Clean-up day should mean today that each owner should see that not only to his own promise but extend the work to the alloys and the alloys. A little extra effort on the part of all will make Twin Falls a wonderful clean little city and a source of pride to every resident. It does not seem just exactly right that the resident property owners should have to clean up vacant lots and thus benefit the speculator, but that is just what constitutes good citizenship, is taking up a fair share of the community burden with a will. It is this spirit that has actuated the people of this city in the past nine years and it is the spirit that builds cities worth while.

The railroad news in this issue of the Times is not tending to say the least. The railroads are certainly sympathetic with Idaho Falls in the blow which will fall if the news published in this paper can be considered as authentic. Railroads for Idaho for 1916 will probably be paper ones, easily broken and as easily destroyed. There cannot be any hope for this section for an outlet south in time for the Panama exposition next year. It will take at least a year for the Western Pacific to build late this section should be started at once. The short line could get through from Rogerson southward in much shorter time, but its policy of doing nothing unless forced to by competition leaves little hope for anything which looks like a railroad. There is no reason why there should be a "no-railroad" territory with a longer haul is held in their grasp at present.

The Mexican situation presents no many angles that the true status of affairs cannot be learned from press reports. Villa's attack on Torreon is still a matter of guess work. As far as reports will back up, the situation is claiming a victory. Villa still maintains a stout defense and means able to make the bankers disgorge millions to keep his tottering administration together. From any angle the United States can find little encouragement. If Villa is defeated the Huerta regime will become no unbecomingly dominating that this government will be unable to treat with it. On the other hand Villa's victory means nothing more or less than two years more of fighting either with Federals or with winning groups of Mexican bushwhackers. But for war-ridden Mexico there seems no real solution until its bellicose population is thoroughly sick of war and its awful toll in lives and wealth. From a comparatively wealthy and thrifty nation under Diaz, the Southern neighbor of Uncle Sam has in a brief space become a pauper. The cause of the war attributed to selfishness of American and foreign investors cuts little difference in the mind which their selfishness has brought about and which will take Mexico 20 years to recover the damage done in three short years. The capitalists will then go in and make a fabulous profit, while the poor of Mexico will pay by years of toll for the privilege of fighting battles for the other fellow. There seems to be little of real benefit to the common people in the aims and purposes of the revolt against Diaz and the captured uprisings fanned on by clever military and political leaders.

END OF THE U.S. EXPRESS COMPANY.

The belief that there is room in this country for both the express companies and the parcel post, which was strengthened by the energetic measures lately taken by the companies to meet the new competition, is given somewhat of a shock by the news of the United States express company's coming dissolution. The announcement marks an epoch in our history, according to The Wall Street Journal, because it "will be the first instance of a big concern liquidating its affairs because of governmental action." Will the other companies follow this example, editors ask. The San Francisco Chronicle replies that small expressmen are going out of business in all parts of the country. The vigorous activity of the United States express companies might be interpreted as a negative answer, though there is something ominous in the New York Sun's statement that in the first five months of the present fiscal year "the operating income of the four big companies—United States, Adams, American, and Wells-Fargo—was nearly $2,000,000 lower than in the previous year." The United States company, however, was the hardest hit—its earnings for the period mentioned were $185,768 less than in the preceding year. It had sold no stock since 1913; its stock, which had sold as high as 145 in 1910, fell as low as 40 in 1913, and the express business done in the year ending June, 1913, resulted in a deficit of $109,000. Says the New York Sun:

"For the company to continue doing business under these circumstances would be in effect to distribute to the general public the assets and the money it has saved by successful business in the past. The wise and the fair thing for a company so situated to do is to stop business at once and distribute its assets among its own stockholders, whose property these rightfully are."

"Taking up the question whether the other companies will do likewise, The Sun remarks:

"It can not be expected that the express companies will continue in business merely for the sake of doing that part of the business from which, in the ordinary course of events, the smallest profit is derived. Obviously the government must face the necessity of providing in some way for the quick and easy transportation of perishable freight, such as shipments, from the country districts to the city markets, of butter, eggs, vegetables, and the like.

Who will do the work abandoned by this company on 32,000 miles of railroads, many are asking, and the Wells Fargo company is spoken of as a probable successor. If the other companies do not care to assume this doubtful risk, remarks The Sun, "either the government would have to take this over or the community would be the loser." Or, suggest others, on the routes affected the railroads might do the abandoned work themselves. Then, if all the other companies follow the United States, the railroads of the country could easily go into the express business. "Subject to the necessary vehicles for house-to-house collection and delivery, they have all the necessary machinery," The Wall Street Journal notes, and it continues:

"The parcel post can not pretend to handle a large amount of express business. The railroads handle it now, as transporting agents for the express companies. If the latter are liquidated, driver-out of business, the railroads for their own sake, will continue to handle such friends; and there is nothing economically wrong in the elimination of a useful but not essential middleman."

But it is the parcel post that in driving the express companies out of business, if they are being driven out, and it is the parcel post that must take its place, most observers think. Some, indeed, believe that the postal service can not in the very nature of things, be expected to be a satisfactory substitute for the express companies. This is the point of view of the Merchants' Association of New York, which has petitioned the president and the postmaster general not to permit industry to be deprived of the services of the private carriers through the "further and unwise extension of the parcel post service." Each service, say these business men, has its own distinctive field. Mr. William A. Marble, president of this association, further extenuates the New York Herald article, to the effect of the parcel post:

"It does not provide a 'pick-up' service. It does not adequately provide for safety. It does not provide adequate indemnity for loss. It does not provide any indemnity for damage."

"It excludes a wide range of commodities from quick transportation."

"It prevents valuable packages from being securely closed."

But to this and other objections emphasizing the post-office department's lack of proper equipment, and Philadelphia Record's answer it: Let congress provide the equipment. The New York Times thinks that "before Mr. Burdison ventures upon any more innovations he should devote himself to perfecting the operation of the present parcel post." But "the men charged with operating the system are working out improvements," contends the New York Press. It holds that in one large city—Philadelphia—the postmaster has taken an important step in popularizing the service by establishing 200 stations for the receipt of parcel post packages. And The Press thinks it "likely that in the not distant future parcel post wagons will call for packages, just as express company wagons do at present; that a free insurance arrangement will be introduced, and that 'receipts' will be given for every package."

Yet these extensions are in themselves by no means universally popular. The protest of railroad officials who call it unfair to be made to carry a huge amount of additional matter without extra compensation have been quoted in our columns. Senator Bristol recently asserted on the floor of the senate that the parcel post was tion is being worked out in the interest of the big mail order houses and that it is being used in the west to transport ore in fifty-pound packages, mattresses, and baby carriages. Senator Lodge has declared his belief that the postoffice department is robbing the railroads and robbing the rural routes in an effort to establish a freight system.

In its Washington correspondence the Boston Transcript prints a brief history of parcel-post progress in a year and one month:

Jan. 1, 1915—Parcel post law goes into effect.

Feb. 1—The insurance rate on parcel post packages is cut in half by the postmaster general.

July 1—Special parcel post stamp is abolished.

July 1—C. O. D. feature is put into effect, thus making possible a farm-to-city mail order business.

Aug. 15—The weight limit is increased from eleven to twenty pounds in the first two zones; and rates in these zones are lowered from one-half to three cents per pound.

Oct. 1, 1914—The weight limit is increased from twenty to fifty pounds in the first two zones and from eleven to twenty pounds in all of the remaining zones. At the same time rates are reduced between one and three cents per pound in all zones up to the seventh and

Vital Electric Service Facts

We want all our customers to become familiar with the undisputed facts that vitally concern both the producers and consumers of electricity.

Experience has proven that competition means:

- (1) Duplicated investment.
- (2) Increase cost of production.
- (3) Ruined earning power of local company.
- (4) Disfigured streets and alleys.
- (5) Eventual combination of interests involved.
- (6) Increased charges or postponed rate reductions.
- (7) Discouragement of further local investment.

These facts we believe to be incontrovertible.

We solicit your interest in the situation in order that you may satisfy your own mind regarding it.

Those now commending our competitor for being responsible for reduced rates will eventually condemn the same concern for saddling an unnecessary investment on the community and other expenses must be paid out of the rates charged.

You do not agree with us!

Then re-read the above study the points contained—and see if you can honestly say to yourself that the facts do not warrant the conclusions.

A COMMUNICATION

U. D. Thomas Treats With County Extravagance in Running Matter

The following article is an excerpt of the speech made by U. D. Thomas at the recent county convention, and is worth perusal by all taxpayers. The Times will gladly run comments on it, from any of the county officers regarding their side of the question.

I did not come here for the purpose of making a political speech, but I wish as a plain business man to talk to you about the business affairs of our county.

It is very interesting when we compare this county with other counties of similar size and standing in this state, to see what the result will be as to the actual expenses compared with the other counties. In order to inform myself on this subject I have taken pains to get the best figures and compare Twin Falls with three other counties. And that comparison will give you some idea of whether Twin Falls county is costing us in comparison with these counties too much to operate the business of our county.

You know, sometimes we allow our political beliefs to prejudice our minds so that we are not able to distinguish clearly from the business and political. We should look at running the county the same as we look at the running of our own private business. We should not be just as economical in conducting the public affairs of the county as we would if we owned the business, and was operating it for our own benefit.

And making this comparison I wish to make it without prejudice to any political party and make it as a comparison of business, of which I am one of the stockholders.

The county officers sometimes take offense because we dare to presume to inquire into the business and the cost of running the county. They seem to lose track of the idea that they are nothing more or less than our servants. That we have hired them and pay them a salary to do our work for us, and as masters we have a right to know what they are doing, and whether they are conducting their office on an economical basis and whether we are getting value received for the money we pay.

The county of Twin Falls county are anxious to know why they are paying such enormous taxes. And, where does the money go? And the first thing we hear for the voters, who are the stockholders in the corporation, to demand to know what is being done with their money. I do not charge any hostility to the voters, who are the stockholders in the corporation, to demand to know what is being done with their money. I do not charge any hostility to the voters, who are the stockholders in the corporation, to demand to know what is being done with their money.

I have tried to be fair, I have tried to choose counties whose conditions are similar to Twin Falls county. Latah county is a county practically the same size as Twin Falls, it is a county made up almost entirely of farmers, agriculture is almost the only industry of that county. Kootenai county is the largest county of the three and one of the richest counties. It is made up of agriculture, lumber and irrigation.

Now, these three will make a fair comparison with Twin Falls county and, to begin making the comparison we will base it upon the assessed value in each county.

Twin Falls county assessed valuation, $24,144,838. Kootenai county assessed valuation, $35,062,880. Latah county assessed valuation, $25,168,095.

Now, you will notice that the three counties I have taken have all a larger valuation than Twin Falls county. Now, let us see how the total cost of operating Twin Falls county will compare. The total cost of operating Twin Falls county for one year is $87,007. The total cost of operating Kootenai county for one year is $104,984, but you will notice that Kootenai county has about $5,000,000 more assessed valuation than Twin Falls county. The total cost of operating Canyon county for one year is $81,241, or they operate Canyon county for $6,000 less than Twin Falls county. Although it has almost $9,000,000 more assessable property, Latah county is operated for a total cost of $55,458, or a saving of $31,549 over Twin Falls county. Although, mind you, Latah county has almost $5,000,000 more assessed property than Twin Falls county.

Let us compare the tax you pay Mr. Voter, on each $1,000 value that you own in Twin Falls county at the county seat you pay $40 for each $1,000 worth of property you own. In Kootenai county you pay $37.49. In Canyon county you pay $37.05. In Latah county you pay $41.50. Each of them less than Twin Falls county and yet each of them are $4,000,000 to $9,000,000 bigger than Twin Falls county.

Now, the next question, when we find we are paying too much, we say, "Let us take a few things that would be directly beneficial to you, Mr. Voter, two things in which you are deeply interested, the schools and the roads. Does this substantial amount we pay in Twin Falls county go for the benefit of the county schools and the county roads? Let us compare that in Twin Falls county out of every $100 you pay in taxes, 25 cents go to the county schools, 25 cents go to the county roads, and the Latah county, every one of them has more than 25 cents go to the schools and 25 cents go to the roads. Does it mean in the county roads? This would be a direct benefit to the county. It would mean that the county would have a better school and a better road than the county of Twin Falls. This is a comparison I made. The Twin Falls county out of every $100 in taxes, 10 cents go to the county schools, 10 cents go to the county roads. In Canyon 13.7 cents go to county roads, while in Kootenai 19.05 cents go to county roads. Mr. Voter and Mr. Taxpayer, you are not getting the best for the

"March 16—An order goes into effect admitting books to parcel post."

That this parcel post advance is not likely to be checked soon is inferred from the senate's refusal, after hearing some of the arguments above mentioned, to set a weight limit by law or to restrict the postmaster-general's power to modify parcel post rates and regulations. What this portends for those express companies which are not slow to signs of following the United States' example, no one can tell. As the situation stands, concludes the New York Evening Post, the questions really at issue are, first, whether the commission's new rates deprived the companies of opportunity for a reasonable profit on such business as they could command, and second, whether the competition of the parcel post was fairly conducted. The first of these questions is as yet by no means wholly determined.

But regarding the second consideration, it must be pointed out with emphasis that the existing condition of things is one which calls for fair play by the government in its payments to the railroads for transporting parcel post matter." Literary Digest.

SYNOPSIS.

Book I.

CHAPTER I—Theophilus Van Vechten, a young man of leisure, is astonished to find a man sitting in the armchair across the street from the Powhatan club. The house has long been unoccupied and is spoken of as the House of Mystery.

CHAPTER II—Several persons at various intervals enter No. 1114.

CHAPTER III—Van Vechten expresses concern to his friend, Tom Phinney, regarding the whereabouts of his cousin and fiancée, Paige Carew. A fashionably attired woman is seen to enter the House of Mystery. Van Vechten and Tom follow the man and find him dead in the street.

CHAPTER IV—Van Vechten is attracted by the face of a girl in the crowd of onlookers surrounding the body. Later he discovers the girl gazing at him with a look of scorn from the windows of the mysterious house.

CHAPTER V—Detective Flint calls Van Vechten to get his version of the tragedy.

CHAPTER VI—Tom Phinney goes alone to a yarding firm to inquire among some persons in a passing motor boat two persons who had been in the House of Mystery. He sees one of them, a Mr. Callis, on shore later and taken to a house. He hears a girl named Leslie, evidently the daughter of the man in authority, question his captors. A sweet-voiced girl later protests against the roughness of his captors.

Book II.

CHAPTER I—Van Vechten calls on his uncle, Theodore Van Vechten, his man in Wall street and known as the "Man of Iron." In search of information regarding the whereabouts of Paige Carew.

CHAPTER II—Detective Flint shows Van Vechten a gold mesh purse found in the House of Mystery. Van recognizes it as belonging to Paige Carew.

CHAPTER III—The sweet-voiced girl tells Tom Phinney about her refusal to disclose her identity. Tom declares he will meet her again.

CHAPTER IV—Detective Flint tells Van Vechten he has a theory that Paige has been kidnapped. Van goes to lay the case before his uncle.

CHAPTER V—Messages are sent to George in an effort to trace Paige. Tom tells Van Vechten Leslie is now and relates his adventure.

CHAPTER VI—A message from London reports that two persons, including Miss Carew and her companion, Mrs. Gower, called for him some time previously. A reward of $2,000 is offered.

CHAPTER VII—It develops that the ladies visited the English home of Temple Bonner, owner of the House of Mystery. Flint has a theory that they are connected with the case.

CHAPTER VIII—It is recalled that Temple Bonner was in love with a daughter of a Communist. The other daughter was a man named Derravast. Bonner and Willard were Communist friends. A search is started for Willard.

CHAPTER IX—Van Vechten enters the House of Mystery by the back door in time to hear John Callis threaten a girl. He interferes but is rendered unconscious in the struggle with Callis.

Amid the stress and confusion of violent situations, the human mind is capable of the most amazing feats. And at this critical moment Van Vechten's prompted him to commit such an absurdity.

"Get out of here, you little idiot!" he yelled at the girl, who seemed frozen to the table.

She hesitated one second longer, then, with a stifled scream, slipped into the hall and closed the door after her.

He would not be pleasant to record what happened to that room. There is nothing heroic in a balded rat darting desperately from a trap into the jaws of a waiting terror, nor in the spectacle of a lamb being prodded to the shambles. For perhaps five minutes Van Vechten succeeded in preventing Callis from grasping the door-knob—a period in which he was reduced from a correctly dressed, rather handsome young gentleman to an object that was no more than a littered, bloody semblance of humanity—and then he sank into oblivion.

Callis stared at his motionless adversary. Why didn't the fool move? The answer came promptly, unbidden, because he couldn't. He would never move again, unless, perchance, it should be to rise up and follow him out of the room, along the echoing halls, down the dusty stairs, into the street. With a shudder he went, turned and double, twist and dogged, there would be that thing at his side, until at last—

And there was yet another shadow in this silent house, one other for some shade; suppose it should detach itself from the roof; suppose the two shadows should get together and enter into an unholy pact to bring his undoing?

John Callis clenched his teeth to stop their chattering. His starting glance at the door and sought to penetrate the shadows, which every minute were looming larger and larger and more obscure, then was irresistibly drawn back to the shapeless blurred light in the corner. He did not look away from it again.

Swallowing convulsively, licking his dry lips with a dry tongue, he backed noiselessly, step by step, until he brought up against the door. Never for an instant did the horrible dread of the two shadows blending and following him pause in its unending suggestion.

He felt for the knob like one in a

CHAPTER I.

Tom Finds Employment.
It was in an exceedingly dejected frame of mind that Tom Phinney, alone in Van Vechten's huge six-cylinder car, made his way to Maiden Lane

In search of Mr. Brownlow. The low state of his soul was in a large measure owing to a condition that had grown rather imminent and personal only during the last few minutes; one that meant renunciation of all his past mode of living and realization of a necessary readjustment to an uncertain future; he had turned over a new leaf, forewore idleness and frivolity, and was going to work!

Gloomy meditations darkened his handsome face, and in his preoccupation he wasted a good quarter of an hour searching for Brownlow's number. In harmony with a faded portrait of the latter's establishment, he directed his attention to the smarter, more modern structures; and it was quite by accident that his eye alighted upon the right place—an indecorously shabby building, ageworn and decrepit, pinched between two skyscrapers. He stopped the motor and viewed the entrance with doubt and disfavor. But there was no mistaking it; from the curb, Brownlow's name could be seen on the directory board just inside the entrance.

There was not even an elevator, so Tom was obliged to climb two flights of stairs, dark and dirty, to a suite of dingy offices, in the corner of which two old, white-haired clerks bent over ponderous ledgers without so much as deigning him a glance, and a trim young lady, affording a sharp note of contrast to her surroundings, pointed upon a typewriter. It was also who recognized his presence with a bright, smiling regard, who took his card and disappeared into another room, and who returned presently to say that Mr. Brownlow would see him at once in his private office.

The farther Tom went, the more incredible it became that this could be the business habitat of the Kohlner family. He was familiar with every private car that acknowledged New York as its home port—and far from being dazzled by a bewildering display of precious stones, the sparkle of a diamond here would have been so conspicuous as to be startling.

To his unobtrusive eye there was nothing to indicate what manner of business might be carried on here. Brownlow's private room was a dingier and more unimpressive than the outer office—for all the world like the hulk of a frost-bitten nut of which Brownlow was the wrinkled kernel.

But could Tom have been present while the importer was entertaining a prospective customer, he would have obtained an insight into Brownlow's methods. In front of the only window that was scrupulously clean stood a wide table. Across the polished top two comfortable leather chairs faced each other. Two or three dark purple velvet pads and a couple of jewelers' lenses lay here and there upon the top itself. At these two places the importer and the customer would have been sitting face-to-face, the latter leaning while the former disconcerted at length upon any subject save the one that had brought them together, until one of the big figures in the corner of the room returned from Brownlow's safe-deposit box in a nearby bank, bearing beneath his arm a small leather case. After this had been deposited at had retired to re-attach himself to his own particular ponderous ledger, the case would have been opened and its glittering contents poured out upon the velvet pads. Then the little man's gaze would have ceased, and he would have uncovered a minute knowledge of gems and values against which the sharpest bargainer knew that it was useless to contend. Unnumbered millions of dollars worth of precious stones had passed through his claw-like fingers, each adding its quota to his wealth; and thus it was that he could indulge in a luxury like the Kohlner.

The importer was alone, however, when Tom entered. He rose nimbly from his desk and greeted his caller with an effusiveness that left the latter tongue-tied.

"My dear Mr. Phinney!" cried the little man, beaming the while vigorously pumped—Tom's unresponsive right hand. "My dear Mr. Phinney! Almost literally you have arrived at the eleventh hour. It is impossible for me to express my gratification at seeing you. So you didn't forget the request I made so bold as to proffer at Mrs. Payne-French's?" He stopped with surprising abruptness, then went on in a tone expressive of consternation. "Don't say that—you have failed! Don't tell me you have come here only to bring disappointment to your part. But . . . Ah! Sit down!"

BETTER BEEF AND DAIRY CATTLE

an acre, worth about ten dollars a ton. Milk, butter and beef command good prices there.

It seems to me it is on such farms as this that the dual-purpose animal will fit. Cows of true dual-purpose type will produce a larger percentage of roughage into milk and meat than will the strictly dairy type. The dairy cow has been developed under more artificial conditions both as to food and care than have the beef and dual-purpose types. This does not imply that under right conditions the special dairy breed will give more milk than the most satisfactory, I believe, however, that the dairy cow is presently adapted for dairy purposes and, broadly speaking, to such purposes alone. The average farmer is not a dairyman—not even an "average" dairyman—and the dairy cow, one of the special dairy breeds, is usually a sort of misfit on the average farm.

The average farmer is not prepared to specialize in milk production, but it must keep a few cows, and it is surprising how many farmers stick to the Shorthorn—or Durham, as many call the Shorthorn—contending that this type returns a satisfactory amount of milk, produces good steers, and eventually, after serving her period of usefulness as a milk-and-calf producer, can be turned into a very acceptable quality of beef.

Every average farm requires some cows, and they provide a very profitable outlet for the skim milk in excess of that required by the calves. Most farmers nowadays prefer to sell the cream and save the skim milk for pigs and calves. Since the feeding of baby beef has partially revolutionized the type of cattle going over the scales, here again is an opportunity for cows of dual capacity. In producing these young bevers the successful feeder appreciates the value of the calf that received a good start—the calf that had a heavy-milking mother.

Probably the greatest factor in keeping alive interest in the dual-purpose cow is the constantly increasing cost of labor. Many farmers are keeping a number of heavy-milking cows that incline toward beef—reformation, many of these are true dual-purpose cows, and farmers are keeping them because of that fact. They do not make a practice of milking all these cows, but allow milk the herd to raise calves from the other half, and in this manner reduce the labor of milking.

While this practice may not be considered strictly in the advanced type of keeping cows that will raise but one calf a year. Many dual-purpose cows will give all the milk that two heavy young calves can consume and will keep up for five or six months. At the end of that period the calves may be weaned and a third calf started well along toward the goal of the dairy beef before his foster mother has finished her lactation period. Any cow worthy of consideration as a dual-purpose animal will furnish enough milk for two calves during the first half of the lactation period.

In what I have written I have had in mind the more usual type of 100 acres or more of fairly good land, who has considerable roughage that can best be marketed through his cows who raise cattle rather than make a business of fattening them. It is in this class of men that the feeders must look for stock and grower calves to convert their corn into prime beefs.

The argument that has so long been advanced by the special dairy breed advocates, that in spite of food value milk can be produced far more cheaply than beef, has induced very few people to substitute milk for beef in their dietary. The high price of beef may have caused some people to use less, but is not that a pretty good inducement for milking more?

I was not a little surprised recently in reading an article by Prof. G. W. Warrar, of the department of farm management, Cornell University, in which he stated: "A point that seems to be forgotten in this country is that the Holstein is a dual-purpose animal. The calves are large and mature large veins quickly. The cows and bulls have considerable beef value."

While it is generally admitted that Holstein calves make excellent veal, I have never heard of the breed exploded, as a "double-decker." Two years ago, at the National Dairy Show, there was an exhibit of Holsteins from the E. B. Co. that created quite a sensation because of their uniformity and refinement. This herd was considered the best single exhibit of Holsteins seen in years, and the manager said that in selecting his breeding cattle he chose those of dual-purpose form. The writer has observed that a few of the best producing Holsteins inclined to "flesh up" rapidly and carry a thick covering when not in milk.

I have questioned that the English breeders give much care to the selection of the bull, and it is likely that much of the disappointment recorded by those who have not failure in attempting to breed dual-purpose cattle in this country is attributable to lack of judgment in selecting the herd bull. A prominent breeder of dual-purpose cattle recently made the statement that when men out of ten visiting his herd with a view to purchasing a bull would base their selections upon the appearance of the animals as beef producers, rather than for dairy qualities or the performance of the female ancestors as milk producers. Right here is a good point at which to emphasize the great importance of looking closely into the female line of ancestry.

J. J. Hill, of Minnesota, recently made an extensive importation of milk-producing Shorthorns from England. One of the young bulls in that importation is from a dam and granddam that have more than 11,000 pounds of milk each in a year, and his sire was equally rich in milking inheritance. Furthermore, it is said that this young bull possesses excellent conformation, judged from a beef standpoint. Mr. Hill is firm in his conviction that the dual-purpose cow will hold an important place on western farms. He believes that the straight-beef breeds will continue in favor on the extensive farms and ranges, and that the strictly dairy breeds will continue to hold their place where conditions are especially favorable for such production.

There is no lack of authentic data in this country as to the production of both milk and meat from the same animal or herd. At the present time the Wisconsin Experimental Station is conducting an experiment with this end in view in which a number of breeders of Red Polled are co-operating. These cows are kept in the ordinary conditions as nearly as possible under conditions as found on the average farm. A record of their production of milk and butterfat is kept for this year, the male calves are converted into steers and will be fed out as baby beefs at the station. In this way will be obtained the exact production of the cow. Each cow is being tested during two consecutive years, and the second year has been about completed. The cows are rebred with a reasonable period after freshening so as to produce a calf at least every twelve months. While it is not yet possible to "prove" data from the station on the experiment, it is claimed by those most interested that the breed is making a highly satisfactory showing.

A great many of the opponents of the dual-purpose idea take the position that all cattle other than pure beef breeds are of the purely dairy or beef class, pointing to the dual-purpose cow as a compromise between the two. There is no consideration here. There are many herds of high-producing dual-purpose cattle throughout the country. There are many other herds of so-called dual-purpose cattle that have failed of the purpose for which they were intended. These failures have, however, been due to poor judgment and improper care.

My belief is that the greatest success will come to the breeder who trades his dual-purpose cattle primarily as dairy cattle, but who breeds for size and easy-milking qualities from cows of high-milking and beef inheritance. The herd bull must possess inherited milking qualities, but should incline to beef form. The nearer the cows approach this form the more likely will they be appreciated.

I believe it is true that the dual-purpose cow is not being bred with as much care as the straight beef or dairy cattle. If, as the dual-purpose advocates claim, this is the "farmers' cow," it is not to be expected that the average farmer will give the careful attention to breeding problems that the men who specialized in that line of production will. Many great farmers are poor breeders, but it is manifestly unfair to charge against a breed the mistakes of a lot of poor breeders.

A great deal of attention has been laid upon the adaptability of the dual-purpose cow to Western conditions, where the coarse feed, together with grain, are grown in abundance. It has been shown that who and her progeny are well-adapted to converting the shepherd's crop of alfalfa, hay, milk and meat. There is another section of the country where I believe this type is destined to become popular.

I refer to the Southeastern portion of the United States.

In many of these states there are still vast areas of cheap land well adapted to cattle production. And a know of hundreds of thousands of acres of land above the tick line, at an altitude of from 600 to 800 feet, that will mature cattle many months in the year.

Much of this land is still to be developed as a dual-purpose breed. Cattle of this breed have repeatedly won high honors in the slaughter tests at the International Livestock Exposition, and great credit is due a breeder of these cattle in Iowa—many years ago, has brought splendid exhibits of both breeding and fat animals to the Chicago show. The record of that herd alone presents a strong argument in support of the dual-purpose idea. There are a number of herds of Red Polled throughout the country averaging well above 6000 pounds of milk a cow a year. Some years ago at the Smithfield show in England, a pure bred Red Polled steer was slaughtered and showed a dressing percentage of 75.72. This, according to the London Livestock Journal, had only one loss—exceeding in "lean" and never by a pure-bred steer of any breed.

The Devon, or the South Devon, as it is called in England, is a breed that has long held a record for its excellent "doers" under adverse conditions. The Devon is probably the oldest breed in America, and while these cattle have never been bred in large numbers in the United States, they have more than held their own as a farmers' type. As a breed, they show rather more refinement than other milking Shorthorns or the Red Polled, but they lack the size of either of these breeds, nor are they as heavy-milk producers. Devon milk tests high in butterfat, and in this respect compares favorably with that of the Jersey and Guernsey.

It is said that Devon steers have won higher honors year after year at the Smithfield show in the "butcher's" meat class.

The beef is unusually tender and well marbled. Throughout the East, especially the upper New England states, there are considerable numbers of these hardy Red cattle to be found upon the hillsides. The writer knows of one herd of Devons in New York in which the cows average round 6000 pounds of milk that tests close to five per cent butterfat. While there is nothing extraordinary in such an average it is very creditable, as this herd is handled under ordinary conditions and fed upon homegrown products.

In a recent lecture at the Canadian Winter Fair, G. E. Day of the Ontario Agricultural College, had this to say of the dual-purpose type: "She cannot be fat when she is milking heavy, and for this reason the farmer or buyer should not be deceived into thinking that such a cow looks so smooth as one of the straight beef type. Steers from the dairy Shorthorn herds of England as feeders are far ahead of the general run of feeding steers in this country."

Prof. Day believes there is a place for the dual-purpose cow in Canada; that while a great many farmers are turning their milk dairies as a specialty, they want cows that produce milk profitably and produce good beef when required, and it is his opinion that to secure such cattle in this country it will be necessary to select the best type of cows, develop them along dairy lines, and pay close attention to the selection of sire and dam, with ample beef form plus high milking inheritance are selected, it is unreasonable to expect that the dual form can long be maintained in any herd.

While the breeders' ideal has never been realized in any line of livestock breeding, I believe that the best-supported claim that the three breeds of which I have written, the milking Shorthorn, the Red Polled and the Devon, possess in an average degree, high milking quality, large size, attractive form and satisfactory fleshing qualities. In addition to this, the cows have the ability to recover from their losses each year or to produce calves that converted into steers will feed profitably into high class beef. After the cows period of usefulness has passed they may be fed into a fair quality of beef and sold to the butcher.

It is true that all cattle have a place in our economy, and the fact that the system is changing has opened up a new field of usefulness for the "double-decker."

Believe me, she is an authority on women's ready-to-wear. Jeanette always gets Wooltex or Redfern garments and she attributes her charming appearance to that fact.

Jeanette has been in Paris, too, and when there she met that wonderful fashion artist, "Madam SAVARIE." She told me it was some job getting an introduction, for you know they are real fussy about such things across the pond.

Jeanette says that the beauty of Wooltex and Redfern garments isn't only in the style, but in the wear, too, only the best materials are used and every garment fully guaranteed.
