awoke to something certifiably new — for the first time in memory, snow fell across Baghdad.

By Kimi Yoshino
Los Angeles Times

BAGHDAD, Iraq — When I walked into the newsroom of our little Baghdad bureau Friday morning, I was greeted with something I haven't seen much of since I arrived a couple of weeks ago: huge smiles and an emotion that seemed a lot like joy.

"Guess what!!" exclaimed one of the translators, Usama Redha. "It snowed this morning! It's never snowed here before!"

I yanked open the sliding glass door. It was bone-chillingly cold, but all I could see were wet streets and rooftops. Through my eyes, the view was the same: ugly and depressing. No blankets of pure white snow. No falling flakes.

But oh, how little credit I gave the simple act of nature I had slept right through.

The guys in the office recounted their stories. Translator Saif Rasheed's mother woke him up to deliver the good news. Khalid, who cleans the rooms at our compound, said it was snowing on his way to work. "Dazzling," he said, so amazing that even the Iraqi military and police snapped photos with their cell phones.

Usama's friend called him at 7 a.m.: "Wake up! Wake up! Look to the sky. You will be astonished!"

Usama, of course, became immediately fearful. After all, just the day before, the U.S. military dropped 49,000 pounds of bombs on targets in southern Baghdad.

He went outside, walking past his 5-year-old son, who was perched on the windowsill, laughing excitedly. "I always read about it and saw it on TV," Usama said. "I wanted a piece of it to fall on me, just to feel it."

It never snows in Baghdad. No one can remember the last time. But Iraqis look for hope wherever they can find it. Our cook, Jameelah, told me it makes her optimistic about the future. The snow is good luck. Some residents even said it means peace is coming.

I asked Jameelah if she believed that.

"Inshallah," she said. God willing.

By Christopher Toothaker
Associated Press writer

CARACAS, Venezuela — President Hugo Chavez, emboldened by his success in a hostage release, took the side of leftist rebels in neighboring Colombia's decades-old civil conflict Friday, calling the guerrillas "true armies" who shouldn't be categorized as terrorists.

Colombia's U.S.-allied government, which has made eradicating the rebels a top priority, reacted with outrage. Interior Minister Carlos Holguin said Colombia "cannot accept a request of this sort."

Chavez's defense of the rebels thrust him deeper than ever into the thicket of Colombia's conflict. He said the Revolutionary Armed Forces of Colombia, or FARC, and the National Liberation Army "are not terrorists, they are true armies ... They must be recognized."

AP Photo

FARC is the hemisphere's biggest rebel force with 14,000 fighters, mostly peasants it says are fighting for a fairer distribution of wealth. It funds itself mainly by drug trafficking, and the government says it holds some 750 hostages, either for ransom or political leverage.

"They are insurgent forces that have a political project," Chavez said in a marathon speech to lawmakers. "I say it even though someone could be bothered by it."

A spokesman for Colombian President Alvaro Uribe later read a statement that said FARC guerrillas are terrorists because they "kidnap, place bombs indiscriminately, recruit and murder children, murder pregnant women and the elderly, and use anti-personnel mines that have left thousands of innocent victims."

"All that they've produced for the country is forced displacement, pain, unemployment and poverty," said the spokesman, Cesar Mauricio Velasquez, who did not mention Chavez by name.

PUBLIC COMMENTS SOUGHT ON LOW-INCOME WEATHERIZATION ASSISTANCE PROGRAM

The State of Idaho will accept public comment on its annual funding plan for the U.S. Department of Energy's Low-Income Weatherization Assistance Program. The State Plan is available for review at Community Action Partnership Association of Idaho, located at 5400 W. Franklin Rd., Suite G in Boise, Idaho. A public hearing on the plan will be held from 9:00-12:00 pm on Thursday January 24, 2007 in Boise at 5400 W. Franklin Street, Suite G.

The Weatherization Assistance Program assists low-income families through the installation of weatherization measures in their homes. These measures include insulation, air sealing, and heating systems improvements that enhance the energy efficiency of the homes. Program services help eligible families reduce their heating costs, promoting the health and safety of the family and conserving energy resources.

Summary of changes to the 2008 State Plan:
- Increase in the average allowable weatherization expenditure per unit as directed by DOE.
- Development of proactive Lead Safe Weatherization training plan to meet upcoming DOE requirements.

Public comments for written testimony on the State Plan will be accepted from January 18, 2007 - January 24, 2007. Send or deliver comments to:

HOROSCOPE
Jeraldine Saunders

IF JAN. 12 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY: The most beneficial heavenly help and assistance will come in April, May and November of the coming year. Plan ahead so that you can launch significant projects or make key decisions during those times. People who are good for you or those who possess enormous wisdom will remain by your side to guide your hand. You will find that you might not get what you want, but you will get what you need this year.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Ideas and inspirations that come into play now can benefit both your pocketbook and your overall health. Start any project that requires quiet meditation or an atmosphere of understanding.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Sensitivity to the atmosphere can bring success for you today. Employ understanding and sympathy to get your way and gracefully bow out of the arena if you feel that ethics are abused.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Easygoing prodding will take you further along the road of success than shotgun tactics. Dependable and durable joint decisions can be formulated with a partner.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Don't live your life like it's an orphaned film score. Part of you makes a melodrama out of the minor emergencies of the day. The other part yearns to play a romantic role in any mundane event.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Send flowers to a loved one or enjoy entertainments like a good movie, the theater or a concert in the park that take you away on flights of fancy.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Quiet times at home may fit the mood tonight. The right person for you shares your philosophy and feels like a trusted family member. Small misunderstandings vanish under late evening stars.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Even the most outlandish creative ideas are feasible. You can move forward by putting the proper spin on important goals, even if it initially seems like you are only moving sideways.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Maintain a gentle demeanor to win a handhold on the ladder of success. An art gallery or concert might invite discussions that light amorous fires.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): An imaginative mind is your best asset. In public you may need to be diplomatic, excruciatingly factual and cautious about what you say. Someone close could make you feel better about your self.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Your feelings are mirrored by others. Relation-ships thrive under careful nurturing; be generous and understanding when a certain someone wants to experiment with new ideas.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Reciprocate when others prove sympathetic and are willing to give you the benefit of the doubt. You have a tendency to blow your money on fads and fancies early in the day.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Think about major questions and concerns before you go to bed and you will probably wake up with the perfect answer at your fingertips. Put your ideas into concrete form by writing them down.

DEAR ABBY
Jeanne Phillips

DEAR ABBY: Our 40th wedding anniversary will soon be here, and my wife, "Nancy," and I are considering renewing our vows. We were married when I was in the service during the Vietnam War, so we had only a rushed ceremony with a justice of the peace.

I would like a full-blown wedding for my dear wife. I picture Nancy walking down the aisle wearing her white gown, looking as beautiful as the day we were first married. My children, now adults, think this is unnecessary and a waste of money. (We don't have much — we're on Social Security.)

I think my wife deserves the wedding she never had. Nancy has been through so much stress with all the surgeries I've had. I feel the love of my life and mother of my children deserves the wedding she was dreaming of. What do you think?

— STEVE W.
IN PHOENIX

DEAR STEVE: Frankly, I think what you're considering is a beautiful gesture, but you have already given your wife the kind of marriage most women dream of — a lifetime with a husband who demonstrates his caring and devotion. If you can afford the kind of renewal of vows you're considering and Nancy can still fit into that dress, then go for it. However, under no circumstances should you spend more than you can afford.

DEAR ABBY: My best friend "Julie's" 13-year-old daughter, "Marci," used to be a little overweight, but she has recently lost most of the extra pounds. Julie keeps telling Marci how great she looks "now." (I never heard her tell her daughter that she looked great when she was heavier.) I compliment Marci by telling her she looks terrific, but that I always thought she was beautiful — no matter what her weight was.

In this day and age of eating disorders in young girls, what is the proper way to offer a compliment when a teenage girl loses weight so that she won't go overboard from suddenly hearing a lot of praise?

— CONCERNED FRIEND
IN DEERFIELD, MASS.

DEAR CONCERNED: Your way. To do otherwise could cause a girl to develop an eating disorder. If she doesn't already have one. You should also compliment her on her other good qualities because it's important that young women feel valued for more than the number on their bathroom scale or their dress size.

DEAR ABBY: I'm a middle-aged woman, dating a man my age. "Jack" and I are in the entertainment industry. (I'm a dance instructor, and he's a musician.)

When I have a cold, Jack refuses to see me until I am completely over it. He says he doesn't want to get sick. It has been a week since I've seen him. How does this strike you in terms of commitment, marriage, living together, being together as a couple?

I understand that Jack doesn't want to catch my cold, but we're a couple! It feels very weird to me, as though I'm not important to him. What's your take on this?

— IN QUARANTINE
IN MORRO BAY

DEAR IN QUARANTINE: If Jack plays a wind instrument, a cold could affect his ability to work. Another possibility might be that colds may hit him harder and last longer than they do you. Your boyfriend could also be germ-phobic or commitment-phobic.

I wish I could give you a conclusive answer, but I'm afraid you'll have to wait until you're no longer contagious, then "catch" it from Jack.

One year ago: Two kidnapped boys, Ben Ownby and Shawn Hornbeck, were found alive in the same suburban St. Louis apartment — four days after Ben vanished and 4½ years after Shawn disappeared. (The boys' abductor, Michael Devlin, is serving multiple life terms for kidnapping and sexual assault.) Durham County, N.C., District Attorney Mike Nifong asked to be removed from the Duke lacrosse rape investigation. (State prosecutors later exonerated three suspects.) Larry Stewart, the anonymous Missouri philanthropist known as Secret Santa, died at age 58.

MILWAUKEE (AP) — A judge is asking a lawyer to tie one on.

"He has told me that if we're before a jury, he would appear with a tie," the judge said. "Well, why? I think we can draw an obvious implication from that."

Zier said he plans to continue with his practice of rotating his neck wear from a long tie to a bow tie to an ascot.

Zier said he'll just have to wait to find out what happens with the threat of a contempt citation. "I guess we'll deal with that if it gets to that point," Zier said.

THE ACES ON BRIDGE®

Bobby Wolff

"The question is,' said Humpty Dumpty, 'which is to be master — that's all.'"

— Lewis Carroll

Today's deal is based on one played in a combined seven-card trump fit, the play often focuses on the defenders' maneuvers, and declarer's counters to retain control. Here, South played in four spades after North's decision not to risk playing no-trump. Hearts were led and continued by the defense, and South had to ruff. He played on trumps next, but when East showed out on the third round, prospects were not good. The only hope now was to trap the opponents into an error.

Without drawing the fourth trump, South played off the ace and king of clubs and led a third club to the jack. West seized on the chance to make his small trump, but South was then able to return to hand to cash his winning clubs, and he lost just a diamond trick at the death.

It is clear that if West refrains from ruffing the club, South is badly placed: He is in dummy and cannot return to hand without using his last trump. South, however, did not play the hand well. If he had foreseen the position, he would have played off the top clubs before drawing the second trump. A third club follows, and if West declines to ruff, South can return to hand with a trump. Declarer can afford to lose a club trick, but not control of the hand.

ANSWER: Your partner's pass suggests a slightly better hand than if he had signed off in three hearts. So you should bid on to game now as you have a little in hand for your invitation to game. You can either bid three no-trump as a possible final contract or rely on your 5-4 fit and bid four hearts.
