FLAG HOPPER LETS TRAILING DEADLINE PASS MINUS DEALS

BIG BOLSTERING EFFORTS ABSENT

Only Few Exchanges Chalked Up Before Left; Yankees Trade Chapman

By LESLIE AVERY
NEW YORK, June 16 (U.P.)—Last-minute strengthening of the league pennant hopes expected before the trading deadline last night failed to materialize, and today's transfers were little changed from those of a week ago.

Only the St. Louis Cardinals, leaders of the National league race took advantage of the "last-trading day" by sending Vernon Verger and Bill Cox to their Sacramento Pacific coast league farm, and bringing infielder Arthur Gariboldi to St. Louis.

Giants Stand Pat
The last-trading New York Giants believed it would be a good ploy and some hitting strength before the deadline, failed to make a move.

They wanted pitcher Van Lente from the Brooklyn Dodgers, but Van's one-man team had been so good that the Giants had no hope of his disposal.

They also nibbled at the prospect of getting pitcher Phil Cullen from the Philadelphia Phillies in exchange for a player.

The Chicago Cubs' acquisition of Curt Davis from the Phillies is turning out all right. He won three games during the Cubs' home stand.

Derringer Stays
Rumors that the Cincinnati Reds were on the verge of trading their big right-hander, Paul Derringer, who manages to keep in hot water with Vice President Larry McPhail.

Cincinnati fans, to the New York Giants in exchange for an outfielder, proved groundless.

The Brooklyn Dodgers, who badly in need of a hitting outfielder, were not interested when the Red management offered Babe Herman in a cash deal.

The American league-leading New York Yankees designated in exchange for the long summer grind by acquiring Jake Powell from the Washington Senators.

For pitcher Ben Chapman, who is batting slump and recurrent chills, the Yankees traded him to the Cincinnati Reds.

Manager Joe McCarthy, who also tried to sign another pitcher to take the place of Chapman, was unsuccessful.

Yankees Buy Pitcher
Tom Yawkey's plan to keep his Boston Red Sox in a position to challenge the Yankees for the championship by acquiring pitcher Jack Russell from the Washington Senators.

Both Yankees and Red Sox angled for Russell, but the Yankees' offer was rejected.

Yankees' offer was rejected. The third-place Detroit Tigers are in a bad way with Player-manager Mickey Cochrane in the hospital and slugger Hank Greenberg out for another month.

With his broken wrist, Viri Burns, whom the Tigers acquired from St. Louis, has filled the shoes of the slugger Greenberg.

Changes Threatened
Cleveland's erratic Indians were promised some "radical changes" by President Alva Bradley if they possibly shake off their slump.

In the present home stand, Hal Trosky, first baseman who led with four home runs in the game for a 14-day recovery from an operation, might be short of an operation.

The Cleveland picture was the return of outfielder Bruce Campbell, who has recovered from an apical meningitis and been pronounced fit to play.

Steve Oyston, however, Campbell's power at the bat, he was hitting .340 when stricken with pneumonia and back into the pennant fight.

ALBEE WINS 2ND SHOT-OUT CLASH
Ex-Hasterton Star Allows Four Hits in Stopping Hawks Of Waterloo

Track Albee, former Hasterton gunning star, won his second shut-out victory and allowed only four hits as the Davenport Blue Sox routed Waterloo, 10 to 0, in a Western league game, according to word received here today.

It was Albee's third victory against one defeat in his previous shut-out he had blanked Cedar Rapids with five hits in a game.

Mental Condition Is Vital, So Mac Will Scan Joe, Schmeling

By HENRY McLEMORE

NEW YORK, June 16 (U.P.)—Ever since I abandoned a promising career in the sportswriting, I have heard of how important it is for athletes to arrive at a big fight in the proper mental condition.

Heretofore, I haven't paid any attention to it, largely because my own association with athletes gave me the feeling that only a few of them had enough gumption to develop a condition. But, with the time for me to name a winner of the fight between Max Schmeling and Joe Louis, almost at hand, I have decided to join my colleagues and consider the mental condition very vital, and use it as the basis for my prediction.

He'll Kick Noggins
So, today, in one whirling trip, I plan to visit the camps of both Schmeling and Louis, and hear what they have to say about the fight.

Naturally, I won't reveal my findings, for only a few of them had enough gumption to develop a condition. ## LOUIS WORRIES AT GOLF SCORE

Anxious Over Harmonics, Too, But Waits No Fears on Max Schmeling

By HENRY McLEMORE
LAKESIDE, N. J., June 16 (U.P.)—Joe Louis, Detroit Brown Bomber, the Tan Tornado, was worried today before the last five rounds of sparring that would complete his training for Thursday night's brawl with Max Schmeling at Yankee Stadium.

Shuffling Joe was worried about hitting his golf score below 100 strokes and his ultimate ability to master the harmonics.

The 22-year-old Negro was worried about his "harmonics." For eight long weeks he has been trying to play the "St. Louis Blues" on the mouth organ with little success.

Even his best friends, Co-Managers John Roxborough and Julian Black, and Trainer Jack Blackburn, were worried about the discordant notes from the great champion.

ADJUSTED COMPENSATION

Dreams of ex-service men all over the United States are being realized this week with distribution of bonus bonds. Only a few days will elapse until the proceeds of the bonds will be returned from the disbursing offices in the several states and then the economic benefits of the bonus payments will become a reality.

It is not too much to say, however, that the benefits started long before the arrival of the bonds, for with the adoption of the bill which authorized the payment there immediately came a feeling of at least temporary security to thousands of families.

Knowledge of approaching payment has stimulated business all over the country. The past few months because countless families could make contracts for purchases, vacation trips could be planned, real estate bought, new homes arranged for, and the value of savings looked forward to.

There was a time when a small portion of the American people labored under the delusion that the veterans would squander the funds; that the ex-soldiers and ex-sailors would not know how properly to spend their long-awaited adjusted compensation for services rendered nearly 20 years ago.

But these self-appointed critics were unimpaired of the fact that the average age of the veterans is 45 years, and that most of them are men with families, and business, farming, professional or craftsman responsibilities, representing no more than a typical cross-section of American life. They are not the "wild" boys who marched down the streets in 1917 and 1918 behind the flags and drums. Many of them are dead, others in hospitals or in a disabled state.

What is important to remember is that practically all veterans several years ago received and spent half their bonus money, and that while the sum now being distributed is large in the aggregate—a half million dollars in this county, for instance—the average is only $350, representing a sum upon which no one can manage to splurge to any undue extent.

Veterans may be depended upon to be circumspect in their spending, and to buy and invest wisely and carefully. Many will find it unnecessary to even cash their bonds. But all this, of course, is left to the discretion of the individual veteran. He has waited a long time to receive the adjustment on his war pay. Now that it is his he is privileged to do with it whatever he pleases in his own sweet way.

And you can be sure he appreciates it and the opportunity, even at this late date, to receive from a grateful government, an allotment of funds which will greatly benefit not only the veteran as a class but the country as a whole in the vast increase of spending power.

PARTIES ABANDON LAISSEZ FAIRE

One thing seems clear, as the preliminary stages of the presidential campaign are gotten out the way:

The old conception of an America in which government kept its hands completely off the machinery, and left men to work out their own salvation, does not seem to commend itself to the men who have to go out and get their votes these days.

It really has been a good many years since we gave any thing more than lip service to this conception. We have had the Interstate Commerce Act for quite a while, for instance; the protective tariff for even longer.

But this year's campaign throws the fact into high relief.

This is not to say that there are not violent differences between the parties, and among different leaders within the parties, as to the extent to which the government should interfere and protect. There are. The campaign probably will be fought on those differences.

But the point is that practically no one in either party is speaking for a return to that old conception of a government which had neither the right nor the power to interfere in the economic lives of its citizens.

Consider, for a case in point, the perennial farm problem.

One party has one solution for it, the other party has another. Both of these solutions may be just a little hard to understand, in view of the average politician's weakness for trying to do indirectly what the courts won't let him do directly; but let that pass.

The point is that both parties agree that this problem is a responsibility of government which government must meet.

This might be a minor point, except for the fact that we tend to pitch our arguments in the old key. We talk of "rugged" individualism, for instance, as if it were possible for us to get back to the early days of the republic, when the government dozed peacefully beside the Potomac.

The great problem of the day is the problem of the extent to which we can preserve our individualism in the face of an unavoidable growth of governmental activity.

Until we recognize the problem for exactly what it is, we won't have much chance of solving it intelligently.

I've never been the name man since my pet Aircade, Count Zoraster II, died.

When Zoraster was alive, I'd come home late at night, slump on the bed, and he'd take off my shoes and rub my feet.

Next he'd pulled off my undershirt. I was a little bit of a nudist.

While I steeply pulled off the rest, he'd fetch my pajamas. Still asleep, I put 'em on and snuggled into bed.

Zoraster pulled up the covers, patted the light button, and that was that.

WE HAVE DECIDED THAT it was just "some fellow" beating up on our wife. That's for sure, we mean, in the Case of The Mysterious Screams, which has kept three of our Pot Shots detective busy about approximately 3:25 a. m. Sunday.

THE SCREAM CAME in the wee small hours Sunday from the general direction of the floors above the Eveline's office. A very good alarm clock was going.

So the boys in Green's alongside the Eveline's said that while it wasn't quite the No. 3 blood-curdler, it would rank very high in amateur circles. But nobody seems to know whence or why.

OUR POT SHOTS sleuths discovered that various and sundry persons in the residential edifices above our office heard the scream. Said solemnly it was probably the best search he had in Twin Falls for half a dozen months. And ascertained just as solemnly that the scream came from the building next door.

Which looked like a Philo Vance clue and the positive it came from next door—and that brought our sleuths right back where they started.

REGIS HERE TODAY

GAIL EVERT, who has won the John S. Lane costume design prize, comes to New York to work. Gail's parents are both dead. She has a sister, who lives three years at Miss Carleton's fashionable apartment for girls, due to Miss Carleton's generosity and friendship for Gail's mother.

Armed with a letter from Miss Carleton, Gail goes to the large silk manufacturing plant where her mother worked. She is told there is no record of her mother's name.

DEIRDRE HARGREAVE, over whom this conversation, later he was told, was the sister of her mother, was a very good friend of her mother's. She didn't see her in John Lane's office when he was there.

Now Gail is with this story. CHAPTER II

A LOOK of surprise widened Gail's amber eyes as she turned to the young man. "Why, yes," she said, "I was in Mr. Lane's office."

His blue eyes were twinkling. "You got the dope all right that time, though these lovely ladies grant watches for the guys higher up. Lane is out of town."

Gail smiled. "You know Mr. Lane?"

"Oh, yes, he's a grand chap, but his partner—well, you'd think Lane's partner in life was to be a comedian. He's a very good one."

JONAH AND WHALE STORY ERROR

Of Translation, Expert Says

By HILLIER KREIGHBAUM

WASHINGTON, June 16 (AP)—

The story of Jonah's three-day stay in the belly of a whale, long a staple of Sunday school lessons, is a mistaken translation centuries ago, according to a translation expert.

Mr. D. E. Regan, state chairman of the Idaho Federation of Women's Clubs, said today that the original text simply meant that Jonah had a "hole" for three days, or, as an ancient American slang would have it, "a hole" for that time.

An expert in the Aramaic language of the time of the Bible, Mr. Regan said, said that the original text simply meant that Jonah had a "hole" for three days, or, as an ancient American slang would have it, "a hole" for that time.

THIS CURIOUS WORLD

By William Ferguson

Although the name of the "Great Dane" indicates that it is of Danish origin, it is known that the dog's development is due to the efforts of German fanciers. In Germany, the name "Deutsche Dogge" was adopted for the breed late in the 19th century, and as such it is known in that country today.
