THE GEM STATE IN DRY COLUMN

Senate Approves Measure Making State Dry in 1915

ONLY SIX VOTES OPPOSED WHEN BILL IS PASSED.

Prohibition legislation is a thing of the past in the state of Idaho. It became so when the senate passed Tuesday, under suspension of the rules, H. B. No. 142, making the state dry by statutory enactment January 1, 1916.

Before an audience that filled every available space in the senate chamber, the measure was discussed by the members of the senate.

 In a recent issue of The Times appeared a communication from F. H. Hobbs, of Duluth, in which the criticism of Munner Harlan of the Twin Falls Canal company, was seriously questioned by a clever bit of misquoting. The article intimated that The Times was expected to answer the question. While The Times believed that Mr. Hobbs is probably acting in good faith, still he is making a number of charges against Mr. Harlan which do not intend to rush to Mr. Harlan's defense until the charges are made definite. It is very easy to ask questions without let the other fellow on the other side. The Times believes that its criticism regarding Mr. Harlan's attentions are correct. If this view is not borne out in facts, it by the study of Mr. Hobbs on any other destroyer to produce certain things, rather than to intimate certain facts, are assertions. It is only fair to all parties to give facts as the basis of the arguments.

to display plans or in any way demonstrate in the north, the revolution for the real partisans of our birthday history. Washington's birthday fared but little better, less than a dozen flags totaling the celebration of a national holiday. The people are not loyal nor do they desire to be neglected by the members of a profession characteristic in history. Most of these are the names of our illustrious statesmen or upon the Stars and Stripes, would meet with a storm of wrath from every person, yet to our indifference each one of us is creating a feeling of indifference among the coming generation which ultimately may result in a calamity. We cannot afford to lose the thrill which comes over us when the flag of Our country is unfurled by the breeze. We cannot afford at the present time to allow big business interests to interfere with the liberty to the flag and the nation it represents in our minds. It must be the duty of every American to make Americanism a symbol of a truly civic patriotism, which will not flinch, no matter what the cost. In this respect almost every other nation surpasses the United States. As the melting pot of thousands of alien blood each year, it is absolutely necessary that those who have become citizens and our American liberty to see that out of the melting pot come a people impressed with American ideals and American loyalty. Otherwise an heterogeneous nation we will fall as a divided house.

AN AMERICAN WARNING TO ENGLAND
 A tendency to see the United States as a "land of milk and honey" is being shown by the English papers which, upon driving the American people into submission, do not hesitate to intimated the United States to active intervention in the war on behalf of the Allies. This attitude has called forth protests from influential papers on both sides of the Atlantic and only last week we quoted a passage from the London Daily News which warned its contemporaries of the number of such tactics. This is followed by a frank editorial in the New York Times which put the matter clearly before the British nation and showed them that they had little to gain and much to lose by an attempt to coerce the American people. The Times stated that a section of English opinion is demanding that "Something more helpful than sympathy, something more partial than neutrality, protests against the doing of Germany, and in some quarters politics not distinguishable from actual threats, are being offered by the other side to have been expected. In its most widely prevalent form this feeling is based upon the belief that in the general interest of neutral powers, it is the duty of the English to have protested under the terms of the Hague Convention against the violation of a flagrant neutrality, against the destruction of precious monuments of architectural and sacred interest to the whole world, against the laying of mines, and even against atrocities which have never been proved. In another form, there has been a feeling that we ought to interfere and with force because England is really fighting our own battle."

"The sentiment that England can help from us is thus stated: 'The cause for which England is fighting, the cause of the Allies, has the sympathy of all the American people, save a part of those whom the blood blind to the German cause.' With this our English friends must be content."

In general, the English papers have accepted the role in a friendly spirit, and many journals of influence state that they have never looked to America for active support in the war. The London Globe, after remarking upon the fact, generally adopted by the American press, continues: "So far as this country is concerned, there has been no serious suggestion of disapprobation, because the United States did not join the Allies. In the first place, the United States could not render the Allies much military aid if it wanted to, and in the second place, we in England certainly do not think it is in any way warranted to place its people into war; but while, at the same time, people of other neutral countries, have hoped for a joint protest from the American government against the terrible way in which the German government has, officially broken the Hague conventions to which both the United States and the American government were parties. The feeling that America is morally bound to take note of these acts is more widespread in America, even than here, and the argument of the New York Times that the Hague conventions imposed on our government an obligation to make it protested against the acts therein forbidden, will carry less weight in America than here."

"It is interesting for readers to see the paragraph in the Kalmische Zeitung from which The Evening Standard takes such little, may be noticed, that this tribe has few or no followers in this country. We are content to leave the error to the Kalmische Zeitung, which has just printed a violent diatribe against the Americans because they conform to the ordinary laws of neutrality and the ordinary laws of Great Britain's seizure of neutral hands."

TALKS ON THIRTY
 No. 2.—THIRTY STORIES OF THIRTY
 "We must adopt new standards of living. Instead of 'How much do you spend a year?' we must learn to ask: 'How much do you give to charity?' The government must go out to him who has not the means of saving."—Senator Geo. E. Norman.
 Perkins was a bookkeeper and he was in love. There is nothing unusual about that, as bookkeepers, being human and susceptible, frequent fall in love. The man of the street was chairman of a high school teacher whose salary was almost, if not quite, equal to his own. The sensible young woman in the case, while by no means disdainful her suitor, was well aware that two people could not live as cheaply as one.

Nor did she propose to continue teaching after marriage. If you have seen 'Public Accountant' who asked Perkins one evening when the high cost of matrimony was the topic under discussion: 'They are well-paid accountants say they are. And you have only had it trained, I am sure you could make some money from your slugging. Then we could get along all right.' 'But,' replied Perkins, 'to improve myself in both higher accountancy and music would cost a lot of money and time.' 'Even so,' said his fiancee, 'The results certainly would repay you, and when you see six earnings money you can live happily ever after.' 'To make a long story short, Perkins with the aid of the future Mrs. Perkins, became more economical of both his time and his money. The musical training he laid out for himself soon resulted in his getting a good choir position, and in due time he became a 'C. A. P.' His earnings hereafter in this way did not desert him, that now all the music makers of Mr. and Mrs. Perkins are housed through a checking bank account, and in their joint savings account there is a constantly growing fund to be used in building a home for Mr. and Mrs. Perkins and the little Perkinses.
 In a western city, there is a bullfinch by the name of Larson, who is bound to get ahead because he keeps his eyes open for opportunities and has accumulated a little capital with which to work."

Last summer an old church building was torn down to make way for a new department store. Larson was able to obtain some of the old timbers and brick and stone for a mere song as compared with the cost of the new material. In the meantime, he obtained a couple of building lots at a low price because, while well located, they were on a slope, and a retaining wall and considerable filling were necessary to make them suitable for building. Larson puttin' and the top will for garden and lawn, the Author leveled up the lots, with earth and broken stone from the big store excavation, and then built the foundations, chimneys and practically the entire framework of two houses from the old material.

On account of the convenient location and the attractive appearance of the houses, Larson had an difficulty in selling these houses at just as good a price as he could have obtained had they been built entirely of new material and on higher priced lots. There are similar opportunities in every calling. Those who profit by them are the thrifty and forehanded and, since times are tough, they are saving bank depositors. T. D. MacGregor.

Selection of Breeding Sows.
 Select the breeding sows from early spring litter when they are six months old. One can form an opinion which ones are most likely to prove long-bodied, good-formed, of quiet disposition, good feeders and with a tendency to grow fat and use rather than put on an excess of fat. Breed the gilt when about ten months old, and if she proves herself a good breeder, raising pigs for several years, or as long as she is profitable.

No Place for Mist.
 Breeding of horses must be done intelligently, because there is no place in the market for a mist.

We Have Learned a Lesson

Some time ago we decided that many people would like to buy here but felt our qualities were higher than they could afford. Not that our prices were higher than others but goods their circumstances would not afford. We debated it. We wanted that business. We decided we would not lower qualities, but make prices as low or lower than asked for other lines. We had good reasons to believe it would double our business. It was not experimental—we decided. Results are showing us right in our conclusions—therefore look for value giving here.

STAND FOR SAFETY FIRST

Railroads Claim Efficiency of Service of Men Due to Surplus Test.

Chicago, Feb. 26.—A firm stand for the surplus test as an essential precaution to insure safe operation of trains was taken by the Conference of Managers of western railroads today before the Federal Board of Arbitration which is hearing the railroads' arguments against the demands of their engineers and firemen for advance in wages, which would total almost $1,000,000 yearly.

A. W. Trenholm, general manager of the "Omaha" road and chairman of the committee representing the railroads, in a giving expression to the attitude of the roads stated that the interests of the public render absolutely a vigilant checking of the observance of rules, ements have made it obligatory upon the operating officials that they not only prepare and put in their employees' hands proper rules for safety but that they see and know that the rules are understood and lived up to.

"It is no excuse for the president or general manager to say, 'We have who and safe rules,' unless it has been seen that these rules are enforced. This is a criticism which has been made by the Interstate Commerce Commission more than once. So the feeling has grown up among operating officials that there is a great responsibility on their shoulders in case of serious accident, in that they may have failed to do their part toward making the lives of people on the roads safer.

Mr. Trenholm then described the long and serious considerations which he had given to this problem and the steps he has made toward its solution.

"All of us railway men, who have come here today in many cases, could be, realized that the time had come when some change must be made from the negligent to the safe. The idea of there is a rule for safety is not enough. Someone must know that the man is observing it. So I put in a 100 per cent efficiency test, by which tests are made under the rules on whether or not the men are obeying them, and we put men on the road to observe.

"After some time it developed that unfair tests were being made, and after long thought, I conceived the idea of having the industry organizations to elect a committee of five men—one from each, while I selected five officials. These men meet once a month in my office. They have all the authority I have to examine records and it is their vote which decides a complaint of the men. In case of a tie I am giving the vote. But we have met every month for several years since the board was formed and I have never been called on to vote. Every decision has been unanimous.

"When 100 tests have been taken of any engineer with no failures the man is given a 100 per cent efficiency certificate, which shows that he has been tried and found there."

"Testimony then turned to the men's demand for assistance to firemen and for two firemen on some engines, and the witness enumerated the many provisions which have been made to lighten the work of the fireman."

METHODS OF PRUNING THE GRAPE VINES

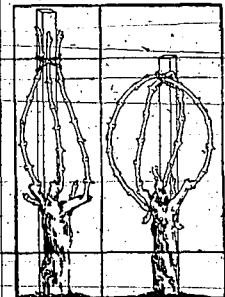

Forms of Head Pruning—A, spur pruning with high trunk; B, spur pruning with medium trunk; C, halfing with medium trunk.
Fig. B represents a headed, vase-formed vine with a medium trunk and short fruit spurs. This is the most common system used in all parts of California.
Fig. A differs from B only in the higher trunk and longer arms. It is commonly used for large growing varieties, especially when growing in rich soil and when planted far apart.
Fig. C has the same form of body as A and B, except that the arms are less numerous. It is suited for vigorous table grapes which do not bear well on short spurs. It is a difficult system to keep in good shape owing to the tendency for all the vigor to go to the growth on the ends of the fruit canes.

There is a very large number of systems of pruning applied to the grape vine. These systems differ principally in the form given to the body of the vine, and in the management of the annual growth. Some of the differences depend on variations in the nature of the vines, on the cultural and growing conditions of the district and on the objects of the grower. Others are unessential and are merely a matter of taste. The best system is that which is most adapted to all the conditions of the particular vineyard. Any system which does not take into account the nature of the vine is defective.

Before commencing work the pruner should form a mental picture of an ideal vine of the form desired. Vines are subject to so many accidents of weather, cultivation and disease that, even with the greatest care and skill, it may be impossible to obtain a single ideal vine in the vineyard. The ideal vine, however, must exist in the pruner's mind, or all his vines will be unnecessarily defective. With this ideal constantly in mind he is able to take such measures as will, as much as possible, direct the energies of the vine in the right direction and counteract the influence of injurious conditions to make each vine approach as nearly as possible the perfect model.

This mental ideal is particularly necessary in the treatment of young vines. Only when it is strongly impressed on the imagination is it possible to use such means and measures

Forms of Head Pruning—At the left, vertical form of renewal spur. Owing to the length of the fruit canes they require support and are tied to a high stake. This system is not to be recommended, as it has many serious defects.
The illustration shown at the right represents an improvement on the other. It differs only in the method of treating the fruit canes. These are bent over in the form of a circle and tied by their middle part to a stake, which is smaller and lower than that needed for the vertical canes. This bending of the canes has several useful effects.

as will most rapidly and economically bring the vine to profitable maturity. The systems of pruning in use in California may be divided into two classes according to the arrangement of the arms on the trunk of the vine. In the conventional systems there is a definite bend to the trunk, from which all the arms arise symmetrically at nearly the same level. The vines of these systems may be called "headed vines." In the other system the trunk is elongated four to eight feet and the arms are distributed regularly along the whole or the greater portion of its length. The vines of these systems are called "cordons," owing to the rope-like form of the trunk.

The headed vines are divided according to the length of the vertical trunk into high, 3-4 feet; medium, 7-1 1/2 feet; and low, 46 inches. The cordons may be vertical or horizontal, according to the direction of the trunk, which is from four to eight feet long. The arrangement of the arms of a headed vine may be symmetrical in all directions at an angle of about 45 degrees. Such a vine is said to be "vase formed." This form is used in the great majority of California vineyards where of wine, table or shipping grapes. Where vines are planted in the arched system, the pruning is done in winter and where vines are planted in the arched system, the pruning is done in winter and where vines are given the "fan-shaped" arrangement in a vertical plane.

On the vertical or upright cordon the arms are arranged at as regular intervals as possible on all sides of the trunk from the top to within twelve or fifteen feet of the bottom. On the horizontal cordon the arms are arranged similarly, but as nearly as possible on the upper side of the trunk only.

Each of these systems may again be divided into two systems, according to the management of the annual growth or canes. In one, spurs of one, two or three eyes are left for fruit production. This system is called short or spur pruning.
In the other, long canes are left for fruit production. This is called long or cane pruning. In rare cases an intermediate form is adopted in which long spurs or short canes of five or six eyes are left. In cane pruning each fruit cane is accompanied by one or two short renewal spurs. These must also accompany half-long pruning. Systems of pruning, where only long canes are left without renewal spurs, are not in use in California. In these systems, renewal spurs are left for fruit production.

Other modifications are introduced by the manner of disposal of the fruit canes. These may be tied up vertically to a stake driven at the foot of each vine, or they may be arranged in a circle and tied to a stake, or they may be tied laterally to wires stretching along the rows in a horizontal, ascending or descending direction.

The different systems differ therefore in (1) the shape, length and direction of the trunk; (2) the arrangement of the arms; (3) the use of fruit spurs or fruit canes with renewal spurs; (4) the disposal of the fruit canes.

APPLE TREES ARE HURT BY RABBITS

Jacks Especially Are Serious Pest in the Orchard—Some Methods of Protection

(By W. L. BURKETT, Colorado Experiment Station)
During the winter deep snows, rabbits, especially jacks, become a serious pest to young orchards, by gnawing the trees just above the snow line. They seldom attack plum or cherry trees, apple being the ones usually damaged.

Various methods of protecting trees from the rodents have been used with more or less success. One of these is common 24-gauge rabbit wire rolled into a cylinder and placed around the tree trunk.

The United States department of agriculture recommends the following wash to be applied to the tree trunks with a brush:
Unstaked timber 20 pounds
Cover of sulphur 15 pounds
Water 10 gallons

This wash has been found to our knowledge successfully in Colorado. When trees have been girdled, the gnawed surface must be covered at once, before the wind and sun have access to the wound. The injured parts must be painted or covered with grafting wax.

As a rule, trees treated in this manner, in the spring will grow new bark. In cases of severe girdling, the method of bark grafting may be used; this operation being a simple one for a nurseryman familiar with the process of grafting.

The following method of poisoning was used by us successfully in an orchard near Fort Collins last winter, 50 jack rabbits being killed in one night.
Cut a slit in an apple and insert strychnine—aliphatic, powdered, the right amount being what the tip of a knife blade will hold, close the slit and wipe the apple. Scatter the baited drug on the ground. Scatter the poisoned bait through the orchard at the base of the trees.

METHOD FOR DOCKING LAMBS

Operation Should Be Performed When Youngsters Are About Ten Days Old—Short Tail Desired.

Docking should be done when the lambs are about ten days old. The easiest method is to place the lamb between the operator's legs, fix a red in front of him. The operator lifts the tail and with a heavy knife pushes the skin half way on the under side of the third vertebra back to its junction with the second. Then with a sharp cut he severs the tail at this point. Many shepherds leave the tail one vertebra longer, but a short tail is greatly to be desired since it can not collect so much manure.

Very seldom, if the lamb is docked early, will there be sufficient bleeding to cause any material harm. If profuse bleeding does occur, a cord should be tied very tightly around the stump of the tail. Pinchers heated to a high temperature, may also be used for this purpose, and by many are preferred. The tail is severed by closing them upon it. The stump is secured or burned, which completely prevents bleeding. However, a burn will not heal so quickly as a clean cut, and is the former condition suppurates or the formation of pus underneath the scab may occur.

Of course, there is a greater liability of dangerous infection where the knife, without cauterization, is used, since the soiled surface tends to prevent the entrance of bacteria. Infection, however, can be avoided by the maintenance of cleanly and sanitary surroundings. The pinchers can satisfactorily be adopted for docking lambs several weeks old, when the contingency of bleeding is more likely.

MAKE PROFITS WITH STEERS

Animals Must Have Good Beef Characteristics, a Wide, Strong Back and a Large Heart Girth.

How to select steers that will make good gains and return substantial profits should be well known by the man who plans to market his crops as feed this fall or winter.

W. C. Sneyd, of the University of Wisconsin, Agricultural Experiment Station, in a paper on the characteristics in animals which they intend to finish for the market.
If they are to make profitable gains in the feed lot, must have beef characteristics; a wide, strong back and a large heart girth.
They must have a strong frame and plenty of room for the vital organs, and an animal with a weak constitution can not hold up through the feeding season.
A wide head and muzzle, which usually indicate good feeding qualities.
Short legs, heavy hindquarters, and arched ribs are essential in the feeding animal.
The skin should be reasonably thick, soft, and covered by a heavy coat of hair.
The animal should have a straight back and low set ears, due to the depth of body and short legs.

SINGER'S RECIPE FOR HEALTH

Mrs. Schumann-Heink, Operatic Star, Recommends Housework for American Girls.

My mother was a fine lady. I remember her, with her little fine hands and her little feet, but she never did anything but housework. She thought it did not harm a daughter of a temperamental to do her own work. From her I learned to sew and darn stockings and I could patch a pair of officers' trousers so neatly that you could not tell where the patch was. And when I was in a difficult still, I could darn a hole near the neckband of a shirt so that you could not tell there had ever been any hole; in fact, it is due to this experience of mine that I have never been employed as a seamstress.

And I learned to cook, too. And I do not cook in the American, but in the Austrian style; but everybody who tries my cooking knows it is all right. Very often when I have come to my house in Chicago I am very sorry, but I cannot see them because I have my apron on and am in the kitchen, cooking.
I found that work about the house does not harm a daughter of a temperamental that has been one of my most valuable possessions. There is no work that does more to promote health than sweeping, wrestling with a leather bed, or pushing furniture out of the way, while she sweeps, drests, her back and her bust at the same time, and makes her fit to fight the world. I strongly recommend that kind of work to all American girls.—Mrs. Schumann-Heink in the Saturday Evening Post.

Nothing That Man is Capable of Achieving, Can Ever Take Its Place.

In one of the finest passages in "Les Miserables," Marius, the young aristocrat who has become converted to the cause of the oppressed, is enlightening Napoleon. He recites the American's wonderful genius and unparalleled achievements, points out the "glory" which he brought to France, and asks dramatically what could be greater than the Empire that the quiet youth of the little revolutionary group raises his head and answers: "To be free!"

It is well to recall this remark now, when the word of "efficiency" is usurping the place of the law and the prophets.
Efficiency is a fine thing, in public matters as well as in private ones. But it is better to be free than to be efficient. Better to be blind, in liberty than to achieve a mechanical success under the orders of "expert autocrats."
"Although all the things men have invented since the beginning of the world have been found, and that it is better to be free than to be efficient."—Liberator's motto.
Other tallmains work for a time, only to fall when most needed or to exact a price which makes success a loss. Liberty alone remains of permanent value.—Chicago Journal.
