

ANVIL SOLO

BY ANDY HAMMER

Hello Folks:

Here I am again—back in Twin Falls. Had a very enjoyable stay in Chicago & a very nice trip back home. I picked up with a man on the train. We sat in the observation car, telling jokes and singing songs.

The first thing I observed when I got home was my watch was gone. We sang the latest Eskimo song—"Freeze a jolly good fellow." Then we sang a new Four Wheel Brake song. It goes like this—"Four Wheel Brake the News 2 Mother."

An Englishman also on the train was very amusing. My friend was discussing the Tunney-Dempsey fight & said "Tunney would win. I said, "Don't count your chickens before they're hatched," & the Englishman replied: "Yes, don't rely upon the quantity of juvenile poultry prior 2 the complete progress of incubation."

Well here we are—all set for the Fair again. I never could figure out why people fell for that bunk. I always figured you could see all the cattle & sheep necessary in any barnyard—as to hogs, just inspect any restaurant. Some women rave about the new dress at the fair—One squirt at my socks would reveal needle-work in his last days & the horse racing—a lot of plow horses trying to outwind each other.

Last year in the Farmers race—a farmer had on a load of pop-corn. The starter yelled "go" & they broke 2 railroad ties over the beast & it wouldn't shake a leg. The climax was reached when they started a fire under the horse. The wagon caught on fire & the pop-corn popped & filled the air. The horse thought it was snow & laid down and froze 2 death.

They have fine works at night. But the real fireworks come a week after the fair is over when the bills are presented & they find that the attendance wasn't large or they didn't charge enough. The public never sees or hears about that, only when taxes are due. Well those slickers aren't going 2 have me guessing what can the corn is in, you can sing that in high "C." I'll stay at home & figure out how 2 cross an umbrella with a homing pigeon. That fair may mean all the world 2 some folks, but 2 me it's just a pain in the neck!

PONTIAC TOURIST MEETS WILD MOUNTAIN SHEEP

Wild Creatures Attracted by Beautiful Car, Climb Upon Hood and Rear Deck

Probably no one in California has a pet quite as unique as "Nanny," the prized possession of Mrs. A. R. Swarthout, of the Heart-Bar ranch, far back in the San Bernardino mountains at the headwaters of the Santa Ana river. Nanny is a four months old desert mountain sheep, probably the wildest and most seldom seen of any of the wild creatures of the west, yet in spite of that hereditary background, there never was a puppy or kitten with a more trustful or friendly disposition than Nanny possesses toward the world in general, and toward Mrs. Swarthout in particular.

The Heart-Bar cattle range includes winter pastures on the Mojave desert near Ogden, and in the spring of 1924 the Swarthouts, cowboys were out fixing up the cattle troughs at some of the more distant water holes on the range. One evening they were amazed to see a tiny creature about the size of a cottontail toddling into camp. It proved to be a baby mountain sheep, only a very few days old. They fed him some condensed milk, and it laid down and slept by the fire. In the morning they fed it again and the little creature stayed in camp all day. When it came time to return to the home ranch at Old Springs, there were still no signs of the mother, and they could not think of abandoning the little sheep to the mercy of the coyotes. They took it in to Mrs. Swarthout at Old Woman Springs. They improvised a nursing bottle with the end of a medicine dropper for a nipple, and "Nanny" thrived from the very start.

When the Heart-Bar outfit moved the cattle into the Big Meadows Bernardino mountains, "Nanny" went along, and it was there that a party of Pontiac tourists found her last week. She came out to greet the motor party, for eyes all many small mountain sheep, and the sight of a huzzard or camel will send her scurrying for shelter. "An airplane flew over one day, and nearly drove "Nanny" frantic from fear, but aside from these inherited fears, "Nanny" leads a care-free life.

All the moving parts of this being unit are hermetically sealed in fine housing. This refrigerator is so simple that it is very easy to operate and unusually quiet.

There is no need to wait for your electric refrigerator when you can have one installed in your home for as little as $20 down on your monthly payments. The delivery can be made over a period of months in small payments that you will scarcely miss. This is the only plan that offers the advantages of electrical refrigeration.

What the West Said to Me

A Series of Historical Happenings in the Snake River Valley
By C. S. WALGAMOTT

AS THE only boy in a family of six, three older and three younger than myself, living in a small town in southeastern Iowa where my parents settled in 1869, a germ of frontier longing was injected into my young blood.

As I listened to stories told around our fireside by my father and mother relating the happenings of the early days in Iowa and my father's boyhood experiences as a leader of a string band (now called an orchestra) playing on the lower Mississippi river steam boats, and later when my older sister with her husband started to California in the employ of the Ben Halloway Stage company, and of my sister's frequent visits back home, mingling with her that atmosphere of the West, this germ of frontier longing developed into a pronounced case of Western fever that proved as contagious as it was pronounced and was contracted also by a boy friend.

The two of us made hasty preparations to depart over the Chicago and North Western railroad, that had recently been railroads as far west as Council Bluffs, where it bridged the Missouri river and landed us in the frontier town of Omaha, Nebraska, to mingle with a crowd of emigrants seeking passage westward over the newly constructed Union Pacific railroad. I was surprised to find in this crowd of 12 or 15 cars of emigrants bound westward, that only two women were among them. Both were anxious to meet their husbands in California, which was also the destination of a majority of the others, while my friend, John Graber, and myself were the only two passengers enroute for the Idaho territory.

On the platform of the Union Pacific depot an old man with a long grey beard and gentlemanly appearance was employed by the railroad company as train director and entertainer. I remember his name was Captain White. I had considerable conversation with him. He told me a great deal about Idaho, including the railroad, that had recently been built, about the bad Indians and the still worse white men. After we were placed in our cars and almost in readiness to start, the Captain passed through the train accompanying his voice with a guitar, singing all about the West. As he approached the seat that my friend John Graber and I occupied, he improvised the words of his song to describe Idaho. I remember the chorus ran like this:

Hurray! Hurray for the U. P. Road and a ride over the rolling plains; We are going out to Idaho and intend there to remain.

and one of the verses in the doggerel was to this effect:

And if the Indians capture you, you will be lucky to save your head. They have a habit of taking your scalp unless your hair is red.

As Captain White gracefully dropped out of sight, the train slowly crept out of the siding onto the main line heading into the mysterious west, with all on board in happy expectation except my friend Johnnie, who was truly a homesick boy. He had not all the West he wanted. Captain White's song description of Idaho had a bad effect on him.

As our train for hours each day plowed slowly over the Western plains, we were aware that on account of the newness and unbalanced condition of the road, it would take several days to reach the mountains. We were thankful when we remembered that only a short time before, the only available transportation was by ox or mule team, consuming an entire season to make the trip. After a stupor of a month to travel from the Missouri river to the coast, and our travel, though slow, was unraveling new scenes and writing new lessons on the black boards of our experiences.

From the car window we peered into the distance to get a glimpse of a remnant of the once great herds of buffalo that only a few months before had furnished meat for the construction crews of the Union Pacific railroad through western Nebraska, and we watched a capering antelope with his white and toward us, seeking shelter in the distance, or viewed with some suspicion groups of Sioux and other Indians from distant elevations watching our train pass as they sat straight as arrows on their ponies.

As we were pushed onto a siding at Laramie, Wyoming, to wait for a train, we could see from the car window an animal we took to be a wolf chained to a post. I persuaded my friend Johnny that we go and see it. We were told it was a coyote which nervously tugged at its chain that fastened it to a post in front of a shed. We could see through the open door the walls decorated with animal hides. Cautiously we stepped inside the door. Three or four men who occupied the room paid very little attention, only that I could see that the long-tailed linen dusters which we wore seemed to be a curiosity to them, and one of the men, wearing a six shooter that hung swaggeringly over his hip, approached us and inquired if we were preachers. We told him we were not. He seemed to doubt us and remarked that only preachers and sports wore those kind of coats in that country.

At this point two men alighted from a wagon in front and rather boisterously entered the saloon. One of them, seemingly a lively fellow, whom the bartender addressed as Tom, tossed a dollar on the bar ordering drinks for himself and partner. As they were about to drink, the man that interrupted us approached them and said, "Tom, it has been some time since you have danced for us," and Tom retorted, "Yes, and as he made a pass to draw his gun it will be a different sight longer." But the intruder had beat him to it and exclaimed, "Lay off that gun, and dance!" and as the bullet from the intruder's gun entered the floor near Tom's feet the dancing began. With excitement I said to my friend Johnny "Let us go before they make us preach," and from the fact that I was seized as badly as Johnny, I was able to keep up with him as we raced for our train.

Later that evening I looked over Johnny's shoulder to see him writing a letter to his mother explaining that he was sure the West was not going to agree with his health!

From this on we stayed close to our train until we entered the Mormon territory of Utah, where from every sage-bush scampered a jackrabbit, juggling his hind feet as if in preparation for a real race.

We were reminded of Captain White's song advising a side trip from the Mormon village of Ogden to Salt Lake City, the home of Brigham Young and his 19 wives or more, but we traveled now over the Central Pacific railroad, passing Promontory on the shore of the Great Salt Lake. Promontory was made famous in 1869 when the Golden Spike was driven there connecting the Union and Central Pacific railways.

loaded for the interior or preparing to load. Every other door was a saloon with gambling wide open.

A daily stage left Kelton for The Dalles, Oregon, passing through Idaho, which would furnish us our next experience, as we balanced ourselves to conform to the rough swing of the Thurnabre coach, on our two day stage trip, our minds drifted back to the homes and associates we had left. My mind was buoyant in expectation of new experiences, but poor Johnny had seen enough. I felt sorry for him and somewhat guilty for his state of mind and tried to encourage him. It was on the eighth of August, 1876, that we arrived at our destination more than 100 miles from a railroad at a junction of the Oregon Trail and stage road adjacent to the Snake River Mines, the only settlement in Southeastern Snake River valley. Here Johnny procured employment with the stage company and I in a trader's store.

Sixty days later, just when the mountains were putting on their fall coat of variegated colors with their high peaks capped in white, I bid Johnny goodbye as he happily climbed on the stage to return to his Iowa home. It made me homesick, too, had left a good home and associates, and as I turned my head to hide a tear, I mused "O why should I stay?"

Then I thought: "I love the mountains, the mountain streams, the Western atmosphere and the hospitable people, with their Western ways; the smoky odor of Indian tan buckskin, so prevalent around camp fires, mingled with the sage sweetened atmosphere; the ever-present element of risk even to the preservation of life, and the frequent solitude has its fascination."

As I looked the stage had disappeared in the East and Johnny was lost to me forever.

A LABOR DAY SERMON
The church and labor hold many common ideals. The gospel of Jesus the carpenter, which is the foundation of the Christian church, rests upon the love of God, who is the Father, and the service of all men, who are brothers.

On this occasion, devoted to the cause of labor, it is appropriate for every church to reaffirm its support and allegiance to the common moral issues to which both labor and religion are committed.

It is fitting, too, that every church should continually affirm its belief in the application of the principles of Jesus in every industrial relation. The spirit of goodwill, expressed in advancing forms of industrial cooperation can reconcile the differences between management and men, and eliminate the human element from these differences.

Unceasing concern for the lot of the workers, their wives and children, is the loving expression by the church of that love which led Christ to turn to the millstones and to become the passionate advocate of their welfare.

Representatives of the Idaho City, out on a fishing jaunt, found the little town of Irwin up in the Caribou mountain district about 15 miles from the Grand Canyon at the Idaho-Wyoming line. The country around Irwin is largely dry farming, but the soil is excellent, and thousands of acres of wheat are grown here, watered by combination canner and thereafter outfit.
