

BRIEF COUNTY CONVENTION

Work of Delegates Shortened by Primary Results

AGITATION TO OVERTURN PRIMARY VOTE KILLED.

County Ticket As Chosen By Primary Vote Endorsed by Convention Platform With Local Option and Direct Primary Planks.

The convention was called to order by C. D. Thomas, chairman of two county central committee, who in a brief speech spoke of the bright outlook for republican victory in the county, state and nation. He then called for nominations for temporary chairman and secretary. J. F. Hansen of Rock Creek was nominated for chairman, and J. R. Hinton of Hansen for secretary, and both were elected by acclamation.

The chairman appointed M. J. Sweeney of Twin Falls to escort Mr. Hansen to the platform, who responded by thanking the convention for the honor conferred and said that in his opinion there was no work for the convention to do but, in endorsing the notion of the primaries, he then called upon the convention for their pleasure. E. H. Rettig of Plover attempted to introduce a resolution, but C. D. Thomas of Twin Falls pointed the floor and called for the appointment of the committee on platform and resolutions, to consist of one delegate from each precinct, each precinct to propose its own committee man. Following is the committee:

A CARNIVAL AND COUNTY FAIR

Nat Reits to Bring Big Show Here Next Month

COUNTY FAIR UNDER DIRECTION OF COMMERCIAL CLUB.

October 19th to 25th Set As The Dates For One of The Biggest Amusement Carnivals Ever Held in Twin Falls County.

After considerable hard work on the part of the Commercial Club, Nat Reits' big carnival show has been secured for the week beginning October 19th. This company has the reputation of putting up one of the best street carnivals in the country, and come here under a liberal guarantee from the merchants. They have fourteen tent shows all clean and up-to-date, and besides give four big free evenings, both afternoon and evening. One of the whitest tents is Val's, located on the east street, which is positively brought off. Rates on the railroads are always secured and the Missidala branch is invited to participate in the big doing.

In connection with the carnival the merchants are going to give liberal premiums for horticultural and farm products and the farmers are urged to send in their exhibits as they have formerly done to the county fair.

POMEROY-CALVERT WEDDING.

A very pretty home wedding took place at Fish Trap on Sept. 15, Mabel daughter of Mr. and Mrs. E. E. Calvert, one of the prominent ranchmen of the Big Hole basin, was united in marriage at noon to Mr. William Pomero, the Rev. H. A. Carabian officiating. Mr. Pomero's brother was best man and Miss Calvert's sister was bridesmaid. After a sumptuous wedding dinner the wedding party returned to Anaconda. Mr. and Mrs. Pomero took the evening train for Salt Lake. After a wedding trip of several weeks they will return to occupy a new home being now prepared for them near Mr. Calvert's home in the Big Hole—Anaconda Standard. The young people are now in this city the guests of the groom's father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. Pomero, and will remain for several days after which they will return to their Montana home.

SENATOR HEYBURN AS A CAMPAIGNER

Twin Falls Given a Treat Tuesday Evening

JUDAH'S SENATOR SCORES BRYAN'S POLICY OF REPUDIATION.

Heyburn Explains Position With Regards to Primary System—Answers Statesman's Assail With Convincing Argument.

Senator and Mrs. Heyburn arrived in town on the regular passenger train was escorted to the Ferrine by the members of the Taff club of this city, of whom were headed by the gorgeous paragon of red, white and blue, with pictures of the Republican national candidates in tow. During the afternoon the senator made the rounds of the city and visited all of his many friends. At seven-fifteen the Twin Falls band gave a concert in the Ferrine court in honor of the distinguished guest. The concert drew a large crowd and a great deal of merited applause. The improvement in the music furnished by the band has been noted in the local music journals and awakened the city to the fact that the home organization composed very favorably with any outside organization.

The rank was jammed full long before the senator's appearance, and many had to stand through the entire exercises. The arrival of the guests of honor was the signal for an outbreak of enthusiasm which showed the great regard with which the state's senatorial senator is held in this section which has often been the irrigated section are appreciated.

Attorney W. P. Guthrie, candidate for county attorney, introduced the Republican party. He written in the history of the platform, and in the laws of the country, and the declaration of the Chicago convention are merely a summing up of the principles of the Republican party. What is it? What does it mean? It does not mean a mere slogan, but a code of action that shall be the basis upon which the government itself shall stand.

Mr. Chairman, Fellow Citizens. Nowhere in the state of Idaho do I meet the same character of audience as that which greeted me at the meeting as you do, probably every state in the Union, so far as your republican sentiment is concerned, you bring together a condition of mentality that is most unusual. As a rule I go into the communities of this state and see in many places a large proportion of the citizens that I have been accustomed to see far away from this country. You have in the early days settled in this territory perhaps, and grown up through the stages of development of what we now have as the state of Idaho. Most of you have resided in this country more than a generation ago. Four years ago I drove in a carriage over what is now known as the City of Twin Falls and through the surrounding country, and there was no one to meet us. There had been a city and a plan marked out on paper, a copy of which I have with me. I saw where the City of Twin Falls was to be located, but there was nothing there to indicate government. There was nothing here to indicate any sentiment against anything. The soil was here, just as rich then as today, just as it had been for thousands of years perhaps; the climate was here just as genial as it is today. The river flowed through the banks of the Snake just as it does today, and there was, as I repeat, no government. I merely make this remark in connection with the founding of this city, and through it, what it is that makes a country? The people. Whether they have a desert, or an oasis like the land along the Snake river, it is the people and the people only that make a country. Therefore the thing to fear is not the people, but the government, whether they have in it, or whether they are together as they have in this country, a new community, strangers to each other, and they are required from the nature of their arrival to participate in the functions of government, to exercise their respective duties as self-governing people, and they may more or less at a loss. There is a lack of knowledge on the part of every one as to when people have fitness for office, and of course every individual, naturally, and very naturally, undertakes to maintain individual principles, and the government of their own profession, and to secure their adoption by the community.

You have hundreds and hundreds of different people, and they are hampered and moulded and crystallized into a community of thought. This is absolutely necessary to constitute a government because of course the intentions of no one person, or color of persons can prevail as against a majority of a community. Under our system of government the majority must rule, and the minority must submit.

THE TAXPAYERS WANT BONDS

Court House Bond Issue Brings Out Unanimous Approval

TAXPAYER SAYS INCREASE IN TAXES IS NOT PARLAMENT.

Protection Should Be Given to the County, Reverts—Civil Pride Demands that a Liberal Policy Be Emphasized in Erection of Public Buildings.

Editor of Times: When considering public improvements, persons should think of the public and issue made on the general plan. The worth of a man's citizenship is always tested when the spending of a few dollars outweighs his desire for civic progress. The building of a court house from the status of tax payers should always be considered in the light of what is best for the whole community. Without such a consideration of public school house could be built, nor a public improvement made. I believe that the bond issue and do not believe that the increase in taxes will be heavy enough to make any difference when the increased valuation is considered.

GEORGE B. HANTA, Manager of Idaho Department Store.

Editor Times: Your request for my idea of court house bonds at hand, and I can see no reason why any property owner in Twin Falls county should look upon the proposition with the least grain of suspicion, when he stops to consider that in the center clerk's office of public records at present, and the damaging and lasting results should be considered.

In this case it would cost as much to partially replace (and they could be partially replaced) these records as it would cost to build a court house and it would place titles throughout the entire county in such a condition that it would be almost impossible to transfer real estate for years to come, as no one would care to accept the title as the buyer from the best would be wary of such a title as could be produced under such conditions, as there might be some record in the center clerk's office of judgment filed or some cloud that he could not find verification on any abstract, and the tax payer's office probably cost the county more for office rents combined with full rents and care for prisoners under present conditions. It is probable that court house bonds would be, and when it is paid the taxpayer has nothing to show for his protection. Then speak of it all as something that will spring fresh in the heart of every resident of the county, and that it will cost less than any other source so great, that we can't afford to stick back with "good enough" or anything.

Who is the man on the tract that don't want to point with pride to an aquatic structure as part of our court house. Yours truly, C. E. BOOTH.

Booth Dry Goods Co.

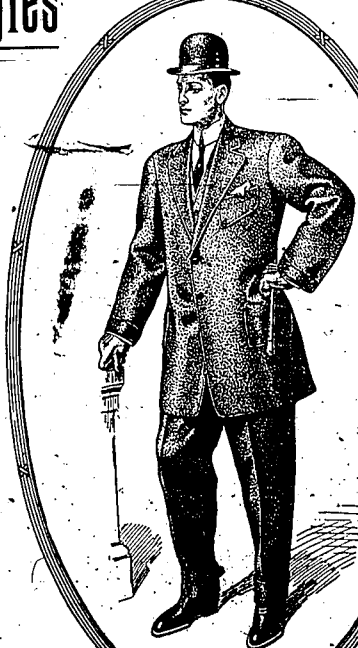

To the Editor of the Twin Falls Times. Dear Sir:—In compliance with your request for my views regarding the proposed bond issue which is to be voted on, on the 6th of October, will say that in my judgment we should all vote in favor of it. Our county officers are badly handicapped for lack of room, and our recorder's office is especially crowded. It is probable that the erection of an absolutely unsafe place in which to keep the county records.

I have examined the vault in which the records are kept, and I quite agree with Mr. West, the recorder, in the opinion that the vault offers practically no protection for the records. Our county has grown enormously and we already have thousands of records, which, if destroyed by fire, would mean a total loss of our county property holder in the county. In your last issue you gave an estimate of the interest in taxes which the bond issue would cause, and the amount is so insignificant, and the benefits to be derived are so great, that I do not see how we could afford to do otherwise than to vote in favor of the issue.

Coming to our county's splendid financial condition I believe there will be no trouble in floating an issue of $150,000.00 of 5 per cent bonds at par, and possibly they might be sold at a small premium. If these bonds were to run for 10 or 15 years, and the interest on them, the assessed valuation of our county will have increased to such an extent that they can be retired without any tax payer feeling the burden. The progress which we have made

PUMPKIN PIES
Do you know what makes the difference between a good and a poor Pumpkin Pie? The pumpkin used is about the same in a good pie as in a poor one. The other ingredients—milk, eggs, sugar, spices, etc., used in liberal, instead of stingy quantities, make the difference. The baker who says, "Oh, half of those eggs, or one-third of that milk will make a cheaper pie and that will sell all right," can never make a good pie. It is impossible to make a good pie by leaving out the good things. Our Pumpkin Pies are made to taste good.
"They tell at the table"
Forget your notion that a baker's pumpkin pie cannot taste good, and try one of ours. Fresh every day in time for lunch, at 20 cents each.

did not see her; I don't know whether or not you took her."
"I have already told you that I did not take her," said Steward, turning white.
"You told that to the governors too, tell them what if you like. I decline to discuss this matter with you. I decline to countenance your unwarranted intrusion into what you pretend to believe are my private affairs. I decline to confer with Helwetter or Mortimer. It's enough that you are included in middle." His cold anger was uttering. He rose to his full, muscular height, slow, meaning, his long pale fingers twisting his silky beard. "It's enough that you meddle," he repeated. As for the matter in question, a dozen men, including myself, heard you make a wager, and later I myself was a witness that the terms of that wager had been carried out to the letter. I know absolutely nothing except that, Mr. Steward; nor, it appears, do you, for you were drunk at the time, and you have admitted it to me."
"I have asked you," said Steward, rising and very grave, "I have asked you to do the right thing. Are you going to do it?"
"Is that a threat?" inquired Quarrier, showing the edges of his well kept teeth. "In this neighborhood, Mr. Steward? Do I understand that you are proposing to bespatter others with scandal unless I am frightened into doing to the governors with the filly's excuse you attempt to offer me? In other words, Mr. Steward, are you bent on making me pay for what you believe you know of my private life? Is a really intimidation?"
"And still Steward started into his half veiled, sneering eyes, speedily." "There is only one name used for this kind of filly," added Quarrier, taking a quick involuntary step backward to the door as the blaze of fury broke out in Steward's eyes.
"Good God, Quarrier," whispered Steward with dry lips, "what a cur you are! What a cur!"
And lo! after Quarrier had passed the door and disappeared in the corridor, Steward stood there, from motionless under the icy waves of rage that swept him.

Toward midnight, seated in his chair by the window, a dented his head, weighing his head, he heard the steps of people on the stairway, the click of the ascending elevator, gay voices calling good night, a ripple of laughter, the silken swish of skirts in the corridor, doors opening and closing then silently creeping throughout the house on the receding heels of departure. For a long while he sat there listening.
The cool water from the ocean blew his thoughts far into the room, where they belted out, dithering, danting, subsiding, only to rise again in the freshening breeze. He sat watching their silken convolutions, stately, for awhile, then he closed his eyes, and raised the window on the south for purposes of air.
As he turned to adjust his trousers, something white thrust under the door, caught his eye, and he walked over and drew it across the sill. It was a sealed note. He opened it, realizing it as he walked back to the droplight burning beside his bed.
"Did you not mean to say goodbye? Because it is to be goodbye for a long time for all our lives as long as we live—long as the world lasts and longer. Good-bye, my dear, to say to you."
He stood studying the note for awhile. Presently, lighting a match, he set fire to it and carried it blazing to the window and flung it, watching the blackened ashes, and his glow, with him and fell in back to the hearth. Then he went out into the corridor which led to the bay window. There was nobody there. Moving swiftly, he walked the length of the corridor and, halting at her door, knocked once.
After a moment the door swung open. He stepped forward into the room, closing the door behind him, and confronted the tall girl standing there silhouetted against the lamp behind her.
"You are insane to do this," she whispered. "I let you in for fear you'd knock again!"
"I went to the bay window," he said.
"You went too late. I was there an hour ago. I waited. Do you know what time it is?"
"Come to the bay window," she said, her eyes fixed on him.
"Do you know it is nearly 3 o'clock?" she repeated. "And you leave at 6."
"Signal me say goodbye here?" he asked coolly.
"Certainly, I dare not go out. And you—do you know the chances we are running? You must be perfectly mad to come to my room. Do you think anybody could have seen—heard you?"
"No. Good night!" He offered his hand. She laid both of hers in it. He could scarcely distinguish her features where she stood stark against the brilliant light behind her.
"Good-bye," he whispered, clasping her hands where they lay in his.
"Good-bye." Her fingers closed convulsively, retaining his hands. "I hope—I think that you"—Her hand was drooping. She could not control her voice.
"Good-bye, Sylvia," he said again.

It was quite useless—she could not speak, and when he took her in his arms she clung to him, quivering, and he kissed the wet lashes and the hot, trembling lips and the smooth little hands crushed to his breast.
"We have a year yet," she gasped. "I—I simply cannot endure this. I told you to take me—take me from myself. Will you do it? I will love you—truly, truly! Oh, my darling, my darling! Don't—don't give me up! Can't you do something for me? Can't you?"
"Will you come with me now?"
"How can?"
"Will you?"
A sudden sound broke out in the night—the distant peeling of the lodge wheels, the sharp rattle of the horse's hoofs somebody in the adjoining room had sprung to the floor and was opening the window.
"What is it?" she motioned, with quivering lips. "Quick, oh, quick, before you are seen! Grace may come! I—I beg of you to go!"
As he stepped into the corridor he heard below a sound at the great door and the stirring of the night watchman on post. At his own door he turned, listening to the movement and whistling. Ferrall, in dressing gown and slippers, stepped into the corridor. He wore the chains were rattling in his belt, and he was on his feet, as if he had just parley at the door, sounds of retreating steps on the gravel outside, sounds of approaching steps on the stairway.
"What's that? A telegram?" said Ferrall, looking at Steward.
"Wait! It isn't for me. It's for Mr. Steward!"
Steward's hazel eyes stared and stared at the scrawled and hilly message.
"Your mother is very ill. Come at once. The signature was the name of their family physician, Grady."

CHAPTER EIGHT

By January the complex social life of the metropolis was well in its stride. The last stirrings of the December blizzard had returned from the country. Those of the same kind outward bound for a southern or other winter had departed, and the uttering machine, every part assembled, re-furbished, repolished and connected, having been given preliminary speed tests at the horse show and a tuning up at the office, was now running under full velocity, and its steady, undulating whirled the entering pulse of the city, keying it to a sublimely associated rhythm.
It was an open winter in New York and financially a prosperous one, and that meant a brilliant social season. Three phenomena particularly characterized that metropolitan winter—the reckless race for money, the exultation through the mediums of bridge and roulette; the incorporation of a company known as the Intercountry Electric company, capitalized at a figure calculated for net profit, and so far without any avowed special policy other than that which served to decorate a portion of its charter which otherwise might have remained ornately neglected; the retirement from active affairs of Stanley S. Quarrier, the father of Howard Quarrier, and the election of the son to the presidency of the Metropolitan Loan and Trust company, with its network system of dependent, subsidiary and allied corporations.
The day that the newspapers gave this interesting information to the world, Leroy Mortimer, on being notified that he had overdrawn his account with the Metropolitan Loan and Trust, began telephoning in every direction until he located Beverly Plank at the St. Berard's, and after a long and exclusive but not to compromise Plank's private chances for something better. Mortimer crawled out of his hammock, saying that the desk clerk would call, and entered the reading room, where Plank sat writing a letter.
Beverly Plank had grown stouter since he had returned to town from Black Hills, but his increase of weight was evenly distributed over his six feet odd, which made him only a trifle more ponderous and not alarmingly fat. But Mortimer had become enormous. He had the appearance of a man whose car laces, buttons and halged above his collar. Customs of it padded the backs of his hands and fingers. Shaving left his heavy, distended face congested and unpleasantly red. He was naturally friendly and good as ever, and he wore that satisfied air of property which had always been one of his most important assets. The social campaign inaugurated by the Metropolitan Loan and Trust company Plank, but so far received no serious reverses. His box at the horse show, of course, produced merely negative results. His box at the opera might mean something some day. His name was up at the Loox and the Virtuans. He had endowed a ward in the new pavilion of St. Berard's hospital. He had presented a fine Gainsborough, and he had given $10,000 to the Metropolitan museum, and it was rumored that he had consulted several bishops concerning a new chapel for that huge bastion of the citadel of faith looming above the metropolitan wilderness in the north.
Meanwhile he was doggedly dole. His huge house, facing the wintry park midway between the squat palaces of the wealthy peers and the other hundreds remaining vacant empty save for certain afternoon conferences of very solemn men, fellow directors and associates in business and financial matters—save for the perpetual presence of the Mortimers.

After a newspaper man has yelled himself hoarse in an effort to persuade people to patronize home industries and accidentally tumbles by the fact that some fellows he is trying to protect are sending away for their job printing or are using printed matter sent out by patent medicine houses, soap factories or other prize-purchase something-for-nothing outfits, it rather shows his confidence in him and makes rectitude look like a fool-dime with holes in it.—Boise Bulletin.

HOW TO WIN.
(City W. O. Wann, Twin Falls, Idaho.)
Most all the world's a lottery
And many blanks within,
But they who dare not take a chance
Can never hope to win.
The miners climb the mountain peaks
And there their work they try,
For well they know unless they try
They cannot hope to win.
They delve in earth among the rocks
Where "colours" are but thin,
But if they do not dig and delve
They cannot hope to win.

HEYBURN AS A CAMPAIGNER

American people meet this competition with other lands in our own markets? It was the first question that received attention of congress when it assembled. The first act passed by American congress was a protective tariff act which contains the first phase of legislation on the status of the United States. This was the first question of importance, because it was for this purpose that government was formed; for the purpose of considering the different between a state and the people of that state and the protecting of the people of that state against the competition of other countries. Why?—let us illustrate. What the people of this valley need is a market. It would make little difference how much you produce if you had no market for it. Of course if you consumed all your produce you would be happy and contented, but you would gain nothing by it. If you produce all they produce they gain nothing in return. It is only when you produce surplus that you are gaining in wealth. In order to do above what you consume that you are adding to your wealth, it is only when you have something to sell that you can build up a market for your produce—and that is the important issue with the people of this valley. You must have a good market—a market in which you may sell your surplus, and a market in which you shall not meet an unjust competition in the sale of your produce. That is what you need in order to build up and continue the prosperity of government that will furnish you a good market for the produce of the United States depends in a large measure upon the protective tariff policy of the government. If the door is thrown open and the produce of other countries is admitted to your market to compete with the products of your country, your market will be affected. For instance you produce hay on this new land, there is a duty of $4.00 a ton on hay. No hay can come across the border and compete with you in the market unless they pay a $4.00 duty, and when they have paid $4.00 for this privilege, they cannot undersell you without making money. This is the protective tariff. The duty on horses is $25.00 per head. No Canadian horses or horses outside of the tariff States can enter this country without paying this duty or fine of $25.00 per head, and when they have paid it, they cannot undersell you in the market. And the duty upon another article that you produce in this valley is a duty of 25c per bushel. No wheat from any other country can come into this market without first paying this duty of 25c per bushel and when they have paid it their wheat has cost them so much that they cannot undersell you. Just a few instances of the doctrine of protection. This is the policy of the Republican party. It has enacted whenever it power, a sufficient and adequate protective tariff statute. Today we have what is known as the Dingley bill. There has come out a cry over it that this is undesirable; that it costs the farmer; that it does not work evenly. That law was enacted in 1887, and was some years ago. The balance needs adjusting. The party that made the Dingley law is the best party in the world. And it has defeated its intentions and has protected the people that it will readjust it to meet the existing conditions and they will if they are retained in power, so that they can do so. The Republican party has never failed to keep a promise made to the American people. (Cheering and cries of "That's so.") It has not only the will to do so, but the ability to do so. The record of its promises kept is found in the statistics in force today. When it came into existence first it was to meet a condition now abhorred by all civilized people, the condition of slavery. The first promise it made after coming into power was the promise that it would abolish slavery. It kept that promise at a great cost of life and money, yet it kept that promise. It promised to restore the balance of industrial conditions, that it would bring about the reestablishment of the balance of the industrial conditions. It kept that promise. It promised the American people that it would not protect the rest of the world against the American people, in spite of the threat of the Democratic party, that to do so was being hazardous to the American people. It brought no dangerous but brought conditions of prosperity that had not existed prior to that time. Can any person here else any promise that it has failed to keep? There was no answer in this. When power came upon us the Republican party has the hand to reach out speedy relief. Like the one of last fall, that destroyed the best above the ground until it was destroyed and confidence and prosperity restored to the people. It was only a few months since it first appeared among the people, and today there is not a vestige of it. I speak this because I have taken a great deal of pains to order that I may not make a mistake. There is employment for every man in the country for every one that seeks it. There is employment for every dollar that they can invest. It has increased the value of the produce of the soil or of merchandise. It was merely a bankers' game of short duration, and it was destroyed by Republican governmental ability. Compare this with the industrial plan of 1895—a plan that has been in power. That rendered your farms apparently valueless; that brought famine and disaster to the land that there was no market for the produce. Wheat and other products of the farm found no market. There was no money with which to buy them; and then went up and down the land without employment; desperate in their poverty; but farmers, but men who wanted to work; men who had families to support, and wanted to support them, were without means of a government that shall bring prosperity to a people. I say that the principles of a government are of the first importance, but it is likewise important that men to secure under these their best effects, be ruled by the voice of the majority. The Republican party standing upon these principles, upon its great record of achievement, has nominated for its president and vice president men who have the confidence of the people of the United States. (Applause.) When the people placed in nomination Wm. H. Taft, they did not do so lightly, nor did they disregard his record. He has been tried in every walk of life and found true. Educated, as he was in one of the best educational institutions in the world—Yale College—when he stepped out of that institution with its guarantee as to his fitness for citizenship, he did not enter upon a life of idleness and luxury, he continued to strive. He went to work. He was made prosecuting attorney for the county in which he was elected. He held this position on account of the ability he had displayed in the performance of his duties. Then he was appointed to the supreme bench. The government recognizing his ability made him one of its highest and appointed him justice general of the country. He held the second highest office in the department of justice. Performing these duties with ability, he was appointed chief justice of the supreme bench. He went to the circuit bench in the court of appeals for 10 years, making a record of irresponsible people and placed them on a higher plane than they had occupied. This was done by the board of which he acted as chairman. He was next called to take the portfolio of the secretary of war. He had this up to the year he was nominated by the nomination James Sherman as Panama canal under his direction; with the differences in Cuba to adjust; and now we place him in a candidate before you as the great conservator of the good of the American people. (Loud cheering.) As his assistant, we nominate Mr. Bryan, chief of New York, who has sat in the congress of the United States for 20 years, as a recognized leader of the principles of the party, and stands as one of the foremost men in the party he represents. Those are the candidates for president and vice president. What have we on the other side of the platform? (Laughing and cries of "Nothing.")

When the Democratic party came into power in 1893, for the first time in many years they repealed the tariff law which had been enacted by the Republican party and substituted the Gorman bill, and its articles of free trade, and offered you the free ownership of the land. The American people repudiated it in 1896. And Mr. Bryan has repudiated it since then and does not stand for it. (Laughter and cheering.) They stood for it in 1896, and repealed it in 1900, and they repu-

lated it in 1907, and when it has been repudiated by the party which gave it birth, why should we not repudiate it too? (Laughter.) In 1892 the Republican party said to them, "Come in and walk on the plank; you are down in the gutter." But they walked on and in 1896 Wm. J. Bryan pronounced his "Cross of Thorns and Cross of Gold," and they are thinking about these yet. When we said to you that we could give you back all that you had lost, you said we stamped the mud off your feet and humped high and dry upon the platform of prosperity, but some of you placed your hope in Bryan and the Democratic party, and by and by in 1896 the people of the United States just reached out and caught Idaho by the scruff of the neck and set her up on the platform, and said, "Stand there you little rascal, on the hope of prosperity." And we rebelled just like a bad child, but they said, "Stand there on the plank; don't let us see you off the plank again." Wool jumped from 6 to 16c; hay, cattle, horses, who has seen his back to good prices, and they made us prosperous in spite of ourselves. Most of you are strangers to the Democratic party, so I will tell you that for 14 years we never participated in the selection of a president. The first time we gave our vote, we cast them for a man whose name has been forgotten. We threw away the vote of our self-government, we gave cast our vote for Bryan. But we kept getting wiser, and the scales dropped from our eyes, and in 1901, for the first time, Idaho cast its vote for President and gave 23,203 majority for Roosevelt. (Great cheering and clapping) and re-elected ourselves from the charge of unfitness for self-government; and we do not propose to reduce this a single vote at the coming election, when we will cast our votes for Taft and Sherman. (Applause.) Compare the individuality and character of the two candidates for president. Mr. Bryan rose to prominence and fame in an hour. (Shouts.) In an hour of Democratic frenzy when the Democrats had lost what wisdom and common sense they possessed and were up in the air, for a candidate, this man from Nebraska presented something about an imaginary crown of thorns and cross of gold, this man was placed as a candidate upon the Democratic ticket, and when the American people were given a chance they repudiated him and his platform.

I saw it published in the papers that in the state convention, I had made the statement that men were not bound by their pledges, and that the convention had no right to bind any man to the performance of any special duty. Those of you who were there know that what I did say was true. That you were bound by their pledges when those pledges were made in authority. Now the duties of the members of the legislature are personal and the only tribunal that has power to instruct him is the state convention. I said that if the state convention undertook to pledge the members of the legislature to certain legisla-

A COMMUNICATION.

Copied, Idaho, Sept. 7, 1908.
Mr. Darlow, Esq., Twin Falls, Idaho.
Dear Sir:—I was a silent spectator at the meeting of the directors of the Cattle Association at Twin Falls Saturday, Sept. 5th. I was there more to learn the facts than anything else. Those I learned of pretty generally, and matter of getting a decree of the court for the land owners is a very important one for the original Twin Falls tract. I have spent almost two months in California this summer, and I had a shortage of water almost every year.
This should not occur here where the supply is more than sufficient, but well if the farmers who have lands under this project be supplied on their basis and permit it. It is time for every one of them to act. Judge Stockstater did not state anything in the meeting but what was true. Farmers cannot understand the intricacies and details in such matters like one who has spent his life in such matters. It takes time, labor and great expense to become proficient. I am not working in the interest of Judge Stockstater for a fee, but have a small interest, which, as a prudent person, want to protect and can in this way do it better than they. I do not care to boast, and do not say any for the purpose, but have had twenty-five years experience in the law; therefore my reasons for all means let the farmers take an active interest in the matter and make the tract famous as it should be.
After all my experience and a great deal of travel, I find no piece of more promise than the Twin Falls tract, providing they secure sufficient water and this is the first requisite. There are other serious reasons for this tract. That I do not care to express an opinion, that should become public at this time. You will find my explanation to the blank to stand my part of the expense and anything I can do for the benefit of the owners will cheerfully cooperate, but all should take this matter very seriously. I am, sir, very respectfully,
D. T. WELTY.

This is what has made Kennedy's Laxative Cough Syrup so successful and so generally demanded. It does not constipate like most of the old fashioned cough cures, but on the other hand it gently moves the bowels and at the same time heals irritation and allays inflammation of the throat. TO ADJUDICATE WATER RIGHTS. Canal Association Endorsing to Ascertain Priority.
 At a meeting of the Governing Board of the Twin Falls Canal Association, it was decided necessary, upon the best legal advice obtainable, to procure a decree from the court showing the standing of the water right for the land on the original Twin Falls tract. This is necessary in order to secure the rights of land owners in case a dispute arises as to the prior right of the South Side Twin Falls tract over the surrounding tracts which have made filings on the waters of Snake River, or in case any of the surrounding tracts show a disposition to encroach upon the right of water on the lands of the South Side Twin Falls tract.
 Every owner of land on this tract, which includes the original segregation of 30,000 acres on the North Side, is invited to join as a plaintiff in this suit to be brought, and if he so joins, the expense will be nominal. If he fails to join as a plaintiff, he will be made a defendant in the case, making it necessary for him to secure legal help at a considerable expense.
 The secretary of the Canal Association will be in his office over the Commercial Savings Bank in Twin Falls every Saturday from 9:00 A. M. to 5:00 P. M., and will respond with the names of all those wishing to be made plaintiffs and answer any questions to those desiring information.
 Every owner has also been instructed by the Governing Board to call upon as many of the land owners as possible for him to see and give them an opportunity to become plaintiffs in the case.
 Messrs. Stockelager & Bowen are the attorneys for the association and will conduct the case. They, as well as others who have given this matter much thought and study, consider an early action of this kind to be of great importance, and it is necessary in order that the decree be of benefit to any plaintiff who may be interested in the ownership of that land shall signify his intention to join in the suit. The whole tract cannot be treated as a body, and the fact that some of the lands in a decree does not put your land in the same standing as his, unless you are a plaintiff in the suit, so it is important to you that you are not overlooked.
 IRVING R. DARRROW, Secretary Governing Board. August 20-14.

From the looks of the opposition to Speaker Cannon he is nearly a spilt gun. At any rate he is of too small caliber to be in the national house.

With the primary election in force the county convention might as well be a Sunday school convention for all the fun the politicians can get out of it.

The regular howl from the Boise Statesman about the poor state ticket might deceive those unacquainted with the sheet's past record in politics. But the aforesaid paper made the same howl against Governor Gooding after his nomination and just as quickly turned around and commenced singing his praises.

Some of the finest exhibits of fruit ever seen on the tract are being displayed in the windows of the various real estate offices about town. The displays only emphasize the need for a fair every year in order that the tract may be properly advertised. Twin Falls has the products to make any prospective settler sit up and take notice and these products should be shown to the very best advantage every year. A permanent fair association will sooner or later be organized and it will have to obtain permanent grounds and buildings. If the county waits two more years before acquiring land about this city it will be so high that the association could not afford to buy. But on the other hand the citizens of the tract and this city have an excellent offer of forty acres just across the street at $175 per acre which would give ample room for a track and fair grounds. This same land will in two years advance in value so that it will be impossible for a fair association to purchase at $275. The same is true of land in any direction from the city. It would seem that now is the proper time to get the land even if no buildings could be erected for several years.

The outcome of the county convention which it went on record for the primary election, is viewed with satisfaction by a great many. The Times feels that the action of the convention was only an acquiescence in the wish of the voters of the party and the only way out of a uncomfortable predicament. The men who attempted to overthrow the primary vote in the convention were actuated only by the highest motives and really believed that their action was for the best interests of the party. These men were representative citizens and no man could assual their integrity and honest intentions. In trying to mend the weak places in the ticket, yet the Times believes that after going before the Republican voters and pledging the party to abide by the primary, there was only one honorable thing to do and that to make the result of the primary the rule of the convention. The Times does not believe that any voter is bound to violate his own good judgment when it comes to cast the ballot in November and any undesirable candidate can be quietly disposed of at the polls without jeopardizing the whole ticket. On the other hand had the convention told the people that the primary was just a bait and not intended to be binding, the people would have come back at the polls and slashed the whole ticket along with the men who seemed undesirable.

GOVERNOR HUGHES IN THE NATIONAL CAMPAIGN.

"One of the best speeches of the campaign was delivered by Governor Hughes, of New York, at Youngstown, Ohio, September 3. It was the opening of the campaign in Ohio, and with Mr. Hughes appeared Senator Beveridge, Secretary Garfield, Congressman Burton, Governor Harris, of Ohio, and other prominent Republicans. The meeting was preceded by a demonstration, in which 12,000 men marched in line, the great majority of them workmen from the neighboring steel mills. The address of Governor Hughes contained an enthusiastic declaration of his support of Mr. Tate's candidacy, a recital of the achievements of the Republican party, an indorsement of President Roosevelt and the accomplishments of his administration, and an examination of some of the policies advocated by Mr. Bryan. Of Mr. Tate he said: "No one more than I desires to see administration purged of every selfish taint, to have fair and impartial laws faithfully executed, to get rid of every vestige of special privilege at the expense of public interest, to illustrate trade from unjust encroachments, to purify our electoral methods and to maintain honest representative government. And it is because of his loyalty to these ideals, because of his broad sympathies and his rare equipment in character, ability, and experience, because tested in the difficult fields of judicial and administrative work he has proved his quality by eminent service, because of his varied learning, his acquaintance with affairs, his respect for constitutional government, and his capacity intelligently and lustily to plan and direct necessary reforms, that I most earnestly support the candidacy of William Howard Tate."

He recounted briefly the history of Republican administration since the defeat of Cleveland Democracy, and paid this tribute to President Roosevelt:

"For seven years with lofty aim and unswerving spirit he has labored for the people, and today, by virtue of his sincere devotion to their welfare, his valiant attack upon evil in high places, his zeal for the common interests, whether in the protection of the public domain, or in insistence upon the freedom of inter-state trade, or in the maintenance of high standards of administration, or in the reorganization of the rights of labor, or in the care of our national resources, the forceful and representative leader is typified to the popular imagination in the person of Theodore Roosevelt."

within the past three years is a constant source of wonder to all the visitors with whom I have talked; they all wonder about the wonderful development of the farms, the progressive spirit displayed by our citizens and predict a very bright future for our county.

Personally I believe within ten years we will have the richest and best county in the state. Taking into consideration the fact that our records might be destroyed by fire at any time, the very slight increase in taxes, and the immense amount of money which we would derive from the possession of a modern county building, I feel confident that a very great majority of the taxpayers of the county will agree with me in the opinion that we cannot afford to delay the matter, and will express themselves at the polls on October 5th, next.

Let us all continue to boost and an additional tax of 2c per acre on our land will be very much more than counterbalanced by the enhanced value of our property.

Yours truly,
J. M. MAXWELL,
Cashier of the First National Bank of Twin Falls.

Twin Falls, Sept. 21, 1908.

I think we should build a court house that every citizen will be proud of, and build for the future. The people of a community are usually estimated by their public buildings. I think we should vote for the bonds.

P. D. KIMBALL,
Cashier McCornick & Co.

To the Editor of The Times.
We consider it not only expedient, but a necessity that the county build a court house at this time.

"The business of the county demands it."

"There is no disputing the fact that the records are unsafe in their present location, and as a matter of protection against loss it is a necessity. The good business man would not hesitate to thus protecting himself were it a matter of his own private business, or property, and while this matter perhaps does not concern one individual resident of the county more than another, still it concerns us all and each one should see to it that the county records are safe, and thereby protect himself.

"The cost to each individual will not be noticeable. It is our judgment that no property owner in the county could do anything that would increase the value of his property as much for double the amount that this will cost him, as will the construction at this time of a good court house."

Cashier Commercial & Saving Bank.

Editor of The Times.
One vital point in favor of the court house which has not been touched upon to any extent is the fact that the Twin Falls townsite company has given the county a whole block of the park and that a deed to the property has a string on it. It will be necessary for the county to build a substantial court house within a given time or lose a property nearly worth $25,000. It is a point that should make the taxpayer sit down and soberly consider the bond proposition. I favor the bond issue.

L. E. SALLADAY.

Editor of The Times.
Having been asked to give my opinion of the court house bond issue I will state that I am heartily in favor of the bonds carrying. The necessity for protection of the records is a real one and to any property owner is only too apparent. A fire would destroy all titles to over three million dollars worth of property and make it impossible for any business man to give safely a deed in any property so filed.

The question of taxes is to my mind a small subject, although I am a heavy taxpayer. The increase in taxes which were so terrifying to the taxpayers in this school district, have already been offset by the increase in property valuation of the entire land in this school district, until there is really no increase in the tax rate. The same would be true for every inch of land on the tract if the courthouse is erected. The small sum necessary to pay interest on the bonds does not compare in the slightest degree with the loss that might be sustained through a fire in the present quarters. Twin Falls county has grown beyond the dream of the most sanguine booster, and what two years ago would have seemed preposterous can now be viewed as a necessity.

A BRIEF COUNTY CONVENTION

This committee not having appeared the chair appointed a committee to ascertain whether the committee was ready to report. In a few moments the chairman of the committee appeared and made the following report, which was adopted:

A resolution offered by E. H. Rettig, as follows, was read and discussed:

Be It Resolved, That it is the sense of this convention that the vote cast for the several candidates at said primary election is not to be regarded as making nominations or picking upon the delegation to this convention the duty of nominating the persons who received the highest vote for the several offices, and we declare it to be the privilege and duty of the delegates to this convention, while giving proper consideration to the choice of the people as indicated by said election, to make such nominations or candidates for the several offices as in their judgment is most conducive to the public welfare and the interests of our party.

The resolution caused a sensation through a number of delegates were aware of its nature and contents. The resolution just held. Mr. George W. Crater of Hansen, gained the floor and spoke with much earnestness in favor of the resolution, pointing out that the primary was not binding in a legal sense and that the voice of the whole party and urged that the convention use its own judgment as to the candidates.

C. D. Thomas followed Mr. Crater and in one of the best efforts ever made by the county chairman. He made a very strong argument against the adoption of the resolution. Mr. Thomas said in brief that our primary had gone into the primaries and expressed themselves for the ticket, and that the people expected the ticket to be ratified by the convention. If because it was not instrumental in the convention repudiated the primary it would be a direct slap in the face of those thousands of voters and would result in the loss of election in November for every one of our voters so slighted at election and the party would have to look out. Mr. Thomas' speech was evidently at the time of the convention was instrumental in the tide against the measure. The resolution was put to a vote and the convention voted by a large majority to reject the resolution. Mr. H. Carahan moved that the candidates be nominated formally by the convention at the primary election. The motion was seconded by T. E. Moore and carried, (namely regular ticket).

W. P. Gubrie moved that county central committee be instructed to call all vacancies occurring in the ticket which was adopted.

The following Republican county central committee was elected from the various precincts:
Twin Falls, Precinct 1, J. H. Wise; Twin Falls, Precinct 2, C. D. Thomas;

Twin Falls, Precinct 3, George Franzer; Twin Falls, Precinct 4, S. B. Grant; Kimberly, W. C. Brocken; Hansen, J. R. Hinton; Rock Creek, John F. Hansen; Hill, H. Carahan; Moran, Walter Parshay; Martineau, E. H. Hunt; Bull, L. G. Hayford; and Hutto, W. McMillan.

W. P. Gubrie moved that county central committee be allowed to select their chairman outside of their own members if desired, which was carried. Minutes to adjourn were then put before the convention and carried.

Immediately after the convention, the new members of the county central committee met to choose their chairman. The nominations were C. D. Thomas, Twin Falls, and John H. Carahan, Hansen. The result was a tie between the two gentlemen for the time when they finally decided upon C. D. Thomas for chairman of the Republican county central committee.

In the convention call two justices and one constable was called for from each precinct. The convention decided that as Twin Falls had four precincts that two justices and one constable from the four would be sufficient.

From the Republican party of Twin Falls county, Idaho, The Republican party in delegate convention assembled, agents presents fees a resolution of the people of the County of Twin Falls, State of Idaho, and confidently asks their support therefor.

We heartily endorse and support the able administration of President Roosevelt and his associates in the cabinet and that the election of William H. Taft will continue the present prosperity of our nation.

That the State platform defines the position of the Republican party on all the great questions which confront the people at this time, and we endorse and affirm its declarations in letter and in spirit.

We endorse the candidates nominated on the State ticket in convention assembled, at Boise, September 2, 1905.

We congratulate the State on the fact that our United States senator, W. B. Heburn, is a man of industry and ability and has become of great value to national legislation and we instruct our legislative ticket to use all honorable means to secure his reelection.

We declare in favor of an effective county local option law so that the people in this county may have the power to decide whether or not the liquor business shall be carried on within the county boundaries; and we specifically instruct our legislative ticket on national legislation and law and to use all honorable means to secure its passage.

We believe that the Agricultural College of the State of Idaho should be located in an irrigated section of the State, and realizing that Twin Falls county has the irrigated land in Idaho, we instruct our legislative ticket to use all honorable means to secure the location of the Idaho Agricultural College in Twin Falls county.

We endorse the direct primary system.

Realizing the vast and growing business of the State Board of Land Commissioners and the inability of its members as it is at present constituted to give this Board the attention it should have for the best interests of the State, we urge our members of the legislature to use their utmost endeavors to secure an amendment to the constitution that will place in the hands of an effective commission of three members, whose term of office shall be six years, one being elected biennially who shall give the full time and attention to the business now being transacted by the State Board of Land Commissioners.

BELIEVES IN HONESTY.

Taft Asserts That Voters Are Not Bound to Party.

It is the belief of William H. Taft, Republican candidate for the presidency, that it is not only the privilege but the duty of every honest Republican to "kiss" his party ticket when that ticket contains the name of some candidate unworthy of public confidence.

In other words, Mr. Taft believes that no man should stultify himself by voting out the duty of every honest Republican to "kiss" his party ticket when that ticket contains the name of some candidate unworthy of public confidence.

Senator Charles Dick, former lieutenant to Mark Hanna.

The Republicans had re-nominated Governor Henry Horrick; the Democratic state ticket was headed by John M. Pattison. It was acknowledged that the fight over the governorship was the close one, notwithstanding Horrick had been elected the first time by upwards of 125,000 majority. The church, taken as a whole, had in the campaign, and lent its powerful support to the Democratic candidate. The Democrats centered their fight on Horrick, caring little about the rest of the ticket, and in the midst of the campaign it became apparent that the sides outside of the district dominated by Cox, was about evenly divided on the governorship. Cox, having held absolute sway in his own backyard for 29 years, had no doubt that he could deliver enough votes to elect Horrick, and as a result he only issued a few lines of "boss of Ohio."

Throughout the campaign Cox and his boss had been the leading and in view of the issues, Senator Dick believes that Cox would make good, and in the hope of saving his own reputation to carrying on the campaign, he had been the most far-fetched effort—but in that campaign he was supported by the Democrats and chose the Cattle-ground—and that happened now in Cincinnati. Horrick was being pictured as a man, but the Democrats were further aided by the church element, which, while not uniformly opposing Horrick, was largely supportive of the ticket of his more favorable position on the liquor question.

Toward the close of the campaign, when the situation seemed grave, Senator Dick appealed to the president to allow some member of his cabinet to go to Ohio to help the Republicans. Just a few days before the president, in a speech at Atlanta, Ga., had scathingly arraigned political bosses, particularly those who were in office. When he looked into the Ohio situation, the president agreed that Secretary Taft should go to Ohio, and he was then and there that the Ohio machine got the severest jolt it has ever experienced. Secretary Taft, in his election speech, had said that the ticket and urged the re-election of Horrick; but at the same time he dealt a death blow to Cox, and his associates had a great deal to do with Horrick's defeat. His attack upon the boss of Cincinnati, the man who had stolen the election, and along with the municipal ticket in that Taft's home town was of such severity, and such influence that at the coming election Cox was swept out of power; his machine destroyed, and instead of being "boss of all Ohio," he was forcibly retired from politics.

It was never shown that President Roosevelt openly took any hand in the extermination of Boss Cox, but in view of the intimate relations between the president and his own secretary of war, and in further view of the president's recent declaration that "bosses of all Ohio" were generally understood and believed throughout Ohio that the president knew in advance that he had the support of strong Republicans, among them United States

Senator Charles Dick, former lieutenant to Mark Hanna.

The Democrats centered their fight on Horrick, caring little about the rest of the ticket, and in the midst of the campaign it became apparent that the sides outside of the district dominated by Cox, was about evenly divided on the governorship. Cox, having held absolute sway in his own backyard for 29 years, had no doubt that he could deliver enough votes to elect Horrick, and as a result he only issued a few lines of "boss of Ohio."

Throughout the campaign Cox and his boss had been the leading and in view of the issues, Senator Dick believes that Cox would make good, and in the hope of saving his own reputation to carrying on the campaign, he had been the most far-fetched effort—but in that campaign he was supported by the Democrats and chose the Cattle-ground—and that happened now in Cincinnati. Horrick was being pictured as a man, but the Democrats were further aided by the church element, which, while not uniformly opposing Horrick, was largely supportive of the ticket of his more favorable position on the liquor question.

Toward the close of the campaign, when the situation seemed grave, Senator Dick appealed to the president to allow some member of his cabinet to go to Ohio to help the Republicans. Just a few days before the president, in a speech at Atlanta, Ga., had scathingly arraigned political bosses, particularly those who were in office. When he looked into the Ohio situation, the president agreed that Secretary Taft should go to Ohio, and he was then and there that the Ohio machine got the severest jolt it has ever experienced. Secretary Taft, in his election speech, had said that the ticket and urged the re-election of Horrick; but at the same time he dealt a death blow to Cox, and his associates had a great deal to do with Horrick's defeat. His attack upon the boss of Cincinnati, the man who had stolen the election, and along with the municipal ticket in that Taft's home town was of such severity, and such influence that at the coming election Cox was swept out of power; his machine destroyed, and instead of being "boss of all Ohio," he was forcibly retired from politics.

It was never shown that President Roosevelt openly took any hand in the extermination of Boss Cox, but in view of the intimate relations between the president and his own secretary of war, and in further view of the president's recent declaration that "bosses of all Ohio" were generally understood and believed throughout Ohio that the president knew in advance that he had the support of strong Republicans, among them United States

Senator Charles Dick, former lieutenant to Mark Hanna.

The Republicans had re-nominated Governor Henry Horrick; the Democratic state ticket was headed by John M. Pattison. It was acknowledged that the fight over the governorship was the close one, notwithstanding Horrick had been elected the first time by upwards of 125,000 majority. The church, taken as a whole, had in the campaign, and lent its powerful support to the Democratic candidate. The ONLY WAY TO GET FRUIT Lands Ever Offered

Under "Carey Act" --- 15000 Acres

15000 Acres

THESE Fruit Lands are conceded, by competent judges and men of experience, to be unquestionably the best in the entire West for fruits, early vegetables and melons of all kinds.

Here late frosts do not occur; the Spring season comes two to three weeks earlier than in the lands of greater elevation. This early season enables the fruit, melon or vegetable grower to put his product on the market at a time when he realizes the top market price, and before competition interferes with marketing his crop. This mesa, or cove land, lying as it does on the south bank of the famous Snake River, protected from cold and severe winds in the early Spring by high lava bluffs on both sides of the river, makes this possible.

The soil is of the best, composed of a combination of lava, ash and sandy erosive matter, all of which give it productive strength, as well as perfect drainage, essential elements for high-class fruit and vegetable land.

This tract of land is paralleled its entire length by Snake River and the MAIN LINE OF THE OREGON SHORT LINE RAILROAD, making easy the shipping and marketing of all products. A telephone line is being built the entire length of ditch; also good wagon roads.

Forty acres of this land planted to fruits, berries and melons will, in ten years, make an independent fortune, and will find ready sale at $1,500 to $2,000 per acre. This is not exceptional, for good orchard land elsewhere has sold as high as $3,000 per acre.

An up-to-date cannery will be constructed at King Hill (which is centrally located to this project) for the express purpose of creating a market for the product of this land and vicinity, enabling settlers to make profit almost from the beginning.

Don't forget the date. The OPENING and DRAWING will take place at KING HILL, IDAHO, CHOICE FIFTEEN 15,000 ACRES OF CHOICE FIFTEEN LAND IN SUNNY SOUTHERN-IDAHO. TIME IS SHORT.

TIMBER WEAULT OF COUNTRY MATERIALLY LESSENED.

Washington, D. C., Sept. 24.—The forest fires which have just laid waste whole counties in Minnesota, Michigan and extended into Wisconsin, destroying many towns and making thousands of persons homeless, have focused the attention of both government and state forest officers, on the enormous losses of forest wealth which will be checked up to the year 1908.

In the whole northern half of the United States throughout the vast territory extending from coast to coast, the reported destruction by forest fires has been terrific and it is likely that the year will go down as one of the worst in the last quarter century. It seems that no part of the country has escaped the work of the devastating flames. The latest disasters in Minnesota, Michigan and Wisconsin are the worst of the many that have visited the Lake States this year. Other sections have also suffered from forest fires during the spring and summer months, and the people of the Pacific Coast, the Rocky Mountain and the New England states, and Canada have had a thorough, and in some cases, a continuous experience in fire fighting.

Officers in the United States Forest Service here say that it is doubtful if this year's actual losses from forest fires in all parts of the country will ever be known, but it is certain that they will run up so high in the millions that the country will be started when a compilation of statistics at the end of the season makes it possible to give even the most conservative figures. Suffice it to say, were all the timber burned up this year in all parts of the country converted into cash, it could provide for a good-sized navy of first-class battleships.

The fires have done good in one way, they have focused the people's attention on the seriousness of the forest fire problem, practical foresters say, and have started a widespread movement in many states to check them by adopting rational systems of fire protection. Among thinking people there has been awakened an intense interest in throwing a better protection around the forests, which grow more important as a natural resource and the timber supply dwindles.

The government has had a lot of work in the fire fighting line on the National Forests, but in the past the fires have been, careful patrol and the organization of a force to battle with the flames as soon as discovered has not been given so much attention as they are utterly insignificant when one considers the fearful destruction which would have come about had there been no protection.

Although the fire menace has been serious in all sections, officers of the Forest Service estimate that the total cost of the forest fires on the National Forests for the season, exclusive of the salaries of forest officers, will not be more than $20,000. This sum is small when it is remembered that it means fire protection for approximately 150,000,000 acres of National Forests, less than two-tenths of a mill per acre. Progressive state fire wardens and forest officers, individuals and private corporations having large timber holdings have organized fire fighting forces along such the same line as the government in many cases, and in this way they have given protection to millions of acres of timber which might have been destroyed had it been left unprotected.

John Hamman, who has been spending the summer with his daughter, Mrs. Wm. Hilly, returned to his home in Boise last Thursday.

Mrs. Nick Smith and family started on Sunday evening for Indiana, where they will visit relatives. They were accompanied by Mrs. Layne, of Twin Falls.

Nick Smith lost a fine young horse last week, the animal dropping dead from fright on being driven close to a threshing machine that was in operation.

Miss Sadie Keith celebrated her fourteenth birthday last Saturday evening. Fourteen of her girl friends were invited to be present at her home, and a pleasant time was enjoyed.

Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Smith are looking up their old neighbors here this week. They arrived last week from Hamilton, Montana, and anticipate a journey to the old home in Topeka, Kansas, in the near future.

Our school wagon seems to have been side-tracked en route, and some of our long-distance pupils are becoming impatient. Bills for driving the wagon have again been called for, the former applicant for the honor having found it necessary to give up the contract, as the number of children to be carried was greater than was expected. All in good time these matters will be adjusted—but who would not enjoy the walk these perfect days?

Perhaps you do not know of Tom Thumb, but if you do, it will interest you to know that his wedding will be duly solemnized at the rink next Tuesday evening. Tom has a lot of other little people with him.

"Things are moving all the same," said Mortimer as he entered the reading room of the Salsola club. Quarter and Belcher have listened and expected fully to see since they read that column about you and the bishops and that chapel business."

"Plank turned his heavy head, with a disabused glance around the room. "Can't you be careful?" he said. "There was a man here a moment ago." He picked up his unfinished letter, folded and pocketed it, touched an electric bell, and a servant came, upon which Mortimer's order," he said, supporting his massive head on his hands and resting his elbow on the writing desk.

"I've got to cut out this morning breakfast," said Mortimer, slyly the servant and with indecision, but he gave his order nevertheless and later accepted a chair, and when the servant had returned and again refilled his half emptied tin of cigars, rolled it with a metal water and, setting back in the padded armchair, said: "If I manage this thing as it ought to be managed you'll go through by April. What do you think of that?"

"Plank looked at the features flushed. "I'm much obliged to you than I can say," he began; but Mortimer silenced him with a gesture. "Don't interrupt. I'm going to put you through the Patrons club by April. That's thirty yards through the center. I've got you, you dulle-headed Dutchman? It's solid gold, it's our ball, it's Lenox will take longer. They're a 'holter-than-thou' bunch of nincompoops, and it always horrifies them to have any man in 'em more obliged to elected, than you than I can say, or who he is."

Plank looked out of the window, his shrewd blue eyes closing in retrospection.

"Another thing," continued Mortimer thickly, "the Kemp Ferralls are disposed to be decent. I don't mean in asking you to meet some intellectual second raters, but in doing it handsomely."

"I want to say," began Plank, speaking the more slowly because he was deeply in earnest, "but all this you are doing for me is very handsome of you, Mortimer. I'd like to say, to convey to you something of how I feel about the way you and Mrs. Mortimer."

"Oh, Lena has done it all."

"Mrs. Mortimer is very kind, and you have been so good to me. I wish there were some way to go to—"

"To what?" asked Mortimer so bluntly that Plank flushed up and stammered.

"To be—to do a—to show my gratitude."

"How? You're scarcely in a position to do anything for us," said Mortimer, brutally staring him out of countenance.

"I know it," said Plank, the painful flush deepening.

Mortimer, frowning and growling over his cigar, as he nevertheless stealthily intent on the game which had so long absorbed him. His wife, elegant and full of accessories, were now aroused to a sort of gross activity through the menace of necessity. At last Plank had given him an opening. He recognized his chance.

"I don't see one thing," he said deliberately, "that I won't stand for, and that's your vulgar misconception of your part of my friendship for you. Do you follow me?"

"I don't understand it," protested Plank, angry and astonished. "I don't."

"As though," continued Mortimer, "I were not nearly as much interested in those snaky, unscrupulous folk who—"

"For heaven's sake, Mortimer, don't talk like that! I had no intention—"

"One of those contemptible, parasite leeches!" Mortimer, got the older and boisterous, "who live on men like you." "Confound you, Plank, what the devil do you mean by it?"

"Mortimer, are you crazy to talk to me like that?"

"No, I'm not, but you must be! I've a mind to drop the whole cursed business! I've every inclination to drop it! If you haven't horse sense enough, if you haven't innate shrewdness sufficient to keep you from making such a break!"

"I didn't. It wasn't a break, Mortimer. I wouldn't have hurt you? You did hurt me! How can you feel the same about it? I never intended you to do that. I was that sort of a social mercenary. Why do little did I dream that you looked on our friendship in that light that I was—on my word of honor—I was just over on the point of asking you for $10,000 or $14,000 to carry me to the month's end and square my bridge balance."

"Mortimer, you must take it. You are a fool to think about anything but what I wanted to show my gratitude. Look here; be decent and fair with me. I wouldn't offer you an amount would I even if I were a cad? I wouldn't do it now just when you're getting things going for me. I'm getting a full year. This is in deadly earnest; I tell you, Mortimer, and I'm getting angry about it. You've got to show your confidence in me. You've got to take what you want from me as you would from my friend."

"There was a pause. A curious and unaccounted sensation had silenced Mortimer, something shrewd and little. He shamed. It astonished on the point of did not quite understand why in the very moment of success over this shrewd, shrewd young man and his thrifty Dutch instincts he should feel uncomfortable. Very not his services something? Had he not earned at least the right to borrow from this rich man who could afford to pay for what was done for him? Why should he feel ashamed? He had not been generous, he really liked the fellow. Why shouldn't he take his money?

"See here, old man," said Plank, extending a huge highly colored hand, "in all-square between us now?"

"But Plank would not relinquish his hand."

"Then tell me how to draw that check! Great heaven, Mortimer, what is friendship, anyhow, if it doesn't include the matter of this little square understanding like this? I'm the man to be sensitive, not you. You have been very good to me, Mortimer. I could almost wish you in a position where the only thing I possess might square something of my debt to you."

A few minutes later when he was sitting in the check a dusty youth in riding clothes and spurs came in and found a seat by one of the windows, into which he dropped, and then looked about him for a servant.

"Hello, Fleetwood," said Mortimer, glancing over his shoulder to see whose spurs were ringing on the polished floor.

Fleetwood saluted amiably with his riding crop, including Plank, whom he did not know, in a more formal salute.

"Will you join us?" asked Mortimer, taking the check which Plank offered and carelessly pocketing it without even a nod of thanks. "You know Beverly Plank, of course? What? I thought everybody knew Beverly Plank."

Mr. Fleetwood and Mr. Plank shook hands and resumed their seats.

"Ripping weather," observed Fleetwood, replacing his hat and rebuttoning the gloves which he had removed to shake hands with Plank. "A lot of jolly people out this morning. I say, Mortimer, do you want that room built of mine you looked over? I mean King Ferrall, because Martin Page wants him if you don't. She was out this morning, and the spoke of it again."

Mortimer, lifting a replenished glass, shook his head and drank thirstily in silence.

"Saw you at Westbury, I think," said Fleetwood politely to Plank as the two lifted their glasses to one another.

"I hunted there for a day or two," replied Plank modestly. "If it's that big Irish thoroughbred you were riding that you want to sell, I'd like to look in at Miss Page, doesn't fancy him?"

Fleetwood laughed and glanced anxiously at Plank over his glass. "I isn't that horse, Mr. Plank. That's Drummel, Stephen Sward's famous horse. He's coming to Westbury to change greetings with several men who came into the room rather noisily, their spurs resonating across the oak-paneled floor. One of them, Tom O'Hara, joined them, commanding his crop on the desk beside Plank and spreading himself over an armchair, from the seat of which he cordially removed Mortimer's feet without excuse.

"Friend of yours? I want a drink," he called to Fleetwood—"one, three, ten, several. Billy, whose wessel joggled into was that you were kicking your heels into in the park? Some of the squadron men asked me if you were trying to stick Mortimer with him. He might do for the troop ambulances—inside. What? Oh, yes; yes; Mr. Plank—I mean Mr. Sward, and Stephen Sward, I think. How'd you do? That pleasure of putting your tail into pleasant, rotten sport, you know. What do you do it for, Mr. Plank?"

"What did you come for if it's rotten sport?" asked Plank so slowly that Tom O'Hara a moment to realize he had been snubbed.

"I didn't mean to be offensive," he drawled.

"I suppose you can't help it," said Plank very gently. "Some people can't, you know." And there was another silence, broken by Mortimer, whose entire bulk was tingling with a mixture of surprise and indignation over the display of his own snubbing and the ability to take care of himself. "Did you say that Stephen Sward is in Westbury, Billy?"

"No; he's in town," replied Fleetwood. "I got it hanging up to him with his hat hanging, you know."

"I didn't know. Nobody ever sees him anywhere," said Mortimer. "I guess his mother's death cut him up."

Fleetwood lifted his empty glass and gently shook the ice in it. "That, and the other business—is enough to cut any man up, isn't it?"

"You mean the action of the Lenox club?" asked Plank seriously.

"I mean the action of this club, too, I hear. Somebody told me that he has made a clean sweep of all his clubs. That's foolish. A man may be an ass to join too many clubs, but he's always a fool to resign from any of 'em. You ask the weatherwise what resigning from a club forecasts. It's the first ominous sign in a young man's career."

Under cover of a rapid fire exchange of personalities between Fleetwood and O'Hara, Plank turned to Mortimer, hesitating:

"I rather liked Sward when I met him at Sward's," he ventured. "I'm very sorry he's down and out."

"He drinks," shrugged Mortimer, dipping his mineral water with Irish whisky. "He can't let it alone. He's like all the Swards."

"Mortimer doesn't care for Sward, but he's an awfully good fellow, all the same," said Fleetwood, turning to Plank. "He's been an ass, but he was a fool. He's been tremendously, and he's a fool who had over the mess he made of it after that crazy dinner I gave in my rooms. What? You didn't hear of it? Why, man, it's the talk of the club."

"I suppose that's why I haven't heard," said Plank slyly. "My club life is still in the future."

"Oh," said Fleetwood, with an involuntary start, surprised, a little uncomfortable, yet somehow liking Plank, and not understanding why.

Mortimer continued a desultory discussion with O'Hara concerning a very private dinner which somebody told somebody that somebody had given to Quarter and the intercompany electric people, which, if true, plainly indicated who was financing the intercompany scheme and why Amalgamated stock had tumbled again yesterday and ought to be looking for a rise from the Algouquin Trust company's president.

"Amalgamated Electric doesn't seem to like it a little bit," said O'Hara. "Ferrall, he's getting and he's in it up to their necks, and if Quarter is really the god in the machine and if he really is doing stunts with Amalgamated Electric and is also mixing feet with the intercompany crowd, why, he is virtually paralyzing his own road, and why, in the name of common sense, is he doing that? He'll kill it, that's what he'll do."

"He can afford to kill it," observed Mortimer, pushing the electric ball and making a significant gesture toward his empty glass as the servant entered. "A man like Quarter can afford to kill anything."

"Yes, but why kill Amalgamated Electric? Why not merge? Why, it's a crazy thing to do. It's a devil of a thing to do, to parallel your own line," insisted O'Hara. "But, is it dirty like that? People don't do such things these days. Nobody tears up dollar bills for the pleasure of tearing."

"Nobody knows what Quarter will do," muttered Mortimer, who had told O'Hara that he had been engaged in some of the most serious rumors arose concerning Amalgamated, and the first fractional declines left the street speechless and stupefied.

O'Hara sat frowning and fidgeting his glass. "As a matter of fact," he said, "a little cold logic shows us that Quarter isn't by it all. No sane man would run his own enterprise where there is no one to help him. His people are openly supporting Amalgamated and hammering Intercountry, and besides, there's Ferrall in it, and Mrs. Ferrall is Quarter's cousin and she's a hell of a weather in it, and Quarter is engaged to marry Sylvia Lantini, who is Belweather's niece. It's a scrap with Harrington's crowd, and the wheels inside of wheels are like Chinese houses. Who knows what it means? Only this, that Amalgamated is safe, if Quarter wants it to be. And unless he does he's crazy."

Mortimer, signifying sideways at Plank and seeing him still unresponsive, turned bluntly on O'Hara:

"See here, what do you mean by backing me to Plank? Do you mean by backing him? Do you mean to say that it is safe to back O'Hara coolly, 'how much of a cad a fairly decent man can be when he's out of temper?"

"You mean Plank or me?" demanded Mortimer, laughing angrily.

"No; I mean myself. I'm not that way usually. I took him for a bounder, and he's caught me with the goods in my hand, and he's laughing at me. I've been thinking of what you're saying with such questions are usually open to suspicion themselves. Wished me to do the civil now. I'm ashamed of myself."

"Wait a moment. Will you be civil enough to say something for him at the Patronage? That will mean something."

"Is he up? Yes, I will," and, turning in his chair, he said to Plank: "A really sorry I missed it, but after accepting your hospitality at the Falls, I did mean to be offensive, and I'm sorry for that too. Hope you'll overlook it and be friendly."

Plank's face took on the dark red glow of embarrassment. He looked questioningly at Mortimer, whose eyes remained noncommittal, then directly at O'Hara.

"I should be very glad to see friends with you," he said, with an ingenuous dignity that surprised Mortimer. "It was only the native simplicity of the man, veneered and polished by long and successful study. Mr. Mortimer and now signifying to advance in the game. And it gratified Mortimer, because he saw that it was going to make many matters much easier for himself and his proteges."

The tall glasses were filled and drained again before they departed to the cold plunge and dressing rooms above. While presently they emerged in street garb to drive downtown and lunch together at the Lenox club, Plank as Fleetwood's guest.

Having O'Hara and Fleetwood to give him countenance, Mortimer managed to get into the dining room, where he saw several members of the club and to a dozen members, then left him to his fate, whence presently Fleetwood and O'Hara extracted him, fate at that moment being personified by a gentleman old gentleman, one Major Canthess, who divided with Belcher the distinction of being the club bore, and together they plotted him to the ballroom, for a dollar a point at everything they suggested.

"You play almost as pretty a game as Stephen Sward used to play," said O'Hara cordially, "and he's a good fellow. It's a fine movement—something of his infernal facility and touch. Hasn't he, Fleetwood?"

ROCK CREEK

Rock Creek, Sept. 21, 1938. J. Pratt stopped here long enough last Thursday to help thresh his wheat.

Mr. Topel was unable to stand the high altitude, and found it difficult to get the proper amount of air.

Mr. Topel has been accustomed to a low altitude all his life; in other words, Mr. Topel was too old a bird to be transplanted.

Several of the ranchers around here broke the Sabbath last Sunday in order to repair the road on the section between 21 and 22 R. T. E. just north of Rock Creek, which was a very rocky part of the road.

Those who assisted in the road work were D. S. Morgan, J. Budd, J. Harris and R. Reuben, also J. La Salle. All started to haul grain today.

J. Pratt and brother Elmer were visitors in this section on Sunday, for the purpose of purchasing a mare, which Mr. La Salle had them.

Incidentally they stopped off at George Topel's ranch and bought a load of his fine oats.

The trouble seems to be that Mr. Hurst neglected to clean it before using it. Better luck next time.
