President Wilson, by his able direction of the Mexican situation, has enhanced his prestige very greatly with the American people, so that his election will be almost certain unless a very strong Republican candidate should appear on the scene. He has kept to a name and safe course through all the jingoistic turmoil and has preceded each act with careful investigation as to the true situation. He has avoided public utterance of any kind that would involve the nation. Wilson has shown that he is a deep student of American political conditions in all of his life so far with but a few exceptions and has gained the admiration of even his political enemies. His neat plan of circumventing Wall street's threatened panic over the revulsion of the tariff shows that he can act quickly when the occasion demands. The placing of the billings of government money in the hands of western banks to move crops was a staggering blow to the speculators of the street who had planned their usual campaign of threatened panic to coerce congress in its action. President Wilson's move made such threats unavailing and the tariff revision is accomplished and will stand or fall on its merits as a popular measure.

The splendid exhibits of grain and fruits at the Kimberly Bonanza fair last Saturday brought home to a large number of the citizens of this city the mistake made in not having the usual fair in this city. As an indicator of true conditions on the tract there is nothing so convincing to the incoming or prospective settler as an exhibit of the products. Every fall this city is visited by a large number of investors and farmers from the east and the middle west who are looking for better locations. The fair once viewed by such class clinches their conviction more than all of the persuasive powers of the real estate man or other boosting citizen. Twin Falls could ill afford to get a haphazard policy among her neighbors and then turn in and spend more money for a carnival to boost base ball, yet that is the very mistake made by the citizens of this place. There should be an early move next year for a permanent fair association with the avowed purpose of forwarding a base ball carnival or any other method of spending money until a piece of real estate is secured and the movement well launched for a good fair each year that will be a credit to the great Twin Falls country. The Times supported base ball and the carnival financially this year and emphatically will refuse to support such things next year if such support is to jeopardize the fair. It is out of the question for the business men to become divided upon any project and make the usual Twin Falls success. It is merely a question of getting proper backing with the money spent and the Times believes that the fair should have the first call on the funds of the business men of this city.

THE RICH MAN'S SHARE OF THE INCOME TAX.

Demand for a higher tax rate on "wealthy incomes," which are being urged by radical Democrats and Progressives upon the senate finance committee, suit the ideas of those who think our great fortunes have been accumulated at the expense of the people in general and should be mulcted accordingly. But we find in numerous quarters sharp editorial disapproval of such a plan as being discriminatory and unjust. In the meantime, there are those who, feeling the immediate need of an income tax that will shift the burden of government from the shoulders of the poor at the bottom to the shoulders of the man at the top, insist that we have some such legislation now, and if it needs correction, let another congress correct it. But, says the San Francisco Chronicle (Ind.), if we are to have an income tax, it should be "a uniform tax," for deliberately to compel the rich man to pay more than his share is "most outrageously unjust." Instead of raising the rates on a few large incomes, suggests the New York Tribune, the senate ought to reduce the minimum taxable income "from $2,000 to $2,000 and thus distribute more widely and fairly the burdens of the tax," because, "The more people paying a direct tax of this sort, the more diffused will be the sense of responsibility for government income and the stronger will be the check put upon extravagance in federal expenditures."

This question is illuminated by the criticism of Senator Root, who attacks the income-tax proposal on the ground that it would thrust the burden of that form of taxation on a few States, especially New York, making the bill in effect "legislation by the south and other agricultural communities against the industrial communities of the country." He refers to the income-tax passed in the stress of the Civil war, under which the limit of exemption was $2,000, and there was no graduation of the tax beyond $2,000. The larger incomes paid the same percentage as the smaller incomes subject to the tax, yet, he tells us, "under that act the states of Massachusetts, New York, New Jersey and Pennsylvania paid more than two-thirds of the entire tax." And, reminding the senate that in proceeding to grade a tax they must have in mind "not only the relations between this congress and the individuals, but you are to have in mind also the relations between this congress and the states," Senator Root proceeds:

"If you impose too great a burden upon the same people who paid two-thirds of the old income tax—that is, the people of the few states with the great industrial communities in them—you are diminishing the taxable resources of the states. The taxation with which we are now concerning ourselves is but a very small part of the burdens that are imposed upon the people of the United States. The State of New York and I speak of that merely because I am more familiar with it than I am with other States—while it has great wealth has great demands."

"Why, the expenditures of the city of New York for the year 1911 were over $412,000,000. Where did we get that? Part of it was borrowed, and we shall have to pay it in the future. But in the same year the direct taxes imposed and collected in the state of New York upon real and personal property amounted to over $234,000,000."

"The result is that the people of the state of New York, and mainly the people whom you strike with this income tax, are the source of supply upon which the state of New York has to draw to pay the enormous expenses. So you ought to remember that in imposing an income tax you should not be unfair as between the taxable resources of the state of New York and the taxable resources of all other states."

Taking sharp issue with Senator Root, the New York Globe (Ind.), says he did no good to New York or the cause he spoke for by attacking the income tax bill as a sectional measure, and it describes his "singularly foolish and non-pertinent" his solemn warning to the other states that they must not be unjust to New York and "that the union will not endure if there is injustice." And The Globe continues:

"Nor does Senator Root achieve anything by ignoring the reason why the exemption is placed as high as it is. He is intelligent enough to understand the argument and to state it fairly when attempting to overthrow it. The argument is in brief, is that persons of small incomes spend on an average a larger percentage of their net incomes than do persons of large incomes; that as other taxes, in one way or another, are taxes on consumption, the rich do not now pay in taxes as large a percentage of their incomes as the non-rich; that consequently a discriminating income tax is equalizing. Moreover, there is basis for the claim that a larger percentage of those having incomes of $2,000 and over do not pay more successfully than those with incomes of less than $1,000."

Again, a discriminating income tax is an equalizer and a corrector of injustice.—Literary Digest.

TALKS ON THRIFT

NO. 4.—THE GET-RICH QUICK FOLLY.

"If it were possible for me to double the income of all our employees, the good I could do in that way would be less than if I could imbue them with an earnest desire and purpose to save and invest their money."—Henry L. Doherty, New York.

Saving and investment go hand-in-hand, but unfortunately, persons who are good savers are not always good investors. In fact, it is quite generally true that the greatest financial risks are taken by those who can least afford to lose money.

It is estimated by the Post Office Department that the total loss to the people of the United States by fraudulent financial advertising through the mails has been upwards of $100,000,000 a year for a long time. Probably the amount will not be so great from now on, as the government has become very watchful and strict, but a warning on this subject is still necessary, as the schemes are clever, and often takes the government a long time to "get them right," as the saying is.

A few months ago the federal authorities secured the indictment and arrest of the officers of a real estate company in New York, which had been selling six per cent bonds supposedly backed by good real estate. The bonds proved to be practically worthless and investors lost $175,000.

Last year witnessed the conviction by the government, for advertising frauds through the mails, of such notorious fakers as George Franklin Allen, who sold mining stocks, and was recently released from a year's imprisonment; Burr Brothers, who had prompted more than one hundred companies without making good on any of them, and Christopher Columbus Wilson, who sold a wireless telegraph company stock at $10, worth 10 cents. He died in the federal prison at Atlanta.

Such schemes are absolutely dependent upon the mail privilege. When that is taken away from them, they cannot reach the "suckers," as these pentry call the misled people who "invest" in their worthless propositions. So the government has a powerful weapon to use against such schemes. But these crooks are not easily discouraged. When thwarted in one scheme they immediately try another, and the so-called "sucker class" of persons who have "bitten" on such fraudulent propositions as fake mines, oil wells, new world-beating inventions and worthless real estate, are sold time and time again by promoters to others of their ilk.

For the great majority of us, the only sure way to get ahead financially is to work industriously, save systematically, and when it comes to a point where we are ready to make an investment, consult somebody of recognized knowledge and dependability in such matters.

We sincerely believe that for a small sum there is no better investment in the country than a savings bank account and that no one makes a mistake in leaving his surplus money there until he has better use for it. Stick to your savings account until you have accumulated something worth while to invest. Then consult somebody you can depend upon in regard to the permanent investment.

As we have pointed out, some "investments" offer little chance of the investor getting his money back. Even with legitimate investments, it is often hard to get your money back quickly. While you may not often feel like drawing upon your savings in the bank, it is quite a comfortable feeling to know that you can get at your money quickly in case of need.

There is no other investment where one can get at his money so quickly as in a savings account, it being only under the most extraordinary circumstances that there is ever any difficulty whatever in a savings depositor's getting his money when he wants to draw it out of the bank.

When you have saved sufficient to make an investment worth while, consult a banker or newspaper in your community, and above all things, DON'T BE A SUCKER!

No. 1. CATHEDRAL OF TOLEDO

Copyright, 1912, by The Associated Newspaper School, Inc.

Rodrigo, last of the Gothic kings of Spain, heard in his palace at Toledo that the Moors had crossed from Africa to Gibraltar. A little army led by Tarik landed in 711 and marched northward, conquering as it went. King Rodrigo, with a great force of Spaniards, met them in Andalusia. He commanded the center. The wings were led by King Witiza's sons, who, hoping to recover the country that Rodrigo had taken from their father, joined the Moors, or gave way before them in battle. The Moors were surrounded and cut down. The Moors marched northward, taking city after city in the name of Mohammed, till all Spain was theirs. The last of the Gothic kings had fallen.

From that day looking at Toledo has never regained her position as the capital of Spain. In the royal palace Tarik found twenty-five crowns of the old Gothic kings, golden and jeweled, the Psalms of David written on gold leaf with dissolved rubies, and the enamel table of Solomon. These crowns may still be seen; but no one has ever seen the other treasures. The Moorish kings, though they troubled Toledo mildly, had no end of trouble from the haughty nobility, who, robbed of their high position, were always in revolt against the conqueror. At last Sultan Idris decided to punish his unruly subjects. He gave them a summary of their own race, who presented to him the foreigner, but was secretly in league with him.

Señor spoor won the hearts of the people and built a great castle in the middle of the city. There he held a reception for Prince Abd-el-Rahman, to which all the nobles and rich citizens of Toledo were invited. Feeding the honor of royal presence, which their city had not enjoyed for many years, the Toledoans went by thousands to meet him. He was not to feast. Five thousand sold their heads in the trap. Amron joked; but he had not much time to enjoy it. When the people realized what he had done a mob arose and burned his castle, with Amron in it.

Toledo was early freed from Moorish rule, and the greatest of those who helped to maintain her independence was Rodrigo Diaz the Cid, who, next to Napoleon, is held by many to be the foremost heroic figure in European history. He held important court offices under Alfonso, living in the Alcazar at Toledo. Many poems and stories have been written about the Cid. He belonged to a noble family, married the granddaughter of Alfonso V, and later made himself a king. The fate of a battle was never in doubt if the Cid was fighting; for his side was sure of victory. Toward the end of his life, after hundreds of battles and due to his many conquests, the taking of Valencia from the Moors, in 1094. He ruled well and justly for the next five years. Valencia and Murcia, and in 1099 died of anger over the defeat of his favorite lieutenant. The Cid is Spain's hero and saint, familiar to all in legend and in song.

crowns may still be seen; but no one has ever seen the other treasures. The Moorish kings, though they

No. 2. ROYAL PALACE, MADRID

Standing on the grand stairway of the Royal Palace, his hand upon the balustrade, and looking out over the city, Napoleon Bonaparte said to his brother Joseph, to whom he had given the throne of Spain, "You have a house here that I am not sure was the emperor's opinion of the royal residence in Madrid. To Napoleon the conquest of this ancient and famous land of Spain was one of his greatest victories.

Many people, when their first view of the country around Madrid, are surprised at the lack of trees there. It is known that the mountains of that region were once covered with a heavy growth of forest, which has since been cut away. The trees were felled to put money into the royal treasury. One reason they were never replanted is that many of the Castilians have a strong dislike for trees. They think only of the birds that nest among the branches and feed in grain fields; they forget that trees are both useful and beautiful in themselves, giving shade and moisture and beautifying the scenery.

In later years a wise government has come to see that the slight loss to farmers is not nearly so important as the effect woodlands have on the climate. Groves now dot the landscape with patches of refreshing green, and the climate is already improving. It is hoped that the bleak country, which now grows only a sparse crop of cereals, will be transformed into a more regular rainfall and a steadier temperature. Scientific forestry can now redeem the error that was committed centuries ago. Madrid, though a modern city, has been the headquarters of Spanish art and literature. Velasquez went there from Seville to spend the greater part of his life. It was there that Cervantes wrote the second part of Don Quixote. More important, perhaps, than any other figure in the Spanish drama was Lope de Vega, the prince of the city. He led an eventful life while writing poems and plays with wonderful readiness. According to his own statement, more than a hundred of his plays were written as quickly that it took only twenty-four hours from the time he started to compose each one of them until it had been produced on the stage. He wrote 1800 plays. He is said to have printed 21,000,000 lines, which, if we can believe his own account, was only a part of what he wrote. To do this he must have written nearly nine hundred lines a day all through his life.

Many other artists and writers have worked in Madrid, and the Spanish capital is still a well known center of culture.

No. 3. ALCAZAR AT SEVILLE

Tranquilly amid its gardens that glow with roses and orange blossoms the Alcazar of Seville, palace of the old Castilian kings, stands now as it stood in days of the Moors. Here and there a ceiling, a stairway or a balcony, damaged by fire or earthquake, has been repaired according to architectural ideas of more modern times; but in the main the Moorish work has been left as it was. It is a fine example of the art of the Moors, if they were there today, in their own

The palace replaces an old Gothic castle, which had been erected on the foundations of a Roman villa. Uncertain traditions and the imagination of historical writers have pictured the palace as having been the scene of many a battle, but the actual history began.

There are many stories about the Alcazar, both true and fabulous. The Moorish king, Abd-el-Rahman, who was one of them. It was told how a tribute of a hundred mules paid to the Mohammedan ruler had been lodged in the palace. The king, however, did not show that the calf ever asked for such a tribute, and it is probable that the Court of Moors had not been built at the time when this incident is supposed to have taken place. Nevertheless, such a story has grown up, and given to the name a name that it will doubtless bear for all time.

After Castile had thrown off Moorish rule Seville was made the capital of Spain. For several centuries Christian kings lived in the Alcazar, adding somewhat to the original structure as the Moors had left it. The name of Pedro more clearly connected than any other Spanish ruler with the history and fiction of the building. He was called Pedro the Cruel. A grim scene of slaughter and bloodshed was through the streets of Seville in the palace had made him the subject of many old tales and rumors. Some of these stories were so horrible that he is said to have met four candidates for a judge's position beside a pool in the gardens where they had gone to rooms undisturbed by any feeling of strangeness. The site on which the Alcazar was built is probably the oldest in Seville.

find him. Pedro, turning to the first, asked him what was floating in the pool.

"An orange," replied the candidate without hesitation.

The second and third gave him the same answer.

The fourth fished out the piece of fruit with his staff, examined it, and replied more accurately, "Half an orange."

Pedro immediately gave him the appointment.

MAYOR GAYNOR DEAD.

New York Official Passed Away While on His Way to Europe.

New York, Sept. 15.—Mayor William J. Gaynor of New York, died on the steamer Baltic in midocean at 1 o'clock Wednesday afternoon, according to a cablegram received here today from Rufus W. Gaynor, his son.

Mayor Gaynor sailed away from New York, a fast falling man, on the morning of September 4.

The message was sent by wireless and cable to Robert Adamson, his secretary, by his son, who sailed with him.

The message read as follows:

"Father died Wednesday at 1 o'clock, due to heart failure. Notify mother."

An hour before he sailed, only one man, his secretary, knew of his plans outside of members of his immediate family.

The mayor's announced purpose was a brief vacation on the ocean. He felt that the tonic effect of the salt air would restore him in a few measure to health.

The Baltic was due at Queens town today. The mayor died as he was nearing that port.

News of his death was sent from Crookhaven by Rufus W. Gaynor and relayed from Crookhaven to New York by cable.

Mayor Gaynor left New York at a time when the city was seething in one of the strangest municipal political conditions in its history. The day before his departure he was notified on the city hall steps by representatives of independent political organizations that they had chosen him as their standard bearer in the mayoralty campaign.

A throng of crowded city hall park assembled to hear him accept.

He had prepared a speech of acceptance, but was so weak that he was unable to deliver it, and his secretary read it for him, the mayor standing beside him.

Before the mayor sailed his secretary issued a statement denying reports of the mayor's serious illness.

The recent attack of the old throat trouble, due to the wound inflicted August 19, 1910, by James J. Gallagher, just as the mayor was about to leave this city for a brief vacation in Europe, had entirely disappeared, according to Mr. Adamson, and Mr. Gaynor expected to return and enter the campaign with his old time vigor.

BACK TO THE FARM.

Dept. of Agriculture Holds Producer Responsible for Cost of Livestock.

Washington—Back to the farm, the department of agriculture has traced some of the responsibility for the present high cost of livestock. In a report issued today the department sets forth that the prices paid the farmers for their products were more, with few exceptions, on September 1st, than they received last year at that time. Among the more important articles of food which showed slight increases were: Potatoes, 10.3 cents a bushel; butter, 1-7 a pound; chickens, 1.1 cents a pound, and eggs four-tenths of a cent a dozen. Oats increased 4.5 cents a bushel, barley 1.7, and cotton five-tenths of a cent a pound. The price of corn decreased 2.2 cents a bushel, wheat 8.7, flax 24.8, rye 7.8, buckwheat 6.6, and hay 22 cents a ton.

The farmer also received more for the meats he produced, except lamb, on August 15, this year, than he did at the same time last year. Hogs increased 65 cents per 100 pounds, beefs 52 cents, veals 31 cents, and sheep 6 cents. The price of lamb decreased 10 cents per 100 pounds. Horses increased only $1 a head, while milk cows increased $3.70 each.—Idaho Falls Register.

FOR BREACH OF CONTRACT.

Case Appealed to Supreme Court from This County.

Transcript on appeal was filed in the supreme court on Saturday in the case of James H. Boyd against M. B. Holey. The men named entered into an agreement by which Boyd was to sell Holey 40 acres in Twin Falls county and Holey was to sell Boyd four lots in Murtaugh and pay him $1450. In the district court Judge Stockeager rendered judgment in favor of Boyd and the appeal to the supreme court is taken by Holey from this judgment. Both men claim breach of contract.—Statesman.
