AGAINST AMERICAN MILITARISM. Our hope in the world is not measured by our arms. Our safety does not depend upon our arms.

These words were written by Dr. Frederick Lynch in combating the present government to make it more of a military nation than we have hitherto thought necessary.

It is to hold in our hands the reins of government, and not to be intimidated by a few men, and follow after that the World War that has proved such a bitter-sweet failure.

This group is composed of four classes. First, there are the officers and ex-officers of the Army and Navy.

Their business is with arms and not their recreation for a nation can not have its arms and they can see with a host of safety or defense than in arms.

posed of those politicians who are taking part in this fight against President Wilson's peace policies as outlined in his famous 14-point program.

ly to dis-embellish and embarrass his administration. The fourth class in this group are the hysterical people who have been stampeded with fear by the war.

The Lynch wonders if in the light of this agitation for increased armaments the people of this nation have at all considered what brought on this era of civilization in Europe and plunged twelve countries into this unparalelled disaster.

"We had the fortune or misfortune to be in Europe the week preceding the war, and for a week after the war began. We came across from Germany the day the war was mobilizing her great army.

One conclusion was irresistibly forced upon us, as we believe it is upon almost every American who was in Europe last Summer, namely, that war armaments was one of the direct and immediate causes of this war.

forty years Europe has been losing her civilization upon force. She has said that force, arms, armaments, dynamite, powder and shells were the only things that gave a nation a power in the world, or its voice listened to.

They have all said that armaments were the things that "could preserve peace in Europe." Everywhere one turns in Europe guns are more conspicuous than pupils, and teachers are arms more in evidence than churches.

Only one great nation to which the peace-workers of Europe can turn for leadership, we should find our mouths

As a result of this philosophy of defense and peace, Europe became a great powder-magazine, and as a consequence, when the war broke out, it threw a match into it, it went off. Powder always does go off some time or other.

A great Englishman remarked to us that he had come to feel that when armaments teach a certain point it goes off by spontaneous combustion. It has gone off in Europe.

After this war the nations go back to the same business it went off to begin with.

"And now when we see a group of men urging our nation to follow in the footsteps of these older, ruined, collapsed powers, we tremble for it. We wonder if they are blind, that they cannot see. We cannot believe they realize what they are doing.

There is not one law for Europe and another for America. And of all times in the world, this is the most fraught with danger to be talking of increasing armaments.

Wilson, being a statesman, realizes the awful tension under which all the world is just now living, and is trying to avert it. For any such agitation just now is bound to be construed as directed against either Japan or Germany, or both.

As a matter of fact, these armaments are openly naming these two nations as the objects of their fears. The result is that the Japanese are becoming suspicious of us, made so by all this talk.

The founders of the National Security League at their initial meeting drew graphic pictures of a victorious nation invading this country--everybody knew they meant Germany. That goes to Germany and our voice in the settlement after this war loses influence in just that degree.

The pity of the situation lies, in this writer's view, in the fact that, when there is only one great nation to whom Europe can turn for counsel and leadership--

Only one great nation to which the peace-workers of Europe can turn for leadership, we should find our mouths dim, our position of leadership gone, because we had become even as they are, and had no word to say. For how can we say "Get rid of militarism" if we are aiming as fast as we can, and placing them in their own miserable predicament on force and guns?--Literary Digest.

THE PERILS OF PAULINE

Written By Charles Goddard

SYNOPSIS

Stanford Marvin, wealthy manufacturer of automobiles, was hit out by overwork. His son Harry, and his adopted daughter, Pauline, were each other, but she was to be married to a young man named Harry. Her reason is that she is ambitious to be a writer. Old Mr. Marvin asks to see what she has written. While Pauline and Harry are in search of a magazine containing her first story, Mr. Marvin opens the case of a mummy just received from Egypt. Raymond Owen, his recently private secretary, helps lift off the front of the case, but leaves off Mr. Marvin to remove the mummy's bandages alone. Marvin during a fainting spell, sees the half-exposed mummy come to life; step out of her case, take a bracelet from her wrist and try to force it into his hands, while her lips reveal a strange message from the remote past. He returns to consciousness by Harry and Pauline, the old man believes it all a dream, until, later, he finds the identical bracelet on the mummy's skeleton wrist. He promises Pauline one year to see life and places her in the guardianship of Owen. A final heart attack gives him just time to write on the doctor's prescription pad a very brief and simple will. Then he dies. A lawyer tells Owen that he would have the management of Pauline's vast estate if something should happen to her before she marries. Hicks, a race-track man, and Owen conspire to kill Pauline. In preceding chapters have dealt with the many efforts of the two to accomplish this.

of Pauline until he is killed. Anything to end him. "Ferrari will be of supreme service, Master." "What will he do?" "Ferrari will do anything that you command, Master—you know that. You know him, don't you? You suggested the plan. That is what I told him. The question is whether or not he can properly arrange the result." "But, Master, tell me, has this man—this Harry Marvin—learned the skill of fencing? Is it certain that Ferrari can kill him?" "Marvin can fight. I remember paying his bills to a fencing master in Virginia and another in Italy. But he is not at all practice. I know Ferrari will be able to handle the fighter. The question is whether or not he can properly arrange the result." "There was a time in Naples—" "We will discuss the matter when the present is brighter, Baltazar." "Very well, Master." "Through breakfast and turned across the Queensboro-bridge into the middle East Side. Owen stopped the car at the first corner. "Can you watch this machine for a few minutes?" he asked of the policeman at the corner, at the same time drawing a persuasive $5 note from his wallet. "I'll see if I can," said the policeman pocketing the prize. Owen and Baltazar went on their way along the street. In front of a towering monument Baltazar stopped. "This is the place, Master," he said. "The man you thought of is on the fourth floor and the gypsy followed faintly in the darkness upon a door. The door opened. The face of a man swallowed and furrowed from the use of liquor, appeared in the thin apartment. "Ah, Bernardo! It is an old friend; open the door." There was something between persuasion and command in the man's voice. Owen. "What is his name?" asked Ferrari in a whisper. "Raymond Owen." The man swung the door wide and extended his hand to the secretary. "You have remembered my letter? You have work for me to do?" he questioned eagerly. "I have been a long time remembering your letter, Bernardo. When I first got the letter, I thought of you first to answer it. You—I have work for you now." "Such as—the case in Naples?" "Owen's face darkened instantly. "Let me do the remembering—all of it, Bernardo. It will be your best duty," he said. "Bernardo Ferrari bowed in respectful assent. He ushered the visitors into his staidy rooms, and with a quick nod he indicated the way to the rickety stairs. Owen rose and stepped swiftly back to the door. He drew it open and looked out. He saw the head, stiff with the rigidity of his staidy, he closed the door and returned to his chair. Baltazar and Ferrari moved close to him. "A little better, perhaps, than when we last met," said the gilder. "I doubt it. Alcohol is a delectable that you have been meeting often. I see." "For an instant Ferrari's eyes glazed but he controlled his anger quickly and laughed. "At least I can defeat anyone else." "Then here is my proposal." "For more than an hour Owen and Baltazar stood examining the new car. Ferrari, the chauffeur, was working over it in fascinated delight. He stopped and came toward them with his cap in his hand. "I am glad to see anything ever looked at," he exclaimed. "She is a wonder, Miss Marvin. If you'll let me use that machine—on the International in a race." "Oh, so you have enlisted Ferrari to keep me out of the race," laughed Pauline to Harry. "Not indeed," he said sadly. "But I think his idea is fine. You will have as much excitement and a whole lot more dignity if you let him win the race for you." "But you are the stupidest thing in the world," she answered. "And if you think it would be as exciting to sit in the grand box and watch him race else with a race as to win it yourself—well, I'm going to drive this car and there's nothing more to be said." "She is looking at her watch as an instant; but he knew with Pauline argument was useless. He changed the subject. "Come on down to the gate. The McClellans are coming to dinner, and maybe we'll meet them." She raised her eyebrows. Arm in arm they strolled down the long drive to the pillared portals of the estate. "Let's go on out—and maybe there will be some moving gyisles to capture us," said Pauline. "Did you ever take anything seriously in your life?" he demanded. "I have never taken anything any other way," she replied. "They went out upon the road. He turned to the gypsy, with his appearance completely converted—a blond mustache and dyed eyebrows—a large black hat pulled close over his eyes, he was moving slowly up the road with Ferrari." "Excellent," breathed Ferrari, "but loudly enough to be heard by Harry and Pauline. "Have you ever seen a woman so beautiful?" Harry's eyes flashed fire instantly. "So beautiful—she was—she was—she was ten feet from the men. He glanced at Pauline; her face was crimson. And yet the words of Ferrari, who was dressed in an angle frock coat and sheathed in a manner of statefulness, almost hardly to warrant a rebuke. "As they passed, Ferrari turned to Owen and stepped lightly upon Pauline, stared, instantly into her eyes. He was as white as a sheet. He was echoed by the yell of Ferrari as Harry's fat set him sprawling across the road.

Ferrari got to his feet slowly and gratefully. Harry had taken Pauline's arm and they had turned back toward the gate. Ferrari rushed after them. "I demand an apology," he shouted. "I am the Count Emilio Di Ferrante. I demand an apology." Harry walked on with Pauline, but kept a watchful eye upon the intruder. Ferrari seized Harry's arm. "Did you hear me? I have been insulted; I present my card." Again Harry sprang at him, but the blow missed. Ferrari was taking no chances. He and Baltazar followed closely. At the gate of the estate, Harry said to Pauline: "Turn; get to the telephone, and tell the police of this." "She said that the broad walk. "Now," said Harry, "turning to the two men, 'what have either of you to say to me?' " "That it must be settled on the field of honor, I demand a duel. You have insulted me. Here is my card." "We have been insulted," said Harry, "but I will not stand at the altar of a bit of paper that the man thrust into his hands. He tore it in two and threw it into the dust. "Gentlemen," Owen screamed. Ferrari. "You will hear me again." "And, seizing the arm of Baltazar, he spoke a few words to the man. "They had gone but a few paces when Harry, still standing at the gate saw them break into a run and spring naturally in the direction of the bushes. "I wonder," he said to himself, "as he moved up the path to the house. Yes, it must be another plot. Thank heaven, they have begun to attack me instead of Pauline. Harry was hurrying from the Marvin building to his car. "Go away, there, kid," said Ferrari at the wheel. "Go on, beat it." But the grimy gronch who had run to Harry, turned the corner from the building, persisted in his mission. "A letter for the gentleman," he said with a poorly-modulated accent. "Gentlemen," Owen called to the child-fled like a will of the wisp down the street toward West Broadway and he quickly lost in the surging throng. Harry opened the letter. He read: "Sir:—In my own country our affairs are conducted with-out interference by the police. Here we must move with caution. If you are still unfaithful, meet me at Wat-king's grove at dawn tomorrow. I will bring the weapons. BERNARD FERRARI. Care Gault House."

The Olston Electric Range

Is not an experiment. It has been put into service under the most adverse circumstances and has proven its merits. The Olston is durably constructed of steel and aluminum, making thorough and complete sanitation easy. The scientific arrangement of the elements in the ovens permits perfect distribution of heat. Every heat unit is retained by the thick, heat insulated walls, and cooking operations can be performed more thoroughly and more economically than by any other cooking medium.

seeing the thread nor suspecting its fearful significance.

"You may proceed," said Pauline bravely.

"You will get me killed if you don't stop making me laugh," said Harry. She handed him the rapier with a gasp. He looked carefully for the thread before he recovered his courage.

"They snickered. The blades touched. Harry had placed himself to end the affair quickly. He attacked furiously. Harry gave ground. Pauline's clank upon her feet, suddenly realized upon what a desperate mission she had launched the life of the man she loved. She never thought of him and the belated remorse that only women know. Women came and men he-brave and then they force themselves for descending it. Women can endure everything but consequences. Still Pauline stood stoutly her ground. No tremor shook her; no fear drew forth a cry. And Harry retreated.

Suddenly the battle turned. Owen, peering through the hole in a hundred yards away, drew a long breath.

"By Heaven, that boy can fight!" he said to himself. Harry was backing; Ferrar's sword now.

A rapier shot into the air above the heads of the fighters. Harry leaped back, dodging the rapier and stepped back, sniffling.

Ferrar uttered a curse and leaped forward to catch up his weapon as it fell behind the fence. Harry cut his foot on it. He threw his own sword to the ground.

"Perhaps that is the better weapon," he said to Owen, courteously. "Try my sword and I will use yours."

Harry trembled as he stepped to pick up Harry's rapier. He was surprised that Harry held the weapon which was tipped with poison. The terror of his own knowledge was enough to defeat him.

Harry took the offensive instantly. The clash of the steel blades was the only sound in the gloom of the grove. Pauline stood behind the fence. Owen, Baltazar and the others of the hidden covey lay still in dumb surprise.

Suddenly Ferrar dropped his rapier and turned his back to his adversary. He fled. He drew the whistle from his belt and blew it furiously.

"O!" said Owen behind the eyes.

Baltazar's two aides rushed out. As they came towards Harry they drew their swords and rushed at him.

"For an instant Harry stood dumfounded. His first thought was for Pauline. He turned, but found her close at his side. She snatched and snatched up Ferrar's sword.

Ferrar's second-joined—the other two gypsies and they rushed on. Harry thrust out his arm and placed it around Pauline's neck. He said: "Retreat slowly to the shelter of a shrub tree."

The assault group on Harry charged. The blades of his sword gleamed in the sunlight, dripped red. He stood bravely, but he lost all the surviving strength of his body. He protected courage of his life, the enemies who sought to seize Pauline.

Despite his cries of warning, his position amid the clashing of the blades, she came forward, armed with the sword.

"Owen! Owen! Get under Harry's feet!" he called to his aides. "The blades would have been certain that from the covert behind the ruined building came a cry:

"But raise!" the sword is poisoned. Harry's assailants stopped, bewildered, terrified. The voice was the voice of Pauline.

"But gypsy had just struck the rapier from Pauline's unpracticed hand. His knife was over her. Harry Pauline stood proudly at his side as Ferrar's sword presented the hilts of the rapier across his breast.

One hilt extended beyond the others. Harry, without suspicion, chose it. He turned testing the blade with the point upon his side.

Pauline approached Ferrar, who had drawn the rapier with the sword upon it.

"I wish to see that the swords are of equal length," she declared. "That is the duty of a second."

Harry exploded with laughter. She hung him a scolding look and took the rapier from his hand. She switched it carefully with Ferrar's, without

"I am not afraid."

"But you say you love me."

"Of course, I do. You are the dearest."

"Of course, I am, but if you love me, why do you want to risk the most precious thing in the world to me?"

"I have to be there to see that nothing happens to you," she said. "Besides, you promised that I could die. That's settled," he said calmly.

"I don't know whether I shall marry you or not," she announced at the library door.

"I don't think you can," he replied. "They say marriages are made in heaven; that's where you ought to be married; if we ever ARE married. His wrath was smothered in an obliterating embrace. Her arms were around his neck. Her tender cheek was against his lips.

"Oh you are wonderful, splendid—you would have killed him, and you did not do it. You are the grandest!"

"There had to be a moment of suspense. But while he still held her in his arms, he said: "You'll let me tell you the whole story."

"Certainly not."

"Why?"

"Just because you can fight with a sword doesn't mean that you can race a high-power automobile. I must be there to—give suggestions."

She drew away up the stairs before he could reply.

Owen and Baltazar called at the house of Ferrar, the mirror of swarms. "Well, you confounded coward, have you got anything to say for yourself?" demanded the secretary.

"I am sure anything for him to say? Did we not see him—at the height of his glory?" sneered Baltazar.

"Do you mean to insult me? Do you mean to insult me?"

"That will be enough," Owen crushed him. "You have taken our money and taken our lives. What do you promise you will do?"

"The sword was poisoned. Couldn't you tell me that?"

"You were disarmed after you had said that you were the most expert fencer in the world."

"You would call me a coward. I will prove that I am not a coward. I will give my life to prove that I am not a coward."

"That sounds better," said Owen coldly. "That is what we came to see, if you would do."

"I am at your service. In what manner shall I aid you?" asked Ferrar.

"You were once, if I remember, capable of handling an automobile."

"I am still."

"And you are willing to risk your life to show that you are not a coward?"

Ferrar paused a instant, but the sneering smiles on the faces of Owen and Baltazar, quickly radiated his mental distress. "I am," he said.

"Have you nerve enough to handle a racing car in the International tournament?"

"Yes."

"Good," said Owen. "And drive it according to our instructions."

The secretary laid his hat on the rainy table and drew his chair close to that of Ferrar. Baltazar followed him to the table. They talked in whispers.

"Remember—the curve at the Edge-wood crossing," said Owen as they parted for the night. "Remember that we will be there that they might expect. All you have to do is to drive them into the ditch."

"I am a mechanic," said Ferrar.

"We've hired one—a cheap one. It will cost nothing to kill him."

He moved to his small cupboard and took a bottle of whiskey. Ferrar winced as his guests departed.

"When was a crowd?" said Owen as he and Baltazar pushed their way across the lawn of the Elmsmere track.

"And they're gathering down there, where the crowd is straggling down by the Edgewood curve—our curve."

"Yes, they are."

"Can we reach Ferrar and change the place?"

"No. Are you afraid? The machine will be ready in 15 minutes. You'll have to go through with it now."

"I will, Master."

The machines were moving out to the starting line. Owen, sheltered by the crowd, saw Pauline's giant racer, surrounded by a throng of fashionable folk at the gateway.

Pauline, in complete masculine costume, bogged and helmeted, sat beside Harry. "You must wear," inquired Sophie McCallan, who was in the enveloping throng.

"Ferrar's machine is the next starter. It was a magnificent American car that Owen had not yet seen. Ferrar drove on his own power to catch up with Harry and Pauline.

The noise of his approach thundered in the ears of the crowd. "Don't let anybody pass you," she commanded Harry.

"You don't mean to say that you want to win this race?" he shouted against the wind-rush.

"Of course!" she cried back at him. "Are you going to betray my confidence? Are you going to run slow?" Harry, if you do, I will never look at you again as long as I am alive."

"All right," she said. "I will win it," he said grimly. The inspiration of speed was in his veins as well as hers. The wonderful machine responded, lightning was his slightest touch. They took the lead.

The crowd at Edgewood curve was only a fraction of that of the previous night of a man carrying a stick towards the race course. They made way for him, thinking that he was contained seaward or something to

PERILS OF PAULINE

"It's going to do it now," she said.

"You will," said Pauline.

"I don't know," said Owen.

"I will take care of your lawn by the month or season. Furnish all tools necessary. Four years experience. Phone 287 or let me know at 141 8th avenue east and I will call and give you prices."

thing—everything—she demands. We save them both in our power."

"Pauline was clad, as was Harry, in a long automobile cloak, but her fringes of fur and figure were unobscured. Owen turned with a smile of triumph.

"Remember it is to be done with speed. Now go," he said.

Pauline produced a case of rapier and handed it to one of the men who accompanied them.

"If I need you I will blow the whistle," said Ferrar. "That I shall not need you."

"Let me see the weapons," commanded Owen. "You are sure of the one that has that?"

"The one that is poisoned is the one with the thread on its hilt," said Pauline.

"The man he mentioned who had been appointed to act as Ferrar's second, bowed with black assent. He followed Ferrar briskly as the latter moved out towards Pauline and Harry.

"I bid you good-bye in the hour of your death," said the bandit.

"We won't talk about it. I came down here to fight," said Harry briefly.

Pauline stood proudly at his side as Ferrar's sword presented the hilts of the rapier across his breast.

One hilt extended beyond the others. Harry, without suspicion, chose it. He turned testing the blade with the point upon his side.

Pauline approached Ferrar, who had drawn the rapier with the sword upon it.

What have you done?" she breathed as he drew away.

"We have too much money—and you have a guardian," he answered.

"I don't need a guardian," she said. "I'm not going to let you. Everything is dangerous, I don't mind for myself, but"

"I have entered now, you know," he said. "You are right that everything is dangerous, and if you give up the idea of riding with me, I will be the wisest thing you ever did."

"No," she whispered.

"No, Pauline, you are unreasonable. I don't."

He stopped his sentence as he swung the machine through the gates to Castle Marvin. "I don't understand how you can wish to risk your life."

There's no better covering for a house, than the right kind of cedar shingles.

And if they are to be used all over, as they were in this case, it's especially important that they be good. Extra wide shingles stand a split and "cup." Likewise if they are cut from cross-grained wood.

If they are not properly selected and weathered, they must not be baled to death in the dry-kill. That drives the life out of the wood.

In short, there's a mighty difference in shingles.

prevent the killing of the dog.
The man it was halfhearted, the dog reached the edge of the track. A thorn surrounded him where he had expected to find a bone. His drooping legs sagged and he moved a few paces along the track to a point from which he could see a motor car with a ready driver standing on the by-lane. Then he went back.
As the first round of the first ruff buffed away the course a half mile away, Baltzar reached into the bag. Next instant he was working wildly with both hands, butting pieces of jagged metal upon the track.
"See what that man is doing! He is throwing something on the track!" screamed a woman.
Mrs. Craybill, who had been on the street and struck at the first on-comer, the sled leaving the bag of metal behind.
"Shout and scream—followed by him that above the shouts and screams crashed suddenly the sun-like rays of the street car's headlights.
One of the railing cars—the car of Harry and Pauline—swerved suddenly, twisted, and on the edge of its own wheel, pitched itself to the ground.
"Two tires were gone. Only the faint light of Harry on the wheel behind the car.
The jumpy Baltzar was leaping to the seat of his waiting passenger, with twice the momentum in pursuit of him when another crash came from the race course.
The crash was followed by a thump.
Baltzar was away. Overtaken just before the machine going before the jumpy reached it, Baltzar, who had reached it in other hand, swung himself to the running board while the car was moving. The article from the track came so near to his eye that he thought it was his own.
"This time I has been done," he breathed wretchedly.
He beheld him in the cramped tangle of wood and steel that had been one of the midnight victims of the hand that it was Baltzar and Harry who had died. It was his friend and fellow-driver to the streets of St. Bernardo Ferrari.
The mechanic was drawn from under the burning car. He was hurried away. Ferrari's body was laid on the ground beside the train.
The cars were whizzing past. The cheer of the partisans mingled with the shocked cries of those who stood about the dead man.
Harry, you are slowing; don't, don't! We MUST win now."
Pauline was clutching his arm as he straightened the big car out after the accident.
"I am perfectly willing to kill myself," he said, "but YOU are WORTHY of my life."
"Drive, drive!" she begged.
"On two tires!"
"On anything!"

NOTICE TO CONTRACTORS

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN, that sealed proposals will be received at the City and County Council of the City of Twin Falls, up to eight o'clock on the FIFTH DAY OF APRIL, 1915, for the furnishing of the necessary teams, harness and drivers for the operation of street sprinklers and for the cleaning and maintenance of the streets and avenues in the improvement District No. 29, in the City of Twin Falls, during the year 1915.
Bids should be made for so much per ton and driver per day of eight hours, same to be used for either day or night work, at the order of the street commissioner. Bids will be required for five teams and drivers. Same shall be used to operate street sprinklers under control of the Street Commissioner, during such time as shall be necessary to keep the dust on said streets down to a minimum.
Bids must be accompanied by cashed check in the sum of Fifty Dollars, which sum shall be forfeited to the City of Twin Falls in case the bidder to whom the contract is awarded shall fail to enter into contract with the City within a period of five days after awarding of the contract.
The contractor will be required to furnish bond to the City in a sum equivalent sixty per cent of the contract price with good and sufficient surety to be approved by the City Council, conditional for the full and faithful performance of his contract.
Payment for the work will be made monthly on the first Monday of each month for all work performed for the preceding month and will be made by warrants drawn on the fund to be collected from the city.
The City Council reserves the right to reject any and all bids.

FILER NEWS

(From the Filer Journal)
 Mrs. W. A. Taylor of Keokuk, Iowa, who is in the city for a few days, was a Filer visitor Monday.
 Mike Strunk, the next postmaster of Twin Falls, was a Filer visitor Monday.
 Mr. Ellenton, of Minnesota, a brother of Mrs. Fehrenbacher, has recently located here.
 George Decker opened the front of the bank to a ranch south of Kimberly, which he will run the coming season.
 The business of the bank was taken over by Washington last Thursday for another year.
 Married—March 10, by the Rev. Mr. Fairbank, Mr. E. H. Mettelf and Miss Pearl Lowry. The Journal extends hearty congratulations.
 Seven & Hammeret have purchased the lots between their store and the corner yard. When the time is ripe they will be ready for additional store space.
 The Connor returned from Spokane the first of the week. Friends of Mrs. Connor will be pleased to learn that she is much improved in health and is doing bright along.
 The two-year-old child of Mr. and Mrs. Decker of Filer, was brought to the city Wednesday and underwent an operation, which was performed by Dr. E. Miller here—Dahl Pioneer.
 E. Miller has entered into the ownership of the Nibley-Channel Lumber Co. in the capacity of yard foreman. This is one of the good positions of our city and we are glad to see Mr. Miller obtain it.
 Madamca Sillan, Thainie (Gibb), and others will celebrate their birthdays at the home of Mrs. Hammeret this afternoon.

Things are beginning to liven up considerably this early in the season. Ely is fast coming into her own, and as spring opens up it will be more pronounced than ever. Nothing, however, holds back the best country in the land.
 W. T. Conant, proprietor of whose arrival appeared in these columns recently, from Ellensburg, Washington, is another of those sturdy characters from that section that have come among us. He is planning some extensive improvements, among them a new, modern home and a large commodious barn. Ellensburg has surely contributed some splendid citizens to this immediate section.
 Another settler from Ellensburg arrived this week. John Sheldon and family, cousin of W. T., unloaded a car of immigrant goods Tuesday.
 Pete Ehler, W. T. Conant, B. E. Phelby, J. A. Gifford, Carl Llerman and Robert Llerman joined the local family this week.
 W. T. Sheldon received a fanning mill this week that will take the wild oats out of wheat. It is the only mill on the market that will get the oat, and this tract is in need of such a mill.
 Mrs. G. Soumer told here Saturday morning for Charles City, Iowa, where she will visit her mother and friends. She expects to be gone a month or six weeks.
 At the citizens board meeting last Monday evening the board ordered two more blocks of concrete walks in. This action was taken on the basis of the majority of property owners wanting the walks.
 Rev. D. L. Grabul and family of Sedgewick, Kansas, are the latest arrivals on the tract. Mr. Grabul has been here before, and owns an 80-acre tract on which he will in the future reside.
