The DAY of the CHILD

BY WILBUR D.
NESBIT

THE tree shines with the candle glow,
The tinkles glitter jewel-
wise,
And we would that our souls
might know
The joy told in the children's eyes.
Such sheer delight as this of theirs—
A wondrous happiness
it is!
And every word the message bears.
This is the children's day
—and His!

LET us come, as the Wise
Men came
Those nineteen centuries
ago,
Led by the Star's eternal flame
That bade them rise and hasten on.
They brought rare frankin-
cense and myrrh,
They brought rich gems
and graven gold;
They knelt, adoring, near to
Her,
And all their marvelings
they told.

AYE, as those Men of long
ago,
Today we, too, may see
the Star,
May see its mystic heavenly glow
Flash out o'er Childland fair and far,
And from our hands now fall
the gifts
And we know why the
Wise Men smiled
With gratefulness, and each heart lifts
Its chant of worship of the Child.

"But the mystery is this, Memahib! It is written that the marriage ceremony shall take place before our god, the elephant headed. And always when we begin the ceremony we are thus strangely overcome by sleep. Solve this riddle for us and my master will pay you well."

A merchant went home to supper one night and noticed a new liver coffee percolator on the table. He asked his wife where she got it and she said: "Why, dear, I picked this out of Smith's catalogue and it cost me $4.25 and express." Of course the husband was mad in one moment and said: "Why in the deuce didn't you tell me you wanted that thing. I have lots of them at the store and they cost just no $2.00." Then his wife handed him one like this: "Well, John, if you would advertise once in a while, so the people would know you were still in business, maybe people wouldn't send away for so much stuff."

The decision of the federal court requiring the Salmon River company to live up to its contract with regard to the water rights is a signal victory for the settlers and should do much toward clearing up the atmosphere and the bitterness on the part of the settlers toward the company. The Times sympathies have been with the settlers for the reason that the individual working alone against a big corporation has very little chance of securing justice, even through the courts. The Salmon River settlers were invited out to this country through glowing advertisements of the promoters, who were possibly acting in good faith to some of their promises. The settlers came and by the assurance of the state were made parties in a contract which was supposed to be equitable. The contract declared that for so much money paid annually that the other party—the company, would furnish a given amount of water. It promised a continuous flow in that contract to every settler who by his signing showed his good faith. The company would not have given much in its demands if the case had been reversed. Corporations, as a rule, may very strict regard to laws which work in their favor. But when the company found by actual trial that there was not water enough to go around, due to their own laxness in investigating the source of supply, they immediately began the process of retreating the water and by so doing departing from the letter of their contract. The water could not be delivered at the time advertised and the settlers who came out and tried to extract a precarious living from the land had another fight to prevent collection of interest on the water payments called for in the contract. Later the company in the hands of a bunch of bondholders attempted to shift the system to the settlers, reasoning that once out of the water shortage would be the settlers' own funeral. It was this plan which the settlers sought to defeat in their suit in the federal court in requiring the water company to deliver the amount of acre feet of water called for in the contract. The company lost because it was wrong. The decision is noteworthy for the reason that for the past two years the settlers have been demanding that the state land board, the guarantor of the worth of the contract, have repeatedly refused to take action which would aid the settlers and has made concessions to the company which were not in accordance with the contractual rights of the settlers. From the results of this case the settlers of all irrigation projects should take heart inasmuch as tardy justice at last is vouchsafed them. The Times believes that the company has a debt not made of fortune in the project and with the possible cutting down of the acreage stands to lose a large amount. But it is one of the business hazards which any business man has to take. Any excessive profits made on the projects would not have been returned to the settlers had the case been the other way. There is no reason why the settlers' action in good faith should be reimbursed the other investor for his loss. The contract which binds one of the parties should be equally binding upon the other. There is really a lot of line and squabble about the litigation scolding among investors and a lot of animal humbug with which the capitalist tries to force public sentiment his way at the expense of the innocent purchaser. The Times believes that irrigation securities have a stronger and healthier tone where the settlers are contented and prosperous than where the success of the promoter means failure to the home builder.

As to the son, England has nothing to her credit there, despite great sacrifices.

THE MERCY OF MODERN WAR
If the great war reveals an advance in the science of killing, it is also notable according to a writer in the Paris Journal des Debats, for great progress in the treatment of the combatants who have the lesser ill luck to be merely wounded. In proof of this contention he offers us the record of a surgical hospital at Verdun, where, in one month, out of a total of 600 operations—or about twenty per day—less than ten amputations were found necessary. Those that were made, moreover, were minor operations, involving the loss of a finger or toe. The writer admits having seen more serious operations, as, for instance, the amputation of a leg, an arm, a hand; but he assures us that they are very few in comparison with the records of war forty to fifty years ago. The number of "minor" amputations, however, is no longer the fashion. The reason for this he explains by quoting a British medical authority as follows: "Conservation should be the rule of treatment in cases of bullet fractures. In an immense majority of cases healing is sure to follow, no matter which bone is hurt or how badly." A similar doctrine was propounded by the British in the Balkan war. He adds:

"With wounds from modern projectiles, especially the bullet, which remains the most effective of all being the cause of death or injury in 80 cases out of 100 in 1870 and of 31 in the Russo-Japanese war—a great and most favorable change is to be noted. The region of the wound is smaller and more localized. As to bone splinters, they are small and numerous, while long ones are infrequently found. . . . The first impression is that the case is very serious, that the limb is lost. No other thought occurred to surgeons a hundred years ago, who were responsible also for the former practice of withdrawing all bone splinters from a wound." The writer then cites authorities as stating that amputation is justifiable only when "the mortification of the extremity is in itself fatal." In fact, "amputation is permissible only in the case of gangrene, or when the patient shows signs of being unable to withstand infection or a lack of resistance against the toxic conditions resulting from the wound."—Literary Digest.

THE VOICE OF TURKEY

Taking a snap at England and Russia in a popular pastime just now with the Turkish papers, and two examples of the utterances of the leaders of Turkish opinion may not be amiss. In an article on "England and the War," the Constantinople Tansin says: "The words of English officials and English newspapers have made more noise during this war than all the guns of England's fleet. What purpose will England take on land during the war? She is bound by her pledge to the Triple Entente to aid France by sea. . . . So far, she has sent a small force to help the Belgians and to strengthen the left wing of the French army. She has shown vigor and obstinate persistence, but has suffered severely in her attempt to resist the persistent advance of the Germans. Now she must up her territorial. The brawny confidence and persistence of her soldiers are acknowledged, but more than needed. One officer is required to every hundred men, and it takes years to provide competent officers, and in this Germany is far ahead of England.

Another Constantinople paper, the Ikdim, pours scorn on the dream of the occupation of Stambul and of seeing the great mosque of St. Sophia as a Christian temple once more. It remarks: "This Russian dream is no new thing; it is a plan carefully concocted years ago. While the best way to treat so absurd a hope is to laugh, it is impossible for a Turk not to be irritated by it. Yet we need not worry ourselves about Russia's designs. Turkey, relying on the shield of God, on the strength of her army and navy, on the devotion and self sacrifice of all her people, will render impossible the realization of any such dream."

The Ikdim, despite its confidence, seems to have some qualms about the attitude of the Armenians and makes a strong bid for their sympathy on the ground that they have, under Turkish rule, far greater opportunities of preserving their national character than would be allowed by Russia, who would seek to absorb and Russinize them. "Even if Russia were to take our eastern provinces, it would not be to make them autonomous under Armenian rule, but merely to add them to the Russian Empire. They will make the Armenians just a catspaw for their own evildoings, and for this there is ample evidence."—Translations made for The Literary Digest.

Do you think land that will raise 20 to 40 bushels of wheat per acre is worth anything? Do you stop to think what land in the older states is worth, even where they cannot produce as much.

Right Christmas Attitude

BEWARE of uttering pessimistic and cynical remarks about Christmas and Christmas joys. If only from motives of vanity, abstain from gubbling during the festive season, for nothing so surely fixes a person's age as disagreeable remarks about the utter futility and absurdity of keeping Christmas. However well preserved, however free from gray hair, wrinkles and other distressing marks of devoting time, be quite sure that your Christmas attitude will not give you away. "Heigho for the holly! This life is most jolly!" is the correct attitude. It is the attitude of the child, and at Christmas time the immortal child which lurks in every human being wakes to life if we do not frighten it and allow it to creep back to its hiding place for want of encouragement. Grumpy, disagreeable people naturally do not like Christmas, because it shows them up.

KINDHEARTED.

"Are you going to hang up your stocking on Christmas eve?" asked the boy's uncle, patronizingly.
"I suppose so," answered the boy, still more patronizingly. "Father and mother seem to expect that sort of thing, and it would be a pity to disappoint them."

Christmas Beauty.
Think lovely thoughts in keeping with the spirit of the time.

FESTIVAL FOR THE YOUNG

Opportunity of Christmas of Bringing Happiness to Children Should Not Be Passed By.
Christmas, the celebration of the birthday of the Divine Child, is peculiarly the children's festival. And while it cannot, too, but be a time of special rejoicing among grown-ups, we realize after all, that it has no other charm to compare with the pleasure which is in some child's delight over the doll or drum or picture book that our special Santa Claus has brought him.
This opportunity of making some child's Christmas one of surpassing joy, of which he will carry a grateful and ennobling memory into after life, years, it may be, after our direct influence for good or evil will have ceased forever—this opportunity of giving pleasure is one of the best that life has to offer us. And perhaps the greatest opportunity is his who in place of home times, has the wide, gray world of homeless, loveless, unhappy childhood from which to choose the most needy recipient of his Christmas giving. The chances of giving happiness in this way are so many, the means so ample, and the deed itself so worthy, that no one of us should let the season pass unimproved.

For it is good to be children sometimes, and never better than at Christmas, when its mighty Founder was a child himself.

—Charles Dickens

WISE AND JUST.

There was a man in our town.
And he was wondrous wise.
From holly down to fir,
He said all plants were mistletoe.
To his discerning eyes.
Whenever beneath a spray of green,
From holly down to fir,
He found a maiden young and fair,
He then and there, kissed her.

And when the maids objected,
He did penance there and then;
He counted up each kiss he took,
And gave it back again.

Satisfied.
He was a poor man but a contented one.
Santa Claus came to him and said:

"What do you want, my friend?"
"Nothing," he replied, with becoming modesty, which he hoped would be rewarded.

And Santa Claus, who had seen that he gave it to him and passed on.

Papa's Suggestion.

Caleb's Conversion

By EAZEL OSWALD

IT WAS Christmas eve, and Caleb Churton, the money lender, sat in his great dining room, surrounded by all that makes for luxurious living.

"So the pretentious artist's work to this," he mused, chuckling contemptuously while he half-spoke the words.

Ten years before, his elder brother had told him that the boy who was not cut out for a Shylock, that he preferred to get a living by pleasant means than his fellow beings' flesh and blood, and had gone out into the world "cursed by the father" and laughed at by his brother.

It was three years later and 12 months after he had announced his marriage to a fellow artist's daughter—that old Churton died, leaving all the business to Caleb, and not mentioning Jack Churton by so much as a single word in his will.

To do him justice, Caleb had rebelled against this as much as he could; but he had found out that his brother was able to keep his head above water, and, after offering him a share—only to be indignantly refused—Caleb applied himself to the task of doubling his father's wealth.

All these things went through his brain as he sat by his fire. Of a sudden a thought struck him.

"I will go and parade my wealth before them—will make the wife bitterly envious and Jack sorry that he ever refused me!"

With this selfish intention he rose, ordered his automobile to be brought out, and was soon whirling toward Jack's home.

Suddenly the auto stopped, and he got out, telling the chauffeur to return in an hour, not longer.

"It has finished before, I can spend the time somehow," he thought.

Up the steps of the great apartment he went until he came to a door labeled 42. When he knocked, and getting no answer, entered very quietly, finding the door not locked.

He looked round the tiny hall, and then stepped into the first room.

"Are you Santa Claus?" The tiny little every stopped him in his wanderings, and she looked down to his feet to see a sunny-haired, blue-eyed little miss gravely regarding him.

"But no, you can't be Santa Claus, for he's ever so old, and has got a white beard and a long coat, and a big bag full of toys, and comes down the chimney, and doesn't come till after I've gone to bed, and—"

She paused in her list of details for what she thought the first time for many years, Churton laughed heartily.

"You mean little mite," he said, "I'm not Santa. Who are you?"

"I'm Gladys Churton, and I'm not queer. I'm very well, thank you."

"So you are Gladys," he said. "Where are your father and mother?"

"They've gone out to buy some things for me, and they told me to be ever so good. They will be back soon."

Churton looked around him. It was so pleasant, so happy, evidently, and the home he had left seemed to lack a great deal. He sighed.

"What's the matter, strange man?"

"Nothing, dear."

"But there must be something. I always go like that when I want a doll, and mamma won't buy it for me. Is your little girl naughty?"

"I haven't got a little girl."

"Poor strange man!" with a clouding of her sunny face. Then, suddenly,

"Look out, here come mamma and dad! Let's hide."

"All right, dear, tell me where."

Heastly she drew him behind a curtain, and followed.

"Where's my little girl?" in a clear, happy voice.

The mite ran out and struggled in her mother's arms.

"You don't know who she is here," she said, impatiently. "There's a strange man, and—poor dear!—he hasn't got a little girl, and he isn't happy."

She ran back to the curtain and dragged out a somewhat dusty, shame-faced individual.

"Come to see what a wonderful thing I have! I want a taste of home life, and escape from the eternal accounts. No," as the clear, blue eyes of the baby were fixed on him, "I don't want to see here to show off my wealth, and to make you envious, but your little ray of sunshine here took the small out of me. Gladys is home, and she's not a little miss, and let's be human this Christmas night." The mite can go to meet stars here.

When Churton's head came back, he was told that the master would not be home for some days.

A Silver Tea Caddy

By SOPHY F. OGDEN

HE was a frail-looking little girl, who had been self-supporting for over three years. Since her mother died, and was tired now, as she walked through the street crowded with shopgirls like herself.

There was little in the window to interest a mite of a girl earning a pittance a week, yet of a sudden her eyes, a moment before so tired, lighted excitedly, and a casual observer might have noticed how exultantly beautiful they were.

The tired line of her mouth also relaxed and broadly she stepped closer to the plate glass and peered for a long, concentrated moment at a silver tea caddy of quaint design.

After a second's hesitation she opened the door and walked bravely into the little shop.

"The tea caddy?" she asked of the woman who greeted her inquiringly.

"How much is it?"

"The little silver one?" The woman looked her surprise, as she noted the shabby black coat and much-worn skirt.

"You wanted to buy it?" she asked kindly, for something in the girl's eyes made her know she was in earnest. "It is $25."

"Twenty-five dollars!" the girl gasped, and as suddenly as it had come the brightness left her eyes.

"Twenty-five," she repeated. "I'm afraid I could never afford that. She stopped her next envelope firmly and turning, walked out of the shop."

In her tiny room, as she cooked her manager dinner over the gas plate, and later, when lying wide awake in her narrow bed, she thought of the beautiful tea caddy. She thought until it became a cherished ideal, veiled with wonderful scenes among the great people of the world.

The following day she neglected her lunch, and hurried to the shop to once more view the wonderful caddy.

When she entered the woman greeted her warmly, for the expression in her eyes had proved haunting to the woman all the past night.

"Did you really want to buy the caddy?" she asked, as she handed it to the girl, "for if you do—"

"I must buy it," she interrupted, as she took it reverently in her two hands, "but I can't pay the money all at once." She hesitated.

"How much could you pay?" The woman suddenly understood the girl's need, and a great kindness came to her. "Perhaps we could come to terms."

"I have $2 that I have saved, and I think I can spare 50 cents each week, only make $6," she added, apologetically.

"Six dollars!" the woman gasped, as the enormity of the girl's project came to her. "You may have it at your own terms," she said impulsively.

"Oh!" For a moment the girl held it to her breast, then she handed the money without regret to the woman.

In the days that followed the woman became very fond of the girl, for she came often to gaze with awe upon the silver caddy, of quaint design, and in the short while the woman learned to know what a difference an ideal can make in a life.

In watching the girl's love for the thing that kept her poorer than she had been the woman found her own life broadening.

On Christmas eve a young man persistently tried to buy the caddy, until the woman finally told him the story of its sale. He listened in wonder, and then asked for the name of the girl, who seemed so great a marvel that he wanted his mother to see and help her.

The same evening, after the young man had left, the girl made her final payment, and with a wild joy throbbing in her heart carried the tea caddy home, and with it a beautiful bunch of holly, a festive touch from the woman.

She had plucked hard to save the $6, each week, but her reward was great and worth the happiness the ideal had always given her.

It was again Christmas eve, and a dainty woman, wrapped in a soft fur coat, opened the door of the little shop, and with a radiant look came to the woman.

"Where's my little girl?" she exclaimed. "Don't you remember me?"

In the deep, winsome eyes there was something familiar, and suddenly the woman threw her arms about the girl, and peering over her head espied the tea caddy.

"We have just been married," he explained. "My mother found her for me, and we wanted to come to thank you for what you have done."

"I have missed your example so," she said, looking at the girl with a longing look, for they were suddenly all so happy, and it was Christmas, for outside faraway bells were ringing.

NO DEPUTY TREASURER NEEDED

E. H. Dewey Would Run State Office
Without Help.

The duties of a treasurer of the state of Idaho are no so difficult or numerous that he needs the assistance of a deputy, for he has plenty of time to perform both the duties of state treasurer and deputy state treasurer himself. This is the belief of State Treasurer E. H. Dewey and in a report filed today with the state board of examiners as required by law he recommends that no appropriation be made by the next legislature for a deputy treasurer and thereby the state will economize to the extent of $5000 for the biennial.

State Treasurer Dewey succeeded O. V. Allen, former treasurer, by appointment from Governor John M. Hines. The present state treasurer has been in the treasury department long enough to come to the definite conclusion that the elected treasurer of this state can very well afford to dispense with the services of a deputy in his department and do the work. State Treasurer Dewey finds that since he has been in the office as its official head, the present deputy state treasurer has not done the work which, had there not been a deputy, he would have had time enough to do himself, for he finds that he has plenty of time on his hands.

JANKS GETS NEW TRIAL

Supreme Court Reverses District Court
on Faulty Instructions.

W. C. Janks, through his attorneys, W. P. Guthrie and Judge J. C. Rogers, received word last Thursday from the Idaho Supreme Court that he had been granted a new trial in the case of the state versus Janks, on the charge of receiving stolen property. The defense for Janks, in the district court, for this county, appealed from the verdict on the grounds of erroneous and misleading instructions to the jury. It was on the instructions that the supreme court based its order for a new trial. The case attracted a great amount of attention because of the prominence of the defendant and the efforts made toward conviction by the stockmen of the county, who received special counsel to assist the prosecuting attorney. Mr. Janks, although sentenced by the court to a term in prison, was released on bail pending the appeal for a new trial. The prosecuting attorney would like the work on the case with the first of January, retire and if the case comes up again with the new trial, attorneys Guthrie and Rogers would like to continue the work. It would be granted, are greatly pleased with the confirmation by the court. In the first trial the defense offered no evidence, believing that the state had failed to make out a case. The syllabus of the supreme court decision follows:

In reversing the case for trial, the supreme court says that the instructions given by Judge Stockinger were prejudicial in that they stated that the larceny of such property and consequently the fact that such property was stolen may be proven by the uncorroborated testimony of a witness. The court, in the first place, recently stated as applied to the property in question was not warranted by the evidence and even if it was it was not proper for the court to decide this matter.

Also in the matter of whether the property was stolen or not, the court comments, as follows: "We may say that the initial and vital issue in order to convict the defendant, namely that the property was stolen, has been supported from the evidence. It comments upon the fact that the property in question was not warranted by the evidence and even if it was it was not proper for the court to decide this matter."

Justice Truitt is the author of the opinion. Chief Justice Sullivan concurs. Justice Truitt was not on the bench at the time the case was heard.

LOOK OUT FOR CHRISTMAS FIRES

Warnings for Stores, Churches and Bazaars.

Holiday fires in these winter filled with people are usually household fires. Inflammable decorations make fires easy to start and easy to spread. A match, a gas flame, or an electrical defect may do it. Watch gas jets. Decorations may be carried against them by air currents. Watch smokers. Do not permit them to light cigars inside buildings. Do not make the slightest change in electric wiring without consulting an electrician. Read your insurance policy. Before attempting any heavy or ill-advised decorations, which may cause your insurance company to cancel your policy, read the policy and see if the policy contains anything like this:

"This entire policy unless otherwise provided by agreement indorsed hereon or added hereto, shall be void, etc., etc., if the hazard be increased by any means within the control or knowledge of the insured."

If you burn, you want your indemnity; do nothing to impair your contract.

Warnings for the home.

Every year in America many children are burned to death by fire from Christmas candles.

Do not decorate your Christmas tree with paper, cotton or any other inflammable material. Use metal, tin, tinsoil and other non-inflammable decorations only, and set the tree securely so that the children in reaching for things cannot tip it over.

Do not use cotton to represent snow. If you must have snow, use asbestos fibers—do not use cotton.

Do not permit children to light or relight the candles while the parents are not present. They frequently set fire to their clothing instead.

Do not leave matches within reach of children at holiday time. Candles are meant to be lighted and if the children can get matches they will experiment with them. They imitate their elders.

Do not allow trees to remain inside buildings after the holidays. The type itself ignites readily when the needles have become dry. A large number of fires usually occur in January from this cause.

A house of meritment is better than a house of mourning.

HIGH SCHOOL BURNS

Pocatello building, costing over $40,000, destroyed Wednesday.

A fire that destroyed completely the inside and roof of the middle and north wings of the high school building and which was slowly eating its way into the south wing of the building, started in the basement of the building, shortly before one o'clock this afternoon.

It was just 2:30 when the large school bell weighing close to a thousand pounds, crashed from its stand and went smashing through to the basement, giving a loud mournful toll in its passage—Pocatello Tribune.

HAS SOLVED ROAD PROBLEMS

Obolizing Brick as Road Bed With Marked Success.

The road problem for heavy traffic roads has been solved in Ohio, according to Engineer John T. Laylin, who represented the Ohio railway department here today on the progress of the American Road Builders' Congress.

Laylin discussed the topic of brick rural highways and pointed to Cuyahoga county, Ohio, with its 400 miles of brick country roads as a county that was first to reach a satisfactory solution. The state highway department in the laying of 225 miles of such roads in the last five years, at an average cost approximating $1,200 per mile for each foot in width, which includes drainage, grading, culverts and bridges, has been able to give excellent service at a great saving in cost, through good drainage and grading of the brick.

For many improved roads that have not stood up under the strain of heavy traffic, Laylin suggested the addition of a brick surface as the best means of getting a dependable road and saving the existing investment.

THE FAME of Archie Graham's
Scotch Shortbread is not alone local—from far-off Omaha comes an order for this reasonable and delicious product of the baker's art, so dear to the heart of every man with even a trace of the Scotch about him.

But it is not alone to the Scotch that Archie Graham's Shortbread, and the host of other good things in breads and pastries appeals, but to everyone who has ever given the Rogerson Bakery a trial and who is guided in a selection of foodstuffs by flavor, purity and general all-around wholesomeness.

Bread-and-pastry-making in the Graham way has come to mean something above and beyond the ordinary product of the bakery. Sanitary surroundings mean purity of product and ability in any line of business is largely a matter of experience.

Archie Graham has been a baker all his life. Here is the letter of the Omaha man.

3316 Ohio St.
Omaha, Neb., Dec. 10, 1914

Mr. Archie Graham,
Twin Falls, Idaho.
Dear Sir:

Please send at once seven boxes of Scotch Shortbread, the same as you have been sending me for the past two years. I enclose order for $15.00.

Yours Truly,
GEORGE R. CATHERO.

This Omaha man has nothing on Twin Falls in the matter of appreciation of the products of the Rogerson Bakery—Scotch Shortbread is only one of the many good things of the Graham kind to be found there.

Fruit cake and Christmas specialties of all kinds.

Honest effort to the glory of Bannock Industry.
