COUNTIES MUST ACT PROMPTLY

Note of Warning From State Highway Commission.

Counties in this state wishing to do state highway construction work on those portions of the state highway system within their respective counties should make the fact known immediately to the state highway commission and secure the appointment to which they are entitled, for next week the balance of the fund may be expended and their position for them will be different. The state highway commission now in session with the secretary of state, and which lot contracts taking up of the funds available and desires to have the respective counties apply for it so that construction work can be done this year.

The commission last three contracts today for highway construction in various parts of the state for which bids were submitted. The Idaho construction work is being done under contract for construction of that portion of the state highway from American Falls east to the Fort Hall Indian reservation and another portion from Bannock county from Lind east to the Bannock-Bear Lake county line. The third contract went to C. S. Combs and for construction of a portion of the state highway from American Falls west to the Power-Cassia county line.

The state treasurer recently disposed of the $200,000 bond issue, and now has the money "raised" from its sale. It was approved by the state highway commission together with other funds among the respective counties. Under the terms of the law to secure their share of the appropriation counties must raise two-thirds of the cost of construction of the highway in their boundaries and the state raises the other one-third. This furnishes the total cost of construction work and makes construction possible.

The commission having a limited appropriation, is anxious for the counties to make use of it. CAPITAL NEWS.

STRAY BULLET HITS FARMER

Fred Lindauer, of Rupert, Victim of Peculiar Accident.

Fred Lindauer was the victim of a peculiar accident last Saturday evening about 10 o'clock. He was driving along along in front of the State and Stacey place going east, when a 22 calibre bullet entered his right shoulder. He was taken to the hospital at Twin Falls, where X-ray pictures were taken, and they failed to show the bullet.

The wound is swelling nicely and while it is very painful, the victim is able to move around now, but with some difficulty. It is not thought that the bullet was intended for Mr. Lindauer, but that it is simply another of the results of the "spotted fever" epidemic.

SALMON SETTLERS FIGHT CHOLERA

Dr. W. A. Sullivan Organizes District to Prevent Disease.

TRACT HAS BEEN FORMED INTO DISTRICTS

Work Will be in Charge of a Leader and Surveyor in Each of the Districts.

An Anti-Hog Cholera organization has just been organized by the settlers within the Salmon River tract. Meetings were held at various points within the tract, and a market was fully explained by Dr. W. A. Sullivan, inspector in charge of hog cholera control work.

At their meetings a leader for all school districts was selected and also a surveyor for every four sections, within each school district. They also selected a committee to make a canvass of the sections assigned to them and have a survey card properly filled out by every occupant of a farm within the territory. The surveyor was instructed by Dr. Sullivan to fully explain to every occupant of a farm, at the time the card was filled out, what the Bureau of Animal Industry desires every farmer to fill out a card and same will be kept on file at the government office at Twin Falls. Surveyors were further instructed to inform all farmers that the government work was "no charge" expense "whenever" and to promptly report hog cholera if same appeared in the hog on their premises, so that a prompt investigation could be made by government veterinarians and free serum administered if cholera is found. A prompt report will greatly reduce the loss of stock and greatly prevent the spread of the disease to neighboring herds.

WANDERS FOR EIGHT YEARS

Loss of Memory Put John Howell in Sad Plight.

SHERIFF KENDALL FINDS HOWELL AT HOUSE CREEK

History of Long Journey From Portland a Mystery. Evidently Seeking His Twin Falls Relatives.

While Sheriff Frank Kendall was at House Creek the first of the week on official business he learned that a man was wandering around that part of the county in a demented condition. The sheriff found the man and it could be seen that his mind was not entirely right. His hair was long and his beard was in an unkempt condition. His clothes were nothing but rags. Mr. Kendall brought him to this city and he gave his name as John Howell and that he was a brother-in-law of Thomas Newbery, of Kimberly. Mr. Howell left Twin Falls about eight years ago with a sister for Portland, Ore. and disappeared from the city and that was the last heard of him until found by Sheriff Kendall Tuesday. He was taken to the home of Mr. Newbery at Kimberly, where it is thought that with medical treatment, he will soon be himself again. He was around the House Creek country he lived on fish and what rabbits he could kill.

A WISE MOVE

Mayor-elect B. M. Sweezy has stated in emphatic terms that he has no intention of disturbing the fire department of the city.

He stated that the fire department was a strictly business administration and that to replace thoroughly efficient men trained in the work with green firemen might result in disaster to the people of the city in a big fire.

For this reason there will be no change. The Times believes that Mr. Sweezy is taking a broad gauge view of the matter and should be commended for taking the fire department out of politics.

SHOULD BE GOOD LOSERS

The city election probably did not go to the satisfaction of all citizens and there may be some "sore spots" among the disappointed. Nevertheless, every man, whether elected or defeated, is still a citizen of Twin Falls and a part of its activities and government.

Not a single effort should be made to evade responsibility for a certain part in the success of the city's affairs.

Neither should any objections be thrown in the way of those who will take over the reins of government next week, because any partisan feeling, Twin Falls first, last and all the time, should be the aim of every loyal citizen.

For no matter who is in charge of the municipal affairs, each one has to bear his part in the expense and to that extent interested in making Twin Falls forge to the front. To oppose measures for public good because of malice is unworthy. There are issues coming up that will take intelligent co-operation on the part of all good citizens with the city council and the mayor. Let each do his part in the work. Twin Falls will be the home of a good many of us for years. We should do our part toward making it a good home for all by mutual toleration of the inherent rights of all to a voice in the government. Both sides in the recent election should be able to subscribe to such a creed.

GROWING GERMAN BITTERNESS AGAINST AMERICA

The hate for England, felt by the whole German nation, is spreading, we are told, and the American people will soon be as cordially disliked as are the citizens of these countries actually in arms against the Fatherland.

For some months past the German papers have been showing considerable irritation over the policy of our government, and the export of munitions of war is characterized as a breach of neutrality, while the tone of recent notes sent from Washington to London has roused the German press to set out very pointedly their views upon the President's and Mr. Bryan's sentiments. The attitude of the newspapers has been supported, we are told, by every action of the general public, and finally culminates in a formal note from Berlin to Washington protesting against our export of munitions of war, complaining that we tamely submitted to the blockading policy of the allies and have been "regimes in our efforts to supply Germany with foodstuffs. Newspaper comment on our policy has been more vigorous than polite, and it is worthy of opinion that such forcible expression of opinion is by no means limited to sensational or obscure journals, as may be seen when such a powerful organ as the world-renowned Koloische Zeitung gives voice to the following:

"Mr. Bryan has made himself the mouthpiece of the brutal British standpoint, which is based on force."

"A * * * American neutrality is only a thin veil, behind which is concealed eagerness to do England a good turn. Knowing this, we will be guided by our knowledge. If America respects brute force only, then we will give full play to brute force."

Another influential paper, the Frankfurter Zeitung, is enraged at the "want of backbone" shown by Washington, and remarks:

"President Wilson's note to England does not deserve the name of a protest. It is quite feeble, like his entire policy toward England as far as has been. The Washington recipe for relations with England is to wash her for but not to wet her. Quitting, however, appears to have quite another recipe for Germany."

Count von Reventlow, in the Berlin Deutsche Tageszeitung, suggests that the time will come when Germany will find reprisals on America:

"Some of the British States will find herself at war with Japan, when the repetition of the exportation of arms, by states that would then be in the position of neutrals will be very inconvenient for America."

Similar sentiments are expressed by the Berlin Vossische Zeitung, which ends a long article, gradually growing more emphatic in tone by remarking: "It is a matter of complete indifference to us whether America departs from strict neutrality or not."

It is significant, however, that these and similar articles in the German press have produced a tendency in the Fatherland to make the disapproval of American policies a personal matter. This was first shown when the American tern sent to the Christiania ship were retained by the committee in Saxony. This action was followed by the Dortmund-Zeitung, which says:

"To be sure, we do not hold the doll-sending babies of America responsible for the shabby conduct of their hypocritical fatherland. But we do blame the fathers, uncles and big brothers of the charming little donors. They make their smart business deals at the expense of the life and health of our brothers and sons. They think, these smart business men, that they have done their duty before heaven if, out of the millions made in this traffic in blood, they pass a few thousands through the hands of their rascals into those of the orphans of German men managed by American guns."

A pointed semi-official communication appeared recently in the Koloische Zeitung pointing out how American citizens had been insulted on the street and in restaurants and warning the people to cease from such demonstration. It continues:

"As for Americans who are living in Germany we may be convinced that they are becoming more and more so the constantly increasing number of Americans, both here and in America, who are endeavoring to strengthen the opposition to the delivery of munitions of war to our enemies."

The London Daily Mail prints an interview with an American banker who has left Berlin after many years' residence, who intimates that Americans are becoming personally more and more unpopular here.

"There is genuine uneasiness in the large American colonies in Berlin, Hamburg, Dresden, Munich, and other German cities, in consequence of the undoubtedly rising tide of popular ill-will against the Washington government."

"A few weeks ago the newspapers, including the government controlled Leipziger Zeitung and Mittellandische Zeitung, systematic campaign of popular agitation against the money-grabbing Yankee. The campaign was apparently choked by the censor for the newspapers attacks ceased as suddenly as they began, but the abuse in private increased correspondingly. Americans nowadays can hardly meet German friends without being targets for the most violent tirades."

"The Germans are convinced that the allies are holding out because America is furnishing them with shot and shell. Whenever the big push sets in and the Germans begin to realize, as I think they will have to, that the game is up, I believe America will get the lion's share of the blame. They will say: 'You did it, we had them licked till you sending Yankees came along and insisted on helping them.' Then it will be 'Got strafte America.'" - Literary Digest.

TALKS ON THRIFT

No. 1 - A PRACTICAL PROFIT SAVING PLAN

"Spend your money after you have earned it, never before." - Dr. Lyman Abbott.

One of the large Minneapolis flour-milling companies early in the winter gave every one of its 700 employees a check for $25 with instructions to take it to a savings bank and deposit it, the check being valueless otherwise.

The object of these gifts was to foster thrift among the employees. In order that the saving habit, once started by the opening of the account, may be kept up, an additional incentive was made part of their earnings has been made to the company's benefit.

This is embodied in a letter which reads in part as follows:

"If you continue in our employ until November 1, 1915, bring your savings bank book to us. We will then give you a check for half the net increase in your bank balance in excess of the original $25.

"In other words, if your bank book shows $45 on deposit November 1, 1915, we will add $10 to your savings. If

THE PERILS OF PAULINE

Written By Charles Goddard

SYNOPSIS

Stanford Marvin, wealthy manufacturer of automobiles, has won himself out by overwork. His son Harry, who has adopted the name Pauline, loves each other, but she wants to see two years of thrilling adventures before marrying. Her reason is that she is ambitious to be a writer. Old Mr. Marvin asks to see what she has written. While Pauline and Harry are in search of a magazine containing her first story, Mr. Marvin opens the case of a mummy just received from Egypt. Raymond Owen, his recently private secretary, helps lift off the front of the case, but leaves old Mr. Marvin to remove the mummy's bandages alone. Harry, during a fatalizing attack, sees the half-exposed mummy come to life. Step out of her case, take a bracelet from her wrist and try to force it into his hands, while her lips reveal a strange message from the remote past. Brought to consciousness by Harry and Pauline, the old man believes it all a dream, until, later, he finds the identical bracelet on the mummy's skeleton wrist. He promises Pauline one year to see life and places her in the guardianship of Owen. A fatal heart attack gives him just time to write on the doctor's prescription pad very brief and simple will. Then the doctor-in-law returns, and that he would have permanent charge of Pauline's vast estate if something should happen to her before she marries. Hicks, a race-track man, and Owen conspire to kill Pauline. The mummy chapters have dealt with the preceding efforts of the two to accomplish this. In the "last installment" Pauline overhears Mlle De Longnon, an international spy, plotting to capture Summers, of the United States Navy, has invented. Pauline does not know, however, that the conspirators have decided to order Summers' yacht, also a spy, to sink the submarine which the design commands after stealing and carrying the coveted plans. Pauline decides to go down in the submarine with Summers to foil the theft. Her miraculous rescue by being blown out through the torpedo tube was told last week.

In the chapter which precedes today's, Pauline just misses death in one of the most cruel and fantastic plots which has yet been laid for her. She escapes from the villainous Wrentham when their speeding motor car is wrecked only to fall into the clutches of a ferocious gorilla which has escaped from a circus menagerie. The boat carries her to the top of a cliff and she is finally saved from the most horrible of fates by the bravery of a helmsman.

CHAPTER XII

"By George, I believe we'd better go after her. She's been out of sight for an hour."

Harry Marvin was seriously pacing the deck of the yacht as it lay at anchor in the bay. He had just lowered his glasses for the fiftieth time since Pauline's departure in the motorboat and had turned to Owen with a look of alarm.

"I really don't believe that there is any cause for worry," Mr. Marvin said, the secretary blandly.

"No cause to worry with a beautiful girl who can't even handle a motorboat out alone in one of the most powerful craft ever built? I think there is cause."

"She is very capable in all such matters," she handles an automobile perfectly."

"Perfectly reckless," volleys Harry, "believe I'll order the anchor up and go after her."

"But in that way we are more likely to lose track of her than by staying here."

"That's so," Harry admitted. "But I wouldn't like to know what is keeping her from coming back. Why let's go out time for us to sail."

"You didn't want to let her go out alone in the motorboat, so now she is going to worry you for revenge."

"There go the battleships," said Harry, as the far boom of a heavy gun announced the beginning of the target practice.

The sail that Pauline had sighted from the sinking motorboat and toward which she now strove desperately, was not a sail as she discovered on closer view. It was a great white sheet of canvas stretched between two masts and uprights that were fixed on an old canal boat. Pauline was trying to puzzle out the meaning of the strange craft and its peculiar rig when suddenly her attention was gripped with a praver problem.

The engine of the motorboat had stopped.

The water which now half-filled the little vessel had found its way at last through the protection walls around the motor. Without propulsion, the boat of the heavy gun was drifting and, within a hundred feet of the goal she sought Pauline felt herself baffled anew.

Pauline seized an oar and piled it with all her strength. She managed to swing the boat again, and, standing almost unaided, she was battling now on one side, now on the other, she fought on toward the sheeted hulk.

It was only a question of time now. The water continued to flow through the subtle leak that Raymond Owen had cut in the bottom of the boat. Pauline could feel the rise of the water; she could feel the increasing weight of the craft as the paddling became more and more difficult.

On the seat behind her with his paws still set patiently upon the new useless wheel, the little bull terrier waited and watched without a whimper.

"It is a canal boat," Pauline said to herself, as she forced the sinking boat about the stern of the hulk. "And if anchored, there are the chains. I wonder what in the world it is for."

She began to call again, hoping that there would be some answer from the vessel; but no answer came. There was not the slightest sign of life on the dock or in the low-set cabin.

A sudden galling groan and Pauline felt the motorboat quiver from stem to stern.

Two more desperate paddle strokes and she was within reach of the fore-chains of the hulk. She stepped back caught Cyrus under her arm and then, as if waiting for the hulk to be sucked into the sea from beneath her feet, she grasped the chains and swung herself to the side of the mysterious barge.

In spite of the weird loneliness, the puzzling surroundings, the fearful unexplained facts of the case, she reached the low deck with a prayer of thanks on her lips. "Here was safety at least for a time. Here were solid planks under her feet. There was probably a kind of shelter if need be. She moved toward the door of the cabin to investigate. Cyrus ran ahead of her, sniffing suspiciously at every corner. But he made no sign of discovery, and Pauline stepped down the rickety steps into the dim cabin without fear.

There was not a sign of human habitation; save a small pine table, two tottering chairs and the wreck of an old desk—furnishings so weak from age and wear that seemed to have been abandoned as part of the useless hulk.

But was it abandoned? Was it useless? Pauline asked herself again as she explored a small cupboard in the wall. Surely there must be some object in the anchoring of even such a battered ruin of a ship. Surely some one must have engaged up the strange sail as a sort of signal. And that someone—Pauline trusted and prayed—would come and find her and take her back to Harry.

She sat down on one of the wobbly chairs and began to write the "water" from the bottom of the desk. Cyrus came back from his tour of inspection apparently satisfied that all was safe. He sat before Pauline and so reported with his confident eyes.

"Oh, you precious puppy! What would I do now if you were not with me?" cried Pauline, suddenly catching him in her arms.

He jerked joyously squirming, he tore himself free and dashed out of the cabin whining wildly.

Pauline, too, had felt and heard strange things. The hulk had suddenly trembled with a peculiar fore-and-aft motion, and the sea, as if from the seaward side, sounded the mighty splash of some huge missile flung into the waves.

Pauline breathlessly followed Cyrus to the dock. She found the dog standing under it and barking. Through the cloth there was a hole as large around as the body of a man. Pauline gazed in wonder but her bewilderment was brief. Before she had time to search for the cause of the noise, the motorboat was clearly and alarmingly searched for her.

There was a weird whirling sound, a crash, a thump, a thump, a thump, bulk over on its side, and the air splattered by the little cabin was torn to shreds by a hail of projectiles. The huge message of destruction drove its way through the outer side of the cabin below the water line. The distant "boom" of the gun followed.

"There was no longer any doubt in the mind of Pauline. All flashed clearly now the meaning of the young girl's fate. She had seen the strand of a fying a barge for a naval target. What a fool she had been not to have thought of that the moment she saw the sail! But what else could she have done but seek refuge here anyway? There was no other place, there was only this place. The chances, the impossibilities of exchanging only form of death for another of finding new peril where she had hoped to have found shelter and ultimate rescue—that harrowed her now.

AN OPEN LETTER

To the House Wife:

How many retail butchers try to educate their customers? How many are afraid to speak their minds?—Today when the high cost of living is the continual cry—does the housewife ever stop to figure that she could reduce this cost? Unquestionably she could, with a small effort—for instance, if she would do her marketing personally, see what she is getting and wherefrom comes from; whether the market is clean, odorless and otherwise attractive, and get meats of a superior class from which the cheaper cuts are possessed of all the nutritive qualities that the more expensive cuts possess.

In our first class hotels and cafes, where we go for an occasional dinner, do we select porterhouse steak, prime roast, or plain roast lamb? No—we select from the menu dinner of a foreign name—a la this or that—and while they are really delicious, we never stop to realize that they come from a portion of the animal seldom used in the home.

These large hotels and restaurants do not pay their chefs fancy salaries for simply roasting beef or lamb, or boiling them, any cook can do that, but because of their ability to take the cheaper cuts of meat and compound them into tempting and delicious dishes. If the housewife understood better the real value of the cheaper cuts of meats, there would be less talk about the high prices.

Prices are bound to be high as long as the demand is for the choice cuts in steaks and roasts, while the balance of the carcass practically goes begging.

If the market man could have the privilege of meeting the customer and explaining the different cuts of meat, a big saving could be made for both.

Here are three thoughts worth while:

FIRST—Economy does not mean vulgarity.

SECOND—Economy does not mean the surrender of the nutritive elements of the food for nutrition is fundamental and essential. And last but not least—that the cheaper cuts have in them all the nutritive qualities that the more expensive cuts possess.

THE FOLLOWING PRICES WILL MAKE AN ATTRACTIVE SAVING IN YOUR MEAT BILL AND ARE WORTH YOUR CAREFUL CONSIDERATION.

THE BIG ANIMAL CIRCUS

Well Known Attraction Has All of the Circus Features With Animals.
 The M. G. Barnes Big 3-act Wild Animal Circus will exhibit in Twin Falls on Wednesday, May 12th, giving performance at 2 and 8 p. m.
 Much emphasis is put on the originality and genuine merit of this big circus. There is all the pomp and splendor of the circuses we have known in the past. All the glittering tinsel, sawdust rings, inspiring music and grand entrance of stately horses, ponies, elephants, performance and clowns. Peanut and pink lemonade vendors cry their wares and add to the general good spirit; yet when the performance starts, one instantly recognizes a wide departure from the conventional, stereotyped routine which has prevailed since the earliest days of fabled entertainment.
 Instead of the usual, one sees the very unusual in the Barnes program. The principal acts are done by cultured wild and domestic animals in two rings and a big steel-barred arena. These animal actors number 500 and are trained to an amazing degree of proficiency. Such vim and dash do they put into their work that not a dull moment is experienced from the grand cavalcade entry into the final group of man-eating lions are driven to their cages.
 There are acrobats, jugglers, aerial performers, high divers, bare back riders and all other forms of circus entertainment, but instead of people appearing in the acts, wild and domestic animals take their places. Lions, leopards, pumas and bears ride galloping horses; sea lions juggle balls and other articles, dogs and monkey jump from the top of the tent into nets; elephants act as clowns and do many other comical things; high school horses and beautiful ponies appear in brilliant dances and military drills, in fact almost every species of animal is shown as an actor.

 Twenty-four man-eating lions are introduced in one act, the most sensational animal act ever seen. Sixty tigers, leopards, pumas, jaguars and bears are presented by a roster of young women trainers.
 A great array of clean, clever comedy permeates the entire program, provided by fifty comedy elephants, dogs, ponies, monkeys, ponies, zebras and danger, dynamite—mules.
 Glittering mile long street parade in which four bands take part is presented to the public at 10:30.

Big Merger Planned

 and the Electric Bond & Share company to the Idaho public utilities commission is for Mr. Dahl to go before the commission and give a detailed explanation of the proposed merger.
 Mr. Dahl takes the stand on Monday he will present the reasons for the proposed merger and will tell of the causes leading up to the unprofitable operations of many power companies in Idaho, which is the basis for the present merger. Mr. Hawley advised him to tell everything he knew, including the Idaho-Oregon Light & Power company affair, wherein the bondholders are attempting to block the merger and they are paid in full for their investments.
 In order to keep the merger companies from being designated as a part of the "power trust" a plan was evolved whereby the Electric Bond & Share company or the National Securities company would not be known in the Idaho merger and would not operate the merged companies as far as possible from the Electric Bond & Share plan was to have L. E. Nunne form an operating company, of which he was to be president and general manager. This company was to be the National Securities company in Idaho. After threshing out the matter for two days the representatives of the power companies present at the Hotel Utah decided that the plan would not be feasible in that it would be a matter of common knowledge that the National Securities company was behind the merger and for the further reason that the operating expenses and fixed charges of a second operating company doing business for the National Securities company would cut into the profits of the merger.
 The desk of the officers and attorneys of the National Securities company refused to sanction the formation of a new operating company and decided to place all the companies involved in the merger under the Electric Bond & Share.
 Incidentally there was some trouble over the selection of an attorney to guide the merger before the public utilities commission. Mr. McClain has been attorney for the Electric Bond & Share company for a number of years, insisted that he be retained and Mr. Nunne insisted that Mr. Hawley be retained. After a lengthy discussion it was agreed that both attorneys should appear before the Idaho public utilities commission in the hearing which begins tomorrow.

 During the time that Mr. Dahl was at the Hotel Utah, Mr. Hawley explained to him his rights before the commission and also went into the evidence which is to be adduced and pointed out the part which would be immaterial. It was expected that Mr. Dahl will be on the witness stand for two days.
 Plan to Buy All.
 The National Securities company is prepared according to statements made by Mr. Hawley and other members of the power conference, to purchase all the power companies which are now in the hands of receivers and all the power companies which are now on a self-sustaining basis. The purchase of the Idaho-Oregon will give the Electric Bond & Share the Snake River Ox-bow project, which it is said will, when completed, develop the greatest amount of power of any sight in the United States at the total cost.
 The details of the merger have been completed, said Mr. Hawley. We will give Idaho public utilities commission every bit of evidence we have and when we are through I believe that the merger of these companies will be sanctioned and justified. We met in Salt Lake as it was more convenient for all concerned to come here.
 Mr. Dahl will be the first witness to be examined before the commission and will tell all about the proposed merger. About $1,000,000 to be involved, and if we are permitted to put the deal through Idaho will have cheap power for irrigation purposes. The prime reason for the merger is that operating expenses can be cut and the farmers supplied with power for pumping purposes at cheap rates.

Target No. 1 seems dead, sir. Shall we take up a new position and open on No. 2?" asked Lieutenant Selwyn, addressing the commander on the forward deck of the flagship. "How many hits on No. 1?" asked the shell-blasted admiral. "Four out of four, sir—two on the target and two in the hull," Selwyn reported. "Apparently she is straggling. The target is hanging by one mast. It wouldn't register a hit if we made it." "Very well, take on No. 6." "Just a moment, sir," said Selwyn. "I'm puzzled. He was still holding the glasses to his eyes but was scanning not the target but the waves between the battleship and target. He would seem to be looking for a mine. Here there is something of someone swimming in that sea." The admiral took the glasses. "See anything?" he asked at the young officer. "I suppose you'll have us putting a boat over to rescue a porpoise from drowning one of these days." "No, but—" "Um—yes, by George, there is something. It looks like what is it anyway? It doesn't swim like a man?" "Shall we see, sir?" "By all means." "The admiral," said Selwyn's flagman, voice subdued to a command. "In addition a ship's boat was being lowered with a full crew." "I thought the water the admiral reached the raft above them. 'I've found out what it is,' he called down with a laugh. 'It's a dog.'" "Should we come back, sir," he asked Selwyn. "No. I want to save the dog, and I want to find out what it's got in its mouth." The boat shot away from the side of the ship toward the tossing white dog among the waves that marked the weakening progress of little Cyrus. As the boat drew up to him, the strong hands of Selwyn reached down and plucked the exhausted child quivering from the water. But Selwyn was not Harry. And Cyrus had been told to take the paper to Harry. He growled as the lieutenant tried to pull the drenched one from the sea. "You'll have to hold him, even if he bites a couple of us," Selwyn to the men nearest him. "We've got to see this note." The sailors gripped the struggling Cyrus, body and head, while Selwyn forced open the snapping jaws. Cyrus fought to the last, but there was not enough strength left in him to prevent his defeat. "A wistful glance at the paper and Selwyn muttered an oath in his exultation. "Make for that wrecked target over there—No. 1," he shouted. "Put all you have into it. There's a girl on board the hulk and she's sinking." As the men straggled eagerly on the sea and the drenched child through the waves, Selwyn stood up with the signal flags and wig-wagged to the waiting admiral on the deck of the battleship in the straits. There a man whose scarred forehead had ever received a sea. "Pauline crept back to the cabin after dispatching Cyrus in his desperate errand. No more shots fell near the target, but the admiral's orders were not instantly. A great loneliness appalled her heart. She was even remorseful now for having sent the dog to an almost certain death in its lowly and narrow. How could that they body but Pauline the sea for miles? It seemed to her that she had sent the dog to a certain death, but she had not. (Continued on page 7.)

The Studebaker "Six"

If you were Deaf and could not hear—

If you were Blind and could not see—

If you were Nerveless and could not feel—

If you Lacked Judgement and could not foresee—

...you were blind and could not hear the praise which comes from the men and women who have bought new "Sixes" after having driven "Fours."

If you could not hear the thundering noises of a "four" cylinder motor and could not see the contrast it to the silent "six" with its lower gears overlapping so completely that they melt and merge into another.

If you could not read the silent Studebaker "Six" with its velvet motor and contrast it with the "four" cylinder cars costing about the same price—yet you could not make a mistake and pay nearly the price of a Studebaker "Six" for a "four" cylinder car of some other make.

The luxuries of motoring which distinguish the "Six" from the "four" justify its superiority of a "Six."

The reputation which you experience when riding in a Studebaker "Six" tends to make you forget the presence of the motor. It is a sense of assurance and of being borne along by some means other than mechanical.

If you were blind and could not read the papers and magazines—if you could not through the means assure yourself that the "Six" had entirely supplanted the "four" cylinder type of construction in automobiles costing $1500.00 or more, you might unduly hesitatingly decide to buy a "four" and pay close to $1500.00 for it.

There are few if any four cylinder cars on the American market costing more than $1400.00 retail.

If you could not see the motor and could not hear the former used "four" cylinder cars rapidly changing them for "sixes" and "eights" you might be indifferent to progressive engineering developments.

How is it possible to overlook these activities which prove conclusively that the "four" is now and must always be confined to the lower priced cars built for those unable to spend a little more and obtain the additional charms and zest which the "six" type of construction contributes to motoring.

There is a distinct difference between motoring in a "four" and motoring as provided in a "six."

You will outshine over this difference when you take your first ride in a Studebaker "Six."

If you could not feel the racking vibration which exists in all medium priced four cylinder cars you might not hesitate about buying a $1200.00 or $1400.00 four cylinder car instead of a Studebaker "Six" at $1510.00.

Vibration is primarily responsible for short life and lack of endurance in a motor car.

If you could not when you go over a crossing and irregular roads, feel the jolting of a car with short wheel base, you might overlook the unusual smoothness of the Studebaker "Six" with its long wheel base as it glides over those places much as a boat meets a wave.

If you care not for physical exhaustion you might purchase a medium priced four cylinder car and thereby force upon yourself the burden of constant gear shifting when in the Studebaker "Six" this is reduced to "all" almost.

If you could not know the supreme satisfaction of driving a car which never stalls—while plowing through the sand—and mud almost always in high gear you would think twice before you would buy a four cylinder car of the $1200.00 or $1400.00 grade in comparison to the Studebaker "Six" at $1510.00.

If you realize that it costs hardly $25.00 per year more to operate a Studebaker "Six" than it does the average four cylinder car, you would not take a wisp of coal into consideration for the freedom from vibration on the car will relieve you of more than this amount in mechanical attention.

If you could not judge the trend of the times.

If you could not use your eyes and see—use your ears and hear—use your nose and feel—there might be some reason in your buying a motor car without applying common sense.

The first car made with four cylinders—these were supplanted when the 2 cylinder cars were.

The two cylinder cars were soon supplanted by four cylinder cars.

The four cylinder soon found a strong competitor in the "Six" until today the "four" is relegated and confined to the low priced cars.

You will be induced to spend $1200.00 to $1400.00 for a four cylinder car in these days when the Studebaker "Six" is available for $1510.00.

Can you realize that in buying a $1200.00 to $1400.00 "four" that you are becoming the owner of an article which in the character of a commodity is on the descending grade? One which is being forced downward by public opinion, and is sure to be confined to the $1000.00 and below class of motor cars in another year.

Can you not foresee?

Put your car to the ground.

Focus your vision on the future.

"IDAHOME" THE FLOUR OF QUALITY

It has long been a well established fact that Idaho quality flour is especially among the best-bakers and in homes whose heads are directed to the highest quality of flour.

Idaho is made from the choicest wheat grown in Idaho and the result is the best flour on the market today.

Just try a sack and note the difference in your bread, cakes, and pastries. You will find a delightful in your results.

Idaho is put up in twenty-four, thirty and one hundred pound sacks and is very moderately priced when quality is considered—in fact it costs you no more than inferior flour.

When ordering your groceries tomorrow be sure that you include a sack of Idaho flour—try it along with the brand you have been using, we're sure you'll be pleased—if not, return it to your grocer—Idaho is guaranteed.

At all good groceries.

...beside the yacht. It was he, not Klogg, who fell.

Klogg watched the form of the secretary sink, rise and slide away on the sunning deck. A choking cry and it vanished again. There were sounds on the other side of the deck forward that drew the attention of Klogg. He rushed into the companionway and looked down.

Belywn and his men were helping Pauline from the battlement. The yacht was rushing forward, rushing for the cabin.

"Now don't scold us, Cyrus and me," commanded Pauline. "If you say I told you so, I'll hit you."

She caught from the deck a big cardboard waste paper box that one of the sailors had just emptied.

"But I did tell you," insisted Harry. "However, thank heaven."

The words were uttered under the enveloping box which Harry had brought down over his head with a crash.

He tore it off crossly, but her beam of light fell on the contents. Pauline found the box empty.

"And this time it is true—I'm all through with adventures. Harry, I'm going to—"

"Harry me? Polly! Do you mean—"

"Yes."

As he clasped her in his arms, their forms illuminated in the lights of the yacht against the darkness beyond, were the last vision of a drowning man that you see for the last time, tried to shout again, but, strangled by the water, sank slowly to his doom.

PERLS OF PAULINE

For the end loomed very near. The car of the wrecked target boat was now a lake, from the force of the rush of the ever widening leak, partly from the violent rocking of the hull, and partly as it came down on the top step of the cabin entrance, and with her hands pressed to her face watched the rapid sinking of the boat.

It could only make it seem that it didn't get into trouble with the motor boat," she said to herself.

"Harry will never forgive himself for letting me go. I shall have broken his heart and I shall be dead and unable to comfort him. Oh, I'll even say my relatives when I'm saved," she thought. "I will marry him, marry Harry, but tomorrow and never do another foolish thing."

MAY SALE

Exceptionally

Shoes and Dry Goods

Opens Saturday Morning, May 1, CONTINUES FOR JUST ONE WEEK

This May Sale will long be remembered by the people of this community. It's the first sale of its kind ever launched in this store. It comes at a time when most stores are getting regular prices for their goods and it presents buying economies that are seldom evident at the very beginning of the big selling season of the year.

Every effort has been put forth to eclipse all past selling events here in point of better values and a greater business. Prices have dropped to such a degree that buying will be an irresistible economy to you.

"Why this sale," you ask? It is the result of an overstocked condition, principally in departments of imported goods, table linens, towelings, piece goods and silks. But to increase the interest in this event, we have involved all departments in the store, each of which offers a multitude of exceptional attractive values in seasonable and staple merchandise of finest quality. The prices quoted tell the story in a most convincing way. Don't miss an item.
