Her Vow Fulfilled

As Lois Stafford fled down the terraces of her father-in-law's majestic estate, her own life seemed to be symbolized in her desperate ambition to destroy herself. The flowers and the aromatic shrubs threw out their fragrance about her, but she would not pause. She was bent upon the tragedy waiting for her in the deep ravine toward which the express train was plunging, as if in obedience to her summons.

The cries of Gloria, who pursued her frantically, came to her like the voice of conscience. She had never heeded that voice and she would not heed it to now. She had trodden the primrose path of dalliance and it had led her forth into the glare of exposure. She would not, endure the shame. It seemed better to her irresponsible soul to run away from self-denial. She had not cared what laws of decency she broke and she did not care now what hearts she might break. Her husband's tarnished honor, her father's blighted career, did not win a thought from her.

It was Gloria who thought of these things even as she followed. Gloria felt more guilt than Lois, for Gloria had confronted Lois with the proofs of her perfidy, never fancying that Lois would answer the charge by punishing herself with the same recklessness that had marked her sin. As she saw Lois running toward death with eagerness, she understood for the first time that it was in Lois' character to do everything passionately. She realized that Lois had always been Lois, and that her fault was, perhaps, beyond her own control. Lois was born without imagination of consequences and without an instinct of justice for others. Was Lois to blame for her failure to inherit such qualities? At the time, at least, Gloria was convinced that Lois was like one born blind, more to be forgiven than hated. Gloria felt only pity for her sister-in-law and she accused herself of cruelty in demanding payment of her.

Gloria ran as fast as she could, her heart beating like a drum as she was ready to fall down with the pulse of it. She was about to give up when Lois, glancing back for a last look at the beautiful earth she was about to leave, stumbled and went to her knees.

She rose at once and sped on, but Gloria had been enabled to gain on her and to overtake her at the very edge of the ravine. With loving ruthlessness Gloria flung herself on Lois and dragged her back.

Lois fought with insane ferocity, tearing Gloria's hands loose and writhing out of her grasp. But Gloria seized hold again and again. Lois carried her back to the brink and the turf at the edge gave way under their feet as they wrestled. Gloria had now her own life to fight for as well as Lois', for at any moment both women might be hurled down the steep bank to the railroad tracks.

They were still battling when the engine roared past. The trainman, leaning out of his window, stared up at them in amazement. They were still struggling when the last coach flashed past.

It was only then, when her weapon of suicide was gone from her reach, that Lois gave up the fight. She fell to the ground weeping. She was now afraid of facing life than death, and she sobbed with terror if not with remorse.

Gloria knelt by her, begging her not to try. At last she offered the final bribe in her power. She drew the envelope of letters from the bosom of her gown and held it out to Lois, saying:

"I forgive you, dear. I have no right to judge you. I can't take that responsibility. Keep your life and your past and make what you will of it. Lois rather saw the prize than heard the counsel and she snatched at the letters with the instinct of a child.

Gloria felt her heart harden again. She could not keep back a feeling of contempt for the selfish pettiness of Lois.

Gloria was afraid to speak lest she waste further rebukes on a soul that could not profit by any other chastisement than sacrifice and fear. So Gloria left her and climbed the terraces. She noted with relief that no one had seen the brief drama that might have startled the whole nation. She was afraid that she had done everything she ought not to have done.

As she was entering the house to go to her room the boy Stas called her. He was lugging a picture book of foreign paintings. He knew nothing of any of them and he asked Gloria many questions she could not answer. One of the pictures represented Christ kneeling and writing on the ground. Near him lay a contrite woman in shame and tears. In the background a number of men were turning away shamefaced. The picture was labeled "Neither Do I Condemn Thee, Go and Sin No More."

Now, Gloria felt that she was justified in laying aside her impulse to exact a penalty from Lois. She told Stas that the picture was beyond the understanding of a child, and that he was lucky to be a child. She wished that she had never grown up. Then she went to her room. Looking from her window, she could see the eunuchment where she had won a doubtful victory over Lois and herself. Lois was tearing the bundle of letters to bits and scattering the pieces upon the railroad track, where she had nearly been torn to pieces herself.

Gloria felt that one ridge at least was solved. She felt sorry for David and his choice among women. Then she remembered the Judge's accusation against David. According to that her brother was guilty of a more heinous crime than Lois'. He had taken a life or, with even greater wickedness, had persuaded another man to commit murder for him. She could not rest till she had either cleared David of that suspicion or warned him that his secret was known.

The reason that the duel between Gloria and Lois had not been observed by anyone but the fleeing eyes of the trainman on the express engine was that the Stafford estate was a little world in itself.

David had been conferring with his business associates by telephone. Pierpont had been inspecting the prize cart with which he jealously expected to confront his rival neighbors at the next county fair. Stas had been looking at the big picture books on the huge table in the great living room. His father, Casimir, had been working among the rose bushes with the head gardener. Judge Freeman had been involved in one more conspiracy, which he firmly hoped would be the last.

It was Casimir who first interrupted Gloria in her search for David. Casimir had hardly believed that there were as many roses in all the world as there in the Stafford close. He could see his wife lying in a reclining chair in a sunny nook and it occurred to him that one of those roses would cheer her and serve as a bit of gallantry. So he plucked one. The gardener saw the deed, charged on him with a roar, and snatched the flower from him. The deep thorn bite he received in his thumb did not pacify him. He stood sucking his thumb and swearing when Pierpont strolled by.

Pierpont had lost his temper at the dairy because the head valet to the cows had not brushed their teeth to his satisfaction nor maneuvered their hoofs to perfection. When the gardener explained that Casimir had dared to pluck one of the famous and priceless Pierpont roses which had never failed of honorable mention at the annual exhibition of the Garden club, Pierpont was more wrath than the head gardener.

Casimir quailed before the onslaught, and Gloria, drawn to the spot by the noisy voices, found him craven with confusion. She took his part at once, and when the gardener and her father explained the atrocity he had committed Gloria also turned on him. "In heaven's name, Casimir, what did you mean by taking the only rose my poor father has?"

"I did take it," Mees Gloria, for to grieve my poor wife. Better I should go away now, yes?"

"You took a rose to give to your wife, did you?" Gloria cried. "You ought to be ashamed of yourself."

"I am it! Oh, I am it!" Casimir protested.

"I should think you would be," Gloria stormed. "Taking one rose for your poor wife. The next time you want flowers for her you take as many as you can carry."

While her father and the gardener and Casimir gaped like dolls, she snipped off a dozen of the Pierpont roses with the gardener's own shears. She laid them in Casimir's arms and said: "Maybe she won't care for the Pierpont roses. I don't think much of them, myself. So take her some of each of these varieties, and find which she likes best. Then if the gardener bothers you again, tell me and I'll snip his head off the same way and you can have his place."

Pierpont and the gardener looked at each other and both said, "Where?"

Gloria went along to make sure that Casimir's wife received the flowers with no hint of their hazardous gathering. Then she went to the house to find David.

She was encountered by her aunt, the great Hortensia, with a bony of other great ladies from the countryside.

"Give us tea, Gloria, for heaven's sake," said Hortensia, "and come listen to our scheme."

They dragged Gloria to the Japanese tea garden, whither the servants brought tea and all its accompaniments across the lawn. Aunt Hortensia gathered in Doctor Royce as well.

Aunt Hortensia explained that it was about time to "get up something." Each of the ladies had her pet charity which needed funds and everyone talked at the same time. Gloria's mind was too full of her own problems to feel much interest. She beckoned to Casimir and sent him with tea and cakes for his wife. When he came back with the china she piled up a little mid-afternoon banquet for himself.

He took it shyly, then stared at it and shook his head and offered it back. Gloria asked why. He hesitated, then exclaimed: "In my Poland millions of my peoples are dying because they have not of bread. And should I to eat of cake? No, I could not, please!"

Gloria respected his feelings too much to force him to eat, but she turned to the committee and, claiming the floor, asked the house to listen to a delegate from Europe. She made Casimir speak. He was tongue-tied at first with embarrassment, but he warmed to his theme and told of the miseries of his beloved land, over and forth again and again till the wealthy and noble were living in cellars and eating husks and the poor were dying in herds.

Gloria's Romance

When he had finished every eye was wet and every heart aching for Poland. When Gloria proposed a mammoth lawn festival for Polish relief there was unanimous assent.

"I'll charge a fortune for a ten biscuits and bunquet everybody that comes," said Gloria. "Then I'll take the money over to Poland myself to make sure that it falls into the right hands."

"And I'll go along with you," Doctor Royce spoke up. "To make sure that you don't fall into the wrong hands."

Everyone applauded the impudence, but Gloria answered it with one of her blackest looks. Doctor Royce was still under the ban. He had confessed too much and duped her too well to be forgiven in haste. But her rebuke was ignored in the excitement of the convention. A mammoth lawn festival for Polish relief; there was no dissent.

Now once more Gloria felt free to seek David. She found him, hiding, he said, till the women got away. She asked him to follow her. She had perfected her scheme for testing his innocence or his guilt.

David had not been present when the yachting expedition set forth to run down Trask, nor had he been present when Trask was brought in. David was throughout enough to rule his own expressions and to pretend ignorance of Trask's existence. But Gloria felt sure that if she could bring the two men suddenly face to face one of the other would betray a guilty knowledge.

"So she said to David: 'Come with me. I've got a surprise for you.'"

David followed her up to the guest room where Trask had been installed. She led him to the door, knocked, opened the door, and bade David enter. A screen stood before the bed and she drew it aside quickly, keeping her eyes on David. She saw surprise in his face, but not of the sort she expected. His surprise was blank wonder. She turned to see how Trask took the confrontation. Trask was not there. The bed was empty.

Gloria ran to bed with the nurse. She met her just coming in from a motor ride. She had taken her to the house of liberty, she said, leaving Nell to care for her father. She was stunned by the news of Trask's departure. It was too weak to rise and walk. It seemed impossible that he could have been carried out without attracting the attention of a dozen servants.

Gloria felt bewildered. She ran to seek Doctor Royce. David ran after her, asking: "What's it all about? What's the little surprise you had for me?" It seemed to her that he was innocent, she would reveal to him more of Lois' guilt than she felt it her right to divulge.

She stood on David and hurried on to find Doctor Royce. She met Judge Freeman on the lawn, and told him what had happened. He expressed surprise, but when she had left him she began to feel dissatisfied with the sincerity of his amazement. But she could not pause to investigate further. When at last the "Twin" Royce, who forgot that he was in her black book still. It had been her habit for so many years to run to him for his problems that she ran to him now, and, laying her hands on his arm, cried:

"Oh, Stephen, Stephen, they've stolen Trask! I've lost him again and I don't know what to do."

"Stolen Trask!" Royce exclaimed. "It's impossible!"

"Of course, it's impossible," said Gloria, "but it's true, too."

Royce set out to pick up what trace there might be of him. Gloria tagged along. Royce asked every servant he met where he had been. Several of them had been on the lawn serving tea. Judge Freeman had sent others on various errands. The cook and her crew had been busy providing for Aunt Hortensia's mob. Royce called for his own chauffeur. He had been in the kitchen, he confessed, as a guest at a tea party below stairs.

Judge Freeman was not to be found. As a matter of fact he was the principal offender. After he left Gloria he had wandered about in a deep and gloomy meditation. He was convinced that Gloria, with her impulsive and unmanageable temper, was set upon unraveling every knot in the tangle. He was sure that her inexperience with the world would keep her from forcing the consequences and that she would compel a complete revelation. This would end only in a public scandal, an enormous and irretrievable disaster.

David would be put on trial for his life and Trask would turn state's evidence against him to save his own life. David would perhaps be sentenced to death, or if he escaped that he would escape it in some pretense of endless aerial acrobatics. In any case, Lois would be disgraced before the world, and if David's wealth could bribe an acquittal, it would purchase a divorce.

Another consequence would be that the Judge himself would be impeached or forced to a resignation under fire, with his name dishonored. It is only fair to say that the Judge's fears for his own suffering had less weight with him than his fears for the future of his daughter's life and the family. He loved David as if he were his own son. He had a deep affection for Pierpont, and he cherished a great fondness for Gloria. He respected even the pretense that was so painful to herself as well as all the others.

He wandered disconsolately about the lonelier portions of the Stanford demesne and found himself at the outer gate. There he chanced to see the bargeman, Joel, come up the road. He asked if he knew where the Stanford place was. Judge Freeman told him that it was before him. He asked if a badly hurt man had been taken in there with his daughter. The judge hesitated and asked what he knew of the pair.

Joel said he didn't know much except that the old man's daughter was his girl and going to marry him some day and he was afraid she was in trouble. So he had told her to hurry back and see if he could be of some use.

The Judge questioned him cautiously and finally proposed the best thing to do would be to get the old man out of the hands of the Stanford, who meant him no good. Joel seized on the suggestion hungrily and the Judge offered his co-operation. He led Joel by a little frequented path to the rear of the house, and bade him wait. He went and sent Nell out to speak to Joel and make sure that she wanted to escape with him. Nell assured him that she did. The beauty of the home oppressed her.

While Nell was talking with Joel Judge Freeman was ordering his own chauffeur to bring her car up to a corner of the driveway shielded from the house by a clump of ancient rhododendrons as large as trees. Then the judge, accompanied at his own request and bringing into play all the force he had acquired from hearing thieves' confessions, set about the business of clearing the house. Most of the servants had been informed of the matter by a short message at Aunt Hortensia's convention. The rest Judge Freeman sent on various errands with messages to distant laborers on the grounds.

When the coast, or at least the stairway, was clear, he called in his chauffeur and Joel. They hurried up to Trask's room and, lifting him in his arms, hurried out into the hall and down the stairs with him. The old man suffered agonies from the jolts and jars, but he smothered his groans somewhat. The Judge went ahead as a scout and warned off one maid who ran in for Aunt Hortensia's parcel and a man who hurried back for a social register of the county to be need in making up a committee list.

Thus Trask was, as the saying is, spirited away without being seen by anyone except his abductors. The chauffeur ran his car from the grounds by the tradesmen's entrance and Judge Freeman, lingering, saw the cloud of dust the machine raised as it dashed north. He remained to look watch and to do what he could to turn pursuit in the wrong direction.

He felt disquieted by the pallor of Trask and by his extreme exhaustion. He was afraid that the old man would collapse himself to death in the chair and take David with him.

Judge Freeman abhorred his own deed and regretted that he could not punish himself publicly as severely as he would have punished another Judge who violated his honor so. But he had been a father before he became a judge, and the paternal instinct overruled the legal obligation. He understood as never before the almost irresistible impulses that compel men toward criminal acts, and he wondered which it was better to do, resign his post as Judge of other men or remain on the bench and administer mercy more freely than he had been wont to do.

Meanwhile he smiled, though dismally, to think that his old head had outwitted the young wits of Gloria. He saw how disturbed she was by the escape of her captive, but he felt no trace of remorse. He was sure that a sharp knife plying from a child left it wound itself as well as others.

Gloria was frantic. She was still surrounded by hostile friends who thwarted every effort she made to learn the truth and were all important to her peace of heart.

HICKS DISCUSSES PARTY CAUSES

Democratic Representative Tella-Hou—Was Used by Majority Last Winter.

"I notice that Republican speakers have been very much excited over the fact that the Democrats in congress have held caucuses on important bills," said Representative A. R. Hicks, discussing the matter, "but a matter of fact any one familiar with legislative methods knows that it is impossible to secure affirmative legislation by holding caucuses. The majority of the Republicans in the legislature were caucusing all the time. We had only three or four caucuses, but we were the majority. The Democrats had a governor, as well as both branches of the legislature, we would not have needed any caucus at all, since the responsibility of government through party organization would not have rested upon us in any degree. The Republicans in congress, being out of power all along the line, need no caucus. But the Democrats do, for this reason: When a measure comes up involving a party principle or party pledge, the members of the party have frequently different methods in their minds about the measure and they are formulated. If they could not get together and thread these out, they could never get anywhere, and the result would be a failure. Therefore, it is necessary for those who believe alike on these things to get together and thread out their minor differences. When party responsibility rests on the other fellow this is not needed. That is why Republicans in the last legislature caucused more than we did, and that is why Democrats in the present congress have met in caucus over many measures where the Republicans need no such thing."

THE TAMPICO AFFAIR—MAYO VERSUS ROOSEVELT

By JAMES D. WHELAN

In my closing article on the Vera Cruz incident, to illustrate the statement that it was not wise to drive a people to despair through indirect actions, I cited with approval, the manner in which the Americans at Tampico were withdrawn, through an understanding with the commanders of other fleets, without loss of office. In support of my statement I quoted editorial from a leading Republican newspaper, in which it took issue with Colonel Roosevelt for his denunciation of the administration on this account, and declared that the policy actually followed saved human life while the other policy, including the action which Colonel Roosevelt demanded, might have resulted in a general massacre. Recently Colonel Roosevelt repeated the same attack on the administration, saying that responsibility rested immediately on Secretary Daniels, but primarily on President Wilson, and that the president should have been impeached for his conduct in the affair. He added that if the lips of Admiral Mayo were not sealed, he would tell a story that would disgrace the administration. Colonel Roosevelt, whose accuracy of statement seldom equals the forcefulness of his delivery, evidently counted on the lips of the admiral running amok. Rather to his surprise, I imagine, Admiral Mayo gave out an interview last week stating that the administration, and pointing out that the arrangements were made by him and not by Washington, and that the method calculated to save the lives of the foreigners at Tampico was followed. He further pointed out that while he could have destroyed the city and defeated the Mexicans, his doing so would probably have been accompanied by a massacre of foreign residents. In order that those interested may understand that I have not garbled the interview, I quote it as follows:

"The day of the 21st passed off quietly enough, but that night after the Mexicans knew of the fighting in Vera Cruz, there were some anti-American demonstrations that the federal troops put down quickly. It was during those demonstrations that Gen. Koenig, of the German cruiser Dresden, went to the shore and demanded that he stop the demonstrations and that he protect the Americans. He, with some of his officers, escorted some American ladies and children to the best landing and took them off of the Dresden."

"I received so many alarming reports during the night of the 21st that I decided to go up the river on the morning of the 22nd and bring out the Americans. What I had been guarding against was any appearance of hostility that might occasion a general outbreak, but the pressure put upon me was too strong to be resisted."

"You see, the problem was not merely the protection of Americans in Tampico alone, for the foreign population was scattered all through the old region and among ranchers far in the interior. Early on the morning of April 22, I sent a message to Capt. Doughty of the British cruiser Heron, telling him of my intent, and asking him to inform Gen. Zaragoza that I was coming in for the sole purpose of taking out American citizens."

Capt. Doughty's Plan.

"Capt. Doughty at once made a request that my plan should be changed. He pointed out that it was not only Americans who were concerned, but also English, German, French and Spanish. He did not doubt my ability to handle the Tampico situation, but he did fear for the safety of all foreigners in the city and in the interior. One shot from my gun, one clash between my men and the federal forces, and a fire would be lighted that would spread far faster than any other expedition could hope to follow. What he suggested was that I should remain outside, and permit him to collect all Americans quietly and slowly, and then send them out to me."

"It struck me as a good idea, and I advised Admiral Fletcher as follows: 'Arrived as last night to get in this morning to bring out Americans. Let almost sure such action would precipitate hostilities. British captain, who informed my purpose, requested me for the sake of all foreigners not to come in, but that he would send Americans out, to which I agreed.'" they came up to the river's mouth in line.

"For three days this work of rescue went on. Over 2,100 Americans were taken out."

World Have Meant War.

"But it would have meant war and burning and killing, and what I was after was the protection of American lives and property. It was a trying situation. Lots of time it was hard for me to exercise self-restraint, but I realized that the lives of thousands hung on that very self-restraint. I think the results justified my course."

"More than anything else I resent the way they are sitting at Secretary Daniels over my shoulder. I know little of politics, I care less. I believe that Mr. Daniels' whole effort is to increase the efficiency of the navy and his acts have been what he deems to be for the interest of the navy and the country. Certainly no secretary of the navy within the past forty years has worked harder to acquaint himself with naval details, and I believe that today he knows more about the navy than any other secretary the country has had."

HIGH COMPLIMENT TO THE IDAHO REGIMENT

"The troops from the western states are fine fellows; this is particularly so in the case of the Second Idaho regiment, which is an exceptionally fine regiment."

The above is taken from a letter in the Evening Star, Washington, D. C., by Major Harry Cooke, brigade adjutant in the Sixteenth United States army division with headquarters at Nogales and tends to show that the Second Idaho is becoming known from one section of the country to the other. It is a fine regiment, particularly so in the case of the Second Idaho and its fine work as a western army and now in the Evening Star, at Washington, an army officer, in writing of the troops stationed at Nogales, especially mentions the Idaho troops.

TUMULTUOUSLY RESIGN AFTER THE ELECTION

WASHINGTON—The opinion prevails in Washington that the nation's secretary will be served by a new private secretary after March next. It is regarded as a foregone conclusion that the present secretary, Jewett P. Cummins, will voluntarily resign his position, to be succeeded by some other man of the president's choosing. If Mr. Tumulty resigns the president will be entirely voluntary re-election his act will be entirely voluntary.

Mrs. A. W. Fisher and daughters, Marie and Gertrude, returned this week from Salt Lake, where they have been visiting.

J. W. Englewood, Republican candidate for state treasurer, was in Twin Falls last week looking after his campaign interests.

Guy Martin, who four years ago ran for governor on the Progressive ticket, was in Twin Falls a couple of days last week.

Mr. and Mrs. William Wagner have returned from Long Beach, California, where they have been visiting with Mrs. Wagner's parents for the past few weeks.

Charlie Henderson arrived yesterday from California, where he has been in the employ of the sugar company to take up his duties at the local sugar factory.

E. S. Johnson, of the Johnson Auto Sales company, has returned from a several days' trip into the Halley country. Mr. Johnson reports the roads in excellent condition.

Mrs. Way, of Twin Falls, who has been visiting with her people for the past month, left yesterday for Rochester, Minnesota, to be with her father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. John W. Swanger.—Mackey Miner.

P. J. GROMMAN returned Friday from Pocatello, where he attended a conference of undertakers and embalmers. Mr. Gromman reports a most successful meeting with fifteen of the undertakers of southern Idaho in attendance.

LOCAL BREVITIES

Marriage License Issued—On October 14, to George F. Bemiller and Zephia L. Hobson, both of Twin Falls.

Child Buried Sunday—The infant of Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Hough, who died Saturday morning was buried Sunday.

Admitted to Hospital—Mrs. W. C. Williams was admitted to the Twin Falls hospital last week for an operation for appendicitis.

Big Crowd See Minstrels—The popularity of the old-time minstrel show was evidenced Saturday evening when the show tent was more than filled to capacity with people who enjoyed a long program of darky melodies and jokes.

knew how to crank the financial machine. And when anyone else tried to come away with broken bones. All this is now changed. Money expands and contracts as the people need it and there is no longer a cry that we are short of money to move crops.

"On July 17 of this year, President Wilson signed the rural credit law which will emancipate the farmers of the country from the money sharks and enable them to improve their property."

The speaker then described the operation of these financial laws with some detail and then turned to other issues. He said that he had no doubt of the personal honesty of Judge Hughes but he had been raised in the atmosphere of Wall street, and had his viewpoint. This was shown by his attitude while governor of New York when every act of progressive legislation was opposed by him. He vetoed the equal salary law, providing the same pay for teachers, men and women, for the same work; he vetoed the civil law; he vetoed the two-cent rate and sent a message to the legislature of New York opposing the income tax law. In therefore not surprising that he failed to understand and sympathize with the attitude of President Wilson in Mexico. President Wilson had sent a fleet to Vera Cruz to prevent the insult to the flag and to back up a demand made by Admiral Mayo. Suppose that the president had failed to do so, what a howl would have gone up from the same men who now say that he should not have backed up the admiral in this case. A noted Republican statesman had said the other day that he had been president and sent a force to Vera Cruz. It would have stayed there as long as he wanted to keep it there. Well, that was what happened in this case. We left when we got ready. The fleet stayed there until Huerta fled the country. He subsequently died. Would the attitude of the administration send the fleet after him to his present abode?

"Oh," some critic will say, "Wilson should not have signed the 'Adamson bill.'" The Adamson bill recognized an existing fact, the principle of the eight hour day. Practically the same law was enacted in 1868 by a Republican congress, but was inoperative because it carried no penalty. William McKinley when in the lower house of congress in 1890 introduced a similar measure from which many of the words in the Adamson bill were taken. Seventy-three Republicans, including Joe Cannon, were for the bill. The bill was in the lower house but when it got to the senate, the members of the upper house politics and all did so but brave old Bob La Follette.

The speaker ridiculed the plan of the Hughes committee in sending a committee of millionaire society women to the senate to tell the senators how here to vote. "Why," he said, "I am sure that any of you could pick out a dozen women in Twin Falls that could give them cards and apodes when it came to discussing political issues."

In closing Mr. Walters made an eloquent plea for the election of Governor Alexander and the state legislative tickets. The governor had done great things for the country, every step by a hostile legislature and opposed by a majority of the state boards, on which, by reason of the election of our state officers he stood alone. He had prevented one irrigation company from turning an unfinished plant over to the settlers when only two-fifths of the work had been completed and, if backed by other state officers and a Democratic legislature would secure many salutary reforms.

The address was applauded heartily from time to time during its delivery and the speaker was given an ovation at its closing.

The meeting was followed by the organization of a Wilson and Marshall club with a membership of more than 100. The following officers were elected: J. Robert Buchanan, president; B. F. Kinney, vice president; Taylor Gammon, secretary-treasurer; Dr. George, with Thomas Dwyer, E. H. Finch, W. F. Pike and J. E. Barrows, constitute an executive committee.

Will Manage Idaho—Wiltred McKay-Olsen yesterday took over the management of the Idaho theater from E. B. Williams, who will devote his entire time to the management of the Perrine hotel.

Exhibit Invention—G. W. Rice has perfected several inventions in connection with irrigation work and will have a demonstration of the inventions next Saturday just north of the ball park.

Perrine Cafe Opens—The Perrine cafe has again been opened under the management of E. B. Williams and as the old force of bores were discarded will again be able to give its patrons the usual good service.

Change Garage Location—The Seal and Flory Auto company has bought and moved into the location formerly occupied by the Central garage, on Second avenue south. Their stock of supplies and accessories for autos will be moved in a few days and the repair department is already installed.

Bootleggers Arrested—James M. Brown and Fred Smith were arrested Friday on the charge of bootlegging. Two suit cases of booze were discovered. Brown entered a plea of guilty and was given four months in jail by Judge Babcock. Smith entered a plea of not guilty and was bound over to the district court.

Artesian Woman Dies—Mrs. Sarah N. Gwin, aged 57 years, died Sunday, October 15, at her home at Artesian City of acute Bright's disease. The funeral was held yesterday at the Crosby chapel, Mrs. Harman, of the Christian church, officiating, and interment was in the Twin Falls cemetery. Mrs. Gwin leaves a husband and daughters to mourn her death.

Will Irrigate Battle—With representatives at work for several days the Payne Investment company of Nebraska, is canvassing the homestead settlers on the Hansen Butte, for the purpose of securing agreements with them to purchase a tract of 40,000 acres in that section by a system of pumping water from the Snake river. The legal representative for the investment company and he reports that very satisfactory progress has been made in the work of promoting the project.

not find it in one word of criticism for the federal bank reserve act. That is a piece of legislation that had been promised for years. Under the old system the money of the country were controlled by Wall street. Every year the cry went up that there was no money to move crops. We might just as well admit it. Panic could be brought on whenever it suited the Wall street magnates, regardless of which party was in power. There are men in this country who would not give a cent a day during the panic of 1873, and the subsequent depression under President Grant. Then everybody denounced Grant. Many in this hall he called the panic of 1893, during the administration of President Cleveland, when everybody abused Cleveland.

Within the memory of everybody in this hall, the panic of 1907 came upon the country during the administration of Roosevelt. You went to the bank to draw your money out and the cashier told you that he hoped that you would not try to draw it all, and finally into taking in its place a slip of paper authorized by law, which by common consent passed from hand to hand in the place of money. The trouble was with the machinery. Only Wall street

Le Clerq has fallen in love with a woman whose husband has seized her and carried her away to a lonely life in the forests. She leaves his house, and learns that her husband has been left as dead by a treacherous Indian guide. She marries Le Clerq.

But Devil Cabot is not dead. In a wild moment, he shoots those who have aided him, makes his escape and starts back to find his wife. A baby has been born to Adrienne and Jules. He enters their house, binds Jules, and seizes Adrienne. Off into the deep woods he goes again, taking with him his wife and her child.

For a few months, the poor girl lives with him. Then she strikes Devil across the head and he falls to the floor. She thinks he is dead. At the door, she meets Jules Le Clerq, who has been searching for her, ever since Cabot had taken her away. Jules carries her back to his house. But the excitement has been too much for her. She dies after the long trip, and leaves her girl in Jules' care. The first husband meets justice later at the hands of Le Clerq, when he accosts the daughter in a saloon. A struggle ensues between the father and Cabot, and Le Clerq is victorious.

For land subject to the reclamation extension act agreements have been made with the majority of the water right applicants and entrymen affected concerning to an increase of construction charges and for such land there shall be added to the construction charge the drainage cost of $12 per acre less the amount, if any, of any payments heretofore made on account of drainage and less also the amount, if any, heretofore added to the ple and make a flower garden of it. Returning to the question of protest by the property owners, Mayor Sewley asked Mr. Denton if he had any objection in this case, and brought forth the following reply: "I want to tell you that the present administration was elected on the pure water issue, and while I favor public improvements, I want to say that no bonds will carry in this town until the water issue is settled."

The council later passed the ordinance calling for the bond election.

In reply to a request for citizens to voice any opinion regarding the city hall, L. L. Breckenridge stated that he would vote for the hall bonds in any event, but had been asked to request the council if possible to provide an extra room that might be used for a gymnasium for the boy scouts. Others voiced the same sentiment. It was agreed to call a special meeting for Friday night and invite the architects of the city and others interested to be present and give their views.

Councilman Bracken said that the city was without a time; its records, some of them valuable, were scattered around in different places without protection, while $1450 rentals were paid when a like amount would almost pay the interest on the bonds required to erect a suitable city building.

A bill from F. M. Weinheimer for $135 was presented by C. M. Booth. Weinheimer claims to have served as night watchman for three months at the beginning of the administration. Mayor Sewley claims that he would show that he could make good and that he did not do as he agreed and moreover never reported. Mr. Booth said that he had been employed by the city and had received nearly ten times as much. As for as could be observed, they had done nothing and not reported. The mayor said that he was misinformed. The council asked that Mr. Weinheimer appear at the next council meeting.

Denton responded by holding in an opinion that the taxpayers on Eighth avenue on the side of the street abutting, contiguous to and contributory to the proposed site of the open lateral would have to pay for covering it and that the residents on both sides should pay for it. The report was ordered filed.

A petition from F. R. Cox for a sewer for lots one and two in the Jones addition was referred to City Engineer J. A. Bybee.

Water Clerk R. M. Williams and Water Commissioner Porter, asked for information about the manner in which the city should be paid for the use of meters. The matter was referred.

The council decided to move the light house office of Fourth street and Third avenue south to the corner of Fourth street and Sixth avenue west, also the light near the depot. Fifth and Fifth east.

A resolution was passed confirming the sale of Elm Park sewer bonds to the Lumberman's trust company.

PARKING CAUSED

F. Sprague all spoke in favor of the paving, the latter saying that it would cost the property owners less to install. Mr. Wilson quoted a number of those not present as being in favor of the parking.

Denton responded by saying that the residents of the district had been well organized. He ridiculed the statement that forty-four feet would be as efficient for traffic as sixty feet. Belleville opposing the parking, said that there was now parking on the avenue that was neglected by the city. This should be properly taken care of before more should be added. Mr. Denton said that he had been out at night and had seen no effort to get the people opposed to come out, as he understood that it was the matter in a protest, rather than the cost of signs that would come out. He could get a large number out, should the council adjourn for that purpose. He pointed out as an extra reason for refusing the parking that it would interfere with the view of the Washington street, and would up by saying that the matter of voting the bonds would be settled at the polls. He declared that Gold reading along Shoshone had no right to ask that parking be put in, as they proposed to take a street dedicated to all the peo-

WHAT AN ACRE SHOULD YIELD.
The largest wheat crop in the department of agriculture has record of is a hundred and seven bushels to the acre on eighteen acres in the state of Washington. The second largest is a hundred and eight bushels to the acre on twelve acres in Idaho. The average yield for the country last year was seventeen bushels.

The largest yield of oats is a hundred and eighty-four bushels to the acre on eight acres in Washington. Second, a hundred and sixty-six bushels on eight acres in Colorado. The average for the United States is thirty-eight bushels.

The largest yield of white potatoes is seven hundred and ninety bushels from an acre in California; second is seven hundred and forty-three bushels in Washington. The average is ninety-six bushels.

Such comparisons might be extended to nearly any crop, but the list of agricultural staples. True, the prize yields are sometimes not commercially practical, for they involve quantities of care and labor that would be impossible on a large scale with anything like the present organization of agriculture. But there is a link in the medium between the prize yield and the average that means no mortgage and a good bank account for the man who bids it.—Saturday Evening Post.

TOO DANGEROUS TO BE SAFE.

IN VIEW of the nervous activity excited among the patrolling cruizers belonging to the allied powers off the United States coast by the appearance of the German U-53, it becomes imperative necessary to warn them to look before they shoot, lest perchance they pop off the cover of an American submarine by mistake. Danger to United States vessels from this source is much more imminent just now than from the elusive German destroyers. The latter may be safely presumed to make sure of the nationality of their target before they loose their shaft. All periscopes, on the other hand, look alike to the watcher on the cruiser's bridge, who realizes that he risks destruction in taking time to make too many inquiries, and who is therefore tempted to shoot first and ask questions afterwards. The safest policy for U. S. submarines while the British and French patrols are so furiously chasing up and down the coast, figuratively with their finger on the trigger, is to expose themselves as much above the surface as possible, so that there can be no mistaking their identity. It would be ungrateful for this government to have to fold, as was the widow of an innocent man done to death by lynchers, "Madam, we've hanged the wrong party—the John's on us"—Deseret News.

DRUNK AND DIDN'T KNOW.

A MAN who had committed a drunken assault upon a woman was let off at Springfield, the other day, with a sentence of two years for one of the offenses and one year for the other, the plea having been made in his behalf, as we are told in the report of the case by the Springfield Republican, that he was so much under the influence of liquor that he did not know what he was doing. We are not informed in what way the drunkenness may have been assumed to palliate the main offense, which in many states of the Union would have been punished with instant death in reality, it should be regarded as aggravation, if drunkenness be held to excuse crime, those who have criminal propensities may well adopt it as a convenient cover. "I will be drunk," the offender may say, "and then it will not matter much what I do; they will let me off. The care of the offending is carried in the drunkard's case.—Boston Transcript.

COURAGE AND CANDOR.

HE WOULD be a cheerful person indeed who could fail to give the women of the Hughes train credit for two extremely refreshing qualities in a presidential campaign. We mean both courage and candor. When Miss Frances Kellor yesterday stood up before an audience of labor men and expressed her unfavorable opinion of Samuel Campers, president of the American Federation of Labor, she might not have been playing good politics; she might not have been right as to Mr. Campers, but she certainly had her courage and her candor in full action.

By the same token the women are making no attempt whatever to disguise the source of the financing of the woman's special. A statement issued by Mr. Hart, Republican campaign manager for the west, frankly gives the list of lady backers of the enterprise—the list beginning with the name of Mrs. Daniel Coughlin.

In brief, the women of the special are not trying to travel under false colors, no matter what they may be doing.—Chicago Herald.

DO YOU WANT WAR?

MR. HUGHES and the Republican speakers in general have said a great deal about President Wilson's "watchful waiting" and have censured the president in very harsh terms for not rushing into Mexico. It is well known that the Mexican situation was an inherited legacy from Mr. Taft's administration. President Wilson found the country without a government, with the people disposed to do many things to annoy the United States, and upon the flimsy pretext some Americans wanted a force sent into Mexico to wage some kind of war with that people, with whom this country had no quarrel.

The United States could have done it, and we could have won, as we have done in every war carried on since the Stars and Stripes. Why what would have been the result? An overwhelming public debt, boys' bones bleaching on the soil of the desert country, vacant chairs and sobbing mothers. Why should we go into Mexico? To protect the investments of those who have

BOOSTS SWEETLEY AND CROSBY.

San Diego, Calif.
Editor THE TIMES, Twin Falls.
Once more a presidential election is on—and comes for the first time in 50 years. I have voted for every Republican commencing with General Grant's first term, and ending with Taft, in 1903.

But, 40 years of omen could not have pulled me up to the polls and made me vote for the beneficiary of the 1912 steal. But four years have wiped out some of the disgrace of the political steal of the century and all parties are trying to put up voters men for office from which the better ought to choose the most competent and worthy.

Two men (if candidates) ought to receive the support of all temperance people in the state of Idaho, for they have done much for the cause, and one while in the legislature was always right on every sound measure and opposed to all corrupt measures and attacks. The other a worker in church and temperance work and for the betterment of society in all things. I refer especially to M. J. Sweetley and C. J. Crosby. They are both honorable and competent. Vote for them regardless of politics. It will be a credit to you and they, if elected, will be an honor to Twin Falls county and the state of Idaho.

Respectfully yours,
S. D. CAMP,

IDAHO EDITOR ARRESTED ON CHARGE OF LIBEL

CALDWELL.—Following in the wake of the publication of an editorial published in last week's issue of the Tribune, of this city, which is alleged to have libeled County Attorney H. A. Griffith in connection with commitment of E. Z. Huntberry of this city, recently arrested for alleged crime against nature and against woman proceedings in the case were pending, to the Idaho asylum at Blackfoot, John Davis, the editor of the Tribune, was today arrested upon the charge of criminal libel. The warrant was sworn out by H. A. Griffith before Justice McVoy and Davis' bond was fixed at $1000, which he gave. Among the signers of the bond are Senator H. C. Baldridge of Pocatello, and W. H. Redway of this city, who are among the most prominent citizens of the county.

THE MUTUAL GIRL AND HER AUNTIE

LUCILLE: Confound this old sink.

AUNTIE: What is the matter now, Lucille? You have been grumbling all morning.

LUCILLE: Well, if you had to use this old sink as much as I do, you would realize that we are all out of date and a way back in Noah's time. I don't only think it is inconvenient and drudgery to use this old thing, but I think it is positively unhealthy. It smells of the wood and old filthy water all the time. Why can't we have a new one?

AUNTIE: Well, Lucille, you have been complaining about long enough about that sink, so I guess we will invest in a new one. You go down this afternoon to the Ballantyne Plumbing & Heating Co., and pick out the kind you want. Tell them we want it right away.

MORAL: DON'T NEGLECT YOUR PLUMBING. IT IS DANGEROUS. TYPHOID AND A GOOD MANY OTHER DISEASES BREED FROM BAD SINKS.

CORRECTS WRONG IMPRESSION OF CANADIAN OFFICIALS

Disclaiming any intention of Canadian customs officials to be discourteous to American tourists, Commissioner Herbert Culbert, of the Victoria and Island Development association, of Victoria, B. C., has taken steps to correct the impression which arose when the famous Maxwell non-stop car was seized in Vancouver, B. C., by the Canadian authorities, and is still under litigation.

Without going into the merits of the Maxwell case, the commissioner declares Canadian officials must have been convinced that something had been done contrary to the ordinary usage, or the car would not have been seized.

GENERAL ADVERTISING

A CHEW OF "SPEAR HEAD" SATISFIES

Its Mellow Sweet Flavor Not Found in Any Other Tobacco

TASTES LIKE RIPE FRUIT

Real tobacco hunger can be thoroughly satisfied only by a good juicy chew—and the best and juiciest chew can be obtained only in the form of high-grade plug tobacco.

Spear Head represents the highest form of plug tobacco production—the very best chew that can be made—the last word in tobacco satisfaction.

The choice leaf in Spear Head is selected from the cream of the red Burley crop. In this wonderful leaf the natural juices are developed to the supreme degree, and the luscious, fruit-sweet flavor is in a state of absolute perfection.

Every chew of Spear Head brings over with it appetizing, wholesome tastiness which lives up the appetite and comforts the entire system.

Spear Head is the most satisfying chew that it's possible to make. Try a 5c or 10c cut. Sold by dealers everywhere.
