REASON FOR DELAYED DECISION

Public Utility Commission Refuses to Be Goat In Waterworks Controversy.

Will Not Pass on Application For Water System Until Briefs Are Filed By the Parties Interested.

Now comes the true reason for the blame in the case. The waterworks company is not the applicant in the case, therefore is not supposed to submit its brief until the city's brief is submitted to them.

But to go further into the matter and place the blame upon the right people, The Times wishes to emphatically state that the city council does not elect, but appoints the water works company.

It is suggested that the water works company should be held responsible for damage to the paving job having fire for the same reason.

THE PERILS OF PAULINE

Written By Charles Goddard

SYNOPSIS
Stanford Marvin, wealthy manufacturer of toywork, has worn himself out by overwork. His son Harry and his adopted daughter, Pauline, look each other, but one ventures but two years of thrilling adventures before they meet. Her mother is a fortune hunter, ambitious to see what she has written. While Pauline and Harry are in search of a magazine containing her first story, Mr. Marvin opens the case of a mummy just received from Egypt. Raymond Owen, his rascally private secretary, helps lift off the front of the case, but leaves old Mr. Marvin to remove the mummy's bandages alone. Marvin, during a fainting spell, seizes the half-clothed mummy close to life, step out of her case, take a bracelet from her wrist and try to force it into his hand while she is in the process of a strange message from the mummy pasted to consciousness by Harry and Pauline, the old man believes it all a dream. He tries to find the identical bracelet of the mummy's skeleton wrist. He promises Pauline one year to see life and places her in the guardianship of Owen. A final heart attack gives him just time to write the doctor's prescription paid a very brief and simple will. Then he dies. A year later Owen tells Pauline she would have permanent charge of Pauline's will estate if something should happen to her before she marries. Hicks, a racketeer, makes Owen conspire to kill Pauline. The preceding chapters have dealt with the many efforts of the two to accomplish this.

CHAPTER XXXV.

"Well prove it," said Harry. "Show me that 'you mean it'."

"Why Harry, what a woman says she means," said Pauline.

"You are as much of a brute as usual," but Harry, really I'm going to be good this time," pleaded Pauline.

They were emerging from the gate of the Marvin mansion to the avenue. As Harry turned to Pauline with a skeptical reply on his lips, the approach of a young man of military bearing caused him to hesitate.

"By Jove, isn't that—who the deuce is it? Why Bonny Summers?"

The young man was hastening past them without recognition. He had just been called Harry's sharpshooter.

"Hello, Harry."

"Harry—Bonny? By the coin of Grouse, is it really you?"

"No," said Harry, shaking his head.

"Not the 'you' you used to know. I have been driven into young old age by caring for a militant sister. This is the 'I' of the 'I' of the 'I' of the 'I' of the navy. PLEASE promise me that you won't get him into danger, because he used to be a 'friend of mine.' He has never done anything more dangerous than run a submarine and shoot torpedoes out of it in a field of mine."

"A submarine? Torpedoes?" cried Pauline. "Isn't that beautiful?"

"But, Harry, how can you? What have you been doing? I haven't seen you in a thousand years," cried Harry with cordial enthusiasm.

"I'm still at it. And I've GOT it, Harry. I give you my word, I have."

"Got what?"

"The torpedo—I mean THE torpedo, in capital letters and italics with a flourish. It's the best thing that would blow a wall. I've GOT it!"

"Congratulations, congratulations, congratulations!" cried Pauline.

"Without having the slightest idea what a torpedo is, I rejoice with you. Come on back to the house and tell me about it," said Harry.

"I'm sorry, I can't, Harry, now. I'm engaged for a conference with the Naval Board, and I'm late already. But will you and Miss Marvin come to luncheon with me tomorrow?"

"Why not you with us; we saw you first."

Summers laughed. "Well, for this reason, I want you to meet Miss De Longson, who will preside at this particular luncheon, and who is—"

The crimson flush that came suddenly to the cheeks of the young officer brought involuntary laughter from Harry and Pauline.

"To luncheon with Ensign Summers tomorrow? Isn't he dead? I know men who blush. They seem so innocent."

Ensign Summers had gained a position beyond his titular rank in the navy. A natural bent toward science and a patriotic bent toward the defense had inspired him to experiments which had resulted in success amazing even to himself.

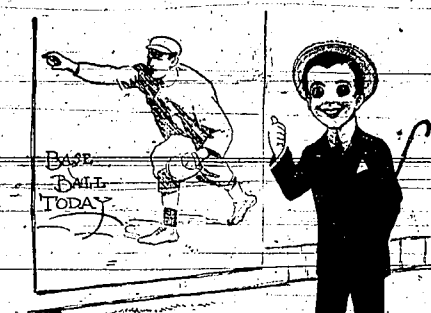

Harry had been allowed during the year preceding the meeting with Harry and Pauline—a leave of absence. In that time he had visited Italy, France, England and Germany and had studied under masters of naval knowledge. He had come back with his own little fleet undiminished in its importance to his own mind, and he had proceeded with youthful enthusiasm and energy to perfect the importance to the benefit of his commanders.

"The tests now about to be made—tests of a new torpedo gun and new torpedoes—had been ordered by the minister in the land."

Proud in his discovery and worthy to his credit, Summers was the happiest of men.

It was in Paris that he had met Miss De Longson. Exquisitely beautiful, of the alluring and dangerous, and quick of wit, delicate of tact, she had completely fascinated the young officer.

He had vowed his affection for her almost before he knew her. Her

Pauline had seen the intent gaze of Owen fixed upon them. She turned to him with a suddenness that would have seemed absurd in the manner of one less loved. "Mr. Owen, do come to see me," she said. "I am sure—at least I think I am sure—that we may have many matters of mutual interest."

The German government is making bitter plaint against the alleged cruelty of the Russian forces in Eastern Prussia in devastating and demolishing property and homes. The cry would ring more forcibly in the ears of the neutral nations if they could forget starving and devastated Belgium.

In the heat of the coming city election campaign, when personalities and spite create hard feelings and disrupt the more intimate relations among all citizens, "The Times" of the start desires to go on record. Criticism of the official conduct and public records of a man are legitimate and are of the things most vital to the citizen at stake. It is a mighty hard thing for most men to separate the issue from the man and criticisms of public policy hurt the individual. It will be the aim of "The Times" as much as possible to avoid personalities and it will endeavor to state the truth in an offensive manner as possible. One thing is certain that outside of the liquor-at stake in the campaign, "The Times" has nothing but good will for every man who may be on or working on another ticket. When the election is over the fight is over as far as this paper is concerned unless a fight is forced on this paper by the other side. Twin Falls is too small to have its citizens harbor malice over an honest disagreement in politics. The man who is too small to drop the personal element after the fight is over is still too small to live up to the full standard of citizenship and is not entitled to any consideration.

CHINA'S FEAR OF JAPAN

Intense irritation has been aroused in China by the demands made upon the Peking government by Japan, and relations between the two countries have never so cold, been strained almost to the breaking point. In Japan great importance is attached to the negotiations now progressing, and the government has established a press censorship, so that the Japanese papers no longer discuss the main issues and only refer guardedly to the side-lights upon the situation. The Chinese papers, on the other hand, are full of the subject, and they and all urge the government to take a firm stand. The cables dispatching tell us that the Japanese have warned Japan that "grave consequences are likely to ensue" if she does not respect her treaty obligations concerning China's integrity and the "spheres of influence" of the several powers. The whole future of the far east, say the Chinese papers, is in peril, and the Peking Huang Chung Shih Pao voices the feeling of many prominent Chinese when it says: "With Japan, friendship, amity, faith, and justice count for nothing, but that which matters to her is not aggression, but short-sightedness will be the cause of turmoil in the far east after the European war is over. But the worst is yet to come! We be to the far east when the European war is over. Therefore, this is high time for China to be up and doing. . . . If this state of things should prevail indefinitely, this nation will be destroyed, even though the Japanese do not come to rob us."

Another influential Chinese paper, the Peking Ta Chiu Yu Pao, protests against the mystery with which the negotiations have been surrounded, but sees the ultimate defeat of Japanese aims.

"The public has been alarmed at the unreasonable demands presented by the Japanese minister, and as the contents of the demands have been kept secret, the air has been full of speculations. But irrespective of the truth or otherwise of the rumors, the ultimate success of the negotiations will depend on the fact whether our diplomatic officials remain firm or weak-kneed at the very outset. The Japanese minister may employ all kinds of threats, but he can not force us to give in."
Public opinion is being inflamed against Japanese by stories of wanton aggression, and those tales, true or false, are having a powerful influence upon the Chinese mind, and the public is determined to support the government to the end. As an example, we quote one such story found in the pages of the Po Ching Ching Pao, an influential news paper:

"We learn that some days ago a Japanese warship touched at our seaport in Fukien, and its crew committed not a few outrages upon the natives. In purchasing articles from the natives, the Japanese refused to pay the legal price, and sometimes force was employed to obtain articles from their lawful owners."

The English press in China make common cause with the native papers in urging a firm stand against what they term "Japanese aggression." Thus the Peking Daily News says: "At the present rate of progress under President Yuan, China will and must secure a position due to her among the family of nations. The ambitious dream of placing fifty-five millions of Japanese over four hundred millions of Chinese can never be realized, however aggressive the methods adopted. China is for the Chinese, and she can never be ruled by an alien race again. Japan is a poor country. Without Chinese markets and western financial aid she can never be in a position to maintain an army and navy, and we advise our Japanese neighbors in all sincerity not to take advantage of our present weakness in point of credit, for to humiliate us unduly is a swift retribution which will be the result of fortune should turn in our favor; but to pay attention to their own internal affairs, such as finances, etc."
Of the Japanese side it is urged that China has taken up a perfectly unreasonable attitude with regard to Japan's "moderate and necessary" requests and that this stand is due to German intrigue. Thus the Tokyo Nichi-nichi remarks:

"If Germany had not existed, the negotiations between Peking and Tokyo would very likely have been concluded long ago in favor of Japan, who, by securing a settlement of all complicated and important questions pending between the two countries, is solicitous of promoting relations with China and maintaining peace in the east. With the progress of the negotiations between the two countries, it has unexpectedly assumed a rather disquieting aspect, and under existing conditions none can tell how things will develop. . . . We President Yuan Shih Kai and the Chinese people not to be victimized by German intrigues, and not to share a fate similar to that which has befallen Turkey, which has been victimized by the Kaiser and his vice-pullers."
In Chinese quarters, this suggestion is indignantly repudiated, and the Peking Gazette, which has recently passed into German hands, and is therefore in a position to speak with authority, says:

"In this connection we have to register the most emphatic contradiction that the action and decision of the responsible Chinese authorities entrusted with the conduct of the negotiations are in any sense whatsoever inspired, dictated, or influenced by any German or Germans."—Literary Digest.

"Es fult nur noch, Mawrus," said Abe Pottah to his partner, Morris Perlmutter.
"Always kicking, Abe," Morris commented, "ain't kicking." Abe continued, "Why should I kick because they are going to make from us a piece in a theater?"
"From us a piece in the theater?" Morris exclaimed. "An-idea."
"That's what I say to the young lady which is coming here by the name Miss Meredith and she says from getting such ideas A. H. Woods makes a fortune already."
"You, makes a fortune," Morris cried, "I never heard toll of the folior at all. Must be a new beginner in the payment business."
"What are you talking nonsense-garment business," Abe interrupted, "A. H. Woods is in the theater business, not the garment business, and this here young lady says so sure as you are standing there that on April 15 already he would make from us a show in the Lavinging theater."
Morris shrugged his shoulders.
"How could you let everybody stuff you full of nonsense, Abe," he expostulated.
"No nonsense at all, Mawrus," Abe asserted. "This here young lady by the name, Margie Meredith which I was telling you about herself going to see in the place and you can take it from me, Mawrus, if A. H. Woods is always got in his pieces such an elegant looking young lady, which she talks so high-toned and at the same time sweet and handy, me, it's no wonder that feller makes out so good."
"That's all right, Abe," Morris said skeptically. "One smaller ain't going to fool all summer."
"What do you mean, no swatter?" Abe retorted, angrily. "Not alone this Miss Meredith, but A. H. Woods is also getting for our show no loss and Gott wels we noch."
For my part he could put Abraham Carnes in the place," replied Morris. "But," he added, after a moment's thought, "I guess Abe we better go. The least this feller, Woods get do by us is to schmeer us a couple of passes."

TWO RANGH BARGAINS

160 acres, 1/4 miles from town, 80 acres alfalfa, no better soil on this tract, land partly watered, fair improvements, rented this year for $1250 cash rent, which goes to buyer if sold soon. Price $110 per acre. This ranch is positively worth $130 per acre, good terms on future payments.

A NATURAL SHEEP RANCH

160 acres 5 miles from town, 80 acres alfalfa, deep rich soil, good small house, price $20 per acre, easily worth $10. This is a natural sheep ranch, being well protected from west winds. Additional joining land, which is absolutely as good soil as there is in this county, can be had to make a ranch of 300 acres. If you are interested in sheep raising, investigate this proposition. It can be bought on very favorable terms.

"That will be splendid."

He stopped at once and gave a terse order. Delightfully, Pauline watched the brief machine-like movements of the crew trimming the deck. Summers, escorted her back to the conning tower. They descended. Within a few moments the wonderful craft was buried under the waves. "An' what do you do then?" asked Pauline, innocently. "Oh, just stay down." "There he is—looking for us" laughed Pauline at the portage. "Pauline and Ensign Summers returned to the deck. They stood at the rail together, watching the foamy wash of the motor boat when a small sound crossed the water. "A man was standing up in the motor boat and calling through a megaphone. Summers raised his glasses. "Do you know who that is?" he asked laughing as he turned to Pauline. "Of course not. What does he want to take you away from us?" "Pauline uttered an exclamation of annoyance. "Isn't he silly?" she cried. "One would think that I was a baby, the way he watches me." "The motor boat was rapidly approaching. Soon the voice of Harry could be plainly distinguished. "Clear your ship; I am going to sink you," he called. "Care too precious this trip; don't let me take the megaphone," he commanded Pauline. "What do you mean by following us?" she cried across the water. "Yes, please," said Pauline. Summers laughed as cut short. "As if someone had taken his life in earnest and really fired a projectile, the crash of an explosion came from the bottom of the boat. "Stay here," breathed Summers with a set face, as he joined the rush of men into the pump room. "But Pauline followed, frightened by be done in Submarine B-2 tomorrow. All you have now to do is Pauline did not catch the final word.

The two moved back to the ball room. She followed close behind, curious. But with the thrill of a new plan gripping her. She saw Ensign Summers stop forward eagerly to greet Miss De Longson. A radiant dance was beginning. "This one is Mr. Owen's" said Miss De Longson. She moved away on the arm of the young officer. "Have you anything to tell me?" he asked. "Yes, not only this, indeed, but I make Summers take her down in his submarine tomorrow, and she shall never trouble you again. Shall we dance?" "You calmly plotting death for others, the woman of beauty and the man of brains whirled gaily into the tempo. As the dance was ended, Pauline and Harry Summers and Ensign Owen stood there.

"Mr. Summers, I have a great request to make," said Pauline. "I grant it before you breathe a word," said he. "I want you to take me along on your submarine trip tomorrow." "Holly, have you gone crazy all over again?" cried Harry. "I do believe it would be a great honor for me." "It must be," she commanded. "Well, I promised too soon, but I'll have to do it." Owen and Miss De Longson had stepped aside.

"What does it mean?" gasped the secretary. "It means that the very thing we want her to do." "Sometimes Fate aids the worthy," said Miss De Longson softly.

CHAPTER XXV. At the dock of the navy yard a submarine lay ready for departure. "There was nothing about its appearance to indicate that its mission was of more than ordinary importance. But it was an unusual thing to see a woman aboard and the custody of the crew was matched by that of the young officers who had come down to see Summers off on his voyage of many adventures.

The officers got little reward for their considerate interest. Ensign Summers was engaged. He was explaining to Pauline, as they stood on the deck of the war-craft, the entire history of submarines from the time of Casper, of Washington, or Napoleon to the present day. And Pauline was listening with that child-like simplicity which women use for the purpose of making men look foolish. "By Jove! I thought he was dead, heart and hope, to the lovely foreigner," exclaimed one of the shoreward observers.

"She's not dead," said Miss De Longson, "but I'm interested in his daily life. How do you know who the young lady up there is?" "So she did—easy as snapping your thumb." She's Miss Pauline Martin, daughter of the richest man that has died in this city.

"Well, Summers is certainly pre-occupied." "Any man is pre-occupied when a pretty woman seems to be interested in his great work." But don't mistake Summers. The Belle De Longson has a splendid and cultured mind. This comment might have had little effect on the young man. The signal of departure. The engines began to rumble. The deck and deck chairs were being pushed forward. The ship started slowly toward the pier.

There was a shout from the pier. Summers raised his eyes and saw a dark, turned with an expression of surprise. He saw his faithful manservant, Harry, but not the man who had come to see him off. Summers ordered the vessel stopped. "It had moved not more than a few feet when the man stepped forward. "What's the matter?" he asked, pausing. "Who told you that?" demanded Summers. "Miss De Longson. I am sure it is the signal of importance. She told me I must give it to you before you risked your life on the voyage."

At about this stage in construction the builder begins to realize what a convenience and help it is to have the local lumber yard at hand.

In fact, from the very beginning of building operations, it's a decided advantage to be able to get just what you want, and when you want it.

That's one reason why there are lumber yards. Then again, no one who understands the differences in woods wants to build inside and out, roof and floor, of any one kind of wood. The lumber yard has the necessary varieties for the different purposes.

PERILS OF PAULINE

(Continued from Page 4.) In her softly modulated tones, the secretary had a certain foreign flavor. The historical meaning of the words. But Owen gazed at the woman with fascinated interest. "It will be an honor." "Tomorrow evening then?" "Delighted. And later, the Naval Academy." "No! I'm afraid the silly little ensign will not permit, any one else to take me to the ball; but we shall meet there afterward."

In a New York street among the lower Thirties there was at that time a foreign agency there was not a consulate, but was visited by diplomats of the highest rank in a certain nation, the name of which, nor the mystery of whose suspicions need not be touched upon.

There was no regular staff at the agency. The rooms were maintained under the name of certain foreign gentlemen—or rather, under the name that a certain foreign gentleman chose to assume. There were two servants, and they saw little of the master of the house. He was seldom at home, but when he was, he had many visitors.

An hour after the luncheon in the rooms of Ensign Summers, the master of the mysterious dwelling was at home. He had had four guests. Two would have greatly surprised Ensign Summers had he known that one of the diplomats present was his own man servant, Catlin.

"It is the worst duty I have ever had to perform," the diplomat said solemnly. "It means, almost certainly, your death. But it is death for your country. It is the command of your country. The submarine must be destroyed and the conspirators must get the place through another agent."

Catlin bowed in respectful silence. "I am not afraid to die," he said. "Then, in the name of the one you will enter, of course, but it will give you an idea of the magnitude of the task which will be yours where you will see the explosive until the proper moment. I have also indicated the position for your work. You will see that you will have some faint chance of reaching the surface and being saved."

"Thank you, sir." "I repeat to you, my only excuse to myself with my knowledge that I would do the same as you are doing, is the command came. Goodly, and know, young man, that, though your heroism will be forever hidden, heaven will reward your sacrifice." "One of the other men stepped forward and handed Catlin a small square box. "This is the explosive. You know, of course, how to handle it."

Catlin received the bomb and the map of the submarine. He fastened the dynamite cables with a military salute, turned and left the place. Within half an hour he was carefully brushing Ensign Summers' clothes as Summers came in. "Would it be too much to ask, sir, to inquire the perfect value?" "To ask that is almost unnecessary. You are in the marine? I am afraid you will be very uncomfortable without us."

Summers laughed good-naturedly. "It's impossible," he said. "This boat is a government secret in itself, and my new torpedo makes it a double secret. No one but the conspirators will be allowed in it, except—" "Except, sir?" "Well, I admit I could command it."

But there remained for him a pleasure that he admitted still to be getting more than the long-continued through the fog, with a cry of pleasure at the arrival. Owen bowed over her hand with something more than the commercial interest he had first found in her sequance. Even his chill and cruel heart was not invulnerable to such charms. "I am so glad you came—and so sorry I must send you away quickly," exclaimed Miss De Longson. "The little ensign has telephoned that he is coming early to take me for a drive in his vulgar motor car before the ball." "I can come again—if I may have the honor," said Owen, rising quickly. "Oh, there is time for a word," she said smiling. "There is something you wished to say to me, was there not? Something you did not care to say at the luncheon yesterday?" "Yes. Why do you hate the pretty American girl—Miss Marvin?" Owen was silent for a moment. "Why do you hate the little ensign, as you call another. I know you, I know you are to be trusted." "What do you mean?" "I mean that we can be of service to one another, in all likelihood, and that, therefore, we should be frank friends. You are in the bid of Pauline Martin, are you not?" "How did you find that out?" "We—who are engaged in the same business, find out many things. Now I wish to be rid of Ensign Summers." "Obviously?" "Yes, an international agent?" "Yes. And I offer you my aid and the services of a lieutenant in return for your aid to me and then it is that a bargain?" "They were seated on one of the upper decks, a lieutenant high above them. She leaned forward, her long, delicate hand touching his. A splendid jewel at her throat. "I am so glad you are here to hate him—and make love to him at the same time. Come, Mr. Owen, let us be married at once. For the first time in his life Owen felt himself mastered by the sheer fascination of a woman. "You are dead," he said breathlessly. "What am I to do?" "I will tell you tonight—at the ball."

More Merchants Each Year Join the Movement for Home Industry.

The observance of Home Industry Week started in earnest Monday. Several of the merchants say that inquiries began to come in that day for home industry goods and notes of these things are quickening. Some window displays were in place Monday and a number were put in Tuesday. The most noticeable thing about them is the special window displays in the majority of the store windows.

The Sterling Dairy Products company is not only a good example of intelligent compliance with the governor's proclamation. Invitations have been sent broadcast to everybody who wishes to visit the creamery to have a sample dish of ice cream "on the house." A journey through the plant is also a part of the program. All the school children have special invitation to come and learn how Sterling butter is made. These are in effect in relays, one group going at a time.

The window display at Gus' Book has the original proclamation issued by Governor Hughes and Governor Alexander and letters of commendation from Governor Wilchcombe of Oregon and Governor Lister of Washington. The New Year resolution signed by the club women of four states is shown on cards, each representing a club, so that the total represents several thousand women who have pledged themselves to buy western manufactured products. A sample page of true from the West Magazine and a sheet of the magazine as it comes from the press affords an educational insight to those who have never seen the workings of a printing office. A United States flag with the legend, "Made in the U. S. A.," forms a fitting background for the display.

The Twin Falls Grocery & Mercantile Co. has an appetizing display of Pierce pork and beans, Twin Peaks tomatoes, McDonald's chocolate, Queen Tama macaroni, all twin products.

Varney, the candy man, has a unique display of candies, chocolates, sugar, and it is claimed the sugar was made from beets grown at Hansen.

The First Premium bakery has bread and cake of Idaho wheat in good flour to show that Idaho wheat is good to eat.

Varney's grocery shows Crescent brand powder and Mapleine, both Seattle made.

The consolidated Wagon & Machine company has several machines and Hughes electric ranges as labor-saving devices for the housewife.

The Great Shoshone & Twin Falls Power house has the numerous electrical labor-saving devices, and a special treat will be offered Saturday afternoon, when some of the household appliances department of the Twin Falls high school will bake biscuits on a Copeman electric range, according to an all-cities-wide double on yeast, butter and Twin Falls country loney.

Edridge's has an attractive display of soap for his school boys and others. These are Seattle-manufacture. Auto robes from Provo, also form an attractive display.

The also clothes shop shows up-to-date made overalls.

MAD COYOTES IN NEVADA

Several Have Been Killed in State of Nevada.

Sheff Lamb, of Humboldt county, received a letter from Assemblyman Baker Tuesday stating that two rabid coyotes had been killed since Saturday at the old military post near McDermitt. The letter said that the situation was assuming a serious aspect around McDermitt and that the rabies seems to be spreading rapidly among coyotes and animals which have been bitten.

Senator Joseph, of Humboldt, says, the legislature has recognized the situation by increasing the bounty on coyotes to $3 apiece. The Nevada legislature also passed a bill to increase the bounty on these animals, but the governor vetoed the bill because it provided that the bounties were to be paid by the state instead of by the county.—Elko Free Press.
