THE PERILS OF PAULINE

Written By Charles Goddard

SYNOPSIS
Stanford Marvin, wealthy manufacturer of automobiles, has worn himself out by overwork. His son Harry and his adopted daughter, Pauline, love each other, but she wants to see two years of thrilling adventures before marrying. Her reason is that she is ambitious to be a writer. Old Mr.
Marvin asks to see what she has written. While Pauline is gone, Harry, in search of a magazine containing her first story, Mr. Marvin opens the case of a mummy just received from Egypt.
Raymond Owen, his recently private secretary, helps lift off the front of the case, but leaves old Mr. Marvin to remove the mummy's bandages alone.
Marvin, during a fainting spell, sees the half-exposed mummy come to life, step out of her case, into a braicelot from her wrist and try to force it into his hands, while her lips reveal a strange message from the remote past.
Horrified to consciousness by Harry and Pauline, the old man, haltingly, tells a dream, until later he finds the identical braicelot on the mummy's skeleton wrist. He promises Pauline one year to see life and places her in the guardianship of Owen. A final heart attack gives him just time to write on the doctor's prescription pad a very brief and solemn will. Then he dies. A lawyer tells Owen that he would have permanent charge of Pauline's vast estate if something should happen to her. Owen, who marries Hicks, a race-track man, and Owen conspire to kill Pauline. The preceding chapters have dealt with the many adventures of the two, it accomplished this

CHAPTER XXVII.
"But it is not fair, Master, to blame us for our confusion," said the young Balthazar.

"For your greed, you mean," snarled Pauline. "It is any time in three hours, you could have got rid of her. At any one of a hundred places you could have ended it all."

The secretary and his strange ally stared at Owen and his wife.

"side Castle Marvin," Balthazar apologized but powerful in his knowledge of Owen's characteristics, Owen waited, but tried to see too much, their argument was brief.

"We were too near the McCallum building. To have done that would have had to kill ourselves—perhaps to kill you, too, Master."

"Balthazar's voice was the voice of a defiant god with his confidence of action sunk deep into the mind of the secretary."

"I think you are only after the money," said Owen mildly.

"What are you after, Master?"

"I am trying to do away with a young woman, in order that I may be able to get a great estate to the service of humanity—in order that it may not be feathered away by a frivolous young fiancée and woman."

"Then you have decided to end the young scoundrel also?"

"We shall never be rid of Pauline until we are rid of Harry."

"That is true," said the typist. "He is added by the deed, but I have a plan, Master."

"What? We must live to kill?"

Owen shrugged impatiently. "What is this, another pleasant and expensive excursion to the Midway for you and your friends?"

"No, it can be done within six months of this time. Will you come with me?"

"No further than Heathville, where I have a small factory," said Owen.
"Do you think that you can walk to his office and stand him down?"

"No, Master. I will show you my plan of my own private car, equipped with a gas tank and a motor. I will walk down the road then. I will take you to my own machine. But be careful! This devil, as you call him, is suspicious. Don't stop, no matter how long the road is."

"I will be careful, Master."

"Owen smiled later, Owen, at the wheel of his own private car, equipped with a gas tank and a motor, started on the high road to offer a chery
"fit" to a floating disk-shaped machine, so soon exhausted from a long journey. The car accepted the invitation with obvious surprise, and on the high road to Heathville he and Pauline, his fiancée, had intimate conversations.

"What is the place? I don't seem to remember it," said Owen.

"It is the wreck, Master. Of the old looked down.

"Where does it lead to?" he asked.

"The old furnace pit below," answered Balthazar. "It is not a pleasant grave—and a safe one!" he added with a grim smile.

"This black pit into which he dimensions and about five feet below the ground level of the building. From it came the swirl of the mist of years.
Damp, feld grim and mosses waited it.

Owen drew back quickly.

"Yes," he said, "there couldn't be a better place. But we don't need to step here any longer. Who is to do the work?"

"I have a friend of the name of Invitation," answered Balthazar. "He was trained to lay bricks before he taught himself to lay plans. He is a man of wisdom and caution. "It is all ways caution. I should like to see some leads instead of delays, some risks instead of reminiscences."

"Again?"

"We are risking our lives to kill for you, Master."

"I will pay you as soon as we are caught—not before."

"That is reasonable," he said. "I will catch."

"When?"

"With afternoon, if you think best."
"I will answer the better. Come here to the machine. This place is unsafe."

growth of time. I had once known that the great new Marvin factory, born of this, lay only half a mile to the westward, one would have felt a sense of bloom in viewing this rudimentary of industry.

With Balthazar leading, they pushed their way through weed and brash to the rear of the dilapidated structure.

"You don't want to go inside, do you?" asked Owen nervously. "That building looks as if it would fall if it had a head."

"I have been in—only yesterday. It is very interesting to me."

"What do you mean?"

"Without answering the typist moved through a crumbling doorway, around with fallen bricks into a wide room that had once been the main workroom of the factory.

Owen followed hesitantly.

The room had no roof. Its covering had caved in years ago, and the feet of the visitors of its ruins now crunched on masses of fallen brick and board and glass. It would have been fitting had not the afternoon sun shown on floor and the wreckage.

From the lower side of the old workroom towered still the chimney that once had smoked and scarred profoundly over the new born town of Heathville—the one that had now deserted its parentage and moved unhappily away. The chimney was about twelve feet wide at its base, and in spite of vents and holes in its brick sides, still towered forty feet above the ground. Balthazar and Owen stood the base of the chimney. He pointed meekly to an office about two feet square in the side of it.

Owen looked through the hole and was opened, he found himself not in a scrutinized small apartment, but in a narrow passageway, which, from the light flash when he briefly opened the door, seemed to extend a hundred feet ahead of them.

The door was closed silently, and they were in utter darkness. Owen did not see who opened or who closed the door. Balthazar drew an electric flashlight from his pocket and guided the way. In the corner, the sound of voices came to them distantly. Balthazar rapped at another portal, and
they were admitted into an immense
room—a room stiffly hot, reeking
with the scents of bad liquor and bad tobacco.

There were perhaps twenty men in the room. They were playing cards at dice. A billiard-table, its cover, torn beyond repair, was the worst of the dice game. The sardonic-looking calling up of voices came to them distantly. Balthazar rapped at another portal, and
they were admitted into an immense
room—a room stiffly hot, reeking
with the scents of bad liquor and bad
tobacco.

A man with a black mustache and sunken brow sat alone at a table sip-ping whisky and water. His sprang to feet when he saw Balthazar, they shook hands, the other men turned and resumed their play. Owen's distinguished appearance, the hair of crisis, befrosted to them, but in their code, curiosity was a sin deeper than murder.

Balthazar introduced Owen to the man with the black mustache. "This is Ravell," he said.

"The bricklayer?" asked Owen.

"The finest highest Ravell."

"Big Ravell," Owen surrendered.
Balthazar will explain my mistake."

Balthazar explained, but not in the hearing of the men in the room—even in the hearing of Owen. He drew Ravell apart and explained the omission in whispers.

Owen had a secret himself a little doubtfully at one of the tables. As the man returned to him, he asked: "Is it settled?"

"—except you understand, Master."

"Yes," said Owen. "But this is the simplest of work. Here is $500 for you of you. If you are successful, completely successful—I will double it. If not, this is absolutely all that you will receive."

For a moment Balthazar eyed Ravell questioningly. If the disgraced aviator had shown the faintest flash of approval, he might have been insanely increased. But the small sum was a dazzling reward to the disgraced aviator. His eyes were fastened on the man.

There was a sudden cessation of the clamor around the dice table, as the bell were counted out. But Owen, having received his money, equally lost head and asked:

"Is that enough or shall I go to others?"

"That is enough for me," said Ravell, in an eager voice.

"I will accept it," said Balthazar,
"but there is a great risk for us, Master."

Owen's dark face fell into a smearing smile. "The risk, Balthazar," he said,
"is death."

"It is agreed, Master."

Balthazar guided the secretary down the black hall and they parted at the door.

"Thus did we seek the old Heathville."
This he said and he heard.
Of wild, unrepented, yesterday
in the haunts of the buccancer:
Fashioning forth our music
Where the palm trees lift and sway
By the sea, the Fort Royal,
Or beside Samana Bay.

"Isn't it beautiful? Isn't it splendid?" cried Pauline, running into the after-bright and somewhat unap-petite presence of Harry in the library and reading as she ran.

"So I have to go into poetry as well as prose," said Harry, laying down his newspaper.

"You'll do," said Pauline. "It's just the solid and must have been the lover's."

"The lover's?"

"Bards. Listen to this:
"Down through the wind-torn islands,
In death's dreary, long-time cloud-
Cave, Hispaniola,
Jamaica and Trinidad," but I
"Nice names," said Harry, "but I don't know the century department of this family."

"You?"

"Yes, I bought an aeroplane for day, and I thought you should be the only temple of fate—the exclusive horizon—around here."

"Oh, to do that, never to the skies. Remember, THIS is MY aeroplane."
"Arm-in-arm they went out into the evening down the river for the year. An aviator helmeted and leg-

On All of Your Printed Matter, It Represents Good Workmanship, Good Paper, and Good Conditions.

Some time ago The Times called attention to the need for a thorough spring clean-up of the streets, alleys and privates. With the advent of warmer weather and the thawing of the frost from the ground, the need for that clean-up became imperative. The rubbish piles should be removed and every vestige of fly breeding refuse hauled away. Twin Falls is getting nearer every year to the highest standard of care exercised by the city authorities and the citizens. It will not take many years to accomplish a much desired result, if each person will do his or her part in keeping clean the premises.

Used nation until it has been placed under the iron hand of some greater nation. Factional leaders will succeed other factional leaders until real peace will become out of the question under the present conditions. Mexico is suffering today from too many so-called patriotic leaders. A flimsy squad from some good strong nation would be the greatest boon to that country.

The intervention of the United States, once undertaken will no doubt be understood as the only logical step in the real purpose back of such steps. Any steps now taken will appear to them as did the occupation of Cuba and the Philippines to the citizens of those countries. It is hard to convince any nation that stronger nations can be generous.

The refusal of Great Britain to allow foodstuffs to go to Germany civil sanitation while it places diplomatic relations in a signified position with this country, was not unexpected. England is not going to lose any chance to subjugate her powerful foe even if it means overriding of a few points in international law. The United States must be guided by the decisions of the first and power in the possession of the right to resist the demands for better treatment of neutral shipping. It is no time for hysteria and the President is not going to take any snap judgment. The American people can feel assured that no war will come if it can be avoided by any kind of diplomatic evasion. There is one thing that America can be thankful for at least and that is the calm judgment of Wilson in holding down the passions of the population rather than the fiery disposition of Roosevelt.

D. W. Brunk and C. L. Tubbs, of the East Central Idaho Land and Trading company, returned Friday of last week from East Central Idaho, where they located 10 parties on homesteads. C. L. Tubbs returned to the same office on Tuesday's early morning train with another party. Lands are being taken as fast as they can get men in. The first of April—Mr. and Mrs. Harry Hall will have charge of that office.

William E. Miller and Florence B. Caudex, of Salt Lake City, were married at the office of the county recorder, Monday, March 15. The ceremony was performed by Justice W. J. Shulth. They will make their home in the Twin city.

NOTICE TO CONTRACTORS

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN, That sealed proposals will be received by the Mayor and City Council of the City of Twin Falls, up to eight o'clock P. M., on the Fifth Day of April, 1915, for the furnishing of the necessary teams, harness and drivers for the operating of street sprinklers in cleaning the streets and alleys and parts of streets and avenues in local improvement District No. 29, in the City of Twin Falls, during the fiscal year 1915.

Bids should be made for so much per team and driver per day of eight hours, running to be used either day or night work, at the order of the street commissioner. Bids will be required for five teams and drivers. Bids should be made to operate street sprinklers under control of the street commissioner, during such time as shall be necessary to keep the dust on said streets and avenues well laid.

Bids must be accompanied by certified check in the sum of Fifty Dollars, which shall be forfeited to the City of Twin Falls, in case the bidder to whom the contract is awarded fails to enter into contract with the City within a period of five days after awarding of the contract. The contractor will be required to furnish to the City within a month for all work performed for the preceding month and will be made by warrants drawn on the funds to be collected by special assessments against the property abutting on the streets and avenues to be sprinkled.

The City Council reserves the right to reject any and all bids. Dated March 16th, 1915. STUART H. TAYLOR, City Clerk.

Hill Climbing Contest Held at Buhl Last Sunday

The only one of our competitors to put in an appearance was the 'Red' people and they made a very good showing, and we feel sure they made many friends by so doing. Here are the results of the climb:

- Class One—All cars listed at $300.00 or less at factory. DODGE—Size of engine in cubic inches, 212.3. Geared 16:3 to 1 on low gear. Took Seven Passengers up the Hill. Class Two—All cars listed at $1,000.00 or less at factory. Size of engine in cubic inches, 165.6. Geared 13:40 to 1 on low gear. Took Five Passengers up the Hill. Class Three—All cars listed at $1,300.00 or less at factory. REO THE 5TH—Size of Engine in cubic inches, 240.5. Geared 11:40 to 1 on low gear. Took Five Passengers up the Hill. BUICK C-37—Size of engine in cubic inches, 220.9. Geared 11:76 to 1 on low gear. Took Seven Passengers up the Hill. Class Four—All cars listed at $1,900.00 or less at factory. BUICK C-55—Size of engine in cubic inches, 331.3. Geared 12:60 to 1 on low gear. Took Five Passengers up the Hill.

We are not satisfied with the showing made by our six, and will make another demonstration on this hill in the near future. This hill is 43 per cent grade and is right out in the sage brush where the footing is soft. Remember we are always pleased to show just what our cars will do.

A NNOUNCEMENT to Users of Electrical Energy in Twin Falls

The Idaho Power & Light Company will open its offices and sales room in the city of Twin Falls on Saturday, March 20th, on which date it will be ready to serve the public with all forms of Electrical service and sell the very latest and best in electrical appliances and equipment. Our new quarters at 137 Shoshone Street North will be open to the public on and after the above date and the people of the Twin Falls tract are invited to visit us at any time. We will be pleased to show the modern methods in electrical housekeeping.

We take great pride in stating that we have one of the most modern hydro power plants in the West and enough electric energy to supply the whole of Southern Idaho. This plant is built with all the latest equipment for giving satisfactory and permanent service. Every effort will be made to give that service the year around and allow nothing to interrupt pleasant relationship with our patrons.

In offering Electrical apparatus and equipment to the people of Twin Falls we fully believe that we can furnish the highest grade apparatus cheaper than anyone else because of heavier buying for our many branch offices. We are prepared to give this advantage to our customers in right prices.

In entering the Twin Falls field, we desire to make a record for co-operative work with the people of this city. We can not hope to succeed unless the people are given service and a share in the success of the Idaho Power and Light Company. To this end we must create not only field for our electrical energy but must become a part of the community. We want your patronage and your friendship in making Twin Falls grow.

PERILS OF PAULINE

Havell was more than cautious. He was reckless, not only in freedom but in life. He was not a man who would stop to think his purpose in life. He had deserted Baltimore, the kybes, in the midst of dangerous work had left the custody of Pauline's father at the moment when he was needed most.

Havell himself could hardly have explained why he had been so foolhardy. He knew as well as they as he did now that he would be killed the first time he should meet a member of the band of halibuts.

Some deeper, more compelling call than that of fear had lured him to leap into the thick, while the automobile drove to take the halibut and end the crawling, weeping refugees of the forest to mingle with them and shoot them with the revolver.

It was a call from the past. An Havell had lain behind the bushes on the Marvin grounds a few hours before, and watched the new arrival of the over-Harry-Marvin's airship, the memories of his old darling days coming flooding back to him in the days when he had been here in the mountains. The airship, the days before he had sold the secrets of his country to a foreigner.

There lies always some point of insatiation in the slug of the blackest hour. Havell loved the air. He had loved, as if they were living things, the machines that had carried him on his daring flights.

The sight of the splendid aeroplane that mysteriously developed of the inventor's skill had awakened in the exile the old longing for the thrill of speed and thrill. He crept on stealthily through the garden.

As he parted the bushes adjacent to the aviation field, he saw the little group of servants on the roof of the garage. Even the aviator and his mechanics had left their tools to watch the fire. The aeroplane, trimmed for flight, stood unguarded in the open field.

It was the matter of but a moment for Havell to step through the bushes and sent himself to the machine. He started the engine. With the shift of a lever, the machine whirled forward and took to the air as gracefully as a bird.

The joyful look on the face of the driver was the look of a man. He had accomplished his purpose, he felt the thrill of triumph. The screams and shouts that now echoed throughout the grounds of the new airship swung away, were as plaudits to his cars.

Havell had drunk heavily the night before. He had been drunk all day. His daring suddenly became reckless. He turned the machine and drove back over the Marvin grounds, over the roof of the garage, where the servants were standing. They broke and fled for the scullery as he sent the aeroplane careening to the roof.

He wrenched abruptly and shot away in the direction of Brathwaite.

In the walled chamber of the ruined factory groined Harry and Pauline. They had freed themselves of their bonds, only to face a greater peril. It was not totally dripping the chamber.

There were drippings of light from crevices in the roof. And now they could not only see the above but could see it pass through the floor beneath them.

The smoke began to puff thickly from the furnace, and the narrow corridor, stopped at every pace to burn its strength against the wall. He hoped that he might find the place where the bricks had been newly laid. But the wall was more than a foot thick and the bricks had been laid skillfully. Nowhere was there the slightest yielding.

"Harry, do you know where we are?" asked Pauline in a frightened whisper. "I am not sure," he answered. "But I believe that it is the old factory. I don't know any place else of this kind that they could have reached so quickly."

"But the fire couldn't have reached the old factory?"

"The fire here was lighted in the old forge. It left part of the fire in the town, didn't it?"

"You mean it was lighted to—kill us?" she asked, her voice hoarse with tremulousness and gentle calmness that meant courage.

He hurried himself against another section of the wall, without uttering a word. "Harry, you needn't be afraid to tell me. If we are going to die, I will not be afraid. If you are with me when I die, I will not be afraid either."

He turned and caught her crushingly in his arms. He pressed his lips gently to her forehead, then indignantly he said: "You are the bravest woman in the world," he said.

"But—Harry—is it—this one of the awful things that I have done? Is this one of the dangers that I have dragged you into because I was so silly?"

"You?" he cried. "Never in the world. They were after me this time. Polly, I was the fool to let you come with me."

Even the heat of the fire oppressed them now. Pauline's voice was faint as she answered:

"An glad I came with you."

"Again he caught her in his arms. He felt her form weaken. She tried to speak again but the choking smoke stifled her words. The door was in her body told him she had fainted.

"He laid her on the ground and bent over her, calling loudly for Polly.

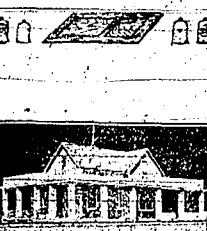

"Polly? Give up your life!"

But there came no answer. His utter helplessness was all filled him with a kind of madness. He seized a section of the wall. He tore at the crevices with his naked hands. His hands ran red. The smoke poured in. The room was fogged by the fire.

Harry stooped on his hands and knees and crawled the length of the corridor, feeling in every cranny and corner for some possible weapon of tool with which to break the wall. The place was bare of everything but dust and mud.

As he turned back from the far end of the dismal place, he felt his head swim.

"An coming—the end now," he gasped. He struggled back along the floor. He laid just against the north wall. He laid his arms, to place her head near his breast, before the darkness fell.

Talking about the value of plenty of porch room,

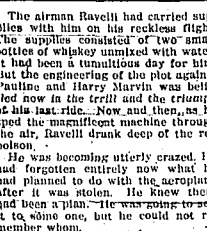

here's an Idahoan who evidently has firm convictions on that point.

"We'll venture that the medicine cabinet is just that much the smaller.

The more porch and the more it's used, sleeping and awake, the better for health and happiness.

And the cost of adding a porch is not excessive.

Gem State Lumber Co.

The alman Havell had carried supplies with him as his reckless flight. The supplies consisted of small bottles of whiskey unmixed with water. It had been a tumultuous day for him. But the engineering of the plot against Pauline and Harry Marvin was belittled now in the thrill and the triumph of his last ride. Now, then, and as he sped the magnificent machine through the air, Havell drank deep of the red poison.

He was becoming utterly crazed. He had forgotten entirely now what he had planned to do with the aeroplane after it was stolen. He knew there had been a plan. He was going to sell it to some one, but he could not remember whom.

And then there was dullness and big cutthroats. He must keep away from them. Still it would be interesting to watch what they were doing—about which it flew in the air.

That struck Havell deeply. It seemed an idea happy and heroic. He had been circling the zone of the great city. He had been avoiding the smoke that the spectacle was belittled. He wanted now for the place where the towering chimney of the old Harv factory loomed among the trees.

His hand was growing unsteady on the lever. He caught one of the slenderer of whisks and held it in his left hand. He held the plane tilted sharply over the wood. His hands were hot on the controls in an instant, but it was too late.

The left frame, struck into the branches of a tree. The machine spun round. Havell, working madly at the levers, held it for a moment, but it was beyond control.

Havell saw directly before him the ruins of the old factory. The walls where, for a price, he had directed the establishment of Harry and Pauline, loomed grand and ghastly under the dull of the smoke from the burning town. The ancient chimney, beneath which he knew lay the imprisoned Harry and Pauline, was not so tall as monument of his own doom.

The right plane struck the chimney, which crumpled like a card-tower under the blow. The bricks of the under walls had buried Havell as he gaped out his final breath of his evil life on the floor of the roofless chamber. The chamber in which lay Harry and Pauline was exposed to the air.

Harry awakened as if out of a dream. Sunlight blazed upon his startled eyes. Around him were ruins. Weakly he got to his feet, and lifting Pauline, reeled out through the great hole that had let in the sun and air.

SHE RIPPED suddenly in his arms. She opened her eyes. He laid her head upon his shoulder and hurried, so that she might not see the body of the dead Havell in the ruins.

ORDINANCE NO 166.

An Ordinance establishing Local Improvement Roll in accordance with the provisions of Section 2235, Idaho Revised Codes, and amending which said assessment roll shall contain, among other things, the names of the owners of parcels of property in said city, and improvement, the description of each lot and parcel of land contained in the said improvement District and the amount of assessments to be levied against each lot, when completed, shall be filed with the City Clerk of the said City.

Section 6. On receiving the said assessment roll the City Clerk shall give notice by publication in three successive issues of the official city newspaper that such assessment roll is on file in his office, and the date of the filing of the same, and said roll shall be open for a period of thirty days. The City Council will hear and consider the objections to the said roll by parties aggrieved by such assessment.

Section 7. That all of the assessments heretofore specified shall be known as special assessments for the purpose of collecting the same in addition to the taxes for general revenue purposes and shall be a lien on the property for collection subject to the same penalties and collected in the same manner as other taxes.

Section 8. That the City Council of the City of Twin Falls, this fifth day of March, 1915.

Approved by the Mayor of the City of Twin Falls, this fifth day of March, 1915.

C. O. MILES, Mayor.
STUART H. TAYLOR, City Clerk.
