PAY-UP WEEK A NATIONAL IDEA

Example of Iowa Town Has Become Nation Wide in Scope.

IDEA SUGGESTED MIGHT BE TRIED WITH GOOD EFFECT, IN THIS CITY TO CLEAR THE DOCKET.

What promises to become an annual national event, the high inaugurated as National Pay-Up Week, February 21-26, inclusive. Created is one of the great ideas of our present-day system of business, but like many another good thing, it is sometimes abused and overdone; and because so many people are careless about paying their accounts, there are millions upon millions of dollars in outstanding accounts in this country today that could be paid without inconveniencing the debtor, and if all these millions of dollars were put into circulation during one week, there would be the greatest week of prosperity ever known in this country.

EVERYBODY AGREE TO JOIN IN THE SPIRIT

Everybody agrees to join in the spirit and consequently all found it easy to pay their debts. And it is a good thing for Washington to have a day of reckoning, or rather, a week of reckoning. The idea appealed to the business men of Washington, who naturally to the merchant who had considerable money in outstanding accounts.

BEGIN GOOD ROADS CRUSADE

The Times believes that this winter is the ideal time to work over plans for a big "good roads" campaign for next year. In order to work up enthusiasm, it would be a great stimulus to put substantial prizes up for the best mile of graded road. By placing these prizes high enough say three hundred dollars for the first prize, the farmers in various sections will wake up and take notice. As a result of putting up these big prizes the rivalry will increase to the point where they will be a hundred miles of road will enter into the contest, which will perhaps start on the miles if the prize were placed at fifty dollars.

The amount would increase several of the rural districts, who thus might obtain money for a new school library or piano. At any rate the notion of putting up three hundred dollars as prize money is a smaller amount for second and third prizes would do much to develop the good roads movement. In connection with this idea it has been suggested by some of the road enthusiasts to set aside a rock-throwing day in which every automobile driver and every farmer would pledge himself to pick up every stone possible in the road. It could be further worked out to interest the children in the idea and make the rock-throwing day a semi-holiday.

The above suggestions were made with the idea that the matter of good roads is not merely for the county commissioners, but what to do for every man who must traverse the highways and who must pay dearly by added cost when the roads are poor.

ANOTHER DEMOCRATIC SPLIT ON PREPARATION

Representative Kitchin's attack upon President Wilson's defense plan is even more embarrassing to the Democratic party than Mr. Bryan's opposition, as some observers see it. For Mr. Bryan is now merely a private though influential Democrat, while the North Carolina Congressman, as chairman of the Ways and Means committee is the leader of the party in Congress and therefore the man to whom the President would naturally look to steer his program past the shoals. Mr. Kitchin, it is true, explains that he is conducting his fight as an individual, and not as leader of the House, and the President, according to Washington dispatches, accepts this explanation. But many papers agree with the New York Evening Sun (Ind.) in thinking this distinction "absurd," and some of them do not hesitate to say that if he cannot conscientiously co-operate with the President on what is likely to be the paramount issue before the next Congress he should surrender his leadership on the floor to some one who can. Thus even in Mr. Kitchin's own state we find this suggestion advanced by the Charlotte Observer (Dem.), which thinks he might best preserve his convictions by sacrificing his ambitions and by the Fayetteville Observer (Dem.), which remarks more bluntly that "he might follow Mr. Bryan's example and resign." To the New York Commercial (Com.), also, it seems inconsistent for Mr. Kitchin "to attack the defense plan of the President and yet hold the position of spokesman for him in the House"—for "Although the Constitution does not make any provision for the representation of the Federal Administration in either branch of Congress, long-established custom has caused the leader of the President's party in the House so to be recognized." A Republican paper, the Philadelphia Press Telegraph, even warns President Wilson that his complacent attitude toward his refractory House leader may "create a suspicion of his own sincerity in the public mind." The "ridiculous" position in which Mr. Kitchin's action places his party is thus pictured by the New York Times (Ind. Gen.):

"There must, of course, be a leader of the Administration program—a leader to guide the party through this campaign for it on the floor. Mr. Kitchin, the elected leader, can not do it; he will be not much more than a spectator, if he carries out his promise to act simply as an individual; if he breaks that promise he will be a leader of the opposition. Therefore the leader in the preparedness fight must be some one else. That person, whoever he is, will stand out in the public mind as the Democratic leader; for he will be doing the leading, he will be the Administration's general throughout the first, the longer and more important part of the session. The party will have two leaders, the nominal and elected leader, passive or antagonistic and the drafted leader, the emergency leader, who would in the natural course of events be the chairman of one of the military committees, but might be some one else. Trying to imagine a plight for the Democratic party on which it would be more supremely ridiculous than it ever has been even in the past, could any crafty and ingenious mind think up anything that would surpass this? For years the Democratic party in Congress and its complete leadership were the standing joke or punter; it regained itself at last with difficulty; but in its wildest absurdities, when its leaders led in one direction and its rank and file stampeded in another, it never reached this height."—Literary Digest.

Edward Ables in "After Five" a Comedy of Life Turned Upside Down.

Joseph L. Lasky presents Edward Ables, who made his first notable screen success under Lasky management in "Brewster's Millions," in a new photodramatic comedy with a money motive entitled "After Five." This play which is the joint work of Cecil B. De Mille and William C. De Mille finds humor in things and conditions generally associated with tragedy, such as life insurance, coupled with a plot to get killed "accidentally on purpose" and a blackmailer's scheme of the deepest dye. The originality of the elements of ordinary life upside down, no to speak, provides the piece with a rare quality of whimsical humor.

But being the character impersonator of Mr. Ables, is the young guardian of Nora Hillroth. Seeking to invest his money wisely, he conspires with her, Sam Parker, who is wealthy and decides to put her $50,000 in addition to practically all his own fortune, into a syndicate known as Potash Preferred. Potash goes to smash in the stock market and Ted, who is much in love with Nora, plans to take her by taking out a life inurance policy and then having himself killed "by accident." About this same time, Ted is receiving the partnership interest in the Salisburys of a gang of blackmailers, who explain that if Ted does not pay him $5,000, he (Ted) will surely meet with a fatal accident. This is just what Ted is looking for and he arranged for the doctor to deliver the accident in return for all his remaining cash, $1,500, paying the money in charge of Ted's Japanese Valet, Oki. Ted is warned that he must be prepared to die at any moment "After Five."

It now develops that the smash in the stock is really advancing in value, but Ted is confronted with the most delicate Salisbury as Sam Parker, the broker.

On all sides people are saying "It's a dull year." There are many who want to make their money for Christmas gifts do its best.

Why not send a gift with real individuality, not a gift which might be chosen by any one and sent to any one. Why not send a gift that only you can send—your own photograph.

There's hardly anything else really worth while that can be bought so cheaply. When your "thank-you letters" come to you holiday week, you'll see that your photograph was truly appreciated for it's a true gift, worthy to bear the greetings of Christmas to those who know and love you best.

SYNOPSIS OF PRECEDING CHAPTERS.

A feud has existed between Colonel Arthur Stanley and his cousin, Judge Lazar Stanley, ever an heirloom, the diamond from the sky, found and taken over by an ancestor. Also, the accusation to the Stanley mansion in England may come to light. Three years later, the mother having had no part in the bargain, substitutes the girl, Esther, reared in secret, and leaves her undisturbed as the best. The spy has obtained possession of the diamond from the sky, and a document with the Stanley secret. Years later, Hagar, a spy queen, returns to Virginia with Esther. De Lee, the late Colonel Stanley's friend, adopts Esther. Arthur Stanley, son of Hagar, falls in love with Esther, and does his companion and cousin, Blair Stanley, rightful inheritor of Stanley. In stealing the diamond, Blair causes the death of the doctor and tries later to put the blame on Arthur, who takes the gem. Arthur Stanley eludes his pursuers and joins Hagar, who reveals his identity and upbraids him for his wild life. Needing money, he pawn the diamond in Richmond. At a ball, at which an adventurer, Vivian Marston, wears the borrowed gem. Luke Lovell, Hagar's spy guard, steals the diamond. Arthur leaves Richmond and goes to the west. Quabba, an orphan student, befriends Esther. Hagar takes Esther to Stanley hill.

Tom Blake, a detective of Richmond, who is hired by Blair Stanley, traces Hagar's and Esther's whereabouts. Blair's society, Blair strikes down Hagar and steals the finger prints, leaving the spy queen and crew. Marston, the spy's lawyer, arrives to announce Arthur is heir to the deceased Earl of Stanley. Blair, learning of this, convinces Arthur to win Vivian. Blair steals the diamond, later trying to rob and leaving for the west. Their train is robbed. Vivian losing the diamond, which she again finds in the hands of Blair. The diamond she stole is found by Arthur, now known as John Powell, sheep herder. Vivian deserts. Blair returns to the west and regains the diamond for her. Luke Lovell, driven from the camp after learning Hagar's secret, returns to the east. He is under treatment and Esther is in Richmond secretly. The diamond, similar to Blair's, is sold at the price of his secrecy.

The diamond is later picked up by an Indian woman. De Lee, Arthur learned of heart disease. Becoming very rich he buys Blair's ball, sold at auction, through Blake, and the price for the gem and Esther. Luke Lovell, the diamond from the sky, is sold to a man in a fight. Vivian, desiring still to pawn the gem, sends for Blair.

Blair and Quabba also Blair, go to the California mine to seek Arthur. Smythe is sent west by Blake. Vivian Marston is seized by the sheriff. Blair, who is infatuated by her, Smythe finds the diamond and gives it to Esther to deliver to Arthur. Blair and Luke to the yacht and find Esther there.

Blair and Quabba escape while Blair is in the mine. De Lee, who has become a joint Vivian in Los Angeles. During the taking of diamonds, a crook known to Vivian, Blair, is a man to try to discover the diamond. There he meets Luke Lovell. Esther and Vivian appear in the mine. The diamond is lost in a mine. Esther saves Arthur, who is injured, and goes to Los Angeles. De Lee, who is a sick-crook, Durand. Esther follows and is refused admittance to see him. In the meantime Smythe has his diamond in a tree. It is later found by two bill posters, one of whom murders the other for the diamond. Arthur is seized by Durand, De Vaux and Vivian, although Blair, who has taken charge of Arthur's business, is present.

The diamond passes in due play from the bill poster to Stanley, circus owner, who gives it to La Belle, lion tamer. Splinters, the clown, her jealous husband, shoots Stanley as the lion strikes down and kills the woman. The animal seizes the diamond. Stanley, a stableman, seizes it and hides it in a stable. Blair and Vivian falsify a telegram from Blake to Arthur, making Arthur believe he suffers from hallucination in thinking he saw Esther. Esther tries to see Arthur, on his way to the races, but the plotters prevent her.

CHAPTER XLV.

Blair and Vivian, assisting as best they could, were in the stable. "I'll get the coachman to take the reins," cried Durand, unconsciously changing from his careless air of recreator to the grave demeanor of physician. "Lend a hand, Blair," he added as the coachman stood around from the back seat to the groom to the driver's place on the trolley.

Blair and Vivian, assisting as best they could, were in the stable. "I'll get the coachman to take the reins," cried Durand, unconsciously changing from his careless air of recreator to the grave demeanor of physician. "Lend a hand, Blair," he added as the coachman stood around from the back seat to the groom to the driver's place on the trolley.

"Perhaps," How plainly I saw her—in her gray dress. She spoke to me. The hunchback fellow was with her!" "It was imagination," said Vivian soothingly to the stricken girl as the pseudo physician, Durand, administered the all too handy hypodermic. "A touch of sun, wasn't it, doctor?" "Yes," said Durand in equally soothing accents. "I think it was the sun and too much exertion. We shouldn't have let you drive, Mr. Powell; you are not strong enough yet for these things." Blair said nothing. He could have almost pitied Arthur that in so short a time as had elapsed since his injuries, his character had been so completely changed from his former self. He had entered that the evidence of his own eyes was but the phantom of a disordered imagination.

Never the coachman nor the groom had understood the significance of his master's collapse at the sight of two spy musicians with piano, pony cart and money by the roadside. The coachman and groom, and the other servants at the Powell mansion, only knew their master had never been mentally the same since his injuries at the mines and his first journeying to his new grand mansion, a "hatched," situated, insensible form on a stretcher.

In a few moments the effect of the stimulating drug had calmed Arthur, and he was sitting with closed eyes on the second seat, with Blair and Vivian and Durand. The conspirators decided to return home.

A passing auto coming in the same direction slowed beside the coach, and the occupants, who had seen the trolley party that there was a man on behind.

"He looks like a tough customer, too," said the driver of the car.

The grocer on the rear seat looked down and ordered the tough looking customer to get off. The tough looking customer, was Luke Lovell, who had come back to Los Angeles, voluntarily determined to make an asset of his secret and blackmail either Arthur Stanley or Blair, preferably both.

Luke Lovell growled a curse back at the grocer and held on. The coachman with pretended docility pushed the whip back of the coach at a signal from the groom. The thought Luke across the face twice before he could speak himself. But again and again the look cut and stung him cruelly on neck and shoulders, and despite his hardness and determination to stand the onslaught Luke was compelled to let go and drop off. He limped to the sidewalk of the quiet suburban residence street and sat in the shade of a tree by the curb.

Near him a leaking fire hydrant trickled. Luke mopped his brow and the burning cuts across his face with the cooling water. The pain slowly subsided, and Luke looked about him.

There was off down the street, but yet distinct to the keen eyes of the spy. "Here two figures, including a pony piano cart, two figures he knew as well as he knew his own—Esther and Quabba.

Old emotions, old feelings stirred in Luke Lovell at the sight of the daughter of Hagar, the queen of the spys; Esther, whom he had always gazed upon with pride and a dull longing—this was not for him. Luke knew that. But yet there stirred in him the old sense of affection and mingled with it a sense of shame. "Had as the brute spy was there had always been something fine and tender in his regard for Esther. To injure her had been no part of all his wild plans to make merchandise of what he dimly surmised was the Stanley secret—and Hagar's."

Luke's mental processes were slow, but he was quick to realize he had better have time to think of how he should meet with Esther again did he wish to regain her confidence, as he now desired to do.

Luke Lovell rose from the curb even while cogitating upon these things and concealed himself behind the tree. But he could have stood plain upon the sidewalk for all he would have been seen for Esther and Quabba, their heads

A half hour later Esther and Quabba part at the alley entrance that leads to Stanley's stables. Esther dons her cloak again to cover her gypsy attire and removes her headscarf and thus garbed secures a passing shopgirl, nor does she show a moment's hesitation as she slips quietly to her room by the entrance of the hotel on a side street. Quabba stands gazing after his young mistress wistfully until she has turned from the street some block away. Then Quabba is seized by a hand upon his shoulder—and turns to see the swartly face of Luke Lovell.

But meanwhile what of the Stanley circus? Stanley, the course granted by the owner of the show, has died in the morgue downtown. He is in Splinters, the clown, who killed Stanley and shot himself, and with them is the disfigured body of La Belle, wife of Splinters, the clown, killed by the lion Lancelot. A triple tragedy, and all because of a woman's covetousy—and the diamond from the sky!

The new manager of the circus is optimistic. He is inclined to believe the big blow off, as he calls the tragedy, will be great press stuff for the show. "But the triple tragedy and the panic and riot that followed it have brought the greasers—who are numerous down upon the show, and it is no wonder for the showmen are all at auction. The disconsolate performers and attaches, their salaries long in arrears, realize it is a bad season for the show business and are fully aware of the reasons. They are ready to give up their little bit of their salaries. They, Bill Egan, acrobat, remembers the great diamond Stanley gave La Belle before the lion Lancelot killed her—inspired to the deed by the jealous circus manager. He knows the Gospel as to the value of this great gem has been life about the circus since William, the billposter, brought it from the woods where he sold her for it and lost it to Stanley at dice. If the diamond were recovered it would be an asset that would perhaps pay all salaries when sold. Bill Egan, the acrobat, remembers Stanley, the stableman, was one who smothered at the diamond. Bill knows Stanley, in a previous season, with a match show, some of the animals had been stabled at Stanley's.

The sheriff is informed, and the acrobat, donning an overcoat to hide his lights—for the sheriff's seizure has stopped the stable—leads the way to Stanley's stable. With the sheriff and the acrobat go a policeman and the manager of the circus pro tem.

They have reached the stable yard in an auto just previous to the arrival of Quabba with his monkey and pony and street piano cart that he stables here. While Quabba faces Luke Lovell at the ring, the sheriff and the acrobat with the pistol and others are in the stable. Stanley has been in the lot searching vainly for the diamond, where he hid it beneath the hay. "He comes down the ladder and faces the sunlight from the open door, and there between him and the daylight, gleaming like a star, dangles from the hay rack over the pony's empty stall the diamond from the sky!"

Just as Stanley grasps the diamond from where it had been left hidden by Quabba in his pony's hay the sheriff and his party are in the door and grab the stinking stableman.

Out from the hay they struggle the diamond, forcing it to the sun, stretched in Stanley's grimy hand, that is in turn clutched by the others. In wrestling it from the desperate stableman the diamond is passed almost instant the eyes of Quabba, who has leveled who have hurried upon the scene, from the stable mouth at the first sounds of the struggle.

How well they know the diamond jewel it had been a fortune for them both, a fortune briefly held and quickly lost!

CHAPTER XLVI.
"I am Not John Powell!"

At her arrival in Los Angeles Vivian Marston attracted the attention of Homer Graydon, a householder of "fale wood," since the accident to John Powell the newly rich young man and his wife, Homer Graydon, had been living in the same little house as of old. Vivian Marston, for it seems she is an old friend of Powell and old friend of Blair Stanley, the young capitalist and robber from the east, now in charge of Powell's affairs, she is also an old friend, it would appear, of Dr. Durand, Powell's private physician.

"In fact, Vi," says Graydon to that fair character, "you seem to be an old friend to everybody but me in this town."

"Vivian smiled. She has met Graydon in the park by telephone appointment. Now that her change has recovered Miss Marston, who so capably nursed him some time for her social engagements again. She must be tactful in social matters, however, as Blair is jealous and Durand suspicious. But Graydon is too good a friend to lose, owing to Miss Marston's way of thinking, and unknown to the others concerned she has driven to the park and kept her secret appointment with the old man.

"You have been cruel and neglectful of me, Vi," continues Graydon. "But here is something in the paper that may interest you. You are crazy about diamonds, and I remember you telling me of a wonderful one that broke your heart when it was taken from you by train robbers. It was a wild story, and I cannot say I believed it. But there seem to be strange tragedies about big diamonds. Here, the paper says, is a wonderful one that caused a triple tragedy the other day at the circus."

Vivian smiled as she showed her the newspaper account. "Yes, I know," she said, "I was there. It was a wonderful diamond and she felt—'a dreadful tragedy.'"

"But who does not tell him the diamond was the veritable gem she had, Homer Graydon was a matter-fact. He was steeped of much he saw, and he believed little of what he heard. 'It, he' chuckled the old man. 'The papers are full of wild yarns that the circus owners got the diamond to the lady lion tamer, and the clown, her husband, told his friend, the old lion, the lady was unfaithful. The lion killed the lady, the husband killed the giver of the jewel. Then the lion saved the handle from the dead woman's neck, and a stableman stole it, romantic, to say the least, eh, what? 'I was there,' repeated Vivian. 'I saw it all. The papers speak the truth.'"

"Well, if you will be a good little girl, I'll go to the auction and buy this wonderful diamond for you," checked the old bon-vivant.

"Will you?" asked Vivian eagerly. "I will if you promise to give up these 'old friends' who have recently monopolized you. Old friends? Pooh! Never mind old friends. Stick to good friends and you'll wear diamonds."

"I will stick to good friends who get me diamonds," retorted Vivian. "It is well enough to criticize my old friends, as you call them, but they have promised me the diamond too."

"I'll get it for you. I'll build them if it costs every cent I have!" cried Graydon excitedly.

"Vivian smiled at the prospect of the compliment to her charms that several told them a threatening fellow was hanging around the Powell mansion evidently bent on blackmail. Another caller at the Powell house was Marmaduke Smythe, legal representative of the Earl of Stanley. He had never met Arthur Stanley, Arthur being a fugitive from Virginia when Smythe had come to notify him he was Earl of Stanley. But Blake, the Richmond detective, had given Smythe a letter to "John Powell" in Los Angeles, Blake informing Smythe that Powell could tell him something of the missing Arthur Stanley.

"As Vivian arrives and after Luke left Smythe has called and has been admitted. Flushed with wine and enlivened with drugs, Arthur is wild and boastful. Smythe produces a newspaper and speaks of the circus tragedy and recovery of the great diamond. Suddenly Arthur dashed down his wine glass and stood erect.

"I am not John Powell, but Arthur Stanley of Stanley Hall!"

"It is the diamond from the stage," he cried. "I will buy that diamond. If you are the lawyer of the Earl of Stanley, listen: I am the Earl; I am not John Powell, but Arthur Stanley of Stanley Hall!"

Blair and Durand and De Vaux, who were present, started in surprise at this announcement. The lawyer's jaw dropped, he stepped back a pace and fell backward over his chair.

Just then the servant announced that a rough fellow was at the door who demanded to see Mr. Powell and Mr. Blair Stanley.

The party left the library and crossed to the door. Luke had followed the other in, and Blair and Durand with out-side voices asked the gypsy and thrust him out.

A policeman was waiting, and Luke, struggling and protesting, was thrown into an automobile and taken to the station house. The other young men as complaining witnesses.

his young mistress' hand and kissed it, while contented tears rolled down his bronzed cheeks. Blake explained what had happened.

"There is but one thing to do," said Esther. "Tell the truth. I am tired of subterfuge and deception. I am eager back to my mother in Richmond. She has recovered and she needs me. I cannot shield Arthur at the expense of wronging any one, much as I have loved him and much as others have loved him. If he has done evil things he is not worthy of further sacrifice and silence. I know Blair Stanley to be wicked, as are all those who live in luxury with Arthur. So tell the truth."

"No, Miss Esther," said Luke huskily. "I will keep silent. They have done me wrong, and I will have revenge in my own way—the gypsy's way."

"There is only one course to follow, my poor Luke," said Esther gently, "and that is the open and truthful course."

"Do not mix up in this," replied Luke earnestly. "Go back to Ingar and ask her to forgive me and forget I ever rebelled against her. I will attend to my enemies and to her. I will not harm Arthur if I can help it, but on Blair Stanley and the others I will have my revenge for their treachery. Tell Ingar that when I can get away I shall return to her and serve her and you faithfully again, my little mistress."

Luke's determination and confidence were so evident that Esther made no further attempt to change his mind. She invoked a blessing on the rugged gypsy and left him, convinced his loyalty to her and Ingar, was what it had been before money greed had led Luke to evil courses and companions.

At the circus the auction was on. Arthur and his childhood friends were there; also, grieved and as though just from a bandbox, the old man, Homer Graydon. Vivian divided her smiles impartially.

The tenderest animals, the circus equipment generally, brought a few listless bids and went at paltry sums. Then came the event of the sale, the one valuable asset, the great diamond.

"How much am I offered, gentleman?" cried the auctioneer. "Ten thousand dollars!" cried Arthur. "Mr. Powell bids $10,000," cried the auctioneer again. "What else do I hear?"

"Fifteen thousand!" shouted Homer Graydon. There was a buzz of excitement as John Powell, the mad young millionaire.

would bid for the diamond for her sake. Let the cost be what it may, the diamond from the sky would be hers, no matter who bought it. Then Vivian turned goodly to Graydon and drove away. During her absence from the Powell mansion there were callers she might have recognized. The first was Luke Lovell, set and determined upon what he called "having a square deal."

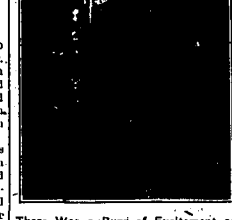

WELLS FATIGUE EXPRESS.

Over the heads of those closest to him Luke glanced furtively at Arthur, who blushed and trembled. It was a slip of paper and he was around. The train robber treasure Arthur had come upon in the desert, funds upon which he had founded the great John Powell fortune.

It had been among the bank notes Arthur had given to Luke. It had been hidden among them and Luke had held to it, when the money was gone, as evidence against Arthur, for Luke had suspicions where the money had come from.

"This looks like train robbery stuff," said the desk sergeant. And then Durand spoke up. "I remember this fellow," he said, pointing his finger. "I met him in a place said to be a train robbers' hangout at the mining town of Mammoth, where Mr. Powell here was injured some weeks ago."

"We'll hold him till we find out," said the sergeant. "Lock him up." And Luke was taken away. By the aid of the police station messenger, Luke got word of his plight to Quamba and asked that Esther be brought to see him. Luke had been a sergeant. Quamba apprised Esther by telephone. She had just received a telegram from the convalescing Ingar asking her to return to Richmond, and Esther had just wired to help that she would come, suddenly adding that Arthur seemed to be under evil influences here and that she was discouraged regarding him.

There Was a Buzz of Excitement as John Powell Doubled the Bid.

Luke, doubled the bid. Higher and higher rose the price proffered for the diamond from the sky. The crowd gasped as the bids went up, and up as though it were the Kullback. "Going, going," droned the auctioneer. "The last call. Am I offered any more? Going, going—gone!"

Laws of the Vikings. While the Vikings of the north brought terror to many lands because of their savage warfare, nevertheless, to be said to their credit, no better laws were made or enforced for the time and people than theirs. Hence among themselves they strove for, and what words more fitting show this spirit than the following: "Now let us agree and bid to each one, with the other, in good will, whether we meet on mountain or beach, on ship or snowshoes, on earth or jokin' glaciers, on the high sea or on horseback, as if one find his friend on water or his brother on the way, meeting as well one with another as son with father or father with son in all dealings. Now we join our hands together, all of us, and keep this truce, and all words spoken in this pledge of faith witnessed by God and good men and all who hear words or are here present."—J. W. Perkins in Case and Comment.
