Dr. Frank Crane Says

A NEW START
 We often wish that we could live our lives over.
 We see where we have made mistakes, and see in the clutches of what we have done, and we would like to start again with the new knowledge we possess.
 Some resolutions that have been formed are useless because they have not enough steam behind them to carry them out. The one motivating power that we can have at hand and which we can call on in any emergency is love.

Love something.
 Find someone or something that you love. Make your resolution for the sake of the love and backed by it.
 The resolution that is purely intellectual or purely from the will is not of as much value as one which is backed by the power of a sincere love.
 It may be the love of a mother that you have neglected so far but for whom you really feel strong affection. It may be the love of a wife, or children, or a friend. Whatever it is, it is a life buoy for you. Hold it in the hold of it and it will keep you up.
 As we try to run a locomotive without steam or an automobile without gas, so we cannot run our life without love.

It is the motive power that underpins all our life.
 All of us love something.
 Search your heart for some subject upon which you can center all your affection and by that love you will be saved.
 Love is the keeping of all the Commandments and love is the true avenger of sin.
 We remember an instance in the Scriptures of a woman who was a great sinner, but who was saved because she loved much.
 Love is the only thing that counterbalances our wrongdoings.
 All our sins are reached by anything else than love are foolishness. Love sees and understands. Hate is blind.

 The hope... many potato growers were realized this past week when the price of potatoes went to $1.00 bush, and even slightly higher in some districts according to the quotations in the weekly market review issued by Wendell Coulton, representative of the federal department of agriculture at Idaho Falls. A considerable volume of potatoes have been sold at the present price, states the review, and some the weekly market review has been broken, with 182 cars out last Saturday.
 Prices advanced steadily all day, at the rate of about a nickel a day on loaded cars, but demand increased as rapidly as the higher prices brought out increased supplies, and buying was very active at the close of the week. The market has been rather unsettled following the sharp increase in trading, which was rather unexpected this early in the season, but there are many who expect a decline in the price advance being maintained. The increased activity has not been confined to Idaho alone, and prices have advanced in other parts of the country and in the receiving states. Who's in the story? The millionaire, the strayed hen, the car breaks down on a California mountain side.

Grimestead, his daughter, is with him. She is "spiced" but not overly pleased because he's brought with them the "Ezra Gardner, Grimestead," second in command, a young man of ability, whom Burton suspects her father is throwing in her way.

Simmons, the Grimestead's English butler-chauffeur, whose gay spirits are repressed by his dignity.

Lawrence Davenport, a young fellow in a hullo-ho-ho-ho-ho car with a battery that is almost to be a marvelous invention, producing his own mysterious energy by which the car, the electricity by which the car runs, his whipping a $10,000 net from Gardner by carefully peddling rain water and the revelation (to her alone) that he is "the" Lawrence Davenport, famous writer, makes him very interesting to Miss Burton. Grimestead, impressed by the commercial possibilities of the battery, Grimestead has given Davenport a contract for its exploitation, which Davenport formally agrees to sign after it is stipulated that it will not be put on the market, greatly to disturb capital and labor. Davenport tells Burton that every one possesses a "battery" or he possessed and she tries to learn the secret.

was perfectly clear, and strode along in the direction of the creek crossing.

CHAPTER XXVIII
"The Papers"

Burton overtook Larry at the stream's edge. She saw at once that he was furiously angry, so angry that he could not permit himself to utter a word. She took his hand.

He relished her hug, and they clung together for several moments while the calming, soothing influence swept through them. At length he released her with an explosive sigh that he had not kissed. "Well, that is over," he said. "You, too, on Monday, if it had not been for you I should have killed them both as they sat there. But I just kept thinking that he was your father."

"I know," she soothed him. "I feel with you in every bit of it, whether he is my father or not. But let's not talk about it or we shall just be crazy angry again, and that will do us no good."

"He looks so like the shoulders."

"Where do you get your wisdom, Burton?" he asked her, and smiled.

"At the stall, she clapped her hands."

"That's better," she cried. "He looks so like the shoulders. Where do you get your wisdom, Burton?" he asked her, and smiled.

"There's one thing I'm not sure of."

Do you imagine that will impress Larry?"

"Then," she hesitated—"then we give him the plausible reason for changing your mind."

"Which is?"

"The announcement of our engagement," she said in a voice so low that he barely heard it.

At this most unpropitious moment there came around the bend Simmons, muttering two infinitesimal words.

"Hanna!" laughed Davenport fervently.

But at Burton's suggestion Simmons was let into their secrets. The paper belongs to me, and it is vitally necessary for it back. Larry concluded. "Will you help?" "It will affect all our future happiness," put in Burton. "It is only fair to say that if you are caught, it is probable I could help very little, if you save your wife and child." Davenport glanced triumphantly toward Burton. "I will take care of you."

"It's a sporting chance, you said," said Burton. "You have treated me like a confidant and even promised the papers shall be in my power."

"Now, Simmons, listen," Larry intervened. "There are two papers. One is on a single sheet of paper; the other is on several. I want the one on the single sheet. The other doesn't matter."

Grimestead's face flushed darkly.

"Well," he challenged.

"I cannot be party to the program I heard outlined."

Grimestead considered a moment. "Sit down," he invited. "Have a cigar. There's plenty of time to talk mine out, and you've no excuse to go off half-cocked."

Davenport declined the cigar, sat out on the log.

"Now what's the trouble?" demanded Grimestead.

"The trouble is that your program is destructive, it endangers export surpluses, and aims merely at personal power without a thought for the welfare of other people. It is a program that will prove a curse rather than a benefit to our country. I am an intelligent enough to understand that point without going into it further."

"I understand your point all right. And I understand your point too well to argue with you. Arguments are the long suit of your kind. I'm just telling you, you've too bad you don't like my program, but I play the cards I hold and that's final."

"In those circumstances I shall refuse to enter into this deal."

"In those circumstances it doesn't matter a damn whether you agree or not. You've already entered into it."

"I shall refuse to sign the contract."

"You've already agreed to sign it," Grimestead pointed out. "And if you're signing, it's a matter of decree will it not in effect anyhow?"

He eyed Davenport steadily.

"You are thinking that you can refuse to divulge the secret," he continued. "But no! You'll either have to produce it or your father for life. Your battery would be buried along with me. Nobody but me would be allowed by the courts to touch it. It is as well as you would be lost to the world."

Grimestead paused a moment to allow this to sink in. Then he went on in a more reassuring tone.

"You're not a business man, Mr. Davenport, and you don't realize that your business is a matter of fact from start to finish. It will be to the interest of every one affected to suppress that battery. In fact, it will be a matter of life and death to them. And believe me, they'll fight to do so. I don't believe you quite appreciate the magnitude to have nearly the whole business world solidly against you, nor do you appreciate the power they'll back harder than they fight, and to get the jump on them first."

He went on developing his point, showing that only by this early and unimpeded roll-out the concern's camp could win all access of the project be necessary. Then he went on to point the moral by drawing a picture of a picture—Davenport in jail for contempt of court for refusing to tell manufacturing his process, inefficient, broke, and above all, inefficient; Davenport possessed of practically untold wealth, with the opportunity, if he so wished, of spending it as he pleased. Davenport, however, did not seem impressed. He arose from his log, remarked curtly that the situation

Local Veterinary Hospital is Only One of Its Kind in State

Dr. H. R. Groome and J. E. McCoy Establish Modern Institution Here For Treatment of All Kinds of Animals.

The Twin Falls Veterinary Hospital, operated by Dr. H. R. Groome and owned by him and Dr. J. E. McCoy is one of the best institutions opened in Twin Falls this year and the only one of its kind in the state.

Following 11 years' practice in this locality, Dr. Groome has moved his veterinary establishment from 432 Second street west and is now located in his new business home at 260 Second avenue south. The new building was erected by Harry Thompson, contractor, and represents an investment of $6,000, states Dr. Groome. His partner, Dr. McCoy, is now an instructor in the veterinary department of the state agricultural college at Pullman, and following his term of service there will return to Twin Falls, Dr. McCoy formerly practicing in Twin Falls.

The building, which was opened only a short time ago, is of steel construction and has concrete floors. It is fully equipped with all modern apparatus and is located on corner lots as to provide ample space for landscape gardening and a place with out stock stables in the rear.

In addition to caring for farm stock, the new veterinary hospital is especially equipped for the treatment of pet stock, including dogs and cats.

The building houses an office, a reception room, an instrument and drug room, three animal operating rooms, a small animal hospital, a room with operating table and X-ray machine, kitchen with hot and cold water and cooking equipment and two kennel yards with a capacity of 10 animals. Dr. Groome has already received hospital orders. The hospital prepares pet animals foods and deals in this commodity also.

Tricks and Snakes
Critic, some unusual experience in the treatment of small animals is mentioned that he numbers "snake monkey" and "his patients." Last summer a monkey with a traveling show was brought to his establishment for dental treatment, and he was very busy to remove two tasks from an unruly ape that was considered "kinky." He was brought to the Twin Falls and similar treatment.

He mentioned that the principal treatment of dogs was for fractures, sprains and dislocations. "The automobile age has brought with it numberless fractures among dogs," said the doctor. "Frequent-day veterinarians are being called upon constantly to treat leg fractures, and we are equipped to do this successfully. It is now seldom necessary to amputate a leg because of a fracture. The reason for this is that the veterinarian can now detect a fracture of the leg as it applied to humans, and the animals respond very rapidly."

Car Manages Dogs
"However," states Dr. Groome, "the automobile and dispenser is what keeps down the dog population." Dr. Groome is deputy state veterinarian. He has had 21 years of practice, coming to Twin Falls 11 years ago from Lowell City, Ky. He is a graduate of the Kansas Agricultural college at Manhattan.

The proprietor of the veterinary hospital welcomes visitors at the new home a block east of the former structure which has been taken possession of by the city.

Additional evidence that Snake river water users will have little to worry about during the 1928 irrigation season is seen in a weekly report received here from Joseph Anthony, superintendent of Jackson Lake reservoir. The reservoir, which has a capacity of 87,000 acre feet, now contains 56,214 acre feet.

During the past week, the reservoir shows an inflow into the reservoir was 8500 acre feet, showing a slight increase over the amount of storage gained during the previous week. The inflow during the entire winter, it is reported, has been about 100,000 acre feet. The superintendent has kept the water at a low level in order to guard against any damage to the dam or equipment such as might occur from the ice if the spring breakup came with water lapping at the top of the dam.

However, despite the fact that the gates have been partially open all winter, there is no question but what the spring break-up and water pouring over the Jackson Lake dam will be believed here. The next precipitation at Moran, Mr. Anthony's headquarters, since November 1 in 14.28 inches, the report shows. This means snow depth over the watershed of 40 inches, with a mean water content of 20 inches. The maximum snow depth on the watershed, Mr.

A Young Lady Car. Suit Herself With. This Dress

It is noted this young lady is the owner of a trim tailored suit while the elegant floor of the back absolutely fails to tally with this description. The floor is expected to be of fine quality with a lot of lace and would certainly lose some of its attractiveness when worn and discarded. The smart necked coat forms a diagonal closing like that of the jacket, a double breasted effect marked by four buttons in front. The jacket is of self silk or the skirt an added attraction. This smart suit dress made in light weight crepe or wool material is highly suitable for street or office wear. (Copyright, 1928, by Hester)

Our Dairy Department MILK STOOL GOSSIP

KEEP BACTERIA-COUNT LOW
On every farm it pays to keep the milk clean and pure as far as possible. The milk is to be produced in the cleanest conditions possible and the production of bacteria is to be kept to a minimum. It is especially necessary to make it absolutely fit for the feeding of infants. Every milk producer should know the conditions under which his milk should be free from dangerous disease and is especially anxious to keep the milk of each cow perfectly sound. Sound milk, naturally, comes from an animal that is especially free from all disease and especially from any disease that would affect the milk. It is now common and prudent that around milk may be discarded if it is found to contain any bacteria. It is especially important that the milk be kept in a clean and sanitary condition. It is especially important that the milk be kept in a clean and sanitary condition.

A sure way of detecting germs that in the milk is to have a small amount of the milk in a test tube and see if it will curdle. If it does, it is a sign that the milk is not pure. It is especially important that the milk be kept in a clean and sanitary condition. It is especially important that the milk be kept in a clean and sanitary condition.

SKILL MAKES FARM PAY SAYS SECRETARY JARDINE

Agriculture has graduated from the "luck" period, according to W. M. Jardine, Secretary of Agriculture of Washington, and he said that the farmer who is not a "lucky" man, but a "skillful" man, will be able to get out of the "luck" period.

A WASHINGTON HEN
Little Charles had been ordered to collect the eggs each day, and he said that more were left in the nest than he could carry. His father for some fluffly chicks, however, proved too great for him, and several weeks later his father was greeted by a proud old hen and her six children.

Dumense Idea
The Dumense idea is that people born on the same day of the week should marry, or at least to prevent these unfortunate marriages, every girl and boy should be born on the same day of the week, having a better understanding of the world and its people than those who were born on other days.

Fastest Creature

City Tower Greenhouse TWIN FALLS

Why is this greenhouse of mine? I was called suddenly to Minneapolis late in August on account of my parents there, and after an enforced absence of two months, on my return, my plants in greenhouse were in such bad shape that it was useless to run the place at that winter, but this cannot happen again. Also, the enclosed trips to Minnesota the past two years were very costly, mostly in profits and upkeep.
