CRITICISM OF THE PRESS.

There are two perennial criticisms directed against newspapers. One is that they publish too much about crime and vice. The other is that they are un dependable as regards facts.

Suppression of unpleasant news, it was maintained by Herbert Bayard Swaps of the New York World, is unsound because journalism is "life reflected in ink," and to make a truthfulness it "must partake of the ugliness as well as the beauty."

As for inaccuracies and allied faults, O. H. Dennis of the Chicago Daily News told the convention: "When you begin to inquire as to who are the gentlemen who attack the newspapers, you are surprised to find how little they know about newspapers."

Here is a method of calling such critics to account, suggested by an editor who has often tried it: "Take the critic who insists that the newspapers are always full of errors and misrepresentations, and invite him to sit down with you and check up any representative daily paper. Ask him to run through it column by column, item by item, line by line, figure by figure, and indicate anything that he knows is wrong, or anything he questions, and then check up again later on when there has been opportunity to obtain authentic verification or denial of the facts as given."

Never in the experience of the editor proposing this test has he had it accepted. The critic always dodges. If he accepted, it is the editor's guess that any reputable newspaper of any journalistic pretension whatever, would show an average of about ninety-nine per cent accuracy.

DEEP SEA EXPLORATION.

The recent success of Captain Don Juan Levitt of Philadelphia in salvaging six hundred thousand dollars' worth of cargo from a wrecked frigate, the Cape Horn, lying off the coast of Chile, suggests other interesting future possibilities. The Cape Horn was wrecked in 1869 with a cargo of copper. Captain Levitt's expedition located it in two hundred seventeen feet of water. Equipped with special high pressure deep sea diving suits invented by the captain, the men worked some time at a depth of 200 feet. They were nearly four hours at a time. The previous record for deep sea diving under working conditions was a little under two hundred feet.

It is said that the divers were enabled to see "as though in daylight" by means of a special pressure-resisting lamp made by the Westinghouse Company.

The captain's next plan is to salvage the cargo of the Lusitania, which is believed to lie in about two hundred fifty feet of water.

Quite aside from the work of salvaging ships and valuable cargoes, this new diving record indicates the possibility of a vast amount of labor in the future. The diver is able to see man's ability to go for observation the night to explore the sides of a mountain, and the bottom of a lake, and to find the most desirable places for a dam or a bridge.

The Blue Circle

Renshaw's first impression was that the thing that had caught him was amazingly powerful. His next, as their struggle carried him and into the hall, was that in the dim light it was horribly grotesque. It seemed to be a hairy thing, and perhaps also a masked thing. He could not see clearly enough to be sure whether it had a mask or merely a strikingly repellent face.

The battle, though intense, was a struggle without any. Neither fighter uttered a sound. Both were down on the carpeted floor, interlocked in a close grip, rolling, twisting, and straining. Renshaw felt his throat protruding and his eyes popping out of his head. His blood rang in his ears. Unless he could shake out that grasp— After what seemed an eternity of effort, he did so—and gulped in a breath of air with a gasp that was the first sound of the encounter. He still had his hands more than full. The fellow he was fighting was an expert, up to all sorts of tricks, and possessed by any sense of the game. Moreover, he was in condition, and the secretary was not sure of his own staying power.

There the combat continued with the growing intensity of desperation. A chair went down. The reading table by the fireplace fell, and the wall lamp crashed against the brass fender. Each of the fighters appeared to have the same inspiration about that fender. If a man's head were brought against it with sufficient force, that man should be out of commission for a time. Both contestants were becoming exhausted, and both were now showing it. Their breath came raggedly. Renshaw found himself on top of the other, and with something between his hands that was thick and slippery. He was conscious of something pain. One of his fingers had been bitten almost through. He turned sick, but hung on to the throat that choked and gurgled. He knew he could not hang on much longer. His strength was almost spent. But suddenly the figure under him grew limp.

He was prepared for more tricks. He knelt on his antagonist's chest and dug his fingers deeper into the throat, taking advantage of the respite to fill his own lungs with air. But there was something reassuring about the continued limpness and stiffness of the sprawled thing under him. After a brief wait he took from one of his pockets some of the light, strong cord with which he had provided himself and bound the figure where it lay.

When he had finished it he rose, strengthened himself, drew a few more deep breaths, and shut his bedroom door.

LIVES, WHITE AND YELLOW.

The United States has always prided itself on its fair dealing with China, and thereby has often earned the gratitude of that country. Helpless China is not used to being treated fairly. But here is a little matter that invites thought.

Compensation has been recommended to Congress for the death of a Chinese boy eleven years old, killed accidentally by a bullet in his garden at Henkew, while an American warship crew were shooting at a target.

A naval inquiry, absorbing the crew from Henkew, concluded that the incident as China had frequently paid twenty-five thousand dollars for the death of an American; the United States should compensate the family of the dead boy in the sum of one hundred dollars gold.

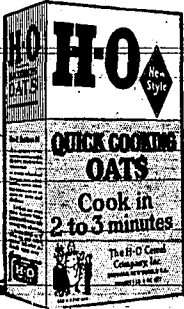

It may be that those contrasting sums represent the relative value of life in China and America—that an American's life is worth two hundred and fifty times as much as that of a Chinaman's. Yet we wonder what the lad's parents will think about it, and what the Chinese government will think. It doesn't look like anything for the nation's attention to be attracted to such a case.

door. Then, turning on the lights, he surveyed his prisoner. The man in the doorway, as he had been turned during the blinding. Obviously, he had worn a combined mask and light headpiece. Their features remained across the floor. The garment that had looked and felt like hair was a one-piece affair of some fuzzy material that covered the weaker from neck to ankles. Combined with the mask and headpiece, the outfit would have served very well as a masquerader had blackened his hands and face. To heighten its effect, tonight's masquerader had blackened his hands and arms; but the back of his neck was white where it was not becoming black and blue. Renshaw turned over the trussed figure, looked into the eyes, that were now conscious, and nodded slowly. "Jenks," he softly observed, "I thought so." For a long moment Jenks did not speak. Apparently he could not. His eyes stared up at Renshaw dully, as if he had not yet taken in what had happened. He tried to move, and the effort made him groan.

"You're—broken—my—arm—don't you?" he barked out at last. "Well, I've it back, and it will heal nicely in Sinky Sinky." Renshaw drew a chair close to the prostrate form, and, sitting down, regarded it with warm interest. (Continued in Next Issue.)

COMMISSIONERS PLEDGE HELP IN WAR ON WEEDS

Delegation of Farmers and Land Owners Tells of Dangerous Situation; Asks Strict Enforcement of Law.

A delegation of about 20 farmers and landowners, including members of the Twin Falls Central committee, met Wednesday afternoon at Twin Falls county commissioners' office to discuss a dangerous situation developing in this region as a result of incursion of noxious weeds and requested the commissioners to provide for rigid enforcement of the weed law.

Members of the board, all of whom were present at the meeting, gave assurance that they would cooperate to the fullest extent in combating the pestiferous weeds. They also pledged to furnish poison in quantities for use in extermination of noxious weeds. Later the commissioners, in conference with E. E. Brown, considered measures essential to most efficient administration of the weed law and cooperation with landowners in combating weeds.

Law Told Adequate.

Members of the delegation agreed that provisions of the weed law are adequate to meet the situation if they are properly enforced.

Commissioners, in their conference with the county agent, reached decision that the best method of enforcement is to be obtained by concentrating the campaign against four or five of the weeds and placed at the top of the list the wild morning glory. Other weeds to be included in the list are to be issued early in the season directing the fight on the weed list. It was suggested should include Canada thistle, Russian thistle, wild onion and, perhaps, dodder.

Suggestions that the campaign be placed under command of an agent of the county authority to coordinate any police powers seemed to meet with the approval of the board.

Under the state weed law, in the event of failure to give support and to take proper measures to destroy prohibited weeds, the commissioners would be empowered to employ workmen to do the work and charge the expense against the land as taxes.

Co-operation Essential.

Co-operation on the part of landowners and tenants is essential to the success of the campaign, it was agreed.

Last year, the county agent pointed out four weed infested areas, which by the county and they were successful in discovering numerous weed infested areas, although it was conceded, inspectors without the active support and cooperation of farmers generally, could not hope to locate all of the infested areas.

It seemed to be the consensus of opinion of members of the delegation who addressed the meeting, including C. E. McClain, Dr. L. H. Griffin, H. E. Coville, F. L. Ashton, Peter Deen and others, that the wild morning glory is the most serious of the noxious weed pests threatening this region. Other weeds, including Canadian thistle, it was stated, yield to cultivation and may be eradicated by production of cultivated crops in infested fields.

The morning glory, Dr. Griffin declared, was brought into this region in nursery stock. He stated that he had succeeded in eradicating it by sowing infested fields in blue grass and keeping the soil closely cropped with clover. Great quantities of Canada thistle have been used with general success in this region in exterminating the pestiferous weeds.

It is expected, the commissioners will be called upon to furnish assistance in large quantities. Other essential points also have been urged here in combating noxious weeds.

The commissioners' order designating noxious weeds and suggested methods of eradication is to be issued prior to March 1, next.

Prepare for Last Encampment Here

Civil War Veterans Look Forward to Close of History of Grand Army in Idaho

The encampment of the Idaho department, Grand Army of the Republic, to be held here next June, probably will be the last assembly of Civil War veterans in this state to be held in Twin Falls. The state to be held in Twin Falls, according to statement issued Wednesday by J. D. Smith, commander, and James M. Biv, adjutant of Dan McCook post, Twin Falls, which is to entertain the veterans here on that occasion.

The statement was issued in connection with the invitation given by C. L. Longley, Idaho department commander, to members of the Twin Falls post, of the American Legion, to assist in making and carrying into execution plans for the entertainment of the encampment and construction of a auxiliary organization of the legion post as possible to cooperate in carrying out Colonel Longley's wishes on that occasion. The statement says, and continues:

"We would also urge the few remaining members of the post to look now to attend if possible, as it is no doubt will be the last annual state encampment to be held at Twin Falls."

MEN CROWD CHURCH TO HEAR PASTOR'S THEME

Rev. O. D. Harris' Sermon Addresses Particularly to Men, Tells of Christian Objectives.

An audience that completely filled the Christian church, Wednesday evening heard Rev. O. D. Harris' sermon on "Men Wanted." The sermon was addressed particularly to men and the reform was occupied by members of a large male chorus under leadership of "Old Car." An octet composed of singers representing six Twin Falls churches sang several numbers.

"Christianity is not a woman's task," said the speaker. "Real men are wanted everywhere. Every profession and every social institution have been looking for men since the day of Diogenes. Christianity is not a matter of uttered profession, but of demonstrated faith. Christianity is that real working and the principles of Christianity contain the solution of these all-social, racial, economic and international and every social institution directed his attention to solving the problems of his own day. He saw the embodiment of God's will for this world. To carry on Jesus' program the men who believe in his principles must assume the same attitude toward the world that he did and become likewise sons of God."

This is the closing message of the evangelistic services. Tonight a large crowd is expected because of musical features under the direction of Mr. Carr and the announcement of an especially important sermon in the subject, "Jesus, the Pioneer of Life."

ATTORNEY GIVES VIEWS ON HOSPITAL PROGRAM

County's Legal Advisor Suggests Making Provision For Ophthalmic and Chiropractors Under Standardization.

Legal objection to the program of standardization, adopted by Twin Falls county general hospital by the board of county commissioners that retired from office last week might be overcome by provision of a room of rooms in the institution for use of ophthalmic, chiropractic and other practitioners who may be excluded from practice, if the hospital under standardization, J. W. Taylor, county attorney told members of the new board of county commissioners at a meeting Wednesday.

Advises from H. C. Conner, Idaho's attorney general, relative to this question were quoted by Mr. Taylor as follows:

"I am not prepared to say whether or not it would be a reasonable rule or regulation to exclude chiropractors, ophthalmic and others from practicing in the hospital. Some of these methods of healing have been recognized by our statute law. This might raise a grave doubt as to the reasonableness of a rule or regulation which would exclude them from practicing in the hospital."
