The Times again urges the placing of a non-partisan, non-factional city ticket in the field which will work for all interests with equal care and justice. There is nothing in any of the issues coming up which will warrant anything but broad ranges handling of affairs. The prospect of factional fights will mean the retarding of the city's growth, but if one faction starts things, they cannot expect that the other side will not take up the fight. A ticket composed of men who will not give control to any bank or any interest, should have the support of all citizens interested in clean government and fair play in clean government and fair play to

The ordinance ordering the muzzling of all dogs within the city limits is a who move in view of the existence of rabies among the coyotes in Southern Idaho and makes the owners of dogs at least give every precaution toward its spread. A similar ordinance has been passed by the towns on the north side of the river, where they are seriously alarmed at the menace to livestock. The Times believes however that in connection with laws regarding dogs within the towns and cities, that the owners of same means must take steps to require the muzzling of the dogs on the ranches. It is true that the coyotes will do the most damage.

THE ETHERAL VERITY

The annual re-gathering of the churchgoer for the celebration of Easter and the Resurrection coming at the time when Nature is clothing the hills, the trees and the flowers with the doings of life, cannot fail to turn even the most callous individual, with reverence toward the Creator. The evidence of the "Divine" direction is so many and so distinct that turn where you will the same fact is impressed upon the mind that back of the change of the seasons, "the course" of the stars and the planets, the creation of all life, is a divine and eternal force that is changeless. The sweeping destruction of Death and the processes of procreation have blocked the knowledge of human intelligence and left the scientific world against an impassable wall. Through out all time the human mind has cried out for knowledge of the ways of Divine Creation, only to acknowledge that life exists in all and through all. It is an eternal truth. The history of the Christian religion shows that somewhere in the plan of human existence there must be something more than a mere passing from life to death and then silence forever. Christy without reference to creed or sect has developed and reformed the world. It is a force which has transformed lives and made them useful. That through persecution and the failures of the church members, individually, the power of Divine redemption is quickly muzzling lives of men and changing the destiny of nations. Take on all in all the thinking, reasoning man must acknowledge that the force which each year brings forth the foliage and the plant life, directs too, the cycles of human life. If poor reasoning to believe that the Creator who has carefully planned perpetual progress of plant life and the forces of Nature should not have planned the eternal existence of human life. The hope, which springs up unbidden and without reason when one stands beside the bier of the loved one, of another life must have its origin from that great Master of the universe, who first created human existence and gave to it the power of choosing between right and wrong. Nature is every day pointing to this truth with persistent forces.

PHILADELPHIA'S VERDICT ON HILLY SUNDAY

It was reported that Hills-Sunday would break all records for conversions, and free will offerings in his Philadelphia campaign, but some doubted whether the city would really be much the better for the strenuous and prolonged ministrations of the ball-player evangelist. At the close of the eleven weeks of revival meetings we find the backers of the campaign enthusiastic over its success, and editors, leading business men, and city officials convinced that the "net results are" very largely for the betterment of the community. To use The Record's carefully chosen phrase, "the papers in the United States have told about the draft for $51,126.85 which Mr. Sunday carried with him to his Winona home; they have reported the collection of a similar amount for the expense of the campaign; further gifts for local charities, raising the total contributions to about $130,000. More important, they note that 41,724 "real-converts" signed cards out of about 46,000 presented at the meetings; and accept an estimate that 100,000 people in Philadelphia were moved at the Tabernacle, in outside meetings, or in the city's churches to lead better Christian lives. But the good results of the campaign, says the Philadelphia Evening Telegraph can never be tabulated, for the good results in the hearts of converts who have "left the trail" but in the atmosphere that has been created; Philadelphia; according to a writer in The "Beth American," has only begun to measure Billy Sunday as he should be measured—in lives and service."

Such hearty press commendation might well please Mr. Sunday. But he also carried with him from Philadelphia a scroll signed by nearly a hundred of the city's leading men, including Mayor Blankenburg, Alva B. Johnson, John Wannamaker, James A. Bevelin and Clarkson Clothier, and recording this resolution:

"At a meeting in the Bellevue-Stratford, Philadelphia, March 2, 1915, at which were assembled a large representation of business corporations, manufacturers, builders, bankers, and leading enterprises of Philadelphia, including city officials, and judges of courts, it was agreed that we bear our own testimony as men of affairs to the great good that has been effected by the services of William A. Sunday in every direction throughout the city, its churches, homes, factories, workshops, stores, offices and individuals. We commend the system, decorum, and teaching that have characterized the meetings at the Tabernacle, and believe the influence for good exerted during the past two months has been of local cardinal value to the community."

One of these signers, Mr. Alva B. Johnson, who is president of the Baldwin Locomotive Works said to the New York Tribune reporter: "The Sunday campaign has turned the thoughts of many thousands of persons to religion and the problem of spiritual life who but for it would have remained thoughtless. Many have disagreed with his science and his theology. It is not to be expected that all will think alike or believe alike.

"The fact is that not only in Philadelphia but in thousands of other places, the damage is repaired? MAY we not expect enterprise to wait until the effect of conservation of all kinds begins to be felt?"

The manager of a large cafe in New York City is reported to have estimated that New York on New Year's Eve spends $5,000,000 in suppers, theatres, cab, saloons, tips to waiters, etc. One-fifth of that sum would buy many an industry. Suppose 200,000 ladybirds who have spent in any of the larger cities $500 annually in tips, cab, theatre ticket commissions, etc., banks and thus turn it into legitimate enterprises, there would be $100,000,000 to help make property and keep it.

While it is true that women as a rule, are more inclined to be thrifty than men, yet it can be said, without lack of gallantry to the fair sex, that many women are almost totally lacking in this their instinct. In some cases, the wife is the out-and-out extravagant member of the matrimonial partnership. To any suggestion from the man who supports the household regarding the wisdom of building up a reserve fund in a savings bank account, she never listens patiently. Possibly her retort on such occasions is: "Make more money and then perhaps we can save some."

TALKS ON THRIFT

No. 17.—A STRAIN ON CAPITAL

"We are not economically useful unless he saves a portion of his income for the benefit of industry."—Laurence M. Symmes.

It is rather an interesting commentary on things as they are that in New York City personal income taxes aggregating $30,000,000 were being reported while at the same time there were heard the mutterings of unemployed said to number upwards of 300,000 men. New York is the head and center of extravagance in this country. All other cities follow its lead and the smaller communities imitate the larger centers as far as they can. As it is all over the United States so it is all over the civilized world—a great strain is being put upon capital by a widespread extravagance which is behind all local causes advanced to explain conditions resulting in the unemployment of thousands. A prominent economist says: "Without war and calamity the world's capital might have withstood the other extravagances of the day. On the other hand, without personal extravagance, the cost of unavoidable misfortune might have passed unnoticed. Both have occurred, however, and the question arises as to it not possible that the strain has been greater than capital could bear? Is it not reasonable to assume that property cannot return in full measure until the damage is repaired? MAY we not expect enterprise to wait until the effect of conservation of all kinds begins to be felt?"

The manager of a large cafe in New York City is reported to have estimated that New York on New Year's Eve spends $5,000,000 in suppers, theatres, cab, saloons, tips to waiters, etc. One-fifth of that sum would buy many an industry. Suppose 200,000 ladybirds who have spent in any of the larger cities $500 annually in tips, cab, theatre ticket commissions, etc., banks and thus turn it into legitimate enterprises, there would be $100,000,000 to help make property and keep it.

While it is true that women as a rule, are more inclined to be thrifty than men, yet it can be said, without lack of gallantry to the fair sex, that many women are almost totally lacking in this their instinct. In some cases, the wife is the out-and-out extravagant member of the matrimonial partnership. To any suggestion from the man who supports the household regarding the wisdom of building up a reserve fund in a savings bank account, she never listens patiently. Possibly her retort on such occasions is: "Make more money and then perhaps we can save some."

That is splendid advice, to be sure, but suppose the good husband has already reached the limit of his earning capacity? Suppose he or some other member of the family should have an expensive illness? Do not these possibilities show the folly of putting off all saving until earnings increase, if they ever do increase?

Observation—and experience—alike point unerringly to the conclusion that the desire and the willingness to save something must precede the actual accomplishment of that purpose, be the annual income $500 or $5,000, and that the experience of the person who puts off saving is likely to be that of the procrastinating slacker to whom are addressed the words of the old hymn: "If you tarry till you're better, You will never come at all." And here, when a resource is money in the bank! How compound interest adds to income! And how much better and more effectively a man works when his mind is freed from worry over the present and anxiety for the future. Money saved and put away safely in the bank is a worry-killer and a gloom-disposer, while common sense drift in the long run, brings greater happiness than extravagance ever can.—T. D. MACREGOR.

THE PERILS OF PAULINE

Written By Charles Goddard

SYNOPSIS

Stanford Marvin, wealthy manufacturer of automobiles, has been himself out by overwork. His son Harry, and his adopted daughter, Pauline, love each other, but she wants to see two years of thriving business before marrying. Her reason is that she is ambitious to be a writer. Old Mr. Marvin asks to see what she has written. With Pauline and Harry are search of a magazine containing her first story, Mr. Marvin opens the case of a mummy just received from Egypt. Raymond Owen, his recently private secretary, helps lift off the front of the case, but leaves old Mr. Marvin to remove the mummy's bandages alone. Harry during a lightning spell, sees the half-exposed mummy come to life, step out of her case, take a bracelet from her wrist and try to force it into his hands, while her lips reveal a strange message from the remote past. He is restored to consciousness by Harry and Pauline, the old man believes it is a dream, until, later, he finds the identical bracelet on the mummy's skeleton wrist. He promises Pauline one year to see life and places her in the guardianship of Owen. A final heart attack gives him just time to write on the doctor's prescription pad a very brief and simple will. Then he dies. A lawyer tells Owen that he would have permanent charge of Pauline's vast estate if something should happen to her before she marries Hicks, a race-track man, and Owen conspires to kill Pauline. The preceding chapters have dealt with the many efforts of the two to accomplish this.

CHAPTER XXXIII

Cries of delight coming in the voice of Pauline from the direction of the garage caused Harry to lay down his newspaper and go forth to investigate. As he approached he saw Bemis and Lucille's coachman lifting a crate from a carriage. From within the crate came the whimping bark of an imprisoned bull terrier. "Oh, isn't he dear?" cried Pauline, turning to Harry.

"I don't know. I haven't yet made his acquaintance. Where did he come from?"

"Lucille sent him to me. Johnson just brought him over. Harry, Bemis, and let him out. The poor darling!"

"Is that what is called puppy love, inquired Harry."

"Hush," commanded Pauline. "And Bemis, run and tell Martha to look something for him—a beefsteak and potatoes."

"And oysters on the half shell," suggested Harry.

"Love me," announced Pauline sternly, "love my dog."

"The coachman had ripped off the last top bar of the crate and a splendid terrier sprang out with a quiver that made Pauline retreat a little. But, as if he had been trained to his part, he bent his head, and, with wagging tail, approached her. In an instant she was kneeling beside him, regarding his homage with enthusiastic gaze and fantastic exclamations.

"Why he likes me already—isn't he charming?" she demanded.

Harry tossed his hands. "And THIS for a dog—a new dog—probably a mad dog!"

"You are a brute. What shall we call him?"

"Call him a man, I suppose."

The dog was making rapid acquaintance with his new home—investigating the garage and, more profaned by the kitchen door.

"Here, Cyrus, come, Cyrus!" called Pauline.

Harry exploded. "Is THAT what he is to be named?"

"Cyrus was the greatest king of Persia."

"But this is a dog, not a king."

Owen in his motorcycle togs, was leaning a cigar on the veranda when they arrived with the new pet. He seemed deeply preoccupied, and even the eager enthusiasm of Pauline drew from him but a faint indication of his interest. He crossed his arms and looked briskly to the garage. A few minutes later they saw him on the motorcycle speeding down the drive.

"I wonder what impressive business is today," remarked Harry sarcastically.

"Let poor Owen alone. He is good and kind—even if he doesn't care for Cyrus."

PRIVATE DINING ROOM FOR LADIES

OPEN DAY AND NIGHT PHONE-238

A crabbled, white-faced woman stood by the door. She called Balthazar with no word or sign, but as Owen appeared in the aperture, she uttered a wailing cry and stepped in front of him.

Instantly Owen's arms were gripped by two men, who sprang from either side of the door.

He struggled in their grasp. Raymond Owen's courage lay on safer lines than those of physical encounter with his fellow men. And as these other men, who had been at work in the room, caught up revolvers and sprang toward him, the last strength of his will deserted.

Before he had stumped to pleading, however, Balthazar was at his side.

"A friend, a friend—the Mr. Owen that I told you about—you fool!" he cried.

"Who are fools?" demanded a tall, lean man, standing in the doorway. "Shall we permit friends to walk into our home—unnoted? Shall we let even you bring strangers here without the proper introduction?"

"For yourself—yes. It is five taps, not three when you bring a friend."

He turned and eyed Owen suspiciously. "You can let him go," he said to the men who still held the secretary.

Owen came forward. He had mastered himself with quick understanding of the situation. "I hope," he said, "that if I am not welcome I shall be permitted to leave. I do not intend to stay at this meeting. It was conducted here by my friend, who assured me that we were both expected."

"Oh, no mistake whatsoever, Mr. Owen," exclaimed Rupert Wallace, "the center of the counterfeiter. It was only a bit of overacting on the part of Balthazar. You will readily understand that we are well-noted to all who honor us with visits. Now that you know who you are—"

"We can talk business," said Owen abruptly, taking command of the situation and relieving his nervous strain by pacing the room.

The driver was the Gypsy, Balthazar. He was called a converted tyro; his fantastic garments had given way to plain sack suit and motor duster. His tribe was far away in the Jersey hills, but the profit of his employment by Raymond Owen was worth to Balthazar the discomfort of becoming "civilized."

The entering of a distant motorcar caused him to fall to his knees and, wrenched in hand, wistle hastily under the machine.

To all appearance he was bitterly pre-occupied with the woes of a stall, out tourist, when a motorcycle clung to a stop beside the rumbust and the voice of Owen called to him.

"Balthazar crawled out."

"I thought you had failed of your appointment, Master. I said so."

"I was waited for more than half an hour."

"It is said that you should be in command, and I am here," answered Owen in a low tone, but with aristocratic meaning.

Balthazar ignored the meaning. "I thought you had failed of your appointment, Master," he said with an ingratiating smile. "I have found them."

"Found whom?"

"The friends you spoke about at our last meeting—the little band that earns money by making it."

"Oh, yes—your counterfeiters. Are they here?"

"Master, all right men are to be trusted. There is always protection in knowing the sins of others."

"But, remember, I have told you that I shall soon be through unless you accomplish something. It will not pay these exorbitant demands of yours and receive nothing in return. I do my part and you shall find cheerful persistence to do yours."

"Master, it is because I dare not risk your freedom—your life. For myself I care nothing. I live to serve you, and make money by my profession."

"You lie, of course," remarked Owen casually, "but what of the new plan?"

"They are in Banterville, only twelve miles from Castle Marvin. A house that has long been unoccupied and is now being used as a garage."

"And they are still manufacturing coin?"

"Yes; but this is a fortunate circumstance, the attention of the police is directed to the garage. Two of the distributors have been arrested. They would be glad of a safer, a swifter method of making money."

"Come along then."

Owen mounted the motorcycle while Balthazar sprang to the seat and started the rumbust. They sped briskly over the roads, turning at last into an old wood grown wagon path fringed copse-like by the branches of overhanging trees and came out upon a small clearing.

A gaunt house stood there. Its grimed windows bespoke desertion and the oblivion of disease.

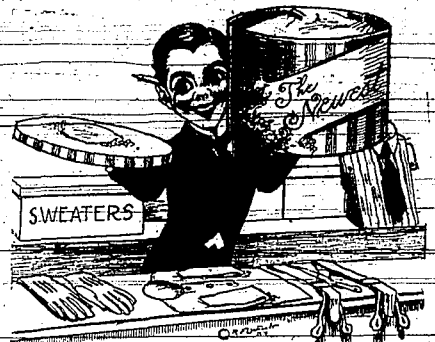

Gloom emanated from the tottering door and the cracking walls. A deserted house, broken in ways, the atmosphere of tragedy. In the abandonment of a man or of a woman, there gleams ever some spark of hope, of fortitude. But here, in the hopelessness of their abandonment by all who had their birth, their weddings, woes and funerals within the walls, is firm will finally.

Balthazar drove on along the road for at least a quarter of a mile before he stopped the machine. Owen followed without question.

They left the rumbust and the motorcycle and walked back to the house. "It is an excellent location," commented Owen, as Balthazar led the way into a basement entrance. "Who did you say was the man in charge of the concern?"

"But, Master, it is a world-traveler like yourself, though no match for you in mind. Master."

Balthazar, as he spoke, was stepping lightly on a wall which to Owen's sight had no sign of a door. It was pitch dark where they stood, but suddenly with hardly a sound, two sliding doors opened to the Gypsy's signal and a faint light from a gas jet on the wall steamed on an inner passage. Balthazar, closely followed by Owen, walked quickly down the secret hall, and, without sign, this time, another set of doors opened upon a brilliantly lighted room.

"The Store of Values"

"Yes; take Gaston and Friend. They are always to be trusted."

At his words two men stopped forward. One of them was in cap and apron. He had been working at the metal pots. But in response to a hurried word from Rupert he quickly threw off his togs of industry and caught up a hat and coat from a stand nearby.

Rupert Wallace stepped to the side of the room where a pair of upright lovers stood out of the floor like the levers of an automobile.

He pulled the harness him and the sliding door yanked open. Owen and Balthazar, with their new escort, stepped through. For the space of a moment, Wallace waited. And then drew back the other lever, and the departing guests found as they reached the end of the secret passage that their path opened almost magically before them—in the hushed unfolding of the second door.

Instant there was a yowl of dismay and the adored gift of Lucille fell several feet away from the bench.

"Harry, I think that is dreadful!" exclaimed Pauline, springing to her feet.

"I do too," he answered. "That was why I threw it off the bench."

"To treat a poor, innocent dumb creature like that?"

"Polity! You don't mean it, do you? You think I hurt him?"

"You hurt his feelings," she stated reproachfully.

"That doesn't matter, but if I've hurt yours—I do. I apologize."

"You are always joking. You don't understand how sweet and dear animals are. You will probably treat me the same way after we are married."

"She ran to the spot where the wary Cyrus was munching the last piece of candy. He accepted her caresses without enthusiasm, but kept a careful eye on Harry.

Pauline had no such interest. She called to the dog and walked briskly toward the house. Harry followed in laughing protest.

Cyrus did not follow. The box of candy was still on the garden bench and Cyrus was not immune to temptation.

"Goodby, Cyrus," said Harry, as Pauline strode down the garden to her new pet a dainty from the box of bonbons she carried.

"What do you mean by that?" she demanded.

"That the oysters on the half shell would be better for his health."

"I didn't give him oyster on the half shell."

"No; but you saved him everything else in the house. He is stuffed like the fattest calf or like the prodigal son—'don't care which'."

"If he likes candy, he shall have candy," declared Pauline, sitting down on an other bench and extending another sugar-plant to the dog.

The gratitude of Cyrus was expressed in a leap to the side of his new-found mistress. As Harry sat down he discovered that Cyrus had accepted the favored place beside Pauline. Next Owen followed on his motorcycle the night in which Balthazar and the chosen members of Rupert Wallace's band made their swift journey toward Castle Marvin.

A quarter of a mile from the grounds Owen drove alongside.

"This would be a good place to stop. The car can be hidden in the lane."

"Yes; master," said Balthazar. He wheeled the machine upon a SONG OF THE FORD (Sung to the tune of "Casey Jones") Old Zeko Perkins sold his horse the other day. And the gosh darn fool threw his horn right at the nose train. Rode into town sitting on a burd. And he came a ridin' home in a durned little Ford. Wrote a note to the horse and got to the gate. He shut down the throttle, and pulled on the brake. He grabbed for the reins and the throttle instead; And the gosh darned Ford kept chugging right ahead.

CHORUS Old Zeko Perkins bought an automobile. Old Zeko Perkins whinkers they were red. Old Zeko Perkins lost the combination. And the darned little Ford kept chugging right ahead. Zeko jerked the levers and turned off the gas. He kicked at the pedals, and he broke out the glass. He cut all the wires, and he pulled out the top. But the gosh darned Ford, it just wouldn't stop. He pulled out his knife and he smiled so serene. He cut a hole in the tank, and drained out the gasoline. He pulled out his gun and shot the three full of lead. But the gosh darned Ford kept chugging right ahead. Went right through the fence and up through the line. Miranda saw him coming and she liked to sew him in. She rode out ahead, then she stopped. And the Ford hit her square where the bustle ought to be. She rode out her arm as she went in the air. Just as Zeko went by she grabbed him by the hair. She leaped on the seat and landed on the bed. And the gosh darned Ford kept chugging right ahead. He steered for the shed, but just missed the door.

Struck on the head and you ought to see her roll. Out through the yard they landed in a big mud puddle about two feet deep. Zeko grabbed Miranda and waded for her. He was glad when it stopped and wouldn't go no more. He pricked up his ears, then looked back and saw the Ford. "Why the gosh darned Ford is chugging right ahead!"—Exchanging.

ASKED TO SETTLE FOR LOST VESSEL Department of State Sends Note to Germany. DEMANDS HEAVY SUM FOR DESTRUCTION OF W. P. FRYE. More Than a Quarter of a Million is Necessary to Pay for the Work of Fritz Eitel. Washington—On behalf of the owners of the American ship William P. Frye, sunk by the German Eitel Friedrich, the United States government in a note made public Monday last asked Germany to pay an indemnity of $250,000, which represents the cost of the vessel, the freight charges for its cargo and damage resulting from being deprived of the use of the ship. Inasmuch as the cargo became British-owned while en route no claim for damages was presented by the previous American shipowners. Whether the freight charges asked by the owners of the Frye will be paid will depend upon the decision of the formal prize court, decides whether the consignment of wheat to a private firm in England made it free from the claims of the American owners in connection with the Wilhelmmina case has been that such shipments are not liable to seizure and officials here do not anticipate any different attitude in this case. It is reported that the German ambassador here has recommended to the government an indemnity for the loss of the vessel.—Statesman.

CELEBRATES 110TH BIRTHDAY Oldest Man in Idaho in Bonnerville County. Thomas Morgan, the oldest white man in Idaho, probably the oldest man of any race, probably the oldest man in the inter-mountain West, celebrated his 110th birthday anniversary at his home in the city of Bonnerville, P. D. No. 2, last Thursday, surrounded by a large number of relatives, who had gathered to offer him congratulations on his achievement to spend the day on this occasion which is granted to so few. The occasion was a memorable one. Relatives, friends, neighbors, and the number of 169 gathered around the big tables where the dinner was served. Mr. Morgan was the guest of the day, and the occasion was a memorable one. His wife who is 84 years, took part in all of the dances and was the belle of the occasion. All of the stock raising an opportunity to have her for a partner. Morgan stated that his father was brought to his home wounded after the battle of Waterloo. Mr. Morgan has a wonderful memory and a great fund of historical information and is a most interesting talker.—Idaho Falls Register.

TO FINISH HIGHWAY Contractor on Sawtooth Highway Will Resume Work at Once. O. G. Barton, chief contractor on the Sawtooth highway from Richfield to Halley, will begin work again this week on the unfinished portion above Peard. He will have 12 men and about 100 mules to start with while several sub-contractors, among them the Johnsons, from Marley, and the Peters from Peard, will also be working with good crews. The portion of the road that was graded up last fall, is all in fine condition, and there is only about a quarter of a mile to be graded. However, not all the new grade is now being used, as the old grade is still utilized in a number of places from Peard to Thulau. Within the next two or three weeks all or most of the new grade will be finished and ready for the spring rains. The whole road will be ready for the summer travel, which should be heavy every day of the season. Starting from Thulau, rather than from the Nevada state line, for the grade has been finished down that far. South of Twin Falls—one can come up through the Sawtooth country for one of the most delightful auto rides in the whole West. One can drive from the Nevada state line, clear up into the Stanley Wash in one day, and then go on to Challis, Mackay, Salmon, and on through to Montana, over the mountains. It is an excellent wild. Or one could go over through Arco, and connect with the Yellowstone Park road north, along the line of the O. & N. The best route from The Park will probably be open to auto this season, so that the camper who wants to go that way, by his own conveyance will probably have the privilege of doing so. Tell all your friends that the Richfield Sawtooth road will be finished within a month, that it can be traveled now, as it lacks only one or two miles of being finished—and the old road in operation over all that distance; and that if they want a really fine outing, this is the way to come.—Richfield Recorder.

RAISE MAINTENANCE Settlers Using Water Must Make Advances if "Flow" Not Paying. At the meeting of the directors of the Canal company held in Honolulu Sunday afternoon, the main feature being the raising of rates per acre for this year. This does not represent the estimated cost of maintaining and operating the system, but over the average sold—such cost being slightly less than 50 cents per acre—but includes an amount of offset the Frye, and by the time the canal company water is caused to run over the many canals—who are not using their water, refusing to pay their maintenance charges, the canal company has advanced funds to make up this deficit in operating expenses; but according to the report public at Saturday's meeting, they do not propose to do so in the future. Hence, the necessity of enforcing a larger payment from those who are cultivating the irrigated lands, to have water, to offset the charges against entries which will not be paid by reason of their not being cultivated, and for which water entries to be cultivated, water could not as a matter of fact, be furnished. Concerning this season's water supply in this year's supply of water, the directors of the canal company have found it necessary to arrange for water deliveries on a different plan than has been in use in the past. Pursuant to the action taken by the directors at Saturday's meeting, the management of the company will endeavor to determine the amount of water available for each acre of land available this year, and propose to advise the entrants of the amount of water upon which they may depend for the irrigation of their entries. The entrants on their part will be expected to adjust their requirements to such amount of water as may be available. The text of the resolution follows: "BE IT RESOLVED, That, in order to insure the equitable distribution among stockholders of the water stored in the reservoir available for distribution through the company's irrigation system, the Board of Directors is hereby authorized to estimate each season as far as practicable of the available water supply and to allot or apportion such water from time to time, to be used or stored, distributed to the several stockholders who are not delinquent in the payment of maintenance charges, such allotment or apportionment to be based upon the number of acres irrigated and entitled to water from said system. The text of the resolution shall be adopted and enforced by the directors relative to allotment and distribution of water as will best protect the interest of all stockholders, and no stockholder shall receive more than his allotment, and no stockholder shall receive more than required for the proper irrigation of his or her entries. Good irrigation practices. The Directors and officers of the company shall at all times, as far as practicable, prevent waste and economical use of water to the end that all the water available for irrigation during the season shall not be distributed to land owners who are not irrigating, but the same shall be carried over to succeeding years as a precautionary measure against drought or a shortage of water in the future. The statement of the canal company shows uncollected at the end of 1914: 1912 maintenance ..... $ 7,561.67 1913 maintenance ..... 10,814.14 1914 maintenance ..... 12,090.75 Total ..... $32,466.56

And against these uncollected maintenance charges the canal company has borrowed from the Twin Falls-Salt Lake Irrigation Water company, $41,117.15 and from the bondholders' committee, $4,105.95. Maintenance collected in 1914 was: 1912 maintenance ..... $ 3,333.33 1913 maintenance ..... 2,456.68 1914 maintenance ..... 21,357.32 Total ..... $27,147.33 This means that out of 73,000 acres against which 1914 maintenance of 50c per acre was levied, something over 42,000 acres paid and something over 30,000 did not pay. On account of the large amount of maintenance uncollected, and on account of the amount by the bondholders' committee that no further advances would be made by them for the purpose of carrying on the operation of the canal company, it was necessary to increase the maintenance charge for 1915; it being certain that not all of the stockholder would make prompt payment of the 1914 maintenance charge. It was, however, figured that with the increase of the water rate in the maintenance charge, enough would be paid to provide funds necessary for the payment of wages to employees and necessary operating expenses.—Hollister

CASTLEFORD STORE CHANGES

Heller Bros. Purchased Store-Owned by T. W. Porter. The T. W. Porter, Mercantile company, of Castletford, changed hands Sunday morning when Heller Brothers purchased the store. The new firm needs no introduction to the castletford country as both Heller and Porter have lived in that neighborhood for the past five years. Lou Heller, the other member of the Heller firm, has been managing the store prior to its purchase. Both members of the new firm are popular among the ranchers of that section, and will continue to hold the big trade that formerly went to the T. W. Porter store. Mr. Porter, the former owner, will retire from business and is now residing in Burley, where he will make his home. For the past few months he has held the management of the store in Lou Heller's hands. The many patrons of the store will be glad to hear that, since Mr. Porter has decided to retire from active business, the store will remain in the hands of business men who know well, and in whom they have great confidence. The Herald wishes the new proprietors bon voyage in their new venture.—Burley Herald.

HELPS TAXPAYERS. Editor Picotte Saves Blaine County a Goodly Sum. The county commissioners of Blaine county sought to engage extra counsel to prosecute bond cases in that county which are to come to trial in May. To this end the commissioners had employed Holden and Holden, of Idaho Falls, and J. E. Hedrick, of Hallock, and were to pay them $1,750. However, T. E. Picotte, the veteran upholder of the "Times of Hallock," intervened as a taxpayer to prevent the employment. Judge Bothwell heard the case last Saturday in Shoshone and sustained the contention of Picotte. The result was the employment of extra counsel is illegal. The regular elected county attorney is the only one who can be employed. The action of the newspaper man, taken at his own expense saves the taxpayers a pretty penny, not only in this instance but in many numerous others. —Shoshone Journal.

One of the best examples of the spirit of Southern Idaho people is the splendid public buildings they have built.

The attractiveness and general appearance of stability is mighty convincing evidence that we do not have to go outside our own territory to get the best talent among architects and builders.

We, ourselves, take no little pride in doing our part by supplying good serviceable material.

ALFALFA DRY FARM

One of the Best Drought Resisting Plants Known.

Cause of Many Failures in Semi-Arid Sections is Shallow Plowing. Good Stand Obtained by Planting in Deep Seed Bed.

Many farmers have failed in alfalfa because of a sort of error that had to be irrigated every few days. The fact is, however, that it is one of the best drought resisting forage plants known. It has been the salvation of dry central Asia and also of the South American deserts, where it seldom rains. It is considered so valuable in Peru and Chile and other countries adjoining that it is often raised in small quantities in the valleys where there is a rain but some damp soil on account of underflow from the mountains.
