THE IDAHO CITIZEN

The Biggest Little Salesman in the world are Citizen Want Ads

WORK According to accepted traditions, work was a curse pronounced upon man by the devil when man was expelled from the Garden of Eden. If this is true, then it is true that the curse of God is better than the blessing of man.

For there can hardly be any doubt that working for one's bread and butter and shelter is about the best thing that ever happened to a man.

Suppose all the learning millions in New York were idle, that they had nothing to do but amuse themselves, it would not be a week before the city was burned down. It is the fact that most of us have to put in a certain number of hours a day in earning our livelihood that keeps us sane.

The sanest thing on earth is work. Men who devote their time to imagining, to theology, to philosophy, or to other speculations are fertile soil to all kinds of disorder. It is men who have no work that are the trouble of every nation. As a rule they want things to remain as they are.

And as a rule they are the bulwark of morality. Crime news and divorce cases that date originate largely in the idle classes. Chesterton has said that when a man puts in ten hours a day at a job driving his car, he is not driving his car, he is tangled up with the wife of some one else. He has no time even for his own wife.

The workers are the security of a country and the best guarantee of that country's prosperity. The greatest menace of militarism is that a large body of men are kept in comparative idleness. If the millions under arms in Europe could be disbanded and set to work it would be the best insurance of peace.

How many a divorce trouble would be avoided if both man and woman were employed in some industry. It was not until the Jews of old to instruct their children in some useful trade. The best life insurance policy that a man can have is his family. He has them all so trained that they can make their own way in the world.

It is doubted that the man with the hoe, the laborer, should be the object of sentimental pity. For after all the man who knows how to use his hoe has a greater prospect of happiness in this world than the man who is kept from the enjoyment of a million dollars.

Sheep Pay In Blaine County Sheep are credited as being the biggest money raisers in Blaine county, according to H. H. Menz, manager of the Blaine County Bank at Hatley. Farm flocks, he says, have increased considerably during the last year, the most, clipping more than 25,000 fleeces in 1927 to 30,500 in 1928. Most of the owners have permanent pastures on their places, and some have developed comparatively large flocks from just a few head several years ago.

Tharp Bound Over For Trial on First Degree Murder Charge

W. O. Tharp was given a preliminary hearing before Probation Judge C. A. Bailey Monday and bound over without bond for trial at the November term of court. He had previously plead not guilty to the charge of first degree murder filed against him on arraignment Monday morning by the attorney for the state, Mr. Tharp, Sept. 25. At the preliminary hearing the defense offered no testimony or evidence, and Prosecuting Attorney G. W. Wilson used only three witnesses, sufficient to establish the case against him. These were Charles Bowen, Dr. H. F. Morgan and Coroner F. J. Grossman.

SHORT COURSES AT UNIVERSITY Displays Made For Teachers This Week End

The merchants of Twin Falls are making a program of effort to learn the position of the Tharp family now the road when Tharp passed, Bowen denied having a gun, or being in any way of the Tharp family so far as he knew. With his wife and Walleka, who had previously been in the Tharp's fronting his home, when Tharp drove by, Mrs. Bowen called for his gun, whereupon Tharp stopped his car, got out and the opposite side from the front end, and walked around the front end to shoot Mrs. Bowen three times. Bowen had a bowie knife and missed fire. The two struggled for the gun and upon being released by him, Tharp went to his car and drove home where the officers found him.

Checks To Be Finger Printed Babe Ruth and Yankees Win World Series

For the better protection of business men who have often written checks by means of cancelling forged checks, a system has been suggested and will be put into effect by the Twin Falls County Credit Association whereby strangers will be required to put their finger prints on the backs of checks which they seek to cash. Since finger prints, like leavens, are all different, this system will aid in preventing the passage of forged checks by unscrupulous people. When their finger prints have been printed on the backs of the checks, they will receive the money but the merchant who cashed the check with which to apprehend them when the check has not been drawn on its own bank.

ROSS PRESENTS HIS CLAIMS FOR GOVERNORSHIP

Major Ross, based the following address, regarding appointments during his visit here Tuesday. He has a great deal of attention that the Idaho Statesman in Boise has stated that I have promised if elected to appoint Carl Johnson of Twin Falls, commissioner of agriculture. This statement is false. I have not promised Mr. Johnson, or any other person, any appointment at my hands. I am only endeavoring to secure an appointment to any position.

INJUNCTION IS BROUGHT IN SPUD MATTER

Patato raising regulations are to be given an airing in court in an injunction suit brought this week by the Idaho Potato Growers' association of Idaho Falls, made permanent. The injunction is filed in the Ninth Judicial District against Carl L. DeLong and his agents. It prohibits this firm from violating the regulations and orders him to show cause why the injunction should not be made permanent.

October Is Vital Month in Bean Market Says Bulletin Sent Out

The Southern Idaho Bean Growers' association Tuesday sent out a bulletin to bean growers, jobbers and dealers over the country with the following statement concerning the production and marketing situation this being somewhat of the nature of the reports received here from other bean growing areas. "There is a new element to be taken into consideration in the bean game this year. The growers here had a good crop. Herebefore they have sold their beans at the other fellow's prices. This year they have several outlets on the track that they have an interest in; and want pay for their interest. It seems to be seen whether the growers mean what they say, or whether they will be just talking and will become puffed and dumped as they have in the past. Much has to be done and done now."

LOWER FREIGHT RATES FAVORED ON WELLS ROAD

Examiner W. R. Brennan Recommends R. a Adjustment to Interstate Commerce Commission A report received Monday by Asher B. Wilson, president of Twin Falls Chamber of Commerce, states that Examiner W. R. Brennan of the Interstate Commerce Commission, submitted to that body a brief in which he recommended that rates be proportionate to those in effect at Portland and San Francisco and other railroads in the territory. His report stated that the existing rates, while not unfair, are unreasonable, and that a reasonable rate of rates should be put into effect.

HOW TO IMPROVE APPLE MARKET

Shipments of apples in the United States is double what it was last year, according to figures issued by M. L. Dean, director of market news for the United States. The result will be, he thinks, that the early varieties will be gotten off the market to the better advantage of growers. The price for which should be higher.

Rescuing an Indian Baby

MANY Indian babies or children were raised to man- and woman-hood by the white settlers of the early west, especially children belonging to the more southern tribes, the Piute Diggers and Apachus. It was common among these tribes during war with each other to capture young children and endeavor to sell or trade them to the settlers who through pity raised them as something for them, rather than see them put to death which the Indians would do if they could find no market for them.

Mrs. William Stokes, whose husband was one of Cassia counties first sheriffs, tells us of an experience that her parents had in buying, and raising an Indian boy. During Mrs. Stokes girlhood days she lived with her parents in Southern Utah and after her marriage to Mr. Stokes they moved to the Marsh Basin country in Idaho where they built up a home and became prosperous. Mrs. Stokes, now a widow, has considerable property in the Marsh Basin (now called Albion county), but spends part of each year with her children in California.

Mrs. Stokes relates the following story. "When I was a mere child Indians of different tribes often came to my father's ranch in Southern Utah trying to sell Indian children, but my father thought that he had enough to do to raise and support his own children and turned them down. "The Indians always told my father that the babies or children were very good natured and with other tribes had always threatened to kill them if they could not trade or sell them. We did not at first believe them but later found out that this was true, when one morning our attention was called to loud talking by Indians that were near my father's ranch. The disturbance was about, he found that the Indians had an Indian baby partially covered with rock. It was in a sitting position with its little face and head exposed, the squaws were throwing rocks at it, with the purpose of killing it and all were making merry over the execution of my enemy. My father, through pity, bought the little fellow. It was a boy, and we raised him until he grew to be good-sized. Then he formed the habit of running away and staying for days. One day he disappeared never to return."

My wife's father, Thomas Dunn, an early settler who at one time lived on the Bright road, crossing of some creek some two miles west of Burley, Idaho, gave some renegade Indians a sack of flour and an old buffalo robe for a little Indian boy. He was about five years old, quite a bright, good-looking little fellow for an Indian. Mr. Dunn went to considerable trouble to raise the little fellow, who was to be raised, and christened him George. The Duggs had a large family of boys and girls and during George's early life he played with the other children about the way that the children of his age would play, but as he grew older he grew in the habit of running away especially when there was something for him to do, often staying in hiding for several days until finally he disappeared never to be heard from.

These two stories are about parallel with the history of all Indian boys raised by white settlers. They could not adjust themselves to the white man's mode of living. They had no conception of self-denial, but when food was available they ate until they were sick, and when they had no food they starved. The white man had developed the peculiar characteristic which enabled them to gormandize themselves then go for days with out food and the white man's habit of eating several times each day was too much for the Indian and he became fat, indolent and lazy and he could not adjust himself to the white man's mode of living. It was somewhat different with girls, for they could adjust themselves to the white man's customs more readily. Generations of habits and environment had taught them self-denial. For generations the Indian woman has been the slave to her husband, doing all the hard work and waiting for her food until the warrior was served. Besides she was of a little finer civilization than her brother and more susceptible to modern culture."

A very interesting story is told by William Bose who now lives at Jinic, Utah. Mr. Bose is 89 years old, with a memory of the long age as clear as a bell. In a recent letter from Mr. Bose he says:

"In the autumn of 1853, myself and one David Boyd started with two teams loaded with freight from Ogden, Utah, to the mine of Montana. We knew the Indians were bad along the Bannack trail and our road followed this trail through northern Utah and eastern Idaho into Montana. General Conner's army was in Utah and had been ordered to subdue the Indians along the trail, but we were not aware of this and were taking our chances of getting through without encountering Indians. "After being out several days and when we were at a point about where we entered Idaho territory, we camped on a small stream, that had no name at that time. In making our camp and putting our stakes on grass, we discovered we were in the midst of a very recent battlefield with dead Indians and Indian ponies lying around everywhere. We were startled by this discovery and somewhat frightened, our stock was too tired to travel further and even if they were in condition to travel we figured that we were not likely to find any more grass so easily. Inducted us to look around this gruesome landscape.

"Presently we heard what we thought was the faint cry of a baby. We followed in the direction the cry came from and found a dead Indian woman rolled in a blanket. Under the blanket and in the mother's arms was a live baby, the squaw had died but the baby had but a few hours. In our haste we failed to find out what caused her death but we naturally supposed that the mother had been shot in battle. The pitiful cry of the baby as it tried to get food from its dead mother's breast was heart-rending. We decided to take the child with us and try and get it to the settlement. We thought it was about three weeks old. We packed the little thing to our wagons then we realized that we had nothing suitable to feed babies, but we were successful in killing some bush rabbits and made soup, and then with our finger for a nipple we fed it. We tore up old shirts for dummies. We heated water and gave it a bath and soon had it tucked away in a little bed in the wagon.

"Both Mr. Boyd and I slept soundly, neither awaking until nearly morning to remember the baby had not made a noise all night. We were afraid that our treatment was too much for the baby and that it might have gone to the happy hunting ground.

"We rushed to its bed and found it snug and happy. As we lifted it, we prepared more soup for the little to eat and were getting our breakfast when we saw a body of horsemen approaching. We thought they were Indians and we were making preparation to present ourselves and discovered they were soldiers. During this time our state of suspense we realized how responsible we felt for the safety of our charge. The soldiers proved to be a detachment of General Conner's and they told us all about the battle and that every Indian that could be found was killed and that General Conner had told them that the only way to subdue the Indians was to "kill all squaws, paposes and all."

The soldiers advised us to hurry out of this locality for our own safety. After we had heard what the soldiers told us we did not tell them about having the baby, fearing they would demand and kill it. But we took their advice and left the locality. For several days we were fearful of Indian attacks but we never had any and we concluded that General Conner's mode of fighting Indians had actually subdued them.

"I raised the baby and looked after him and he looked odd nursing a white breast. We soon decided it would not be convenient to keep the baby girl so we consulted with Mr. Boyd. He was a bachelor but thought he could find a home for it. He took the baby and we sent him to Leonard Rice, a neighbor, for a horse and Mr. Rice raised and looked after the baby girl to womanhood. When she married a Mr. Wilcox, the young couple settled down in Farmington, Utah, where they built up a beautiful home and raised seven children, four boys and three girls. Three of the boys served in the World war, all going to France. The father was too young. Both Mr. and Mrs. Wilcox died shortly after the World war. I never heard of the baby girls for years, until she came into the government, through the Indian department was making an allotment of land to the Bannack Indians. The children and grand-children could not prove to what tribe they belonged. They did not know their mother and grand-mother told the story of her rescue and with some difficulty they hunted me up. I was glad to go with them before the Indian department with the story of her rescue and the children and grand-children received their allotment. Three of the boys live in Salt Lake: one boy, Sherman Wilcox, lives in Park City, Utah. One of the girls, I believe, lives in the other territory in Salt Lake.

SHORT COURSE OPPORTUNITY

Three practical short courses in agriculture and allied industries designed for those who desire special training but do not care or cannot afford to pursue a complete college course...

The type of training offered in the general short course has fitted many men in the past to operate farms of their own or assume the responsibilities of farm managers for others.

With the marked development of interest in farm machinery and new types of farm power the short courses in auto mechanics and farm power is expected to be popular.

The college of agriculture sets no specific requirements to the short courses except grade school training.

HELP NEEDED AT ONCE

The hurricane which swept Porto Rico, the Virgin Islands and Florida left death and distress in its wake. Contributions for the fund for the relief of its victims are still far short of the sum that the Red Cross needs.

In Porto Rico 56,777 families are being cared for by the Red Cross in Florida 12,500 persons are known to be in immediate need.

In Florida, the known dead range between fifteen hundred and three thousand; in Porto Rico, there are 210 known dead; in St. Croix, Virgin Islands, six are dead.

HONORS FOR THREE

The seventieth anniversary of Theodore Roosevelt's birth, to be celebrated on October 27, will be marked by the presentation of the Roosevelt Medal for Distinguished Service to three of the most remarkable men of this generation.

These are Charles Evans Hughes, former Secretary of State, Frank M. Chapman, noted ornithologist, and Colonel Charles A. Lindbergh.

Mr. Hughes is honored for his work in the administration of public office and in the development of public and international law; Dr. Chapman for his studies of American bird life, and Colonel Lindbergh for the example he has given American youth, alike in peril and in triumph.

Truly the recipients of the Roosevelt Medal have been well picked, for they represent the ideals that motivated Theodore Roosevelt.

Like Charles Evans Hughes, Roosevelt was a noted administrator; like Frank M. Chapman, he was of a scientific turn, seeking always to add to the world's knowledge of the Kingdoms of Nature; and like Colonel Lindbergh, he gave American youth a wonderful example of courage and achievement.
