To Bed

Mr. Jay Bird had watched what was going on and when all was quiet he flew down to where Herie Hinkle had put Mrs. Squire's pine tree tall against the pitch on the pine tree and where the pit lay.

"Good morning," said the Jay Bird to Mrs. Squire.

"Good morning to you," replied Mrs. Squire.

"You seem to be rather... don't know quite what to say," laughed the bird.

"He's had had a trick on me and I am stuck by no fault of my own," said Mrs. Squire.

"I would like to stick my... Black Bird if he comes along and I know you will help me," concluded Mr. Jay Bird.

By and by along came Mister Blackbird and the Jay Bird started the conversation with:

"So do with I know how best to help Mrs. Squire?"

"What were you going to do?" asked Mister Black Bird.

"I think if you pecked this fly for a time you might be able to free her," said the Jay Bird.

"Of course you are right, but would you mind showing me just what you mean?" asked the Black Bird.

Little suspecting, Mister Jay Bird flew down and began to peck at the fly where it was caught. The Black Bird flew against him and pushed him into the pitch, and there were Mrs. Squire and the should I show during the operation Jay Bird took to the pine tree with these other children, while the Black Bird was in time should be drenched in clean to top of the massive tree limbs water after the operation. Never mind clothes saturated with water to be flown away.

As noon time approached the sun arched, hotter and hotter and the pitch melted on the tree so that Mrs. Squire and the Jay flammable until sufficient rainfall had come worked. These two had occurred to wash the chemical loose, and when the Black Bird lit the ground. Drugging himself cause back to see what had happened, they were both far, for a freshly treated area may catch fire.

In a fire, avoid the area is much as possible, advised Social Commissioner Remersberg. Do not enter the dead growth until the following year. Such a procedure may interfere with the action of chlorides along with the roots of the wood.

WHAT HAPPENED BEFORE
The Nevada Dramatic Club, of which Tom Bilbeck, the mariner, Maryella, the girl he cares for, and Jim Cooper, the priest, are members, is to give Pygmalion and Galatea at the Old Soldiers' Home. Mr. Hemmingway, husband of one of the actresses, Bilbeck is in love with his wife. The escape of prisoners from the local penitentiary keeps Bilbeck very busy. Maryella is so that she gets away from the dramatic group, but Maryella summons him, and starts the story of "Dolly-anna, who believes that everything that happens turns out to be for the best."

The players arrive at the Old Soldiers' Home, being greeted royally and meeting Pitt Henninger and others.

The play at the Old Soldiers' Home is interrupted because of a fire, the players and visitors escaping.

Riding away from the scene of the ill-fated play in their costumes and costumes, the players and spectators are held up by two captured convicts, one of whom is captured by Bilbeck after a struggle.

New go on with the Story.

When we entered the ladies' room I saw you come," said Maryella. "The car is awfully quiet tonight, isn't it?"

"It is," I explained glumly. "And will be for several days more."

When I had explained what had happened a cry of dismay escaped the lips of Mrs. Hemmingway.

"I promised John I would come right home, as soon as the performance was over, and he will be terribly anxious," she said.

"I wish I had gone home in the funeral bus," he moaned. Mrs. Lillie.

"I wish you had," I echoed feelingly.

"It's probably all for the best," cried Jim Cooper as she went out. (Orthologist's note: Parastomatid chirp.)

"Where do you find the ray of comfort in this?" I demanded sarcastically.

"That's easy," Jim explained. "If I don't know how to get my wife's car, for another it will give us all a chance to spend the night in an Old Soldiers' Home, which is something most people who aren't veterans can't do."

"Spend the night here?" Mrs. Hemmingway exclaimed in disgust.

"It's impossible. I have to go home."

"I don't know how, but you must think up some way."

"Noneless!" I exclaimed. "It can't be done tonight. There's no train until morning. You can call up your husband and explain it to him."

"Oh, is there a telephone?"

"Sure, there must be," said Jim Cooper. "You talk to John and tell him it's all for the best," Mrs. Hemmingway said cheerfully.

The telephone was conveniently located in the living room so that all my conversations were distinctly audible to any one in the building.

After considerable delay in getting a long-distance connection Mrs. Hemmingway managed to get the ear of her husband, who fortunately had not yet gone to bed.

"Is that you, John?" she asked in the telephone.

"Apparently it was."

"Well, listen, John dear, I can't get home tonight. I'm going to stay all night at the Old Soldiers' Home."

The rest of us tried to talk about something else so as not to appear to be listening, but we couldn't help it, and a sudden silence fell at her next remark.

"Yes, of course, Tom Bilbeck is here. It's all over the connection."

The receiver hummed for a moment. Even we knew that he had raised his voice.

"Well, listen, John dear, I can't get home tonight. I'm going to stay all night at the Old Soldiers' Home."

"No, no, he didn't break it on purpose."

"Listen, dear, you mustn't say such things over the telephone. Some one might be listening. Besides, you are entirely mistaken. How could I fall in love with a man who looks like Tom Bilbeck? There was absolute silence in the room, also on the part of Mrs. Hemmingway.

"Yes, he has got a funny face. Of course I laugh at him and all that, but—What's that? You're coming here? Oh! Is there a train yet coming this way? Good! That will be lots of fun. Then we can go home together in the morning. I am so glad. Good-by, dear!"

Mrs. Hemmingway hung up the receiver and turned back to our frankly silent company. I wished that I could say something to show that I was alive, but my throat choked.

Something in my face must have shown, however, because Mrs. Hemmingway looked at me and exclaimed in dismay:

"Did I hear what I said, Tom?"

"Well, part of it," I admitted.

"You mustn't think I meant it."

"She tried kindly to remind the boys she had done."

"I simply had to make John think it was all right."

A loud "When" outside distracted our attention from the conversational tangle into which we had fallen.

"The sheriff!" exclaimed Colonel Stewart, going to the door. A fur-wrapped figure came in, shuffling snow.

"Evening, sheriff," the colonel greeted.

The sheriff unwrapped a muff

"Last year, with one of your 16-foot Rumely Combine-Harvesters, I combined 920 acres of very rough and hilly land. I was combining and I made good time from start to finish. I never thought a combine could do such good work. It handles, it saves the grain better than any machine built."

Peas Are Economical
This Spring

Did you ever realize that the pea whose function is to make a salad pretty and tasty. For ordinary household use, unspiced peas, which are big and little, but at they come from the pods are good-much preferred by many people. Enough peas for three liberal servings can be bought for ten cents in this grade.

Beware, poor contain protein in appreciable amounts it may become part of a great substitute dish. For instance, a pea and wheat roast is delicious. To make it, mix one and one-half cups pea pulp, one cup soft flaked corn, one-half cup chopped walnuts, one-half cup butter, two-thirds cup canned tomato soup, one beaten egg and salt, pepper and onion juice. Bake in a buttered baking dish in a moderate oven, 350 degrees F. for thirty to forty minutes. Serve with hot, creamed tomato soup, unspiced.

It is only less since the Civil War that peas were low enough in price for the average person to use them in any quantity—and this decrease in price, and increase in quality, was due largely to the efforts of the canners to supply the best at the most economical price.

That peas are economical may be seen from a short study of the prices. Naturally the price varies with quality. The large peas which are intended for soups and stews, are less expensive than the wee, little peas whose function is to make a salad pretty and tasty.

DAHO FORESTS
ALLOTTED $63,300
Idaho is allotted $103,300 out of a total appropriation of $1,400,000 for forest protection work in 30 states during the next fiscal year. This is considerably more than an average share of that amount, which would be approximately $36,000. The money is prorated out of the district forester's office at Missoula, the largest forestry district in the United States.

The funds will be used in connection with private and state money in preventing fires and in replanting cut-over and burned-over areas. Six timber protective associations have recently been formed to carry on this work. The last Idaho legislature increased the tax on young timber growth to encourage forest development.

Office May Be Transferred
A plan is reported in Washington to transfer the general land office from the Department of the Interior to the Department of Agriculture as a means of better coordinating that enterprise with the reclamation bureau and the forestry service with which it is closely affiliated.

This is said to be the idea of President Hoover and is being considered by him and other officials of the departments concerned. Congress would have to authorize this action, as that body established the General Land Office in the first place. Former Governor C. C. Moore of Idaho, is now in charge of that department, succeeding the late William Spry of Utah, also a former governor.

Reasons for this policy are that the work of the Department of the Interior has become chiefly involved with oil lands which have little in common with agriculture, while the work of the Department of Reclamation Bureau and the Forestry Service are all directly tied up with the enterprise carried on by the Agricultural service.

RUSSIAN SHEEP INDUSTRY

The enterprise of Russia in building up a large sheep industry is of interest and importance to sheep growers of the intermountain states, as a considerable number of breeding animals used in that work were obtained at the annual stock shows in Utah, Idaho and other states of this part of the country. Both Rambouillets and Merinos were purchased by sheep buying commissions sent over by the Soviet government.

Before the World war, Russia had 108,000,000 sheep. Now that country has 117,000,000 head, largely increased from the breeding stock purchased in this country and in Australia. The Soviet government is developing the enterprise on all lines: boosting wool production, improving the quality of wool and developing cooperatives. Help is offered individual growers in their efforts to build up an extensive sheep industry there.

This is significant because the types of sheep Russia is breeding are the same types that have made Western America influential as a sheep producing section. Even more so in Australia does this condition prevail, the government of that country having become greatly concerned over the prospect of Russia building up a sheep industry as extensive and of as high grade as their own, endangering the future prosperity and control by Australia of the sheep and wool situation.

To indicate the rapidity with which the Soviets are increasing their breeding herds, it is stated that when they started this enterprise they had 14 government sheep farms with about 60,000 Merino sheep. Up to the first of 1923 the number of sheep on these farms had increased to 340,000 head, with much cross-bred and coarse wool introduced.

The Soviets now plan to increase their sheep farms to 43 this year, with about 850,000 sheep. They at first had 47 purchased sheep centers. The number amounted to 127 by the first of 1923 and they plan to have 201 this year. A great number of new sheep barns and like equipment has been provided to care for their growing industry which has cost to date more than $5,000,000 in promotion work.

When Australia realized the possible effect of this on their own sheep enterprise the government prohibited export of the best breeding stock to Russia. As a result of these orders it is expected that the Russian sheep buyers will come back to the western United States again this year to obtain as many of the best breeding sheep as possible. This will also include Hampshire such as the Russians obtained in southern Idaho in considerable numbers in 1927.

As these are the breeds that have made the United States and Australia sheep growing countries it is feared that Russia's invasion of the industry on so large a scale and at such a rapid rate might become a serious problem, creating strong competition.

Idaho is one of the largest wool producing states in the Union, last year shipping 14,000,000 pounds to outside markets.

HERD SURPLUSES

(Idaho Statement)
A point worthy of reflection of Idaho dairymen was brought out by B. T. Davis of Weiser, president of the Idaho Dairymen's association, at a meeting of breeders of the type held in Jerome county recently.

Idaho is fast developing into a source of high-grade and first-class dairy stock for her neighboring states, the president said. Last year California dairymen purchased 6000 highbred dairy cows. Stock buyers from the neighboring states come into the Idaho dairymen's communities, purchase heifers and bulls and young stock which they sell at a profit elsewhere. This profit, Davis, contends belongs rather to the breeder than to the speculative middleman.

The benefits to be derived from cooperative marketing have been proved again and again in Idaho. Cooperation is really the basic pillar on the state's economic foundation.

Calves are a crop as less than wool—rotation or better; and it is but logical that the Idaho dairymen should have proved again and again in Idaho. Cooperation is really the basic pillar on the state's economic foundation.

The dairy industry in Idaho would undoubtedly profit greatly if a larger share of the proceeds of handling herd surpluses from breeder to user, eliminating the middleman, can be devised.

THE RECLAMATION CONFLICT

President Roosevelt looked upon the construction of reclamation facilities precisely as he did upon the deepening of a river or a harbor.

Eastern congressmen have always opposed increase of arable lands in the west. In 1907 the Bureau made a new interpretation of the reclamation act, providing for the ultimate return to the government of all moneys expended, but still treating each project as a financial unit. A little later Commissioner Arthur P. Davis suggested that all profits should be thrown into the general fund.

This led to conflicts between the government and the settlers on the Mindoko and other irrigation projects. Instead of the two parties co-operating, they became competitors and rivals.

The attitude of the government may be expressed somewhat as follows: "Mr. Settler, just see what we have done for you. Built all these great reservoirs and canals in the pumps and the turbines. All you have had to do to move onto the land and build your home.

To this the settlers on many projects are saying, in effect: "Is that so? We thought we had come out here into the wilderness and sagebrush and jackrabbits and gambled with Fate and Nature to see whether or not we could live. We found that reclamation was not completed when the water was turned on; it had just started. We dug out the sagebrush and cut down the high spots and fought the wind and frost and the markets and bad roads and high taxes, and charged it to experience and life. The government's investment appears to have netted a million dollars on this project alone, while 16 per cent of our holdings have been foreclosed on by the mortgage companies."

There is no better illustration of the possibilities of profit in the development of a water supply, than the deepening of the channel in the South Fork below Jackson Lake dam.

Long after the work was completed it was discovered that the outlet did not thoroughly empty the reservoir, owing to a hump in the river bed a short distance below the dam. Engineers found that a cut of approximately three feet in this hump would free a large quantity of water. The work was done by the government at a cost of $44,000. The additional water thus made available was sold for over ten times the cost of the improvement.

This profit the Mindoko Project claims as its own. The contest is of importance and interest because typical of the unfortunate general situation in the reclamation still in its infancy. Not nearly all of the available water is being used. Much of southern Idaho is traversed by subterranean streams. It is confidently predicted that methods will be devised to utilize these hidden streams.

DEFENDS MORALS BOARD
Washington, D. C., May 31, 1920.
THE EDITOR:
Dear Sir:

It is the policy of the Board of Temperance, Prohibition and Public Morals of the Methodist Episcopal Church is due solely to the fact that the Board vigorously, and consistently supports prohibition, a policy in connection intended to affect it injuriously. The Board is concerned with a cause rather than with its own interest. However, we are not disposed to ignore the recently made charges that the Board is "a lobby" for those who are in the habit of indulging in profane and vulgar language, and to those who know the facts, ridiculous comparisons with other churches. The word "lobby" has been used in preference to the activities of special interests for so long that it has become a commonplace. In the attempt to apply it to the Board of Temperance, we insist that the term be defined.

If there is an organization engaged wholly or principally in promoting legislation or preventing enactment of legislation, it is a lobby. The Board of Temperance, Prohibition and Public Morals is not a lobby for not one per cent of its time and effort is so directed.

If a lobby is an organization engaged in promoting legislation for some selfish reason or to enhance some material interest, the Board of Temperance, Prohibition and Public Morals is not a lobby, for its interest is strictly limited to the welfare of the public. Under no circumstances do the Methodists solicit or receive from the government financial aid or in any other way accept of or administer assistance in promoting the material interests of the church.

If a lobby is an organization which promotes legislation by underground, mysterious, or evasive methods, then the Board of Temperance, Prohibition and Public Morals is certainly not a lobby. What it does, it does in the open; what it says, it says where all may hear.

The Board does favor and promote by every legitimate effort the enactment and enforcement of legislation to suppress the legal and illegal traffic in intoxicating liquors. The Board does, by public discussion and agitation, oppose intemperance, profanity and the treatment of reviling subjects in the American theater; it does so by every legitimate means, including, price-fixing, and the denunciation of the young by publications which are indirect or which are hostile to excite class feeling.

If to approach a member of the United States House of Representatives or the United States Senate for the purpose of petitioning that he vote for prohibition legislation constitutes a lobby then the Board of Temperance, Prohibition and Public Morals is a lobby several times each year.

So are almost all of the leading church denominations. Almost without exception they have standing committees to which are under instruction to solicit the support of Congressional representatives in behalf of prohibition and these committees appear in Washington for the purpose whenever prohibition legislation is under consideration.

Also the Catholics have headquarters in Washington which they do not hesitate to visit in connection with legislative officials in regard to "Catholic in-

It is the policy of the Board of Temperance, Prohibition and Public Morals of the Methodist Episcopal Church to ignore many allegations intended to affect it injuriously. The Board is concerned with a Cause rather than with its own interest. However, we are not disposed to ignore the recent attack with a Gaius rather than with its other churches. The term "lobby" has been used in reference to the activities of special interests for so long that it has gathered approbrium. In the attempt to apply it to the Board of Temperance, we insist that it has no right to the definition.

If a lobby is an organization engaged wholly or principally in promoting legislation or preventing enactment thereof, the Board of Temperance, Prohibition and Public Morals is not a lobby, for it has no such end in view and effort is so directed.

If a lobby is an organization engaged in promoting legislation for its own selfish reason or to enhance some material interests, the Board of Temperance, Prohibition and Public Morals is not a lobby, for it has no such end in view and effort is so directed. The Board does favor and promote by every legitimate effort the enactment and enforcement of legislation to suppress the legal or illegal traffic in intoxicating liquors. The Board does, by public discussion and agitation, oppose nudity, blasphemy, profanity and the treatment of reviling subjects in the American theater; it does oppose commercialized gambling, prize-fighting and the debauching of the young by peddlars which are inherent or which are clearly intended to excite lascivious feeling.

If a lobby is an organization which promotes legislation by undignified, unbusinesslike or unbecomingly hostile methods, then the Board of Temperance, Prohibition and Public Morals is certainly not a lobby. What it does is to open what it says, it says where all may hear.

If to approach a member of the United States House of Representatives or the United States Senate for the purpose of petitioning that he vote for prohibition legislation constitutes a lobby then the Board of Temperance, Prohibition and Public Morals is a lobby several times each year.

So are almost all of the leading church denominations. Almost without exception they have standing committees which are under instruction to solicit the support of Congressional representatives in behalf of prohibition and these committees appear in Washington for that purpose whenever prohibition legislation is under consideration.

Also the Catholics have headquarters in Washington from which they do not hesitate to visit administrative and legislative officials in regard to "Catholic interests."

Indeed, this work, according to an official report, "has been almost a daily task." It will be very clear to intelligent people that the use of the word "lobby" in attempting to arouse prejudice against the Board of Temperance, Prohibition and Public Morals of the Methodist Episcopal Church is due solely to the fact that the Board vigorously and consistently supports prohibition; a policy in legislation. It may be said in general, the Protestant church members of the country and a very large group of Roman Catholics believe that the most determined resistance to the effort to reestablish a licensed liquor trade is clearly indicated by patriotism and Christianity. No words are strong enough to condemn the effort to work at the name of her son, Mr. G. Newnam.

motives in the corruption of public morals. Respectfully yours,
CLARENCE T. WILSON,
General Secretary of Board of Temperance, Prohibition and Public Morals.
