NEW BRIDGE IS PROPOSED Commissioners Considering One at Twin Falls

NEW PROPOSAL A SURPRISE FOR CITIZENS HERE County Commissioners Urged to Go Slow in Matter of Bridge Building

Coming close upon the heels of the action of the county commissioners in letting bids for the construction of the Murtaugh bridge is the reported attempt on the part of the gentlemen to now place another bridge across at Twin Falls to cost something more than the Murtaugh bridge which was stopped temporarily by injunction.

The business men of Twin Falls, almost without exception, were utterly surprised at the action of the Twin Falls bridge coming up at this time, having almost no intimation of the serious discussion of the matter in the first place.

Commissioner Carlson, as representative of this district, is urged to carefully consider the matter before making any further recommendation.

LET'S DOWN BARS Twin Falls Allowed Competition in Electrical Power By Recent Decision

Ruling Goes Into Detail as to Reasons for Reversal of Former Decision Specifying Insufficiency of Service

Twin Falls is to have competition in electrical power as the result of a new decision handed down by Commissioners Hallett and Graham, of the public utilities commission, acting upon the petition of the Idaho Light and Power company to enter this field.

The Idaho Light and Power company, through its local superintendent, D. C. Brown, is getting ready to commence the construction work in this city which began six months ago, when the franchise was granted to it.

The reversal of the commission's position on this important question is a result of Idaho was made in the person of the commission, in the former opinion Axel P. Rapinett, member of the commission, and Charles H. Rapinett, chairman of the commission.

The opinion of the commission necessitates a brief review of the situation that existed in reference to the power war in Southern Idaho and out of Idaho was made in the person of the commission.

and have not had competition. The Beaver River Power company and the Idaho Power & Light company started building into these two fields, the former in the Pocatello and the latter into the Twin Falls. The rival companies in control of the fields appealed to the public utilities commission to prevent entrance of those companies into their territory.

After reviewing the facts leading up to the former ruling and citing opinions to sustain its reversal of the former ruling, the commission concludes as follows: "The record shows that in the spring of 1912 the applicant here, or rather its predecessor in interest, contracted a transmission line from its station to Boise and also a transmission line to Gooding from a maximum of 100 miles in the city of Boise and the village of Gooding, Mountain Home and Glens Ferry and supplied electric energy for light and power purposes in said communities from and after about May 1, 1912, and the schedule of rates so established ranged from a minimum of 10 cents per kilowatt hour to a maximum of 25 cents per kilowatt hour.

"We next come to the third proposition which was that the territory in question completely served by the Great Shoshone company." The record shows that the Great Shoshone has constructed 96.87 miles of rural distribution lines, scattered over six counties and radiating out from 19 different centers.

"Another question urged by the applicant was that the Great Shoshone power more cheaply than the Great Shoshone company." Evidence was introduced showing the property cost of the Great Shoshone company.

"The Idaho Light and Power company is a public utility company and is subject to the public utility laws of this state. It is a corporation organized under the laws of Idaho and is doing business in this state.

The resignation of Mr. J. H. Sawyer from the Great Shoshone power company is greeted by every business man in the city. Mr. Sawyer, placed in a difficult position between loyalty to the power company and equities to the public with whom he must deal, has proven himself very much a man, and has only the good will of the business men upon his retirement, with good wishes for prosperity in his new venture upon this tract. It is a matter for congratulation that the country is not to lose the influence of Mr. Sawyer and his estimable wife.

The decision of the public utility commission in allowing the Idaho Light & Power company into this city in competition with the Great Shoshone is one which is pleasing to a large majority of the consumers in this section. The great field for electrical development has not to any appreciable extent been filled by the present company and the electric districts electrical power has not been secured or an attempt made toward selling the ranchers the only safe and convenient form of motive power for farm machinery. There are a number of communities which have been asking for service which they have not been able to obtain. Within reach of easy distribution is one of the richest countries in the west for which electrical energy should do as much as it has for the Spokane country. Electric railways, electrical power for big manufacturing plants, better and power for the smaller producers should mean a big field to start with, with an increase equally large, resulting for more trade. There is no reason why two companies should not operate in the territory if the price is made of the opportunity. No one expects two companies to get rich out of the franchise in the city of Twin Falls, but there is the field and the right time today for an aggressive power company to make of the Twin Falls country a tremendous profit-making section. Eventually there may be but one company in the field, but in the meantime, competition will have its benefits.

The two companies will be compelled to broaden out into the whole territory to create their own field of endeavor. Twin Falls country will then be gained by the territory rather than acting as the paying bit logjam and of the boom time. With the utility commission acting as arbiter of prices there is little chance that the consumer may later have to pay a low competitive price which has been established on terms that nothing of any value will be changed up to the consumer.

The decision means that the Twin Falls country for every line of business has the confidence of the people in justice returns.

POTATO PRICES.
Locally high prices prevail in the potato markets and President Wilson's secretary of agriculture says it is because the farmers this year are holding a larger proportion of their vegetable than was held in the last four years in the belief that they will profit by a future rise in prices, according to the statement by the department of agriculture. "The supply, however," says the secretary, "is normal and the conditions do not forecast any material advance in prices."

In consequence of the firm holding of the potato by producers of Idaho, Michigan, Wisconsin and Minnesota—important producing states—the price on Dec. 1 was about 1 1/2 cents per bushel higher than a year ago and 1 1/2 cents higher than three years ago.

The department estimates that about 42.1 per cent of the marketable supply of potatoes of the 1913 crop remained in the hands of farmers and 5.5 per cent in the hands of dealers on Jan. 1, in the important potato growing states.

This is the government explanation, but there is another and the searcher for truth ought to consider it carefully. It shows "the cat in the hat" and a funny-looking fellow.

The Wilson-Underwood tariff bill put potatoes on the free list and we would hold a new convention, and as long as our present constitution exists, this cost will continue, for every legislature is certain to submit a number of amendments to be voted upon. The four amendments which were submitted at the last election cost the state at least $10,000, and the eight that were voted on in 1912 cost approximately twice that sum. So within the last two years it has cost the state $20,000 or more to secure the adoption of eight and the rejection of four amendments to the constitution.

That amendments are submitted to the people every two years is conclusive evidence that our constitution is out of date, and it never can be brought up to date by continually amending it—the only thing to do is to hold a new convention, which should be composed of 75 or 100 of the state's ablest men, who would be able to replace the present antiquated and patched-up constitution with one which would meet the needs of the state today. We hope Senator Elliott's resolutions pass both houses of the legislature.—Montpelier Examiner.

PORTLAND MARKET REPORT.
Portland, Jan. 15, 1915.
Receipts for the week have been cattle, 1623; calves, 31; hogs, 3081; sheep, 5028.

The cattle market has not been characterized this week by quality and as a result top prices have ruled less than last week. Top steers brought $5.00 Monday, but have ruled less since. Best cows brought $4.75.

Hogs have steadily declined since Monday, although the Portland market has maintained its supremacy over all other American markets all week. The depression seems general and is not by any means a local affair. Top prices around $7.00.

Sheep
Sheep market continues strong with high prices. There is still a shortage of good quality stock coming forward, but all offerings are taken readily.

SALMON SETTLER'S CALLED

Land Board to Hear Objections of Settlers January 25, in Boise.

Consideration of an offer from one of the lumber companies of the northern part of the state to purchase the timber of seventeen hundred acres of state land at a price to approximate sixty-eight thousand dollars, the necessity of securing patent to two hundred thousand acres of timber lands in the Clearwater district and the application of the Salmon River Land & Water company that a time be set for a hearing where the water users on the Salmon river project could present their objections to the proposal of the construction company to turn over the irrigation works to the operating company, which occupied the attention of the land board at its first meeting since the new administration went into power. Governor Alexander, Miss McCoy, state superintendent of public instruction and Secretary of State Baker are the new members of the board. Attorney General Peterson and Auditor Huston hold over. S. H. Hays appeared on behalf of the Twin Falls Salmon River Land & Water company with two matters to offer for the consideration of the board. There are sixteen thousand acres in the Salmon river aggregation, Mr. Hays stated, that are held by persons who have never been inside the state, as far as the company has been able to learn. Most of these filings were made through powers of attorney. There are other tracts, which amount to several thousand acres in the aggregate, in which the owners have proved up but have not been on the land since that time.

the purpose of sinking a well in order to furnish water for his homestead. The state engineer was asked for a report.

Matters concerning the timber interests of the state were presented to the board by George R. Day, state land commissioner. Ranchers and farmers in Promont county want to be heard on the matter of leasing lands in that section, the agreement under which they have been held having expired. This timber lies in the Panhandle and is valued at about $50,000. It has not yet attained the full growth but is of merchantable size. The company which made the application has cut all around it and on the Washington side, the timber has been cut so that the state tract is practically isolated, according to the report of the commissioner. The fire danger on such a piece is greater than under ordinary conditions, he said and he advised that the offer of the company be accepted. The secretary was instructed to write to the company and see if the offer will hold good.

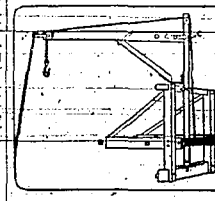

Attention was called by the commissioner to the fact that patent had never been received from the government to two hundred thousand acres of selected lands on Great river and Priest lake and that sixteen thousand acres of this had been applied for but that, until the land had been cleared to the state no contract could be made. In this matter, Governor Alexander told the board that he intended to make a trip to the east soon and that, if the board would agree, he would take the matter up with the heads of the department. The board authorized him to confer with them in the matter.

Mr. Day presented a plan for saving some of the burned timber in the Clearwater district. He advised that the use of the streams for impounding the cut-logs but as the matter has not come up in any way for action, it was decided not to consider it at this time.—Statesman.

MAKING CORN SHOCK LOADER

Saves Farmer as Much Lifting as Hay Carrier—Doesn't Muddy Time—Dimensions of Device.

In response to a query Monroe R. Jenkins of Wayne county, New York, gives the dimensions and framework of a corn shock loader in the National Stockman and Farmer as follows: The timber is of hardwood with the exception of the turning post, which may be of oak or ash. If the wheels are made of hardwood, they should be of smaller dimensions and will be strong enough. The bolts used are of half-inch iron, and at the length indicated in the drawings. The pieces marked B are bolted to the inside of rack-bed pieces, far enough back to allow the crank of the windlass to turn without tilting the rack.

Corn Shock Loader. T—Windlass. B—Attachment to Rack. C—Round Upright, Eight Feet High, Four Inches in Diameter. D—Arm, Eight Feet Long.

The windlass should have a catch which will be found useful to hold the moving parts when going to and from the field.

When load is on, let down the swinging arm by unhooking top end of wire. Hook collar hook in front ladder, cross-piece, then draw windlass up tight and catch. This binds the load while going to the barn.

A little practice will enable the man on the load to tell just when to have the shock lowered as he pulls it over. My corn lies are about five feet long and have wire fasteners. By taking out standard this frame can be taken apart and stored in a few minutes. When done using for the season. We think it saves as much lifting as the hay carrier does in haying time.

Here's the Grouch Again. "I thought you told me that Jones was a 'practical' man, with the old 'fogy.' 'Why, I saw him giving a moving van today.' 'Well?' interrogated the Grouch.—Clackpatt 'Enquirer.

"He who hesitates" won't get in on the cut-price sale of our winter goods.

It will end soon.

There are still many choice bargains left. But you must come now; they are dwindling away fast.

It's the low cut-price and the high quality that are fast closing out our goods. Underwear, Shoes and Caps and all winter goods included.

The occasion being a surprise shower in honor of Mrs. Mike Deane, a member of the club. A bounteous dinner was served at noon, plates being laid for thirty-three. After spending a most enjoyable and extended day, a hearty word of thanks to Mrs. Gwin for her kindness and hospitality, was expressed for their various homes.

The "Yama Yama" dance given Friday was one of the most unique dances that has ever been enjoyed in Twin Falls. The guests were Mrs. Alworth, Mrs. Barnett, and Earl Alworth. The hostess was presented with many pretty gifts.

THE PERILS OF PAULINE

Written By Charles Goddard

SYNOPSIS

Stanford Marvin, wealthy manufacturer of automobiles, has worn himself out by over-exercising his adopted daughter, Pauline, and she has become a nervous wreck. He has decided to leave her to her own devices, but she is so nervous that she cannot do anything. He has decided to leave her to her own devices, but she is so nervous that she cannot do anything. CHAPTER IV

Harry Marvin had just entered the private garage back of the mansion, locked the door and drawn the shades. There was only one automobile in the garage and it was the big six-cylinder touring car which Pauline and Owen had made their trip the day before to the aviation field. The car had been wrecked and the same ground just behind Harry's house.

tered the needle valve of the carburetor and being heavier than gasoline had lodged there and stopped its flow. It was a bad case of carburetor trouble and the carburetor, but instead Owen with nervous fingers adjusted everything he could get his hands on, and after five minutes he had succeeded in a farmhouse and hired the farmer to drive him the short remaining distance to the aviation field.

Several minutes were in the air but not the Frenchman's, when the farmer drove up. The roads and the edges of the field were alive with cars and Owen and Pauline were hurriedly hurried to the hangar. The French aviator welcomed Owen and inquired for the magazine. This confirmed Owen's fears that something had happened to her on the way. It had troubled him a little that the runabout had not passed him on the road, but he had not been sure of the road, but he had not been sure of the road, but he had not been sure of the road.

have been out by disipation as much as age. The most prominent feature of the lovely countenance was a nose. Her red from prolonged exposure to sunburn or tanning.

"If he isn't a pirate he ought to be one," said Owen.

The man carried the top of a ship's mast, as the round brass which held a ship's compass is called. He entered the dismal port of a man's yawl shop. The taxi was stopped by a block away. As Owen and Hicks approached the shop they heard a loud argument going on. "How much do you want for it?" "Two dollars. It's a brand new one."

"You stole it, you son of a sea cook. I'll give you a dime for it."

"I did not steal it, so help me—"

"The captain of that 'line' picked me over in the North River gulf. It was for saving his little girl's life. He begged to take anything I wanted, but I wanted this. The Owen and Hicks, listening outside, heard a fearful and wonderful tale. To relate the sailor's own words, would be as impossible as to pick the green specks out of a saucer of cheese.

"I heard the gentleman with the binoculars, peering innocently along the decks Friday night, had heard a commotion on the British tramp which he mistook for a fire alarm. Some fifteen or more longshoremen had invaded the ship, overcome the captain, laid him down and were about to throw his daughter into the sea. The girl had walked in and threatened them all single-handed, driven them off into the darkness, rescued the little girl and released the captain. In gratitude the commander had made him a present of the binoculars.

At the conclusion of the story there was a pause, then the other voice answered:

"There's a wonder. As I said before, Owen and Hicks were to be paid for the binoculars and 50 cents for the story. Now you can take it or I'll have you pitched overboard."

"Gladly," said the sailor of the tale, and a moment later he passed down the street with the two captives at his heels.

The sailor man, proceeding at a rapid pace, suddenly turned at a corner like a yacht jibing around a buoy and vanished into a dimly lit saloon. Owen and Hicks went to after him.

Owen ordered and invited the sailor to join them. The mariner accepted with alacrity and entertained them with a vivid description of the character and descent and habits of the baronetcy and money was in sight.

"The sailor and his new-found friends grew quite sociable. The learned that his name was Nelson Cromwell, that he had deserted from the British navy at a tender age and since then had been through a series of incredible adventures and hardships, which disproved the old adage that you can't keep a good man down. Among other things he had been a plunderer that had accounted for such of his treachery as was respected from a certain respectable lawyer to Hicks.

At last Owen intimated that he had a business proposition to discuss, and they adjourned to the sidewalk.

"Do you want to earn some money?" asked Hicks.

"Well, that depends," said Boyd, doubtfully.

"That's the only kind worth going after," said the sailor.

"That's where we agree with you, my friend," said Hicks, "we are after money and plenty of it. I'm sorry for us and plenty for you, too if you can keep quiet about it."

"I can't believe in the nobility of labor. I believe that work is the crowning shame and humiliation of the human race. It's all right for a horse or a dog or an ox to work, but a man ought to be above it. It's degrading, interferes with his pleasure and wastes his time."

"I feel the same way," agreed Owen, "but somebody has got to work to make shoes and food for us."

"Yes," admitted the sailor, regretfully. "There will always have to be some work done, and I'm sorry for the poor guys that must do it. But there's been too much work done. Why the stores are full of food and clothes and everything a man needs. We ought to break into the stores and take all there is and everybody go on a vacation until they are used up. The city owes us a living and as long as it can pay the bill, let's let the 'use of working' be left to the capitalist. I'm for the poor laboring man, it'll be only stop laboring. Work is hell all right. All he's got to do is to work and make the capitalist divide up with him."

"Those sentiments are very noble," said Owen. "I'm very fine as you're about your fellow man. But would you like to have plenty of money even if the rest of the world is fool enough to keep on working?"

"I suppose so," said the sailor, "but my business is to talk not to work. The rest of the world is my business."

"That's just what we want you to do," said Owen and Hicks to answer. "Then they found a table in the rear of the saloon where they could talk in peace and unfolded their plan."

Boyd was to be introduced to a foolish young girl who had a barrel of money. He was to tell her a delicious yarn about certain lines, and Owen and Hicks would take care of the rest. The "situation" was "Owen," "Hicks" and "Owen" were to be reformed pirates.

"What do you mean, 'deformed'?" asked Owen. "He doesn't want anything the matter with my personal appearance?"

"No, no," said Hicks. "He likes your 'Owen' and 'Hicks' as they are, deformed, he said reformed. He means reformed pirate. How about it?"

"Leave that to me," he assured them. "I'll take care of the saloon and introduce still another grimy and disreputable piece. It was Axel Oswald's pawshop and second-hand general supply store.

"Hi-Ole!" he shouted to the solemn-faced Swede who entered from a cloaky recess of the shop. "We want a pirate outfit; have you got one?"

"Ay dunno; Ay do my best; Ay do what Ay can. A man can't do no more, said Mr. Oswald, gloomily.

"Well, got out the oldest pistols and cutlasses you have, and some big knives. Let's see what you've got, you old swine head," ordered Boyd.

"Ay dunno; Ay do my best; Ay do what Ay can. A man can't do no more," repeated the Swede, lighting a gas jet and darning into his dusty trousers.

"Say, Ole, cut out that 'Ay dunno' business or we'll go across the street and see how," he said, crossing the street and seeing Boyd.

"Ya," roared the morose Swede, "go see how. He have crook and a robber. He have got so now a honest man can't make no living no more."

"What does an old petrified son-of-a-gun know like you know about an honest man, anyway?" asked the sailor.

"Gimme that old percussion pistol. After much pawing over ancient, worn and rusty weapons, Boyd was at last fitted out. Ole was paid about 50 per cent of what he asked and left to the enjoyment of his Scandinavian melancholy.

"You look like a pirate now sure enough," said Owen, observing Boyd's effect on the driver of the taxicab.

"I look it; but I don't feel it yet," said Boyd, with deep meaning. "There is something lacking."

"What can it be?" asked Hicks.

"About three fingers of red-eyes," the sailor explained, pointing to a saloon.

"That will make my disguise just perfect," said Owen and Hicks.

In the saloon Hicks and Owen made a little map wrinkled it and soiled it on the floor and gave it to the pirate.

"I'll look it in New York, and he was a glaring violation of the anti-treasure laws, but say nothing of his law, human nature is the same everywhere. He had a copy of your original, which is all worn out."

It was well for the conspirators that they had a taxicab wherein to hide from public view, as they journeyed to the Marvin house. The "pirate's" appearance would have stopped traffic in the city in New York, and he was a glaring violation of the anti-treasure laws, but say nothing of his law, human nature is the same everywhere. He had a copy of your original, which is all worn out."

"Never mind—I say—I know something better," insisted the "pirate." "If she will go and do what I'm going to tell you, she'll sure see something like she never dreamed of. Now listen to me, sir!"

"It was an extraordinary proposition the 'pirate' made."

Owen laughed a gentle discouragement and the "pirate" but Hicks fixed his eyes keenly on the man and was evidently turning the suggestion over in his mind.

The cab was now passing the Marvin mansion and with difficulty Hicks and Owen bent the "pirate's" mind back to the business of the moment. It was evident to both of them that this seeming harmless old fellow had a serious and dangerous imagination, and Owen's key admitted the three to the front hall without ringing, but a mind happened to cross the hall and caught sight of Boyd. With a screech and a flutter she retreated. Owen seated his two confederates in the hall and went in search of Pauline. Compared with the picturesque villainy of the "pirate," Hicks' tardy rush of colors now looked quite respectable. The man having reported the presence of cold approval to him, Boyd had closed his aquat eyes and leered back.

"I beg pardon, sir," said the butler, with no response.

"I beg pardon, sir," said Boyd, with no answer.

"I beg pardon, sir, but who do you wish to see?"

By way of answer the "pirate" drew a long, shining knife and whetted it on his boot, looking viciously the while at the butler.

Owen found Pauline alone in the library. Never did a villain propose a scheme so beautiful as Boyd's. It was a favorable moment. Half the afternoon and a little while after dinner she had been absorbing "Treasure Island" and now she was looking for a favorable moment. Half the afternoon and a little while after dinner she had been absorbing "Treasure Island" and now she was looking for a favorable moment.

"I'll tell you, but by the blood of Morrag, if one of you ever tells a living soul, I'll cut his liver out," said the pirate, betraying his ignorance of human anatomy by making a lunge with his knife at Owen's heart. "Pauline gapped, and the secretary told him it wasn't considered good manners to point sharp knives. But they all swore to secrecy and the 'pirate' proceeded:

"I was but a slip of a lad when I ran away and sailed from Liverpool in the good ship, Santa Lee, with an villainous crew as I ever seen. Where we was bound for and why is none of your business. Trust that—phew! that voyage has cost in their souls could say two words."

"Pretty soon them drunken devils come a tumble out of the fore-cabin and some belaying pins and a mess-spike or two and tans aft a-hollers and yellin'. I gives 'em one warms and opens fire."

"The 'pirate' stopped and coughed and looked around.

"Oh, please go on," said Pauline.

"Yes, miss," replied the sailor, but this talking affects my throat. Could you possibly?"

"Why, certainly," interrupted Owen. "I'll get you a drink."

After the sailor had swallowed the blessed drink, eye blurred in tears, he continued:

"Yes, that was an real-a fight on the water. There was some of 'em or em all told. They still sing a song about that fight. Let's see if I can remember it."

Then with a briny voice, with a rasp of barnacles and the grog of a dozen lands, the sailor proceeded to sing:

"There was the devil to pay; 'Twas bang and smack and batter and crack; Owen and under and up and back; And all the other boys in the crew; Cryin' and dyin' and blood-a-flyin' On a deck that ran with gore; I shot the six that had capstan rotation. This lecture will take place at the rest cabin deck of more."

RAILROADS MAKE REPLY

Question of Wages Given Answer From Employers' Side.

Chicago, Jan. 15.—Governors in seven states in the union could make more money out of the railroads if a locomotive on some of the runs on western railways than they now receive in the executive chairs of the states. Their annual salaries are smaller than the wages received by some of the locomotive engineers on western railways, and the fact that the engineers are demanding higher pay and revised rules which would entail an added burden of $10,000,000 per year to the railroads has brought this question to the attention of the public.

This was one of the striking points developed by James M. Sheehan, counsel for the western railways, today in his address before the Federal Arbitration Board in Chicago, a public presentation of the railroads' testimony against the demands of the engineers and firemen. Of about 3,000 men which would for the year to June 30, 1917, with the maximum of $3,725.20 per man per year for freight engine drivers; $1,752.30 for passenger firemen and $1,800.35 for freight train conductors. These maxima, the governors of seven states receive $2,000 or less per year, while those of seven other states receive $1,000 or only slightly above the engineers' maximum earnings.

Actual earnings statements for all engineers and firemen for the month in which these demands were presented, show that engineers in passenger service earned actually an average of $185 for the month with a maximum actual earnings of $341.60; in freight service the average was $170, with an actual maximum of $258.70. In passenger service they earned that month an average of $115.54 with a maximum of $209.89; while in freight service their actual earnings for the month were on the average $110 with a maximum of $221.05. Other firemen in combination freight and passenger service earned even higher wages.

A careful investigation into the increased cost of living in the west shows that prices have not advanced so far as have the wages of engineers and firemen under the schedules awarded in 1916.

Comparison of their wages with those of any other craft, or of any other railway employees, or of engineers and firemen in other parts of the country show that they are receiving already a higher compensation in both rates of pay and rules.

Turning to the question of ability of the road to meet the added cost in their latest demands of the men, Mr. Sheehan pointed out that in the face of larger railroads and growing traffic on the western roads, in the last year have experienced immense losses in net revenues, income, dividends and surplus. In 1914 the net operating income was faced by demands of engineers and firemen which would add $10,000,000 to their expenses, although these men now are being paid that in no other section of the country, and their wages already have outstripped the cost of living.

"Comparison of these demands," said Mr. Sheehan, "affect some 6,000 men, on approximately 140,000 miles of railroad. On the basis of the month in which these demands were presented, the expense would be $3,700,000, or about 51 per cent. Applied to the total payroll of the affected companies for the year, this would mean nearly $40,000,000 loss."

"Over 8,000 more miles were operated in 1915, as compared with 1914, than in 1910, yet net operating income after taxes in 1915 was $15,000,000 less than in 1910, and nearly $40,000,000 less than in 1914."

"The 1914-1915 loss was declared $22,000,000 less in dividends than in 1910, and in 1915 $44,000,000 less than in 1910. In 1914 there was an excess of $200,000,000 surplus in 1910, while the surplus in 1915 was $12,000,000 less than in 1910. In five months of the year the fiscal year they have a drop of $22,000,000 in gross revenue."

"We face this situation as to the income of the railways, favored although in three years to June 30, 1915, they spent over $60,000,000 in improvements and extensions to property, and out of this devoted over $20,000,000, or practically one-third, toward the purpose of increasing efficiency and safety and expediting train movement. In the last several years power and equipment have been installed, but labor-saving devices and increased wages have more than counterbalanced any added work or responsibility placed upon the men by the heavy power."

"Through the elimination of grades and curves and other improvements, the employees have been able with the larger engines, and consequently with higher pay, to haul trains at the same speed as light trains were formerly handled. With heavier power there has been constant improvement in increasing the capacity of the road, and the automatic doors, coal pushers, sleeping tanks, power grate shakers and automatic ash pans now operating on all lines, all of which relieve the fireman of the danger of going beneath the locomotive."

"It is an evident fact that increases in wages installed in 1916 in the western concerted movement, covering specifically heavier classes of power, were more than commensurate with the added work and activities made them have taken care of such heavy power as has been installed by the railways since 1910."

from the evidence introduced however, that the Idaho Power & Light company can furnish power as cheaply, if not more cheaply, than the Great Shoshone company—and that is as far as we care to discuss the matter in this case.

Vacate Former Order

"We do not wish to be understood as holding or intending to hold, that the door of competition will be thrown wide open to the public. It will not be allowed to enter a field already occupied. Provided always, that the existing utility is furnishing the public in its territory with adequate service at reasonable rates at the time of the threatened competition. Each case must be decided upon its own merits."

"With the findings above set forth and the views herein expressed, the conclusion which must follow is that the order heretofore entered in this case should be vacated."

RESOLUTION

We, the barbers of Twin Falls realize we have made a mistake confronting a time when our business has reached its lowest ebb. Being in a neutral country, with all foreign countries at war, which will complicate the situation as to rely on us for supplies, necessitates a very temporary future in this immediate vicinity, and we feel that it would be very unwise for us not to get together and maintain a universal strike for our labor as all other cities and to allow any personal feelings to interfere with the welfare of our profession and our community.

Resolved that the barbers of Twin Falls, one and all at once, without any hesitation, open our shops at 8 a. m. close at 7 p. m., Saturday at 10 p. m.

And charge for our labor, 25c hair cutting; 15c shaving; 5c neck shave; regulate our hours by Western Union time as shown by their clocks. The above is the lowest prices maintained in any city in the state of Idaho.

SUBV. CHARGE—For the improper conduct of which on the grounds of the Panama-California Exposition, which opened here New Year's eve, by far the most fascinating attraction was the flock of 2000 pigeons which flew over about the Spanish Colonial buildings. The pigeons, which are remarkably tame, are from the hands of their little friends who find great delight in feeding grain to the birds.
