CHAPTER I

Tampa is always quiet in mid-afternoon. It is always a tranquil time of day, and the best way to spend it is to sit and drink my usual cold drink and lemon.

"I used to spend it that way except when out on call," Jefferson Davis Lincoln, who studies over me and answers my belated and awakens my office with indelible bow guides my patients to their cars and meets my friends, says a concession out of a little lime-juice and mint and salt-water can be imagined.

Perhaps the story of Southley Downs should begin with that August afternoon beside Ueppa Island, Alexander Pierce and I were there fishing.

When I think of Alexander Pierce it is always with a fishing-rod in his hand. He was at his best then. To see him on the street could easily guess that he was a fisherman, but never a detective. There is no practice in the world that leaves its mark on a man's face more clearly than fishing. Pierce had that mark. He had singularly quiet eyes, eyes that looked farther than most tele-scopes, but he did not seemingly keep alert. He had a firm, weather-beaten face and a head with hair with lines—his hair was curiously thin—and people rather expected to see wrinkles. But when he moved his hat it was as if he were light born and fine.

"So you go back to your work tomorrow," I said, "I'm sorry you can't stay longer."

"Not as sorry as I am, doc," he replied. "If it's between fish and thieves, I'm always on the water. They are more gentlemanly, and require a finer net. One's daily bread, you know! But why don't you stay and fish with me?"

Fishing for tarpon with anybody except Alexander the Great would give me no thrill at all," I told him. "I'd sooner go to my house party."

"Dancing around in a ballroom when you could be out on the water on the sea with a tarpon? By the way, where did you say you were going for this riotous week?"

"To a big old mansion house in the interior—Southley Downs."

"Southley?" he muttered. "His name doesn't happen to be Peter Southley, does it?"

"That happens to be his name."

"An old man—seventy-five years ago—wholly bald, and heavily built, about as tall as you, with a peculiar nervous twitch to his eyes?"

"That's Peter Southley. I don't know him well. I met him at my club in Tampa, when he was visiting his family. And I can't remember what made him ask me to get the letter just a couple of days ago, and he promises fishing and shooting and a good time."

"Asked me for a full week, and even seemed a trifle hectic about it—as if he wanted me very badly. I'll stay a day or two, at least."

"Queer thing," he muttered. "Such a queer thing. There doesn't seem to be any further doubt."

"I was aroused by curiosity; but I knew enough not to ask questions."

"You're a sort of a trustworthy fellow, Long," he remarked at last. "I'll sign to go to Tampa. But I know my cue."

"Very blundering, I'm afraid, Alex."

"Of course your years are against you—only thirty-three. Yet they say that you have a cool hand with a needle. Steady hands means steady nerves. Steady nerves means you're to be trusted in a pinch. You have that Wild-man problem pretty well worked out. Tell me—have you any deep, personal regard for this man Southley?"

"Not really. I'd barely met him. I don't think he was a kindly old chap; very agreeable, and with a fine title for vintage work."

"I rather thought that might describe him, Long. I want you to keep your eyes open when you are at his house. If you want you to watch—all the time."

"Alexander, you are the last man in the world to ask me to do anything that is the slightest breach in loyalty between a guest and his host."

"I rather hope, Alex, Long, you'd a detective good memorandum. I must guard against it. In this case—well, in this case, I should say it with a seal. It was just that kind of a seal.

The train stopped at a station, and a man in the opposite row of seats from mine left the train. His chair was considerably nearer the front of the car than mine, so the driver into the girl's eye. His face was plainly visible to me.

She wore a little tailored suit of blue, and her sliver had indicated a week or so that she had been on the shore. It was one of those pretty conceits that girls have, cut up into a hundred detachable pockets for toilet articles. I could not watch her so intently now. I pretended to gaze out of the window, but the panorama slipped by me without leaving a single impression in my memory. Then, turning once more, my eyes met those of a man who sat next her, and he was gone. I watched her more intently. The feature of the journey, combined with some nervous strain that I could not understand, were having an actual, tangible effect on her physical being. I had not expected that I was a doctor. Her position had changed, now. I had to look twice to see who she was, and I was a doctor. She no longer sat at the back of the seat. She was sitting upright, almost rigid in her chair, and her eyes were on the landscape outside the window. I followed their line of sight, and saw at once that we were passing through some great country estate. An enormous tower, a great white palatial structure of style of long since, perched upon a rocky hill. It looked as big as the cathedrals of Europe, and on the hillside were clustered such outlandish mansions as are to be seen in these wide swamps of meadow, and in the most beautiful of the deep wilderness of tropical jungle. The scene was in the interior of southern Florida, as a vacant place—a place as I was found in all of North America.

Human senses are not entirely reliable. On the witness stand, a man has been known to say that he saw a face. As if caught in the frozen fascination with which the girl was for smiling said: "Maybe she's got some in her bag," she suggested.

I peered into the pretty conceits of the woman that brought her. I found no perfume at all. It was a far different thing that met my eye. I like to think that my face was no sign, but the woman had no inkling of the little sliver of wonderment that went through my nerves.

What I saw would not have been unusual under different circumstances. In the bottom of a trunk, or pushed into the cushions of an automobile seat, or even in a suit case, perhaps I would not have glanced twice at it. But in this bag, with the most intimate articles for daily use, it seemed incongruous to a horrible degree. It was a dark, red, automatic pistol, brand-new and with a full magazine of cartridges.

"Revolver! automatic! full magazine! brand-new! pistol!" I was a doctor, and I was a doctor. I had no idea of what I was doing, and I did not know what white magic that glance was intended. But it went deep into me, and left a curious warmth and elation. I knew that no other eyes had ever looked at me in quite that way, or had the same effect on me. Perhaps it was, then, a curious darkness, or even the haunting sorrow that could not possibly be denied.

Famous Painting

The painting of "The Last Supper" by Leonardo da Vinci is recognized as one of the world's masterpieces. It was originally painted on the walls of the Dominican convent of the Madonna del Garate, a picture house in a state of decay, but several very fine copies have been made. One of them, at the Royal Academy in London, is considered the finest representative of the original. The "Last Supper" of the same picture, now in the Louvre, is also rated among the greatest paintings.

It was a dark, ugly automatic pistol, brand-new and with a full magazine of cartridges. I watched the passing panorama. I was still following the line of her vision. It seemed to me that I caught a glimpse of something yellow in the thickness—curious, brilliant yellow in great splashes of color. There was just a suspicion and yet I had dim reasons for thinking that the yellow form was that.

It might have been just a gaily colored paint, or a flash of bird wings—or even a tawny dog. I should say that its size might correspond to that of an ordinary handbag. I might have been a yellow calf, or perhaps only the sunlight, or a matter, anyway. The only thing that did matter, or that I remembered for hours afterward, was that the girl had a slender body. In an instant she was in my arms. I don't remember how she came there. I have no remembrance of exertion in lifting or her chair or picking her up. She was simply there when I again reached into her face, her slender body against my breast, her head resting on the muscle of my left arm, her white face uplifted, and her eyes on me.

—It had a single suggestion as I carried her to the women's room. It was certainly not of her weight, which seemed to have increased at all. But I did see the lovely shadow of her eyelashes made against the whiteness of her face.

A woman picked up the sliver which had been that the unconscious girl had carried, and drew the cartridge from me. She was a large, stout, and fatigued woman, and I determined, and under ordinary circumstances I would have felt perfectly safe in leaving my patient in her hands. But in this case, I went to work to effect the recovery myself.

It was the most simple form of ordinary faint, so I sent the woman

FRANK O. LOWDEN

(Fourth in the Citizen Series of Presidential Possibilities)

Frank O. Lowden has a distinguished public record. He is an advocate of the McNary-Haugen bill. He is himself a farmer's son, and he works on the family farm until he was nearly a year. Today he is the owner of a 5,000-acre farm scientifically managed at Oregon, Illinois, and he owns and operates extensive cotton plantations in Arkansas and Texas. Few individuals have a greater personal stake in a wise solution of the agricultural problem.

He was born in Safford, Mo., in 1861, and is studying at the University of Iowa and a law degree. He is a professor of law at Northwestern University in 1889. He served as delegate to Republican conventions, later winning a seat in Congress.

In 1917 he was elected Governor of Illinois, serving until 1921, and his administration is considered brilliant.

In 1920 he was elected president of the International Press Foundation.

He is an easy and fluent speaker, and has a colorful personality. He is on record as vigorously opposing American's entry into the League of Nations.

Idaho Last to Place Monument in Washington

A slab of clear grained Idaho sandstone, inscribed with the names of the term states and carved with a six-inch border of Idaho lead, will complete a tribute to the memory of George Washington started in 1883. The Idaho stone will be shipped to Washington, D. C., some time this week, where it will take its place beside the stones from the other 47 states in the interior walls of the Washington monument.

Idaho is the last state to respond with a stone for the famous monument in memory of the father of this country.

The decision that each of the states be represented individually in the monument is of comparatively recent origin, but all of the state stones, with the exception of Idaho, are now installed.

The Idaho stone is four feet long by two feet high. It was obtained by the Boise stone quarry and is now at the Banker Hill and Sullivan mines at Kollage, where the lead facing is being added to it. This facing is being done by the mine. From this it will be Big line Summer hats for sports or dress wear in large, small, or medium shapes. Select now—

The excellent developed lines in this collection are for great advantage when simply finished. A soft drapery and flow here are all that is necessary to add the touch of femininity without taking away from the beauty and continuity of the design in the material. The flock above is a smart and feminine example of the new mode in late dresswear. A jacket falls from the left shoulder. The circular line which also flows from the back, crosses the skirt diagonally to meet the bow of the skirt. The soft drapery is finished with a delicate touch at the wrist. This model would be equally effective in a printed, gossamer, wool or tulle. (Copyright, 1928, by Interiors)

THINGS BUZZING POLITICALLY

There is much buzzing around politically. And it is well, for the period when nominations of candidates for county and precinct officials, as well as delegates to the county conventions, opens June 7, less than three weeks away.

The national convention of the Republican party convenes three weeks from next Tuesday in Kansas City—not a very long time.

Registration books are now open for recording the names of electors.

While much attention is being given to the daily dispatches to presidential candidates, the vital thing; local candidates, must now from now on receive the attention their importance merits.

All county offices are to be filled at the elections this year, with the exception of clerk and recorder, who holds over another two years. The same situation exists in respect to the district judgeships; and there will be no voting on United States senator for Gooding was elected two years ago for a six-year term and Mr. Borah's term will not expire until 1930.

But Representative Addison T. Smith's term expires, as does all the state officials from governor down.

County and precinct officers on each ticket will be nominated in primaries to be held August 7. At the same time delegates to the respective county conventions of each party will be elected; these conventions will send delegations to the state conventions later in August and there the state and congressional candidates will be nominated.

A question which immediately looms on the political horizon is how many parties will have candidates in the field in this county and state. Present reports indicate that there will be three, which may or may not be one too many!

A clean, healthy interest in politics and candidates is to be encouraged. The Citizen intends to be outspoken in this campaign and will welcome the opinion of its readers.

It will be a great old year and one tense with political interest.

Let it buzz!

OUR GRADUATES

This is the commencement season throughout the Twinland empire.

Students are being graduated from the various high schools and many pupils are completing the eighth grade. These many young women and men are to be highly complimented on the completion of their courses. We would add a word of congratulation, too, to their parents, whose encouragement and oftentimes forbearance and sacrifice, have made the presentation of diplomas possible.

The Citizen would urge just this: that all eighth grade graduates continue in high school and that as many as possible of the high school graduates pursue education further, if not this fall, then a year from then.

To the high school students The Citizen takes pleasure in welcoming them into the business and social life of their respective communities. They bring a new impetus and the youth-power exemplified by the graduates from our schools is the basic hope of the community's future growth and prosperity.

THE TIGER TRAIL

The Citizen prints the first installment of its newest serial story in this issue.

Readers are being urged to read the opening chapters in this installment—then there will be no questions about their reading the remainder. The various features that are supplied readers of newspapers such as serial stories, cartoons, photographs, in fact all pictorial and news content, costs money, and are secured oftentimes at great trouble as well as expense.

Those who have to do with supplying the contents of publications like this are most anxious to please their large body of readers, but it is seldom that readers express themselves favorably or unfavorably.

Read "The Tiger Trail" and then tell us how you like the story.

Chicago gangsters call their bombs pinapples. It's a case where a couple of pineapples a day keep all the doctors busy.—Idaho Falls Post.

France's official executioner is disappointed because so many death sentences are commuted that he has a hard time making a living. Somehow we can't sympathize with him.

Co-eds at both Northwestern University and the University of Chicago are proud of having better scholastic records than the men students. "Overs" girls? They keep themselves looking so pretty that the men can't stand it!

With The State Press

IT'S OUR BOY THIS TIME

A shout from the Herald force greeted the announcement that Alvin Reading, three years forward at the state university, was the recipient of the student body award this year.

A string of marks, all A's, on his last semester's work, was a warning that anything might happen.

IDAHO DAIRYING POSSIBILITIES

George O. Brophy, special representative of the department of public relations for the Union Pacific railroad, who was in the state recently as the ambassador of goodwill for the railroad, made a close observation of the opportunities for the development of dairying in Idaho. He wrote an article on dairying in the paper and in Wisconsin and of the future in this state.
