Staunchness!!

Depreciation on Moon Cars is surprising! The reason not only because the more important parts are built to stand more than ordinary wear and strain, but because every part, including the unsean parts and those that are seldom called upon to stand sudden stresses and strains, is made with a wide margin of safety.

Moon drivers will tell you that upkeep, repairs and adjustments—even refueling expenses—are all exceedingly low. In other words, throughout all the car and including the "finishes," the lustrous lasts.

THE Big Moon Features Are:

- Power Steering, Stanchness, Heavy and Luxurious Price, Front Axle—beam, drop frame, special heat treated, Rear Axle—Pressed steel, coil springs, annular bearings through out, Springs—Front, coil springs, rear, quarter clips, leaf, over-riding, MOTOR—Commercial Moon—air-cooled, plant—cast in place, Pressed steel of pin, Endured years, Lubrication—oil and water, Honeycomb type radiator, self-removable, shell-water pump circulation, TRANSMISSION—Nickel-steel gears, mounted on sturdy bearings, Gear-Shift—Electric, hand-lever, electric accelerator, Electric wiring enclosed in steel conduit

PORTLAND MARKET REPORT.

Portland, April 15, 1915. The receipts for the week have been: Cattle, 1087; calves, 31; hogs, 1279; sheep, 244.

Cattle. Notwithstanding the comparatively heavy runs of cattle the last few weeks, the market has been only slightly lower to steady choice steers are still selling $7.50 to $7.75 with other grades at the usual differential.

Hogs. Demand for hogs seems to overrun the light supply of only fair grade offerings. A few very good loads touched the $7.95 spot Monday. Outlook steady.

Sheep. Shorn sheep are beginning to come in and the market for heavy grades is fat, are commanding very good prices. Special spring lambs are lower while other choice lambs are steady at $8.75 to $9.25, for full wools. Stearlings $1.25 less. Other sheep steady.

Table with columns for animal type and price. Includes items like 64 Steers, 121, 144, 165, 5 Cows, 21, 2, 1 Bull, 1 Heifer, 1 Stag, 1 Calf, 121 Hogs, 22, 20, 66, 166 Lamb, 9 Yearling, 7 Weth, 12 Ewes, 0. M. PLUMMER, Secy. & Treas., Portland Union Stockyards Co.

MAN KILLED BY BULL.

J. M. Royston, Prominent Resident of Fayette Valley, Meets Tragic Death.
Fruitland, April 17.—Attacked and thrown over the head of an angry bull, J. M. Royston was killed at the Fruitland ranch near here at 3 o'clock last night. He died within a few minutes after a veterinary medical assistance could reach him. A test to points in the abdomen and the covering of an artery by the horns of the infuriated animal caused the most instant death. Mr. Royston's last words were, "phone for a doctor," but it was too late. The tragedy has shocked the community. Few men were more prominent in this part of the state or held in higher esteem. He was a prominent swine breeder, a member of the local grand jury, identified with other organizations for the promotion of farming interests.
The tragedy occurred about midnight. Mr. Royston in company with his wife and daughter drove the stock into the barn. The bull was among them and nearly overtook the woman and Mr. Royston following before he turned and without a moment's warning attacked his unfortunate victim. Mr. Royston was thrown bodily on the horns of the beast and thrown over its head alighting face downward on the barn floor. The bull then went to his victim and started to continue his attack. Just this time Mr. Royston's wife and daughter had rushed to his rescue and with great force managed to keep the bull at bay until help could be summoned. The wound in the abdomen was instant and sufficient to cause death but the severance of the artery hastened it.
The deceased is survived by a large family including his widow and three daughters at home, Clara, Fannie and Josephine and two married daughters at Twin Falls, Mrs. Harry, Sart, Cora, Edna and Mrs. J. C. Smith at home, Laos and Charles; three who are residents of Twin Falls, Edward, Carl and Styber and John a resident of Prosser, Neb. Mr. Royston and his near relatives reside at Baltimore, Maryland. He was 65 years old at the time of his unfortunate death.

REFUSES TO LET DOWN BARS

Public Utilities Commission Denies Request of Rupert Company.
Believing that it would be flooded with applications for similar changes in the rates is to be applied for electric service corporations, it granted the request made, the public utilities commission has an order issued today denying the application of the Rupert Electric company for relief from the operation of certain provisions of general order No. 10. The commission did not deny the application for the change and for that reason and the added reason it did not wish to let down the bars by changing the provision of its order. It says that it cannot grant the request.
The order involved in No. 10 is that which relates to the conservation of power lines. In a request made by the Rupert Electric company for a change, the power company sets forth the reasons for its request and demanded the relief prayed for. In its order the commission says:
"This matter coming on informally for consideration upon written application of applicant, for relief from the operation of certain provisions of general order No. 10, of this commission, promulgating and establishing rules governing the construction of pole, wire and cable lines of telegraph, telegraph, telephone, electric power, and other circuits of similar character in the state of Idaho, and the commission having fully considered the matter and being fully advised in the premises, finds that a showing has been made that public convenience and safety will be injuriously affected by the granting of such relief, or that the welfare of the applicant company will be subserved to such an extent as will justify the granting of such relief. It is therefore ordered, That the application be and the same is hereby denied." (Capital News.)

CORRECT LINE OF SNAKE

Surveyor is Assigned to Twin Falls County.
James Spofford, of Boise, United States surveyor, has been assigned to make a survey of the meander line Snake River in Twin Falls County. He expects to leave the latter part of this week to commence the work. His survey is to permit an adjustment of the proper rights and identification and location of the old meander line in relation to the actual high water line of the river bank.

TRYING TO STOP FEVER

State Board of Health Has Secured Co-Operation of Army Surgeon.
According to word that has been received by Dr. O. B. Steiner, president of the Twin Falls Chamber of Commerce, the federal government will co-operate with Idaho in the process of eliminating spotted fever. Dr. Ralph Falk, secretary of the state board of health, from Boise to the effect that Assistant Surgeon Lincoln Payne of the medical department, has been assigned to the Twin Falls for several months to co-operate with the local authorities in investigating the cause and methods of spreading the disease to check its progress.
The government has been very active in its campaign against the fever and it is expected to eradicate it in every portion of the country, and the assignment of an army surgeon to this state is the result of a resolution passed by the state board of health at Boise a short time ago and transmitted to the department, asking for such cooperation. The government's response is a quick one and will materially aid in the work.—Pocatello Tribune.

BIG PRICE FOR WOOL

Idaho Flockmasters May Get 35c Per Pound for Clip.
Thirty-five cent wool.
That is the prediction of woolmen in touch with the market. They claim that the current price of wool has been sold the past two weeks for 30 cents; that the top price reached will probably be 35 cents and that the clip for Idaho, Utah and Wyoming is better this year than it has been for several years.
While local sheepmen claim that the expense of growing wool is increasing the high prices promised for this year means that growers in Idaho are now clipping cleaner wool than for some years past and that many of them are holding out for top notch prices which it appears they are going to get.—Capital News.

The Cadillac "Eight"

A Little More To Buy It A Little Less To Run It

If you were choosing between two homes would you buy one without a furnace, without electric lights, without modern plumbing and without a good foundation, when by spending $500 more you could be provided with all these comforts? No you would not.

If the Cadillac car was properly brought to your attention you would not hesitate to spend $500 or more for it than for some other motor car of mediocre construction which may be priced to you for $500 less than the Cadillac car.

If you will give this matter a little study you will not say hesitatingly, "Oh, I cannot afford a Cadillac better than any other make." The Cadillac car is the most economical car in the world.

You may make mental comparisons that these are not, for we are justified in them. We have always tried to hold ourselves within bounds—to be temperate—to place a check upon our own enthusiasms.

The strongest statements we have ever made about the Cadillac are mild by comparison with those which are echoing from one end of the world to the other.

The burden of testimony has passed from us to the finest citizenship in the state of Idaho. The men who drive the Cadillac cars are among the finest citizenship of the state. They are men who are high up in their respective activities. They have trained themselves to discriminate and weigh the problems of cost. They have bought Cadillac cars only after convincing themselves that it was the most economical and satisfactory thing for them to do.

Ask any of the owners mentioned in the opposite column of this advertisement their experience with the Cadillac.

"IDAHOME" THE FLOUR OF QUALITY

It has long been a well-established fact that Idahome leads, especially among the best bakers and in homes where quality is desired.
Idahome is made from the choicest wheat grown in Idaho and the result is the best flour on the market today.
Just try a sack and note the difference in your bread, cakes, rolls or anything you care to bake—it will be a delight to you.
Idahome is put up in twenty-four, fifty and one-hundred pound sacks and is very moderately priced when quality is considered. In fact it costs you no more than any other grade.
When ordering your groceries tomorrow be sure that you include a sack of Idahome flour—try it along with the brand you have been using, we're sure you'll be pleased—if not, return it to your grocer—Idahome is guaranteed.

At all good groceries.

More Cadillacs Sold in Idaho Already This Year Than of All Other High Grade Cars Combined.

Do things like this happen by luck? Do they come from chance? Is the buying public crazy?

OR Is this condition the result of proven superiority? Is it a confirmation of the old adage: "If you can write a better book or make a better mouse trap than your neighbor, the world will make a pathway to your door?"

Surely the Cadillac is a better motor car than its competitors on the judgment of the people would not be repeated so usually monthly upon the Cadillac.

TWO RANCH BARGAINS

160 acres 1 1/4 miles from town, 80 acres alfalfa, no better soil on this area, land easily watered, fair improvements, rented this year for $1250 cash rent, which goes to buyer if sold soon. Price $110 per acre. This ranch is positively worth $120 per acre. Good terms on future payments.

A NATURAL SHEEP RANCH

160 acres 5 miles from town, 80 acres alfalfa, deep rich soil, good smart house, price $60 per acre, easily worth $80. This is a natural sheep ranch, being well protected from west winds. Additional out-plying land, which is absolutely as good soil as there is in this county, can be had to make a ranch of 300 acres. If you are interested in sheep raising, investigate this proposition. It can be bought on very favorable terms.

long with your men tonight."

"No, Wrenzt, if the plan I gave you this morning fails, I leave it to you to invent a new one. You understand? I don't want any more of the time."

"I will attend to everything, sir."

"Goody and good luck."

"Goody, Mr. Owen," said Wrenzt, hanging up the receiver in the dingy back room of the lodging house where he and his well-paid companions had remained like prisoners since Owen first gave instructions to his new aide.

"Well, the wait's over, boys," said the leader. "Now for the work."

"This thing's a sell, a sell, a sell, a little trap for a lady and—$200 more for each of you."

"Yes, boss, but with him grinning and grunting their satisfaction. They were fairly well dressed now. Wrenzt himself presenting an almost impressive appearance in spite of his watery eyes and bilious features."

"As he left the lodging house at the head of his band he carried a suit case and a bag. Before Owen had halted Pauline into her car and bade her goody by the rail road station.

"As Pauline, in simple traveling costume, tripped to the gate, she was followed quickly by four men, three of whom seemed nervously anxious to crowd through without presenting their tickets.

"Once inside, the fourth man, Wrenzt turned upon his companions with an oath. "You fools, there's no need to hurry. Do you want to make a show of yourselves? Didn't Mr. Owen telephone her Pullman number and haven't we got berths in the same car?"

Pauline was standing in the aisle, the nearest to the door, when the men entered the car. She noted them with curiosity. There was nothing very sinister about them, but they were so obviously out of place—all except the heavy man with the hoisted jawls—that they drew attention where they least intended to.

Next moment, she had forgotten about them, and, sleepless with happiness, but dreaming many dreams, had lain down in her lighted berth to rest.

"What she did not know was her own story in the Compositum, which she had read and which she had read and read."

"In the light of the magic it had wrought, she was bent on studying every word in it, about the power of her own name, so to speak—in order that "her publishers" should not be disappointed in the forthcoming novel.

"She fell asleep in that, and it was daylight when she awoke. The train was in the station. Vexed with herself for permitting sleep to delay even her new mission, she dressed hurriedly and hurried off.

"She did not know that one of the four men who had aroused her curiosity the evening before had been even a liner traveler on the car, nor that he walked behind her as she left, nor that he was joined by the three others in the taxicab which followed hers.

When she left the cab at one of the fashionable hotels only one of the strangers followed her. This was Wrenzt. The others were driven away in the cab.

"Now, was at Pauline's elbow when she registered. As she followed the bell boy through the lobby, he stopped to the desk and noting the number of Pauline's room—No. 22—he signed his name under hers with a flourish.

"By the way," he said early to the clerk, "is that pot room of mine vacant the one I had last year—No. 24?"

The clerk smiled. "I'll see," he said. "I had forgotten it was your pot room. Can't remember everybody."

"Oh, I was just here a few days," said Wrenzt. "I remember you."

"Yes, sir, twenty-four is yours, said the clerk. "Wrenzt took a look at the counter to make a purchase. He did not wish to follow Pauline so closely that she might know he had taken the room next to hers.

The clerk said that he had bought a new pair of shoes and had had them made by a shoemaker who had accompanied Mr. Wrenzt from New York.

"So great was Pauline's eagerness to complete her fascinating errand that she waited only long enough to change her dress and do her hair before setting out to call on Messrs. Carson & Brown. As she left her room, she heard men's low voices in the one adjoining and noticed that the door was ajar, but no thought of suspicion came to her.

She was considerably provoked by the ignorance of the hotel clerk, who had inspired her with the idea of calling on Carson & Brown. As she left her room, she heard men's low voices in the one adjoining and noticed that the door was ajar, but no thought of suspicion came to her.

their task and retired to their room when a maid passed by.

In a moment they were out again. Wrenzt passed the number plate of 24 to his assistant, who handed back the plate to the "Tugboat" who had fastened on the wrong door. The water-hes were called back.

"Now," said Wrenzt, "it is only a matter of waiting."

Pauline's cab passed out of the central city into the region of factories.

"This looks like the section where the print shops are in New York," she said confidently to herself.

But the driver kept on into streets of dingy, ancient, narrow streets crowded with unkempt children and men with push-carts. He turned to Pauline and said:

"Are you sure you got the right address of these publishers, miss? The next street is Weston, and it don't look any good."

She drew the letter from her handbag and showed it to him.

"Well, that's the queerest thing I know," said the driver, "and the lettered which Owen had printed. I've been driving cabs here and for twenty years, and I never heard of no such people or no such place."

"Well, at least go around the corner and see, Miss. My new firm that isn't listed as yet, says Pauline."

The driver swung the cab into a street even more bleak and bedraggled, architecturally and humanly than the one they had just traversed. He stopped and got out. Pauline followed him. A bear-eyed man, slouching on a stool, was leaning against the wall as she addressed him.

"There ain't no No. 9 Weston street, he answered. "It was by over there the pointed across the street but it's burnt down."

Pauline's face fell. "Well, this is CERTAINLY tight," she exclaimed. "Of course it isn't Weston street; it's Weston place, as the letter says."

"But my 'City Guide' ain't got no such place in it, miss," answered the chauffeur.

"Well, I will go back to the hotel," she said dejectedly.

She was on the verge of tears as she left the elevator and started for her room. She had looked through all the directories and street guides and knew at last that she had been the victim of a cruel hoax. All her little joys and pride of yesterday had turned to humiliation and grief. She wanted to be alone—and had a good cry.

She was pulled for a moment as the door key in her hand slipped and she planned the numbers of the door. She had been almost sure that No. 22 was the left hand door, but she had been so sure of her impressions.

She started to place the key in the lock of the right-hand door.

Like a flash it opened inward and two pairs of misty hands gripped her. Her cry was stifled by a hand over her mouth. She was dragged into the drawn over her eyes, another over her mouth and cruel heavy hands began to blind her limbs.

As she listened to the rough voices of the men, the mystery of the "Carson Brown" letter was utterly cleared away.

"That was easy," commented Wrenzt.

"Easier than the rest of the work will be," said one of the men.

"Shall we leave her on the floor, boss?" asked another.

"Yes, of course."

"Then I'll put a pillow under her head."

"Pillow? Why a pillow? Since when did you become tender hearted, Rocco?"

Rocco growled, but he made no reply.

"You don't need any pillow, a Pullman berth on the way to heaven, had you?"

The laugh, which followed, brought a rap on the floor. For a instant the ruffians looked at each other in alarm. There was no talking whether to open

That door would be to face drawn revolver of detectives or only the eyes of a belly. There was nothing to do but to answer, however, Wrenzt moved to the door. "Who is it?" he asked. "Your trunk, sir."

"You are the porter?" "Well, you can leave the trunk at the door. I am too busy to be interrupted just now. But here—"

"Take them off! Why, she will scream," said one of the bandits. "That will do little harm," replied Wrenzt, "but you may choke her to death in the effort."

"Why not her?" asked the oldest of the ruffians. "Didn't Mr. Wrenzt say that?" "Hush, you mouth-breathing rascal," Wrenzt fairly screamed. "Are you going to mention that name here?"

"Who is it?" he asked. "Your trunk, sir." "You are the porter?" "Well, you can leave the trunk at the door. I am too busy to be interrupted just now. But here—"

Pauline sprang by terror as she realized that Wrenzt was upon her trail, sped like a whirl through the park paths. She stopped to listen. She could hear the heavy footfalls of her pursuer close behind. She could hear the shouting from afar off. She made no sound, she made no sound of any voice but the voice of the human man who had planned her death was welcome to her ears.

"Stop! Stop! Stop!" she cried, but not too steeply to prevent her descending. From her position, the lines of crevice behind her, from the strange group of hunters who were watching her movements.

"Stop and come back! She heard a menacing voice behind her. She knew the voice too well, it was that of the leader of her captors. She sped on faster, she crept, she scrambled, she climbed the cliff.

The certificate of nomination of Geo. P. Harrison as a candidate for mayor is a legal document and has full legal effect for the reasons set forth in the opinion of the court.

The certificates of nomination of Stuart H. Taylor for City Clerk, W. L. Nixon, candidate for the office of City Treasurer, and M. J. Smith, candidate for the office of Police Judge, and of W. A. PERILS OF PAULINE

Gradually, however, her strength returned. Her mind recovered from the dazing experience of the last few hours. She began to adjust her feet and to plan her further flight.

As she moved toward the canyon to retrace the steps of her flight, she instinctively she turned.

One glance behind her and every fibre of her body seemed to turn to stone. For there before her, in the lower part of the canyon, she saw the monster.

Wreath was gleaming as he stood on the watch over Pauline's hiding place. His little white arms were outstretched as if to grasp her.

Pauline was a young woman who had escaped from it, paused at the sound of heavy footsteps. A guttural, snarling sound—a sound hardly human—accompanied the footsteps. He had reached the bottom of the cliff a half mile from where Pauline had found her perilous shelter.

Blount blew his police whistle and sounded blast after blast. He started up the cliff, but came back at the sound of bellowing footsteps and calls. The hunters from the railroad yards had heard the signal.

Blount pointed up the cliff again to where the monster was, and had dragged Pauline over the lowest ledge.

The men stood spell-bound with awe. "A girl!" gasped one of them. "She's as good as dead. If she isn't dead now, she just killed our foreman back in the yards and ran away."

"she's not dead. Look!" At the top of the cliff they saw Pauline. "Form sudden!" she had been there. The monster released its hold upon her to make sure of its footing on the perilous ledge. Now she stood, a frail girl, awaiting the monster, actually assailing the monster, more mightily than a dozen men.

Blount looked and saw the monster climbing ponderously the trunk of a large tree, the branches of which overhung the precipice. He climbed cautiously. He stopped again. He saw the gorilla crawling out upon one of the struts, overhanging the branches. The strange beast brain had conceived a death for Pauline more terrible than any Raymond Owen had ever plotted.

Blount drew his revolver. He was not more than a hundred feet below the monster when he saw the chance of hitting her against the chance of saving her. He muttered to himself. He fired.

With a great throb of joy in his heart, the gallant young fellow saw the beast turn, and leaving Pauline with her arms around the limb, her eyes shut against the dizzy depths below, move back and scramble down the cliff. Blount reached the ground. The beast charged. Blount fired again. Again the gorilla, mangled, bit at its wounded arm. But it came on. It seemed to have a dozen lives vitiated in the gross body.

Blount backed away from the cliff but the monster was upon him. It blushed him, buried him in the ground, dragged him back to the dizzy precipice.

Blount was on the cliff-top as he saw a dozen lives vitiated in the gross body. Blount backed away from the cliff but the monster was upon him. It blushed him, buried him in the ground, dragged him back to the dizzy precipice.
