GRAND LODGE ELECTS OFFICERS FOR ENSUING YEAR

D. O. K. R. Gathers in Candidates and Give Commemorative Parade on the Streets of Twin Falls.

The city of Twin Falls has been in the possession of a knightly host since Monday noon the delegates and members of the state grand lodge Knights of Pythias arrived and they have still the control of the field and are adding to the excitement of the city a considerable extent as they have been gathering in hordes of tyros for the D. O. K. K. and replace the anomaly ones (former) to brand the order upon them.

Monday the band and reception committee aided by every knight on the street met the delegates and escorted them to their various places of entertainment. A number of members of the Pythian Sisters accompanied the visiting delegation and were met by the ladies of the local lodge. Monday night a general reception was given in honor of the guests at the school auditorium and occasion given for the knights and families to meet with the grand lodge members. Chancellor Commander Fitch L. Ball, of the Twin Falls lodge called the assembly to order and called upon President C. E. Booth of the Commercial club to give the address of welcome. Mr. Booth responded in a brief manner and assured the visitors that any thing in the city was at their command and welcomed them to the city on behalf of its citizens.

Chancellor Commander Ball also made a very appropriate address of welcome to the visitors on behalf of the lodge.

Grand Chancellor John H. Aiken of Lewiston responded and spoke of the splendid city which is springing up here and then proceeded to tell something of the many worthy things which the order stands for in the betterment of mankind.

Addresses from a number of grand lodge officials in response to the call of the presiding officer followed. On behalf of the Pythian sisters, Mrs. Mainbridge added her word of welcome and responses were made by Mesdames Gordon and Stevens for the visitors. A recess was declared and the rest of the evening was spent in social intercourse.

Tuesday morning and afternoon were occupied with the grand lodge business. In the evening the visitors and local lodge members attended the production of Nevada by the Pythian dramatic club. The play was heartily enjoyed by the visitors and they were lavish in the praise accorded to the masterly manner with which the local talent gave the thrilling drama. Wednesday the grand lodge continued its session and held the annual election of officers. The result of the election is given below.

Grand Chancellor—W. R. Nixon, Grand Vice Commander—Dr. Shirley, Webster, Grand Prelate—V. T. Elven, Nampa, Grand Keeper of Records and Seal—James H. Harte, Coeur d'Alene, Grand Master of Exchequer—A. W. Post, Rathfrim.

Grand Master of Arms—Clomont, Wilbur, Coeur d'Alene.

Grand Inner Guard—W. R. Nixon, Wednesday evening the D. O. K. K. initiated a class of forty-seven tyros into the mysteries of the exalted order. At eight o'clock the mystic order formed a parade starting from the hall, with the purpose of showing up the contrast of the condition of the victims before and after taking treatment. Attired in Turkish costumes the members of the order led by the band lead their victims along the streets round together while each tyro was politely handed a lemon as a souvenir for later indignities. A live camel with humpers fresh from the desert was lead by one of the head executioners and during the parade the beast made meals of the tyros and unsuspecting small boys who strayed too near, while the rest of the victims wondered when they would be used as chewing gum for the ship of the desert. A couple of the tyros who were too much overcome by the prospect of their fate were carried on a one donkey power-boat to their doom. It is impossible to reckon the casualties at the time of going to press but so far no business houses are draped in mourning and we are hoping for the best.

A feed was given to the surviving victims at the close of the sacrificial rites. Thursday morning and afternoon the guests were given an opportunity to view the Shoshone falls and while there given a picnic luncheon by Mr. Johnson at the Shoshone hotel. The next session of the grand lodge will be held in June of next year at Wallace.

DISTRICT COURT BEGAN ACTIVE WORK MONDAY

The district court convened Monday morning, June 8, after a recess from May 28, and the case of W. G. Stratham, charged with murder, which was given in detail in the Times some time ago was taken up. Moses, Beach, Kimball, Craven and H. W. Jones together with a number of residents filed upon a power-scheme on the Snake river known as the Devils Washboard some time ago the water power being developed by a stream flowing from the Clear Lake.

According to the requirements of the government a certain amount of work for improving such site must be completed within a given time and it is to comply with the law that the holders of the power also mentioned are now working fourteen teams in grading and leveling the ground to make a runway for a flume. The actual work of placing the flume and developing the power will not be considered this year, but the gentlemen will eventually use the falls for power and lighting purposes somewhere in this section of the state.

While Twin Falls was having a snow storm, Nampa was having a gentle shower. Nampa, Leader Herald.

The Times is at a loss to understand why the Herald should just now publish an account of a storm here fast winter, but then Nampa is a little slow and perhaps they will appreciate even late news from the town. The account more appropriate should have read "Twin Falls is having a snow storm while Nampa is merely having a gentle shower."

The bunch of knaves handed Twin Falls by the House of Representatives the Democratic convention in Nevada, a piece of petty jealousy because of the failure of Boise to hog this particular convention as she has attempted to gather all conventions heretofore. If one half of the crowd that flocked into Twin Falls had struck Boise there would have been famine and consternation in the capital city. The truth of the whole affair is that a bunch of politicians from the above town came down to Twin Falls expecting to rub a lot of rubies off the face of the earth and were sore because they were unsuccessful. The Judd seekers had not a complaint to make for their treatment, while here and most of them expressed the opinion that Twin Falls was the best city. In the state, which statement doubtless will not please the very friends of (7) city of Boise.

The expensive Sixtieth Congress adjourned after it had passed the currency bill and given the treasury a job that it will not recover from before the next session. The only really valuable act of the colossal failure known as the Sixtieth Congress was the currency measure and it is a pity that the strength of imagination to be anything but a makeshift which only eliminates possibility of panic without giving any permanent relief in regard to an elastic currency and that the wrangle and discord of the past session will have to be repeated at the next. The Philadelphia Press in a discussion of the scope of the measure gives the following outline of the provisions of the act.

"The Aldrich bill originally provided for the issue of any emergency currency secured by state, city, and railroad bonds. This was likely to be most used by city banks, with a large surplus stock in such securities. The Freedman bill, providing for an emergency currency based on commercial paper, and issued by clearing-houses organized for the purpose, suited best the needs of Western and country banks and Eastern banks with no large investments in bonds.

The measure provides for both emergency currency can be issued to 25 per cent of the market value of state, county, and municipal bonds on the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury. 'National Currency Association' a better term than 'clearing-house associations' of ten banks or more, can issue emergency currency on other bonds and commercial paper in the amount of 75 per cent of their market value. 'This currency is in both cases well secured, as well or better than national bank notes. The redemption fund required, 10 per cent, is twice as large as for them. The tax with which this emergency currency begins, 5 per cent a year for two per cent, might be lower, but is low enough to encourage issue. The various limitations imposed on banks will prevent them from issuing this emergency currency instead of national bank notes.

"Should there be, as there is now a fair prospect, a sudden demand for money to move the crops next September, raising the rate for loans enough above 5 per cent on the new emergency currency, the banks of the country need not turn to the Treasury for their State money, or to the emergency currency. Commercial paper and other bonds option, which will usually have the same banks as the clearing-house, will be good for 75 per cent of the new currency.

"No currency funds can occur under these conditions, and the rate for money or call loans will have an automatic regulation."

NEWSPAPERS BEST

They Have All Other Mediums Beaten to a Frozzle

"A wise paper changes its mind a foolish one never," says Mr. William "Big Boy" Hill, the "California" advertising specialist. His word will justify itself with all possible emphasis by all newspaper publishers. "I have been watching this thing for twenty-five years and have had several opinions of doubt in my mind as to the relative value of different mediums, but I think, on the whole, newspaper is under-estimated. A good newspaper is the cheapest vehicle of communication between the merchant and the local buyers. I am almost tempted to say it is the cheapest at any price. In Santa Barbara the newspapers are strong and the rates very low, but even where the papers are weak and the rates comparatively high the local newspapers have all other advertising mediums beaten to a frazzle."

"Some folks believe in diversified advertising, but they are usually poor advertisers. They follow no system at all as a rule. Diversified advertising sounds well-like diversified crops-but the trouble with its advocates is that they neglect the main issue. A farmer who sows wheat, corn, alfalfa, etc., would not neglect his main crop, whatever it happened to be, but an advertiser who tries a wide range of publicity rarely gives proper attention to his newspaper space."

"Between the merchant who allows his newspaper space to run idle, paying rent for it year after year from force of habit, and the man who doesn't believe in advertising and spends nothing for newspaper space there is little choice. Both these types may be good citizens but they are forerunners of a return to the fossil age. Both are—that is, if increasing one's worldly goods is a main motive."

I heard of a case of two leading citizens of a small city in Illinois, both old settlers in the shoe business, and each of them glared over his ability to get his share of the trade without spending any money for advertising. Suddenly one of them sold his business and retired to the farm. The buyer was a new man in town, not a young man by any means, but a hustler who proceeded to infuse some life into the business. His first move was to paint the entire front of his store a bright red. He introduced red wrapping paper and bought an entire page in the leading paper of the town in which he had his ads printed in red ink. This was a rather expensive matter even for a short time but it paid him. Everyone in the town and surrounding country began to edge up and talk about the red front store, and the natural result was that all the trade went to that store."

"Instances in my personal experience of men who have prospered largely by doubling and tripling the newspaper appropriation are many. In most cases they went to the expense of employing expert help to plan their advertising and inject into the tabular element which is lacking in most newspaper ads. Examples are rare when men have failed in business through a too cautious reluctance in printer's ink. Like other good self newspaper space must be cultivated and not permitted to run wild with the fences down. If a merchant has the time and natural taste for handling his own advertising, it is always better for him to attend to it himself. If he prefers to throw all of his personality into the store management, the buying and selling department and the direct development of the business, he had better farm out his advertising. However, he should see that his advertising methods are in harmony with the store policy and his efforts to develop a good will for his establishment. He may be the strongest character in the community and yet the newspapers will give him a hundred customers where his individual efforts will gain him one."—Idaho Falls Times.

COOLNESS AND NERVE

The Story of the Last Deal in a Lively Game of Poker.

A FORTUNE ON THE TABLE.

The Hand That Won the Rich Stakes and the Man Who Held It—What Senator Sharon Had to Pay to Satisfy His Lingering Curiosity.

There were many lively games of poker played in San Francisco in the old days, and many good stories have been told of the nerve and coolness of the players who participated therein. The following story of one of these games was printed in a San Francisco paper some years ago:

The game was in the early days of his existence was the arena of some of the poker games. Senator Sharon was an enthusiastic lover of the game, and when it happened that Senators Stewart and Jones of Nevada and Judge Dick Meade occurred in the hotel at the same time there was sure to be hot work. It happened upon one of these occasions that a certain Mr. Hall from Boston was at the hotel.

Mr. Hall was a smooth and affable gentleman and completely won Senator Sharon's heart because of his love for Byron and his excellent memory, he being able to quote hundreds of lines of the poet's verse without a halt. Byron was Sharon's favorite land. He had made his works, his life's study, and many one who appreciated him had a call on the senator's friendship.

On a certain evening the three senators and Judge Meade met in the hotel. It was just before dinner, and while they were chatting Mr. Hall put in an appearance. Mr. Sharon at once introduced Mr. Hall to his friends and invited the party to dinner, which was served in Senator Sharon's room.

After dinner Meade proposed a little game of "draw." No one said nay, though Mr. Hall diffidently remarked that they did not play much in Boston, where he came from, but that still he was willing to stand in and do his best.

"Look out for Hall," remarked Sharon. "I never heard a man make that remark yet who was not to be watched." He spoke in jest, but his words were worth.

The cards were produced, and the game at a dollar ante was inaugurated. There was no limit. Now, with such veterans as Meade, Jones and Stewart the pot was not allowed to get cold for lack of chipping. The men played with varying success, and things ran pretty even for an hour or so. Mr. Hall was cautious and dribbled away his chips with his fingers. After one of Hall's deals Mr. Stewart hopped in with a twenty dollar bet. Jones, evidently pleased with his hand, saw him and went $50 better. Meade and Sharon were not afraid and took some of the pot themselves. Mr. Hall, the dealer, scanned his hand carefully and concluded that there was something in it for him. All drew—Hall one card—and then the fun began. Round and round again went the "deal." Stewart and Jones dropped out. Meade stood a few more raises and then retired, leaving the fight to Sharon and Hall. There was by this time $200 in the pot.

"I'll raise you $10,000," Mr. Hall, said Sharon, his thin lips set and his voice low and determined.

Hall's answer was to ring the bell, and when the waiter appeared he handed him for a blank California bank check.

"I presume, gentlemen, my check is as good as cash," he said politely. "Certainly, sir," replied Senator Sharon. "You see our checks in the pot already."

Slowly and deliberately Hall filled out the check, signed it and spread the blotter over it without a tremor. Then he pushed it quietly to the center of the table and said:

"I have seen your $10,000, senator, and go you $15,000 better."

Sharon looked at him steadily for some moments. Hall's composure was perfect. There was a half smile of confidence on his face, but no indication of boastfulness or excitement.

"Mr. Hall," said Sharon, "I feel sure you hold the better hand, and I do not care to waste my money. The pot is yours, sir."

Without any appearance of exultation Hall raised in his eyes, turned his checks, separated them and put them in his pockets. Meanwhile his hand lay face down upon the table.

"Mr. Hall," said Sharon, "I will give you $100 if you will show me your hand."

"Senator, Sharon," replied the Bostonian, "it is not enough. Nor would I show it to you now for $1,000. Still, to satisfy your curiosity, I will put this hand in an envelope, seal it up in your presence and put it in the hotel safe, to be called for by you ten days hence, but upon this condition: That you will put $250 in an envelope, to go into the hotel safe and to be delivered to me nine days hence."

Sharon reflected for a few minutes. It was a struggle between curiosity and cold. Finally curiosity conquered, and both envelopes were sealed and the custody of the clerk of the hotel. When the ten days elapsed, Mr. Sharon called for his package and examined the hand—nothing but a pair of deuces and ten high. He had been the victim of a colossal bluff.

Great American Circus Coming.

In the olden days how happy we little fellows used to be when we heard the circus was coming to town.

We would try to crawl in under the canvas and see the show. When we could not get in this way, don't you remember how we would try to crawl in under the canvas only to be taken out and how wide our eyes would open at the sight of the big elephants and the big giraffes and the big camels.

Well, circuses have never seemed the same. The big new-fangled ones we see these days are all going at once does not seem to satisfy.

Friday and Saturday, June 12 and 13 you will have the opportunity to see the genuine old-fashioned one-ring circuses, with the funny old clowns and trapeze ponies, dogs and monkeys.

Bring the children! It will be a good night to see the show.

THE SNOW PEOPLE.
(Original)
A blizzard on the plains—I have seen one; I never wish to see another. All that terrible white of snow. If it had come occasionally to give the brain a rest, it would not have been so hard to bear, but it never comes. We were only ourselves, there was nothing else to see but the boundless plain, and that was shut from our vision by the snow. We were prepared for the storm, having wagons, tents and the wherewithal to make hot coffee, and should have considered ourselves well off. We would have been had it not been for that terrible, never-ending whir.

The next morning the storm abated, and we moved on. About noon we came upon a slight rise where the snow lay underfoot, the remains of a campfire in the center. We brushed the snow from the heaps and uncovered two men and a woman. The woman was wrapped in all the blankets that the party had possessed. I put a pocket-knife to the mouth of each person, and the woman alone responded, she said a faint "yes" on the glass. We poured whiskey down her throat and chafed her. She opened her eyes and in a short time could speak to us, but we waited till the next day for her story.

"We had horses and a wagon. I don't know where the horses are now. When we saw the storm coming we thought the first thing to do was to get firewood, but since there was none we broke up the wagon.

"I don't remember much of what happened. All I know is that now and again my husband came to me with a blanket. I closed my eyes to shut out the whirling snow that was making my brain sick, but they wouldn't let me keep them closed. They kept shaking me to keep me awake. I saw them putting on the fire the pieces of the wagon, but they used them sparingly.

"Presently I saw a flock of white wolves circling around us, and it seemed that the men were keeping up the fire to prevent their closing in and devouring us. Presently one of the men would seize a firebrand and hurl it at a wolf. They were circling, always circling, to our heads. I closed my eyes again, and when I opened them the wolves were gone, but something far more terrible had taken their place. Snow people were whirling where the wolves had whirled. Oh, how cold they looked out of their dreadful eyes. They instead of the wolves were now trying to kill us.

"Every now and again one of the snow people would try to seize one of our men, but he would take up a firebrand and that was enough. The snow men would withdraw. I saw one of our men stagger away from the fire. A snow woman took him and pressed her lips tight to his. Then she opened her arms, and he fell from a stiff.

"After that the snow people drifted nearer. I saw one man come and stand around me. You may think it was to protect me from the cold and the drift. No, it was to keep off the snow. I was sitting on the fire, and that the man, I felt the snow people wanted me for they were all looking at me out of their eyes and looking to me. There were four of our men now, and one of them seized a firebrand and advanced a few paces toward me. The snow people could not stand the heat of the brand and did with a shriek.

Little Mrs. Patton.

(Copyright, 1927, by Homer Sprague.)

Little Mrs. Patton, as we called her, though she had registered as Mrs. Judge Patton, had arrived without her husband leaving Chicago an associate judge but had been told by the judge that he had not been in the city for some time. He had sent his wife in and would join her within a week.

At the end of the week the judge did not appear. He wrote a letter instead. The letter was shown to the landlord and then "needlessly" left on a table in the parlor for half a day, and it was doubtless read by a score of the female guests. He would be coming another week, much to his wife's surprise, but surely arrive then. There was a reprint of the letter head to show that the judge belonged to a high court, and in the letter he inclosed a draft on New York for a hundred dollars. If there was any doubt about Mrs. Patton's social status the letter settled it. The husband wrote that she had been inspired after a period of illness, and of us knew to be prominent in society.

Little Mrs. Patton had been with us eight days when there was a robbery in the house—the first for five years. There was no dress except at dinner Sunday evening, and then for such a lot of conservative people as we were there were quite a number of jewels.

A lady who had not out her diamonds to wear was called from the room a moment, and when she returned the diamonds were gone. The value was about $2,000, but the excitement kicked up was valued at five times as much. The thief was told to the chambermaid, to a waiter and to others, but to such cases nothing can be done but to suspect. We all talked, and we all sympathized and suggested, and little Mrs. Patton adorned herself with $5,000 worth of diamonds and acknowledged that she was very careless and expected to be robbed herself some day.

Patton explained to you that the regular doors had been taken off for the summer and replaced by shut or blind doors to permit of free circulation. There was a space of about a foot at top and bottom, and no watchmen were kept to the blinds at night. As these shut doors looked, the idea was that the thief was slim enough to slip over or under them. There were perhaps ten beds at the hotel with their curtains, but none were kept in the room. In fact, the detective who was summoned and came down as a guest could not find a thing to find a suspicion on. After working his head for a day he recommended that watchmen be stationed in the halls and went his way. Girls were placed on watch. Nothing occurred Monday night, but Tuesday night there followed three more robberies of rooms. The plunder was about the same before the end of the robbery were husbands and wives. In the third was a woman whose husband had taken a run up to town on business. Not one of them had been watched, but none were kept in the room. In fact, the detective who was summoned and came down as a guest could not find a thing to find a suspicion on.

Wednesday night I went to bed to sleep soundly, but I had my plans for the following night. I had an old back chair and I had a new bed. Little Mrs. Patton noted no difference from the other ladies. She was free to talk, about the robbery and had taken her jewels to the office or had at least handed in a case. She was the only one as you are prepared to hear, but not one professional detective in a hundred would have had the slightest suspicion of her.

Thursday night I did something very smart. I crawled under instead of into the bed. I expected the thief to come, and I meant to make a capture. I had a black belt with me and ropes for tying the rascal, and I had a new bed. Little Mrs. Patton noted no difference from the other ladies.
