

Sees New Interest In Game Protection

State Warden John Salisbury Expresses Appreciation and Sentiments as to Proper Policy.

People of Twin Falls and vicinity are in closer touch with the game situation than ever before and are taking more active part in game matters, according to John Salisbury, deputy state game warden. This has caused a statement expressing appreciation of co-operation in this regard.

Evidence of this increased interest is seen by Mr. Salisbury in authentic reports coming to department officers daily of possible violations of game laws and regulations. These reports, Mr. Salisbury stated, are being looked into carefully and in the greater number of cases it has been found that there have been violations of the state game laws and the offenders have been brought to account. In no case, Mr. Salisbury stated, has there been an indication on the part of the informant to shield anyone. This has caused a statement, taken as an indication that the general public as well as the sportsmen are interested in the movement for the conservation of our natural resources and of the big out-of-doors in general.

Mr. Salisbury's statement follows: Most of the hunters are willing to pay for what they get, and will if they have a chance to get an even start with the general public. So let's let the game and fish alone in closed season, that they may rear their young, then we will not only have shooting and angling, but something to shoot and angle for when the season is open. And don't lose sight of the fact that after all the man with a fish and game license is the man who is paying the bill, and when we stop to think of it, we will know that this particular natural resource as well as all others, belongs to you and me and our children and the state through the department of fish and game which is acting as custodians only for you and me to conserve it, we are bound to think of the matter as a protective measure for posterity. Think it over, thank you for your co-operation.

CALIFORNIA DISEASE OF HOOF AND MOUTH IS ABOUT OVER NOW

WASHINGTON, Aug. 25 (AP)—California has been practically freed from the foot and mouth disease among its livestock, Dr. John R. Mohler, chief of the bureau of animal industry, has reported to Secretary Wallace after a personal inspection of the regions visited by the livestock plague.

Of the 16 counties involved, 14 are considered entirely free from infection, another is probably free and the final one, Tulame, contains only a small but baffling center of suspected infection. Eradication work is continuing actively.

IDAHO

If the word "super-production" had not been sadly abused and misused, we would be sorely tempted to apply it to Rudolph Valentino's latest Paramount picture, "Monsieur Beaucaire," which is due at the Idaho tomorrow for the balance of the week. For if ever a picture deserved superlatives it surely is this screen play, which Forrest Halsey adapted from Booth Tarkington's gloriously human story and which reaches the silver sheet via directorial guidance of Sidney Clcott.

AT THE LAVERING.

Wild-eyed and barefoot religious fanatics who saunter benignly across a pit 40 feet wide filled with burning embers to test their faith in their gods. Such is one of the amazing scenes depicted in Burr Nickle's unusual picture "The Whispering Hope," at the Laving.

This strange sight was filmed by Nickle in a forbidden Singapore temple, the first movie ever presented of the famous fire dance indulged in annually by the natives. Working themselves into a frenzy by prayers and dances, these little black men who believe that if their prayers are heard they will not be burned, plunge into the fire and walk through it to test their faith. Strangely enough, some of them go through the terrible ordeal unscathed.

A particularly bright spot in the evening's entertainment was the dance.

VALOR CREATING DRUG IS FOUND

American Pharmaceutical Association to be Told of New Discovery Made.

COLUMBUS, Ohio, Aug. 25 (AP)—Results of a disquieting study of a recently discovered drug which is said to destroy fear and create valor are to be laid before the convention of the American Pharmaceutical Association in Buffalo this week by Professor Stanford of the Cleveland school of pharmacy, according to an announcement made Saturday by the Ohio State Pharmaceutical Association. A chemical test of the drug is being made in New York.

Comes From Vine.
The drug, which has been defined as the root and rhizome of banister, is a small, woody vine growing in the central basin of the Amazon. It also is called ayahuasca. It was brought to the attention of North American pharmacists by Dean H. H. Basky of the Columbus university of pharmacy, who accompanied the Mulford expedition in its recent exploration of the Amazon basin. In Bolivia the drug is used merely as an exhilarating and a stimulating beverage, like tea and coffee. Its use is limited and the amount is small. Its action always is made with the addition of a certain leaf, but just what this leaf is and what it does has not been determined.

Bathing in Ocean Is Barred by Law To Turkish Women

Constantinople Authorities Rule Bathing for Native Fair Sex Must Not Be Permitted.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Aug. 25 (AP)—Turkish women must not bathe in the ocean, according to a recent edict of the local authorities, and the police have been given strict orders to see that the decree is given effect. But this is what troubles the policemen: how can they determine her nationality when a woman has donned a bathing suit? Non-Turkish women may bathe as before. Turkish women are more and more assuming western European habits and dress and bathing-suits when worn by Turkish women look no different than when worn by a non-Turk. If the bather a Turk, liable to arrest, is the question before the policeman, or a non-Turk to whom he will have to apologize for mistaking her nationality.

Work Will Commence Soon on Ships at Cardington and Also at Howden.

CARDINGTON, England, Aug. 25 (AP)—To make room for the laying down of Britain's new giant airship of 51,000,000 cubic feet capacity, the old R 33 is being conditioned for an experimental flight to India, where a mooring mast and gas generating plant are to be erected. At the same time that work commences on the big ship at Cardington, another of similar size will be begun at Howden. Both of these immense airships will be approximately 700 feet long, 110 feet in diameter, and capable of carrying 200 passengers at 80 miles an hour on a non-stop flight of 3,000 miles.

It is stated that such a vessel cruising at 40 miles an hour will be able to remain in the air for nearly three weeks without alighting to replenish fuel. Steel is being considered as a possible substitute for duralumin in the structure, and engines that will burn a mixture of hydrogen and kerosene are being experimented with.

COSTLY ERROR GIVES CONTEST TO POCATELLO

Bears Win 4-2 in Spite of Splendid Support Given McGavin; Ostrander's Batting and Lehrbas's Fielding Excel.

When Mullen missed an easy grounder in the ninth inning Sunday Coe's Blues lost a tight game to the Pocatello Bears who chalked up their fifth victory with a score of 4 to 2.

Both teams played tight ball until the ninth inning with the score tied 2 all. With one man out in the ninth McGavin issued a pass which was touched by a double by Laidy and filled the bases with a second walk. At this critical moment "Flash" Mullen was given a chance for a sure double play on an easy roller by Reese, instead his glory was changed to disgrace, the ball went through him to centerfield, Phillips and Laidy scurried across the rubber for the winning scores. Mullen partially redeemed his error on the next two plays, the first a splendid running catch of Hughes' fly ball of second and the next a snappy assist to Seilly.

Ostrander with four singles in four trips to the plate was the batting star of the day. "Oaky" drove in Russell twice for the Blues' scores. Laidy covering the whole infield, making long running catches and winging the ball with unfailing accuracy for assists was the fielding sensation of the game. Phillips for Pocatello outpitched McGavin who received superior support for the day. The Bear twirler had ten strikeouts to his opponents 2.

Blues Make Double Play The opening innings were excellent demonstrations of fast baseball with Laidy cracking the first ball for a single over second base. Russell next featured when he caught the runner trying to steal second. A double play followed Pocatello's second hit. Seilly to Lehrbas, who made a return peg to first, completed the half inning.

The Blues drew first blood in the third when two errors by Seilly and Gerroth allowed Hill to cross the plate. In the latter half of the inning, however, the Blues matched the count when Phillips' error allowed Russell to reach first and Ostrander's single brought him home. Fast fielding brought McGavin out of a hole in the fourth without a score and three hits and a walk gave Twin Falls a single run lead in the last of the inning. The only earned run of the game by the Blues, matched the Twins' run in the fifth and no more breaks came until the ninth, when Mullen's error led in two runs.

The last half of the ninth saw the Blues make a last effort to tie the score when Seilly after fouling three times in a row reached first on a single, a remarkable catch by Grayson of Mullen's drive made two outs and Russell tied the single. With two men on base Coe's pitcher sent in Haviland to pinch hit for McGavin. Haviland disappointed the fans by grounding out to Pettit. This afternoon the Blues will meet the Pocatello team for the championship of the county on the local grounds.

that can be done for the west.
"This is an age of organization and combinations. The railroad organization is the biggest and most dangerous in the United States, and I sometimes wonder if it is not stronger than the government, by the things it is able to do. We must organize the west and pass the Gooding bill. We have a great fight. The railroads maintain a great lobby in Washington.
"Nature has been especially kind to the intermountain states with their great natural resources and all we ask is just a chance to do the same thing in the way of development other communities have been given an opportunity to do. We can do nothing without assistance. We must go to the south and urge them to be with us. The senators of two great industrial states, New York and Pennsylvania, were with us in the senate, and I know the bill can be passed in the house even though the interstate commerce commission of the house of representatives is almost tied by the railroads."

Harlan T. Payton, president of the Spokes Chamber of Commerce, told the meeting that business men of Spokane were taking up the long and short haul fight and were enthusiastically behind the association's efforts.
Operation of the transcontinental boat lines under the supervision of the interstate commerce commission, instead of the United States shipping board, was advocated by Hugh H. Williams, Santa Fe, N. M., chairman of the state corporation commission of New Mexico.
A resolution on the passage of the Gooding bill in the senate was unanimously adopted.

JOHNSON TWIRLS NO-HIT CONTEST

Veteran Pitcher Wins 2 to 0 Over St. Louis; Boston Captures 11-Inning Contest.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 25 (AP)—Holding St. Louis hitless, Johnson today pitched Washington to a 2 to 0 victory in the first game of a scheduled double header which was halted by rain after seven innings. The second game was called off on account of wet grounds. It was Johnson's sixth scoreless game of the season—his 17th shutout victory of his career.
Davis forced the first run by leaving a base on balls with the bases filled in the third. The other runs were due to McNeely's single and a triple by Golin in the seventh.

LET'S CONTRACT FOR FILER GAP

State Highway Department Accepts C. A. Robinson's Bid on 1.8 Miles of Road Work.

Contract for road construction to bridge a gap of 1.8 miles on the Old Oregon Trail state highway west of Filer, was awarded Tuesday by the state highway commission to C. A. Robinson of Twin Falls, whose bid of $20,799.71 was lower by $71.50 than that of the Filer highway district, the only other bidder, and which submitted a bid of $21,609.30. Bids were opened and the contract awarded at Filer by H. W. Gregory, state director of highways.

In accordance with specifications 4777 yards of gravel will be used in construction of the road, which is to have a rock base. The work, Mr. Robinson stated, will occupy 60 working days, and will be begun at once. Mr. Robinson was the successful bidder for work in progress on the Old Oregon Trail between Hamman and Burley.

To Span Road Place.

Gap in the highway west of Filer for improvement of which the contract was awarded Monday, is one that in seasons of wet weather has become impassable. Last winter winter attempt to move heavy motor vehicles over this gap was prohibited and the state highway commission stationed men with teams at either end of the gap to drag other cars through the mire.

Improvement of this section of the road has been delayed for a long time because of illness of Mr. Robinson, the state department and the Filer highway district in whose boundaries it is situated. Solution of this difficulty was worked out at a conference early last spring by Governor Moore and state highway officials with the district's directors at Filer.

FUSION ISSUE PUTS BOURBONS IN 2 CAMPS

the selection of candidates for state offices, T. J. Quarles, Kootenai county, is mentioned for secretary of state, and with M. H. Eastman, Cabinet, candidate for attorney general, in the only man mentioned for state posts except on the supreme bench.

Rice Sure of Nomination.

Democrats are all agreed on the non-partisan judiciary, John C. Rice, Caldwell, former chief justice of the supreme court, will, without doubt, be the nominee of the party for justice of the supreme court. While many Bourbons thought it would be best to endorse the "progressive" candidate, J. B. Eldridge, Boise attorney, there were others who said they were "democrats" and would not stand for fusion on any office.

Delegates from Boise late Monday night reported that there were certain factions in the labor element that would oppose the former chief justice because of his concurrence in an opinion outlawing picketing striking union workers in Boise. How general this feeling is among class delegates said they did not know.

Some democrats were much upset late Monday night over reports from Boise that H. P. Randall, generally considered a third party candidate for the governorship, had been agreed upon as the fusion nominee for the senate, with Freese for the governorship. Freese, a leader of the last legislature, for lieutenant governor, and the rest of the state ticket will be selected by the check-board method, by both conventions. Bourbon leaders here Monday night refused to deny that such a plan was likely, but credited it to the anti-Bourbon group in the third party.

The state convention will be called to order at noon today at the high school auditorium. Failure of a large number of delegates to arrive Monday night, left the question of a temporary organization still in the air. Members of both the Moore and Freese groups will cause this morning on chairman and secretary.

Platform Planks Forecast.

There was little discussion of platform planks Monday night, but practically all delegates agreed that there should be a direct primary law, a non-partisan judiciary, abolishment of the cabinet form of government, a bank guaranty act and some sort of a resolution on the public utility commission either favoring abolition or curtailment of that body's powers. Some action also will be taken, leaders said, on the recent rate hearings of the Idaho Power company.

Work ahead of the convention includes nominations to be made of democratic candidates for United States senators, two representatives in congress, and governor and other state officials, including lieutenant governor, attorney general, auditor, treasurer, superintendent of public instruction, inspector of mines and presidential electors. The convention also will draft and adopt the platform for the party in Idaho.

Organization of the democratic state committee, members of which were elected at the several county conventions last week, will take place at a meeting will be held here during the convention.

Sablin, who in the future will devote his entire attention to management of the Lavering theater and Danceland pavilion. Mr. Logan is accompanied by his family and expects to make his home permanently in Twin Falls.

PRE-CONVENTION NOTES

An interesting set of possibilities is laid bare through recent press dispatches from Boise wherein it is set forth that certain leaders among the Democrats and the so-called Progressive party would agree upon a set of candidates for office who would receive the combined votes of the followers of both schools of politics.

Such a state of affairs would be a most extraordinary development. It would simply constitute an announcement that neither party contained any element whatever of adhesion to party principles but, on the other hand, were out solely for office, with political jobs as the principal or only object of both.

A movement of this kind would probably look good to Mr. Ray McKaig because this is McKaig's kind of politics.

But that the leaders of the Idaho Democracy would consider such a scheme for a single moment, is unthinkable.

Varms of this kind should come under the head of "Important if True."

Mr. Samuels is no longer the unadmitted head of the Idaho Progressives. Mr. Johnesse, state chairman of the party, in a letter embodying his resignation of the post declares that Samuels as governor "would be a calamity" and that if the Progressive party were successful, at the end of two years there would be enough left of the State House to "make a dog step."

Mr. Johnesse should know. For some years now he has been intimately associated with the men who constitute the inner council of the party. He is probably as close to Ray McKaig and as well posted on the McKaig plans and methods as any man in the State. He cannot possibly be accused of speaking without authority.

Comment is, to a certain degree, superfluous. Mr. Johnesse has certainly been in a position to know whereof he speaks.

It has been a good many years since Twin Falls had the honor of entertaining a Democratic State convention and, politics aside, it is to be hoped that the rank and file of delegates will leave well satisfied with the choice of a convention city.

Twin Falls as a whole should aid in welcoming these visitors. Those of them who care to, and who have time to spend a few hours in sightseeing should be given every opportunity. The City is honored by its selection, and its citizens should be glad to do their part towards making the affair a success, insofar as this is within their power.

Just what may be expected of the Republican Convention in Idaho Falls is more or less of an uncertainty. Certain planks which have been discussed at random and at intervals may or may not precipitate a fight. But in the main, the convention itself should be a quiet affair. There are not many contests of notable importance and there is no question at all upon any point or points involving any larger question of party action.

There will be two days of convention activity and then a gradual warming up of the political pot against the day of election. The feature of outstanding interest in Idaho politics, from the standpoint of the average man, is not to be found in the Republican camp this time.

Anyhow, may victory perch upon the banner of those forces in all parties whose members stand for cleaner things and a better day, politically. May the present politicians—the demagogues—be the would-be grafter get his order.

ly and honest government stand supreme upon the rock of unselfish service in the interests of Idaho and her people.

Politically, for a long time past, we have been a most unhappy crew.

Breakfast Food
"Matrimonially Speaking"

By Mrs. HUGH MCKAY

My husband pulls the buttons off his clothes just a little faster than I can fasten them.

He never can understand why the buttons I sew on won't stay on, but that's because he never looks in a mirror while he's undressing.

He pulls his feet off like a man who's stripping to jump into the water and save some one from drowning.

And he always rips his shirt off as though a bee were inside it.

Every time he changes his clothes there's a shower of buttons all over the bedroom floor.

I don't know what I can do to help matters unless I get an automatic needle and some wire thread and go to it.

He would have been an easy husband to look after in the good old days when the men wore warm shirts—and he couldn't possibly have pulled any rivets off.

Tomorrow, my wife can't see why a woman shouldn't smoke if she wants to.

Artesian Wells

A sporting well bored down to a point, usually at a great depth, where the water pressure, owing to the conformation of the geological strata, is so great as to force the water out at the surface, is known as an artesian well; the term is often applied, however, to any deep bored well, as for petroleum and even where pumping is necessary, as in an ordinary driven well.

Puritans and Pilgrims

A distinction must be made between the Puritans who settled Plymouth and the Pilgrims. The Puritans sought to reform the Church of England. The Pilgrims were Separatists from the first, who had already left England and formed an independent congregation in Leyden, whence they came to New England.

Daddy's Evening Fairy Tale

By Mary Graham Bonner

MR. RAT

Mr. Rat straightened his whiskers and decided he would take a run.

"It's a nice evening for a run," he said. "I shall go through these thills here and then get through the little hole I have made and get into the people's kitchen."

"It's quite true they never invited me to come and pay them a visit."

"That is why I shall go when I think they have left the kitchen."

"If a rat waited for an invitation from people a rat would be kept waiting a long time."

"I have often thought to my rat self that it is rude of them not to send me invitations."

"Sometimes I've heard one of the children speaking to some little friend, and they have said:

"Wait and we shall ask Mother if you can stay for supper."

"And they have asked their mother and the mother has said yes and the little friend has stayed for supper."

"But they never say:

"Mamma, may we have Mr. Rat here this evening and offer him some good food?"

"No, they never say that."

"Oh, well, I don't let it hurt my feelings. At the same time, as my family have all said, if we let our feelings be hurt we wouldn't have much of a time."

"For no one says anything particularly nice about us—We aren't very clean, or anything like that, and we do pick up our food and make a great deal of noise and trouble."

"Still, there are no rat schools and rats never learn any better—their mothers don't bother to teach them manners, either."

"I do believe I will have something to eat tonight. I think I smelled nice Johnny-cake a-coming."

The people came into the kitchen. Mr. Rat had just escaped into his hole.

"Oh, look at the Johnny-cake!" they cried. "I've never partly eaten and nibbled at, and it is all broken up into crumbs and looks dreadful, and it did look so good!"

"They were very much about it. Then some one—some one—the mother of the family said, 'For I never forget to turn out the gas when I'm through the cooking. I'm very, very careful about that.'"

"But they looked—and one of the gas jets had been turned on and the gas was coming out and it was lucky they had seen it in time. Then they knew that the rat was the guilty one. And they laid a trap for the rat, for he was both a thief and a dangerous character."

Remarkable Mines

Among the most extraordinary mines in the world are those in the Humber and Colorado hills. There are to be found the only open-mouthed iron mines to be seen anywhere. The iron ore is so close to the surface that all the railroad hauls to do so to take trucks and haul out whatever ore is planned.

It is unusual to find waste of other valuable minerals in the surface.

The diamond and ruby mines furnish exceptions. The commoner minerals are often buried deep.

But Ellen, twisting with wretched thoughts, lay awake for hours. At first she mused only upon the bitterness of the simple fact: Gibbs had selected a studio without any appeal to the judgment of his wife. Ah, how different that was from the choosing of the last studio, the blessed little apartment on "Madame la Montagne"; she had been on his arm then, examining over rents, dimpling the dark stalks they climbed and climbed and climbed after the conchoidal flow they had exulted over the boxes from home, over the placing of every chair and rug, and how they had, called forth, hungry, and tired, to be fed and soothed and caressed by the city of romance and beauty!

These thoughts were sad enough, and tears began to creep down Ellen's cheeks, and her head to ache with her efforts at self-control. But presently a fresh thought came, and the tears dried. Ellen's heart began to beat hard again with agony and fear.

Lillian had come into town the night before, Tuesday night, to dine and spend the night with friends, and Gibbs and his father were to take the car to the Weber's morning, and never for her. Lillian had been originally included in this plan, but had excused herself because Tommy's nurse was not well, and his mother was enjoying a monopoly of his care for a few days. And on Wednesday morning, when Lillian had asked Gibbs to take her to the city without him, he had really preferred the idle country drive with Ellen and Tommy. He had telephoned Lillian at her friend's hotel that Gibbs had the car. If she wanted it she was to telephone Gibbs at the club. Now Ellen realized the sudden conviction that they had met in the morning, and lunched together, and hunted for studios all afternoon.

She dared not ask him: it was to ask him to confess to a lie. More than that, it was to kill her confidence in him with one blow. But Ellen never knew moments came after that. She looked at Lillian's beautiful, apple-cheeked face the next day, vainly trying to read it. Her heart began to beat sufficiently when her father-in-law chanced to ask his wife, at luncheon, how she had spent the previous day. It was more accident that took Lillian's quick eyes to Gibbs before she answered. She had shopped with Mildred, and had sent her off at one o'clock, and had had a sort of luncheon tea all by herself.

"You should have come straight home; that was a living visit," the old man said. Lillian smiled at him affectionately for her only answer. Ellen felt that she never appreciated the safety and the power of silence.

"You had no trouble getting hold of the car?" Josselyn, senior, probed suddenly.

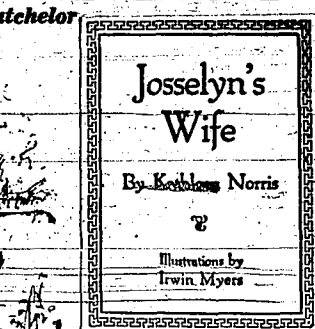

Again she glanced at Gibbs. The again was silent. Gibbs was the next speaker, with a cheerful and general inquiry:

"Who's doing what this afternoon?"

The studio was formally opened in September, with a tea. The artist's pretty, blue-eyed little wife was present on this occasion suitably, may, charmingly, dressed, chatting with neglected guests, keeping a watchful eye upon tea-cups, playing her part well. His father was also there, a handsome and dignified figure, erect, white-haired, obviously full of pride in his son. The little dark-haired boy was there, for a few minutes, keeping close to the musicians, amusing the ladies with his pretty French.

But it was his beautiful young stepmother who shared with Gibbs Josselyn's interest in his guests, who, with a look of romantic and fascinating, clung to him suitably. Lillian was at her loveliest, radiant, smiling, the mysterious and astonishing perfection of her face enhanced by the Juliet-like little cap of pearls that held her glorious hair in place, and by the rich colors of her gown. She wore a marvelous garment of old brocade, in which fiery colors and heavy mingled with gold and silver threads, and from her shoulders a filmy black overgarment floated down, caught with a bracelet of pearls at either wrist, and weighted loosely at its hem by two emeralds in pearls. Lillian said that she had had the robe for years without an opportunity to wear it; this was her opportunity, and she made the most of it. Anything more lovely than the picture she made in it, even heartless Ellen had to admit she dared not imagine.

Wherever Lillian moved, the crowd swayed as if her feet were magnets. The silver head, and the tall, trim, built figure of the hero of the hour, her rich, amused smile, with its un-

Lillian was at her loveliest, radiant, smiling, the mysterious and astonishing perfection of her face enhanced by the Juliet-like little cap of pearls that held her glorious hair in place, and by the rich colors of her gown. She wore a marvelous garment of old brocade, in which fiery colors and heavy mingled with gold and silver threads, and from her shoulders a filmy black overgarment floated down, caught with a bracelet of pearls at either wrist, and weighted loosely at its hem by two emeralds in pearls. Lillian said that she had had the robe for years without an opportunity to wear it; this was her opportunity, and she made the most of it. Anything more lovely than the picture she made in it, even heartless Ellen had to admit she dared not imagine.

Wherever Lillian moved, the crowd swayed as if her feet were magnets. The silver head, and the tall, trim, built figure of the hero of the hour, her rich, amused smile, with its un-documents of history, of suggestion, was the foundation of the conversation. And when she turned to Gibbs, as she was constantly turning, and asked him a simple question and received his answering monosyllable, it would have been a long time since he had not instantly perceived the thrilling current of awakening passion that ran between the two. His lightest word to her was fraught with its most fleeting glance betrayed. At the end of the long three hours when the guests had lingered over tea, and when she stood by the fireplace, tired, drooping, superb, barely raising her eyes as she spoke to him, they might have been alone in the world. What did he say as he bent toward her, what did his smiling eyes say?

Ellen did not know, or care. The words were nothing, the look was nothing, it was the trembling intensity with which they charged them that ate into her soul like acid upon a plate. None of them was sane now, Ellen perhaps the least of the three. She was burning with an agony of jealousy and anger and a sense of more painful than any actual fire would have been. She was conscious of Gibbs and Lillian every instant of the day.

They were not often alone together, after all. A moment in the long drawing room, and then, at the few sentences murmured in her ear as Gibbs crossed the tennis court on a week in the city; this was the most. Even for this there must be endless contriving and tedious intrigue. Ellen could not, for all that, see above the what fact was more innocent chance, and what was deliberate arrangement.

Sometimes, watching—watching, watching, forlorn and lonely, she longed to tear aside the veil of kindness and happiness in which her sister was wrapped, to see all this herself, to know what was more innocent chance, and what was deliberate arrangement.

"Gibbs, Gibbs, my darling! How much of it is true—how much of it is my wretched imagination? Have you yet yourself come to care for her—have you forgotten me? I am your wife—I am your past and present and future. I am all this behind us and go somewhere where we may be poor again, and you shall paint, and I will mend and cook, and all the old joy will come back to us again!"

She dared not say it. What woman ever did dare? She had lost so much, she dared not risk more. Ellen never had much self-confidence, she lost it all now. She became afraid. Lillian could take Gibbs' love away from her, perhaps Lillian could make him leave her and Tommy completely. Perhaps Lillian wanted more than his passing admiration. Well, and it so, what could she do? Lillian, disheartened, crushed little Ellen?

Gibbs was entirely unconscious of her sufferings, he was almost unconscious of her existence. He had never forgotten his wife for his business or his art, as many men do, but in the intensity of his new passion Ellen was completely lost to him. So might a man feel if he were suddenly stretched.

Gibbs knew that Ellen was there, just as Tommy and Lizzie and his father were there, in the house at Wheatley Hills, but his senses responded to nothing but Lillian. He talked to his father, to Lizzie, to Ellen, but he never looked at her, and even played with the child, but all the time his mind was busy anticipating the next moment he might have alone with her, or remembering the last.

A moment came when he had her all to himself. One moment, but it was as long as a lifetime. They were in the studio, Lillian and her husband had called to bring him home, and Lillian had run up the stairs, and come in upon him in the dusk. His subject, one of the winter's prospective debutantes, had gone away with her maid, and he was alone. Lillian, with her bright hair trimly covered by her motor-hat, and her figure lost in the folds of a loose, soft, mustard-colored coat, had come close to him, had stood staring at the picture with her mysterious eyes.

"Like it? It's wonderful!"

"Like it? Gibbs said, trying to seem indifferent to her praise."

"What you might have done—what you might have done in a different environment!" Lillian said, as if to herself, to tie you down to domestic duties—"

The soft, deep voice died away into silence. It was twilight in the studio, the end of a wonderful Indian summer day was dying in the park. A cooler breeze than the city had known for many hours drifted in through the studio windows, faintly stirring the air. Lillian came gaily from the street, where the River Shannon's flowing—"

Gibbs was perhaps a little tired. The day had been long and hot and dry. He glanced at Lillian, all fragrance and freshness, ready to melt away into another world of greenness and silence and beauty. Her frail white blouse was open at the throat, a faint perfume disengaged itself from her, and through his sleeve, he felt the delicious warmth of the hand she had laid at it unconsciously, upon his arm.
