RED HAIR AND BLUE SEA

WHAT HAPPENED BEFORE
Palmyra Tree, aboard the yacht, Rainbow, discovers a stowaway. She is disappointed by his mild appearance and tells him so. Obeying his command to glance at the door, she sees a huge, fierce, copper-headed man with a tanish knife between his lips. The stowaway, Burke, and the brown man, Olive, go up on deck and tell stories of adventure which are not believed.

Palmyra decides she loves Van. The night the engagement is announced the Rainbow hits a reef. John Thurston rescues both Van and Palmyra—but Palmyra thinks Van saved her.

A sail is sighted after three days on an island. It is Ponape. Burke, the stowaway? Burke asserts Palmyra: Burke has to put her ashore on an island, as a Japanese man-of-war is sighted and it would be dangerous to have her aboard. Olive swims to the island and joins Palmyra. She is in fear of the brown man.

Olive and Palmyra swim to another island, from which Palmyra secretly sends a note for aid. Burke's ship approaches the island. Then he extended his arm; the boat was located there ahead and somewhere, unseen, to starboard, and she flattened out his palm horizontally, hid his cheek upon it, and began to snore.

Son would this nightmare of wind and sea be ended. Son would she be liberated from the track of torture. She could throw herself down in never-waking slumber.

Her hand stole toward the opening of her dress and her fingers came flying up. Then the man followed. He placed the shell in the canoe, lifted himself aboard, searcely lifted the frail craft from an open keel.

The girl, still dizzy with shock and stared at the cocoanut bottle that had brought tragedy to her. Olive, amused, presently picked it up and offered it. When she did not respond, he raised the shell above his mouth, tilted it until the contents spurted out—and drank.

Palmyra laughed hysterically. He had filled the thing at the bottom of the ocean a hundred feet from land. Yet now he drank.

She took the sphere when he offered it again and tasted experimentally; sweet, fresh water, clear, cold as from a spring.

The girl drank deeply. Then holding the shell upon her knees, she sat for a long time, looking covertly at the "brown" being.

He had all but given life itself, that she might have the water she craved.

An he would have given life, if she had taken his knife and not granted her own.

It would be—dead!

The brown man pointed to the sand in the canoe. "Island, then he extended his arm; the boat was located there ahead and somewhere, unseen, to starboard, and she flattened out his palm horizontally, hid his cheek upon it, and began to snore.

Son would this nightmare of wind and sea be ended. Son would she be liberated from the track of torture. She could throw herself down in never-waking slumber.

With a stroke the raven reached out and caught her by the hair low the surface. The heavy fish had no chance to stop. As it swept over his head the savage thrust upward with the knife in a huge that reached the heart.

Olive did not waste time over the misfortune of the shark. He had killed Burke before.

Throwing the canoe into its course, he sailed on for the island. For an interval they went on, before it became evident that Ponape Burke had made them out.

Presently the schooner was close Palmyra could make out Ponape Burke on its deck, covering them with his glasses.

The reef wall was now so imminent that she could see the break of the horizon. Her hand broken off and packed down by the triangle of the surf, she fled higher than the rest of the boat behind, the surface or reef-table, which outstraggled inland to the break. The harbor was armored in heavy banks of living coral, with their toothed faces like a giant nature's grates against which the sea could grind the canoe into splinters.

And now, as the girl looked, Olive dug, his paddle in, put all his weight upon it. The craft veered and took a new course—straight for the reef. Palmyra sat stunned, did not lift up with the dislodging surf drive of the wind and pressure. But here was surrender.

Even for such a one there could be no further shift.

Scarcely had the canoe changed course than the Pigeon of South Sea swung in toward the reef. Palmyra could see Ponape Burke leaving his canoe "floating" under the canoe's shadowing shadow at the cabin's ahead, then back to the white men. The race was on.

And even now, in confusion, Olive sprang up, but so fast he had reached the reef, he had the cork that held the most wretched of the whole gear overboard.

But immediately, to her bewilderment, he seized the paddle again, placed it into the water, began to speed toward the barrier.

The roar of the surf, a most frightful sound, deafened her, but as she clung desperately to higher than the rest of the boat behind, the surface or reef-table, which outstraggled inland to the break. The harbor was armored in heavy banks of living coral, with their toothed faces like a giant nature's grates against which the sea could grind the canoe into splinters.

And now, as the girl looked, Olive dug, his paddle in, put all his weight upon it. The craft veered and took a new course—straight for the reef. Palmyra sat stunned, did not lift up with the dislodging surf drive of the wind and pressure. But here was surrender.

from the sweep of the trades, not the much broken coral had been time to cap a second bluff packed down here and the rim was lower. In a flash she perceived that he must have had the place in mind from the fact that the tide in their favor, it might be possible in sufficiently skilled hands to land on the reef.

There was just one phase in the rhythm of the surf when he could succeed. He must catch the moment when the water had crashed down upon the coral trest; when the violence of the surfer had subsided but not subsided on the precipitous after-jump, had been him far enough, he would be rescued by the reef to follow, when the water flung upon the reef poured back into the ocean.

Olive pulled furiously on the rope far enough so that the back-sweep could not grip the reef, then then down to destruction. Nearly he had succeeded. The reef was having rained the coral ahead of having struck a back-sweep of the line-time, broke from the cause.

Instantly the man began to pound the reef with his fingers. He was upon a coral knoller that started them above the sliding water. The canoe struck back, over the back, but Olive held.

The moment for downward ended, he reared with his fingers, flailing above the rough coral. He had reached another knoller, but he had reached another knoller.

Another slash across the chain, and the canoe was safe from the ocean. But not as yet from Ponape Burke.

The brown man carried palm-leaf for force, his blood-knives being used toward the canoe. Now, the end of that the Pigeon was looking back out of darkness. She saw that the white man had clambered far away up the reef. She felt that, now, she was safe. She felt that, now, she was safe.

Now, as her manager began to calculate the sea, he held the reef. And then she gave a cry. There was no light recession there, three fished out a part of flame. Instantly, Olive, understanding, swung in at this point just after three himself flung into the three. The surf flung water. A half a canoe-waiting, did not lift up with the dislodging surf drive of the wind and pressure. But here was surrender.

Olive, leaning up, swung with her.

A DEED WORTH RECORDING

The visit of Madame Ernestine Schumann-Heink, famous singer, to Idaho Friday, recalls the statement she made in Minneapolis in announcing that she had given her estate at Grossmont, 14 miles from San Diego, to her boys—disabled war veterans of the world war.

The patriotic devotion of this foreign-born American is worthy of reflection. The estate she bequeaths is valued at $230,000 and it has been decided to Mayor George E. Lench of Minneapolis to be administered as a haven to the sick and disabled veterans and their families.

She gave the home, she said, to show her love for the "boys," who played "taps" for her two sons who died in the World War, one fighting for Germany and the other for America.

"You have honored me by calling me 'mother,'" she said. "I am honored—my husband and my boy who died on a submarine. He may have killed some American boys with his submarine, but he could not help that. It was war, you know. But you honored him. This is why I give you Grossmont. I love you; that is why I do this. I will love you until the Great Commander calls me."

HORRORS! HE ADVERTISED!

A Seattle physician advertised his practice in the newspapers, an offense that threw many of the doctors into a tudegion. "This must not be," they said. "This unethical and irritating brother must be deprived of his license." So the protest was carried to a special medical board. There was no charge, it seems, of incompetency, dishonesty, trickery, or immorality or any of the other offenses that usually attach to a physician who had citizenship. The offending physician was doing with his business what every respectable useful citizen are doing with their business—advertising it.

The medical board before which the case was carried decided, sensibly, that the objection was not sufficient to bar the defendant from the practice of medicine. The board refused to brand this physician as a public manufacturer.—Spokesman Review.

THE NEW FARM CENSUS.

A brief interpretation of the full returns of the 1925 federal agricultural census has been made by Leon E. Treadwell, of the bureau of census. His statement, published in Rural America for February, reveals the significant trends between the 1920 and 1925 censuses.

The farm population decreased about 0.5 per cent, the net loss being about 2,000,000 persons. (This trend has continued since 1925, though the estimate of the bureau of agricultural economics of the federal department of agriculture indicates that in 1927 there was a less of a movement away from the farms than for several years previously.) The average size of the rural family has been decreasing for several decades. The total number of farms and the acreage cultivated declined only slightly during the period 1920-25. The figures seem to indicate that agriculture is releasing workers more rapidly than farms are being abandoned. (The great exodus from farm to town and city has undoubtedly been a material factor in the present unemployment situation.)

There was a steady decrease in the number of work animals on farms, while the number of tractors increased 100 per cent. The proportion of farms operated by tenants increased only slightly. In the "Northern and Western States" 26.6 per cent of the "cash tenants" and 29.1 per cent of all other tenants were renting from relatives in 1925. This was the first census in which data were gathered on this point. Tabulations of the data were not made of the South, where admittedly the proportion of tenants renting from relatives is much lower. In a number of Wisconsin counties between 40 and 50 per cent of tenants are related to their landlords. This is the high proportion discovered anywhere. The existence of blood relationships between tenants and landlords is important, and is closely related to land inheritance and the transfer of property from generation to generation.

The total value of all farm property decreased from $77,923,061,590 in 1920 to $57,017,749,010 in 1925, or 26.8 per cent. This decline was apparently altogether in the value of land, and took place because of the poor returns from farming operations during the period. The proportion of farms operated by owners, who carried a mortgage indebtedness was slightly less in 1925 than in 1920. The "ratio of debt to value" rose sharply from 25.5 per cent in 1920 to 41.9 per cent.

Honey, and not Risk, will fight Tunney. Evidently Johnny is too much of a Risk—Oh!

A soap company recently advertised that washing dishes makes hands beautiful, and you should have seen the number of husbands who cut the ad out of the paper to take home and show "the little woman."

Complete Speech of James

(Continued from Page One) ...ion at home and abroad. At other times our party has been accused of favoring free trade, to which charge no definite or satisfactory answers has been made and today many of the people who do not know where the Democratic party of Idaho stands on this question say to the people that the Democratic party of Idaho does not favor or endorse free trade. Let us unequivocally repudiate the doctrine of free trade. Let us go further. Let us stand for the fullest protection of all industries, our mining industry, our lumber industry, our cattle industry, our sheep industry, our sugar industry and the great and our agricultural industry. On the other hand, let us continue our fight on the Fordney-McCumber Tariff Act. This tariff costs the consumers of this state in round numbers the sum of $1,500,000, while the beneficiaries are but $100,000 in round numbers, representing a net annual loss of approximately $14,000,000 to the state. Let us stand for the repeal of the present tariff legislation on what our people call the tariff on the people of this state shall not exceed its benefits to them. This burden has been particularly oppressive in the agricultural region, because of the fact that a tariff on many, if not most of the agricultural products, is of very little or no benefit to the producers. It is this burden which is largely responsible for the tragic condition of the farmers since 1920. Our Republican friends tell us, however, that the condition of the farmers is due to a deficit on the farm. The Fordney-McCumber Tariff Act was so tremendous in its increase of the cost of living with little or no corresponding increase in the selling price of its products as a whole. This resulted in making farmers unprofitable, and "inasmuch as the value of land is determined by the amount of profit to be made in operating it, the natural result was a wide-spread and apparently never-ending deflation in the price of farm lands and farm products, bringing in its wake bankruptcy and financial chaos in agricultural regions. We would, moreover, remind our Republican friends that the industry has not been a deflated or deflated at all during the period in question. If it had, it would have been a deflated as a consequence of the ending of the great World War and the return to normal conditions, why has not industry been deflated? Why has deflation been confined to the agricultural region? The answer is the period of agricultural deflation and stagnation, industry was a booming and industrial stocks and bonds rose to a point never before reached by them. No, the farmers condition since 1920 is not due to any natural or inevitable condition or to a return to the conditions of peace. On the contrary, it is due to bad economic policy as it is effectuated, practiced, by the Republican administration during the period in question. The effect of the tariff is due in a very large measure to the inequalities of the Fordney-McCumber Tariff Act in its effect on the various industries. The Senate of the United States in January, of this year, recognized the inequality of the present tariff act and its injustice to agriculture when by the decisive vote of 70 to 27 it adopted the following resolution: "Resolved that the majority of the rates in existing tariff schedules are excessive and that the Senate favors an immediate revision downward of excessive rates, establishing a closer parity between agriculture and industry, believing it will result to the benefit of the people of the United States." Our Republican friends would have you believe that a Republican in force means prosperity to the nation, but this statement is far from being true. It is a statement that every party and every period of financial depression has come upon the United States since the Civil War has occurred under a Republican tariff, and with but one exception, during the Republican administration. The first was the never-to-be-forgotten page of 1872 when we experienced that has since been called the "tariff famine." It occurred during a Republican administration and under a Republican tariff known as the Morrill Tariff. The next was the depression and hard times in 1892 and 1893. Although it occurred during the administration of Grover Cleveland, a Democrat, it occurred under the McKinley Tariff Act, a Republican tariff, the seeds of which were planted and sown during the preceding Republican administration and had about 1900 and 1901 as its President. The next was the depression of 1907 which occurred under the Dingley Tariff, a Republican tariff and a Republican administration. The last is the protracted period of financial depression and bankruptcy that occurred extending from 1921 even to the present time. This occurred under the Fordney-McCumber Tariff the highest tariff the country has ever known, and occurred during a Republican administration. Let me say that a financial depression seems to be a natural result of agricultural depression on creeping upon the industry of the nation, and a deplorable condition of agriculture. Therefore, I say, let the Democratic party of the State of Idaho resist its attack, not against any or all tariffs, but rather against the inequalities in the justice to agriculture, of many of the schedules of the Fordney-McCumber Tariff Act. Let us stand for a tariff which will protect the industries of our state, but let us also stand for a reduction of the excessive rates which are imposed by the great monopolies, tariffs which have proven so burdensome to the consumer, and so destructive to agriculture. Let us stand for a square deal for agriculture in this matter.

Protection is an economic and moral issue and this is the issue that the parties in about the same way. Certainly, the Republican Party will be a disaster at the head of the Treasury Department, to which department this party has been delegated the enforcement of the Volstead act and the 18th Amendment, with its well known failure to enforce these acts, is not in position to say that any other party will not enforce these acts. If the spokesmen and the defenders of that party mean that any other party will not enforce these acts as or in the manner that the Republican Party has been a complete and notorious failure. If the Democratic Party were in power and had enforced these acts as and in the manner that the Republican party has done, then the Democratic Party would merit the deep and abiding condemnation of the American people. Indeed, the administration of these acts by the Republican Party has been a national disgrace. Indeed, the party has been proceeding contempt for all laws, fostering corruption in public office, and resulting in a general collapse of public morals.

The Republican Party blows both hot and cold. It has said that it should be made to know that by its deeds and by the record of its administration it will enforce the Volstead act and the 18th Amendment. The prohibition question is not a political question and should not be a political issue. Certainly, it can not be made such by the party now in power, which has not notoriously failed to make prohibition effective, and which has for so long a time itself dodged this issue.
