GOV. ROOSEVELT PROOVING FRIEND OF AGRICULTURE

New York Executive Outlines Taxes by Carrying Out a Policy of State Aid to Schools, Roads, etc.

Franklin D. Roosevelt, vice-presidential candidate in 1920 and successor of Governor Alfred E. Smith of New York for president, is proving himself a friend of agriculture according to dispatches from the east telling what Governor Roosevelt has done for the farmers of New York state since he became Governor. As one of the new steps of Governor Roosevelt's policy of carrying out the New York state's farming program in election, Governor Roosevelt's work is considered of more importance than any other.

Governor Roosevelt is trying to demonstrate, according to leading political writers, that the aid given to agriculture by the state can be more direct than that given by the national government. A state might do so by carrying out the farm relief bill at Washington, the most important work in the field of agriculture under the plan taken by New York state under the leadership of Dr. Deane Perkins, former president of the New York state's farming committee in election. Governor Roosevelt's work is considered of more importance than any other.

The amount which farmers must contribute to support one-room schools is reduced to a fixed tax of four cents on each dollar of farm valuation. All the remainder of the cost of all one-room schools is borne by the state out of general taxation. It is estimated that this will cut farm taxes for school purposes in half.

The cost of building state roads is now taken over by the state. Formerly 75 per cent of the cost was borne by the counties, in which the taxation was mainly borne by farmers.

The contribution of counties, which are mainly rural, to the cost of building state roads is reduced to 1 per cent, the balance being paid by the state and the national funds.

Gasoline consumed by farm tractors not using the roads exempted from the gasoline tax. Agricultural equipment and tractors are exempted from farm taxes.

The direct state tax on real estate, including city and county taxes as well as farm, is abolished.

Expenses for relieving herds is taken over by the individual states, and will be borne wholly by the state.

All these New York steps are in the direct of relieving the farmer of tax. It is in this direction, and through action by state governments, that the remaining needed steps toward farm relief can be taken.

If you don't believe that an under-inflated tire wears out sooner than one properly inflated, run several miles with one tire down and the opposite one at proper pressure. Then get out and feel the tires with your hand. The under-inflated one will be warm, while the other will be cool. Warmth is caused by the excessive flexing of the soft tire's walls, and excessive flexing means excessive wear.

If you happen to be driving a car with under-inflated tires, remember that the driver's attention will be more suddenly than you can keep your distance behind the car ahead.

Word was received in Jerome the first of the week of the marriage of Robert Burns and Ella Dees at Kemmer, Wyoming, on June 4, 1929. They were accompanied by Mrs. Sam Burns and children.

Mrs. Frank Thomas was high and Mrs. John Nims second high the first day and Mrs. Tuttle high and Mrs. Gould second high the second day. Mrs. Gladys Gleason and Glen Smith returned home Sunday from Moscow where they attended school.

There is something akin to adventure and romance in the old winding road that leads to it of the way however. Native charm and unspoiled beauty, as a rule, do not live by the pavement and seldom seen by the average tourist who follows the main highway. Since automobile camping has become a national institution, equipment has been perfected that gives the vacationist a home away from home and permits him to visit such beautiful spots as there with complete independence. GENE TUNNEY, AUTHOR

From Italy comes the rumor that Gene Tunney, retired heavyweight champion of the world, who has been visiting with the world-famous playwright, George Bernard Shaw, contemplates entering the literary field.

George Bernard Shaw is said to have given Gene Tunney encouragement in this new ambition. And so the world is to have a new thrill, seeing a dyed-in-the-wool pugilist turn to the gentle art of letters.

Of course, a not altogether new thrill. Almost every successful sportsman has written articles on sports, or had such articles written for him by ghost writers. However, from Tunney we do not expect a story of his experiences in the ring.

For Tunney's mental make-up is different than that of most pugilists. He typifies the new school of athletes, whose minds are developed as carefully as their bodies. Tunney reads and understands Shakespeare and Shaw, and has the friendship of such literary artists as Thornton Wilder.

Tunney evidently wants to become one of the world's classics—and if he should succeed, it will be among the most remarkable phenomena of modern times, for who would have dreamed that a hand capable of delivering knockout punches could also be employed in the delicate art of penning masterpieces. We have yet to see whether Tunney's pen is more powerful than his punch.

BORDER WARFARE

(A Contributed Editorial)

The long drawn-out wrangling and back-biting in congress over the farm relief bill was no sooner ended by the passing of that measure than another subject arose to cause antagonism just as intense and bitter. This was the prohibition enforcement along the Canadian border, for and against which some U. S. representatives have indulged in almost school-boy tactics to express their heated feelings.

While there are always some men who take advantage of their official badge and abuse the authority they possess, in trying to enforce the laws, the excitement aroused over this situation seems to show that the liquor interests are taking the fullest possible advantage of several recent killings in an effort to put prohibition into disrepute.

Citizens of Canadian border towns where these events have happened have sent such excited appeals as: "For God's sake, help us!" to President Hoover, bolstered with demands that they be "protected" from the "reckless raids and shootings" of the prohibition enforcement officials.

These officials in Washington, as well as the president, have given assurance that towns along the border would be given every protection and that the enforcement officers are already working under rigid regulations in regard to the use of firearms in the defense of law and order.

Newspapers and publications in the country are giving full publicity to the reputed murders of innocent persons, while enforcement officers assert the shootings have been purely accidental, and others have been fully justified by circumstances.

In regard to the death of Arthur Gordon, 20, in New York state, it was alleged that Gordon had left a legitimate job to enter the bootlegging business and that he was shot when his truck loaded with illicit liquor collided with another machine on the highway. Gordon jumped out it is reported, and tried to run away when the officers halted him with a gun, though not with intention to kill, they said.

Such incidents as this are seized on by the liquor advocates to uphold their cause. Senator Brookhart of Iowa, ardent "dry," replied to some of his fellow-congressmen that "it is time to stop all this gush about murders and urge senators to help enforce the law."

To the charge that enforcement officers are shooting indiscriminately at almost every passing automobile, the officials in Washington have replied that 57 enforcement officers have been killed by bootleggers during the last few weeks and that there is an unprecedented gathering of liquor dispensers along the Canadian borders, presumably with the purpose of discrediting the prohibition law in a wholesale way.

President Hoover answered the appeals from Minnesota towns with an expression of regret that killings had occurred, but promising that every charge of misuse of firearms would be investigated and proper action taken. At the same time he stated that the combined activities of the bootleggers on the border were the root of the trouble and that the enforcement officials should have the support of the citizens there in helping to put an end to the work of the international criminals who are operating from New York to Minnesota.

How Long Distance Blue Bell Sign Became the Emblem of the Bell System

Original Bell Design Adopted in 1889

AMUSE S. HILHARD

Designer of the First Blue Bell Sign

By W. C. LANGDON

The appearance of the Blue Bell Emblem on the American Telephone & Telegraph Company's long distance telephones in 1889 marked a significant milestone in the development of the telephone. Alexander Graham Bell invented the telephone in Boston on June 7, 1872. The next year, 1873, he brought it to a state of improvement as was made complete sentences intelligibly. This proving it was a practical and useful invention. In 1876, the telephone entered upon its commercial career, although at first only over private lines. It was not long before the demand came for a new type of telephone, one that would be used for long distance communication. This led to the development of the long distance telephone in 1889.

At that time there was only one experimental long distance line between Boston and New York. This had several purposes: to prove that a long line system was practicable and would prove worth while. Thomas I. Hilditch had invented hand drawn copper wire and developed a method of manufacturing it at feasible rates. John A. Gray and other telephone men in Boston, on the other hand, were working on the principle of transmission and the great new possibilities of the new wire. The building of the first long distance line was begun under Edward J. Hall, Jr., as Vice President and General Manager of the American Telephone & Telegraph Company, and Amuse S. Hilhard as General Superintendent. The first line built was from New York to Philadelphia; there was built a line from New York up the Hudson River to Albany; then another to Philadelphia; then a line to Boston. At the same time the engineers in the instruments and apparatus—better transmitters and receivers, better methods of using the principle of transmission, better apparatus, and the invention of the long distance telephone, for the purpose of overcoming the difficulties in the way of long distance telephony. By the end of 1888 these long distance lines had been brought to such a state that the Telephone Company could start upon a program of long distance service to cover the entire United States. Immediately the problem was that of educating the public to the use of the metallic circuit of the long distance telephone. The local telephone service of the local companies did not require special instruments and apparatus for their communication. The first of a new type of special instruments and the metallic circuit were arranged in the hands of the public. Thereafter, most of a new type of telephone, the public was to be equipped with the metallic circuit. The Blue Bell Sign

In those circumstances in December, 1888, Mr. Hilhard undertook to devise or get a suitable emblem for these signs. Some of the designs submitted to him seemed to have the right suggestion. He was the best of the possibilities. It was the Bell Telephone sign that was being advertised and so he was an appropriate applicant to make as the readily identifiable telephone sign.

The design was still under consideration between the Bell Telephone and other telephone companies. The next indication to emphasize was that of long distance telephony. The local telephone service, accordingly, printed the simple words, Long Distance Telephone, on the both blue for a color finished sign. Therefore he decided on a blue bell with the words printed on it in white letters. This blue bell was the symbol of the Telephone Company. It was the Bell Telephone sign that was being advertised and so he was an appropriate applicant to make as the readily identifiable telephone sign.

Would Take Sound Radio Hours to Complete Journey Radio Makes at Lightning Speed

If radio waves traveled at the same rate as sound waves, it would take approximately four hours to transmit the same message across the Atlantic. The velocity of sound being 750 miles per hour. However, instead of four hours it actually requires one-sixtieth of a second for the spoken word to leap the ocean. The reason being the United States and England when radio telephone messages are sent, the speed of radio waves being 670,000 miles per hour.

The spoken word is now sent across the Atlantic via both short and long wave radio circuits. Such circuits require transmitting and receiving antennas on both sides of the Atlantic so that in all eight such stations are necessary. The long wave receiving station is built on a mountain near the Atlantic coast at Houlton, Maine, for the United States on account of the fact that it is better for long waves, but this does not apply to the same extent with short wave stations. The American short wave receiving station is located near New York City at Nottoway, N. J.
