

Idaho Is Good Enough for Me

blankets, and that he had been looking for a place to get the presents down to them. After another lengthy pow-wow, they allowed him to go and it is needless to say that, by the dawn of the next day, there were as many miles intervening between him and that Indian village as he could accomplish. Sometime during the year of 1860, he rode into the Boise Basin.

Buyers Unhulaub Ferry
It was in that place he met Ben Holliday and Pete McManus who convinced him that they could put him in the way of a good business as they had a government contract for crossing mail, express, and passengers from Boise, Utah, to Boise. It was called The Overland Stage company. They wanted a crossing of the Snake river in the vicinity of Big Springs. Accordingly, father bought the boat and rights appertaining thereto and began making regular crossings at what was then called The Unhulaub Ferry.

He hadn't been operating the ferry very long when he discovered that the man who had sold the ferry to him had also sold it to two other men, Pete Stewart and John Bell, who lived between the present sites of Bliss and Heyburn. Traces of the hull buildings may yet be seen upon the east side of the highway near the old Bliss ranch. Followed a Court trial in which my father won but they made it so uncomfortable for him that Holliday and McManus advised him to sink the boat and find another crossing upriver, which he did. The wreck of the old ferry boat may yet be seen at low water.

Build's Clark's Grade
At Niagara Springs, several miles above Clear Lake, he found a place where a good crossing could be made. He constructed what is now Clark's grade, west into the hills above Camas Prairie, cut and hewed the logs for another boat, hauled them down to the river by ox teams, and soon had another ferry in operation. The grade upon the south side of the river has been discarded in favor of another along the east wall of Cedar Branch canyon. Thinking to improve his business, he took Clark into partnership and together they built a fine double house of several rooms to take care of the hotel business. Mr. Clark's sister and niece came on from the east to take charge of the hostelry and dining room. The stage company then made it their home station.

It was about this time that my mother, Miss Mary E. Harris, left Orange County, Indiana, for Missouri, where she joined her mother, a brother, and two sisters. Her father died in Missouri, so the five came on to Idaho to build another home, making the Snake crossing at Niagara Springs and journeyed on to Boise where they settled. An incident occurred so nearly connected with my mother's crossing the plans that I feel it not out of place to relate it at this time.

Kester Kills a Squaw
A train which immediately preceded that in which my mother made the journey to Idaho, but as a member a man by the name of Kester. Kester, it seems, was a green-horn dare-devil whose ambition was to be able to say that he had killed an Indian. One day he discovered a small band of Indians along the east wall of Cedar Branch into the bunch, killing a squaw. Those in the train who understood Indian nature, made all possible speed to get out of that territory at the earliest possible moment, but they were soon overtaken by a large band of warriors who demanded that they do the shooting. They were loath to give the man up but the bucks threatened the entire train unless the man were turned over to them. Reluctantly and as the only way out of the dilemma, they acceded to the wish of the Indians. That was the last that Kester ever saw of his victim when he occurred the train but in what a plight! He had been literally flayed alive, nearly every vestige of skin having been stripped from his body. He died that night, a horrible example of Indian vindictiveness.

Becoming tired of the ferry business, my father sold his interest to Mr. Clark and went to Boise where he built a bridge across the Boise river about three miles above the present site of the city. It was known as The Overland Bridge. The Silver City travel all crossed the Overland Bridge during the days of the gold-rush into that territory. It was in the time he met my mother, whom he married May 24, 1870.

Migrates to Wood River
My father was always actively interested in the development of Idaho. He engaged in many and various business ventures in Boise. At one time, he and a Major Hawley operated a general store. At another, he owned and operated a livery and feed stable on Main street. Many of the best business lots in Boise are held by tax title, father allowing them to go for taxes because of his interest in other business.

Again becoming restless, he and mother went into the Wood River district where he took up some government land—a squatter's right—and planted it to oats and barley for the Overland Stage company's horses. This land was located near the present site of Gooding.
Shortly after this, a man and his wife by the name of Hitchcock, ran a stage station at Malad Crossing. It was as a stage driver at this station that my father borrowed a Montgomery Ward catalog—the first one published. These people were my parents' nearest neighbors. They had not been long in the Wood River country until another man, his wife, and a son, settled near them. Their names were Woodward (Woodworth) and he continued to live until a few years ago. We were all obliged to move out on an average of once a year because of the Indians, going either to Boise or to Rock Creek in the vicinity of the present site of Twin Falls.

Joins C. S. Walgamott
Becoming discouraged with his ranch visions, father began searching for gold along the sands of the Snake, a pastime in which he indulged at several times during his residence in the state. It was in 1877, he and mother Walgamott discovered and worked a mine at what they called Boulder Hill, south of the river from the Big Springs ranch. After a time, father bought Mr. Walgamott's interest and mined it alone for awhile. He then filed on some claims near the Big Springs Basin, and it was there that he planted and had the second bearing orchard in the valley, the first being John Bell's orchard and the third, I. B. Perrine's. Mr. Perrine and my father shipped grapes to the Paris exposition for which father received a purple-ribbon ribbon. I never know what Mr. Perrine received. Father had a standing offer of five dollars for every worm found in any of his apples.
I remember sitting and listening to my father and Mr. Perrine "making medicine" for this section of the State for an hour at a time—predictions which my father did not live long enough to see mature, having died in January preceding the time Mr. Perrine began to survey the south side—and I became imbued with the spirit of the undertaking, building a mighty little empire within my imagination, furnishing it with lovely fields and lanes, great splendid flower gardens which every spring saw a bird would come to make his home, and sing, peopling my mental picture with a strong, hardy, industrious, and honest race of men and women, and the greater portion of my dreams have come true! MAKE SURE YOU ARE REGISTERED

Many persons are likely to become confused over the new registration law, inasmuch as some must register in order to vote while others do not have to register.

A good rule for the public in general to follow in this respect should make it a point between now and the closing of the registration books to go to the registrar in his particular precinct and satisfy himself that his name is on the list.

Those who have removed from one precinct in the same county to another, can secure a transfer; the names of all those who have died or who have removed from the state will be removed from the registrar's lists.

Since this is the first year that the new law is being put into effect, officials deem it advisable that electors should have their names re-registered, if for no other reason than to avoid such regrets as would occur, for instance, with the person who, confident that he did not need to re-register, would discover that despite his intentions he really failed to vote two years ago, and that—in consequence his name was not on the list.

This is going to be a great campaign. Everyone eligible should want to vote and insist on exercising his franchise; be sure then, you are registered.

A PROCLAMATION BY THE GOVERNOR

"The praises of Motherhood, its glories, tenderness and unselfishness, have been sung in song and story since the beginning of time. Within recent years it has become the beautiful custom to dedicate and set apart a special day to show our gratitude and reverence in honor and memory of a loving mother," says Governor Haldrup.

"That we may for a time turn our hearts and minds to her who has blessed, loved and sacrificed for us, that we may pay tribute to her memory if she be not living, and if living, that we may manifest our appreciation of her love and devotion, I, H. C. Haldrup, Governor of the State of Idaho, do hereby designate and proclaim

SUNDAY, MAY 13, 1928, MOTHER'S DAY

"It is earnestly recommended that all the people of the state, the churches and the various fraternal organizations, observe this day in a full and appropriate observance of the occasion.

"Our statutes also provide that on this day the United States flag be displayed on all state and school buildings, at homes, lodges, churches, business houses, and other suitable places, as a public expression of love and reverence for the mother of our state and other women serving it, and as an inspiration for better homes and closer ties between the home and the Commonwealth."

BIG WEEK FOR BOYS

Boy Scouts all over the country got much deserved attention last week, and justly so.

The coming generation of young manhood is receiving valuable lessons in civic conduct, which will be reflected in higher standards for years to come.

These unselfish individuals who are giving of their time and effort in maintaining the scout organizations all over the country are serving better than they know; the boys themselves should appreciate these opportunities and be thankful they are living in such a progressive age.

any other man, not excepting the father of the nation. He has no description of the rights of the individual citizen, as well as the object and purpose of government, was he no more than any other one man, determined that this should be a democracy by a republic—a government that should derive its just powers from the consent of the governed.

"It was a serious question during the first ten years under the constitution of 1789, whether we should have a republic, in form only, with titles of nobility, and all the privileges of the British System. At that time, George Washington, recently elected, in the then wilderness, on the margin of a swampy tract, was the reluctant shouter of crowd appeals and the denouncer of the capitol and in the primitive streets, and the rear of a common prostitute, the election of the size of Monticello to the Presidency, and the establishment of the fact that this should be a republic in fact as well as in form.

"It was the first political leader in America to incur the hatred of a whole nation, and to stand as jealous of its uses and abuses as it is today.

"During the first 75 years of our existence as a Nation, the thoughts which dominated the thought of the public men were political and religious liberty was the theme of the statesman and the hope of the citizen. Government should be made to consist of a noble and virtuous man, that it would be obeyed because it is loved and respected and not because of the fear of its consequences. These are the principles which have made our nation a great power in the world.

"The praises of Motherhood, its glories, tenderness and unselfishness, have been sung in song and story since the beginning of time. Within recent years it has become the beautiful custom to dedicate and set apart a special day to show our gratitude and reverence in honor and memory of a loving mother," says Governor Haldrup.

While the democrats were up on the stump, the republicans were gathering the dirt about the camp fires on the plains below. They collected up their jewelry and their fine clothes and their fine horses, and they ran on this golden calf, and they fell down and worshipped it. Chicago, what a more fitting place, in convention assembled, the Republican party, nominated for president a man who had, really been nominated in a room. He became president. How and why, you know. There were several new ideas. Greed and avarice appeared in royal robes, and sat at feasts and councils on a state. This came gave to 1927, 200, plus him, for a time, the ruling, lying, fraud and greed of our history shows no parallel.

"Have the voters become deaf of honor? Shall they take no revenge for this assault upon sacred institutions? Is this kind of political immorality, does not show the sense of decency and honor of the average voter, what of the future?"

(Answer: To properly subject the mule if it is suggested you take him off the diet of Magic Hot Springs water and drink more of it yourself. Regarding the cat, we do not think your word concerning their size, we only wonder how big the mule grow (over many years) but when the convention at Houston has spoken, when the constitution of party machinery has nominated a candidate for president, the strongest ties of political ethics and home command that we have in our political gods before him. The party will not nominate any man whose integrity is under suspicion or whose patriotism (and loyalty) to our institutions is questioned. As for me, the convention's choice is my candidate.

to make out itineraries for the field plots. Hence, the lists must be made up at that time. Growers should have their seed potatoes ready by getting in applications as long as possible, previous to July 15.

4. Application blanks and all other information may be obtained from the County Agents or from H. H. Bennett, Extension Division, at Coeur d'Alene, Idaho. The applications and checks should be delivered to the County Agent, H. H. Bennett, Extension Division, Boise.

5. The stock must be planted at potatoes from other potatoes and must be from a stock that is guaranteed for certification. It is desirable to keep them separate, inasmuch as if one plot is diseased it will disqualify any other plots. One hundred yards' distance is required between plots unless the distance is more than that distance for disease and weak plants.

6. The best disease-free stock should be planted, but "certified" stock is not required.

7. The stock planted must be represented in the field-plots at the Experiment Station. For this purpose, a 10-pound sample must be sent to E. M. 12. At the second field visit the plants should be found practically free from these diseases and more than five per cent in new plants (less than thirty per cent of the average tuber weight of 100 plants) will disqualify for certification.

13. A. We recommend—that all stock be planted late, namely, during June or early July. Late planted stock makes its tuber growth during the cool weather of late summer and fall, and so is sweeter in more content in the growing plants, the tubers from late planted stock are much more like the good type and of larger appearance. The yield resulting from late planting in all sections is usually equally as great as from that planted earlier.

Eleanor Boardman and James Murray play the feature roles in the first all-American picture Vidor has made since "The Big Parade."

It is best to plant the tubers whole, and they must have plenty of room as potatoes of that size will, if they are healthy, make big, vigorous, many stemmed plants and a large number of tubers per plant.

The seed plot should be made a separate plot for certification work, but this is not being done in this year. However, we must expect greater growth who intends to certify the work of seed potatoes growing to make the seed plot a part of his regular routine of seed potato growing.

Stating the Seed Plot If the seed plot is to be of much value the growing must be drastic. As soon as the plants are up and those that are not of exceptional vigor should be removed. This must be continued throughout the season in order to prevent the contamination of those that are free from disease by those that are infected.

No inspection fee will be charged for this plot unless the grower wishes the seed certified. For application for such inspection of the plot should be noted on the regular application blank.

Thousands of New Yorkers who recently witnessed a hard day's work, when they saw King Vidor lead everybody they met about the incident are going to feel a little sympathy when they see "The Crowd," a twelve-reel picture which opens at the Idaho Theatre Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday.

Police Give Aid With the assistance of the New York police department Vidor managed a battery of cameras in the motor truck driven up to the curb in front of the store. Just as the truck was crowded at noon he trained the cameras on the door of the store.

As "The Crowd" rushed open and certification of seed potatoes, almost fifty per cent failed to get the two field-inspection. The percentage of failures was higher than in any other year. This was partly due to an unfavorable season, but it is evident that potato diseases are on the increase, particularly in this true of blights, if we are to compare
