CABINET POST FIGHT ORDERED BY PRESIDENT

Coolidge insists That Senate Leaders Jam Through Confirmation of Warren. Despite Opposition.

WASHINGTON, March 13 (AP)—President Coolidge passed along the word today to administration leaders in the senate to fight and fight on for confirmation of his nomination of Charles I. Warren to be attorney general.

Huddled by the action of the judicial committee earlier in the day in cutting an hour off the hearing on the nomination, 9 to 7, after having approved it twice before, the executive called in several senate leaders tonight to impress upon them his earnest desire that Mr. Warren's qualifications be vigorously presented in the senate when the nomination is called up again tomorrow in open session.

Personal Influence.

The president threw the full weight of his personal influence behind the nomination of his confederates including Senators Horn of Idaho and McClellan of South Dakota, two of the republicans who refused to follow the party organization when the appointment was rejected by the senate vote on Tuesday.

Republican leaders here expected that there might be a change in the result, but the president's attitude clearly indicated that they would be worse off than they were on the first vote. Attention was called that several opponents absent then will be present tomorrow. They are making last efforts however, to win up most of their absentees and so dispirit some of the potential strength for the other side.

Parliamentary Advantages.

With the address report from the committee, opponents sought a parliamentary advantage on the floor since they will have charge of the report. They will seek to amend the report to the exact code they would follow in making the fight, but Senator Walsh, chairman of the committee, said he might demand a straight vote on confirmation, which would be a vote would mean rejection of the constitutional authority of the president to reconstitute the nomination was raised today in the committee, but it was held as well as pending further examination of the authorities, opponents were understood whether they would seek to make this an issue in the senate.

Insists on Evidence.

At the time the report was submitted to the senate in executive session late today Senator Walsh, there was a general expectation of a vote tomorrow, but with President Coolidge insisting that charges be presented to refute the charges made in the debate last Tuesday, in connection with the August investigation and trial, it was regarded later as likely that a vote might be forced over to next week.

The senate adjourned President Coolidge first summoned Chairman Committee of the Judiciary committee, and Senator Walsh, who conferred with them for an hour and then called in Senator Walsh and Senator McClellan and General James M. Beck, acting head of the department of justice.

LIBERTY BONDS GIVEN TO FALL IS CONTENTION

Government Seeks to Show Connection Between Secretary and Oil Official in Suit to Break Lease.

CHICAGO, March 13 (AP)—An attempt by the government to show that Harry P. Sinclair, lessee of Teapot Dome was connected with the Continental Trading company of Toronto, Canada, an alleged financial intermediary between Sinclair and Albert H. Fall, former secretary of the interior, who executed the lease, and the division of Federal Judge J. Black Kennedy to wait until Monday to decide whether the bank accounts of Fall will be admitted as evidence marked the trial of the Teapot Dome annulment case here today.

The jury returned a verdict for the government in the annulment of the lease, but the government's case was not as strong as it appeared.

The government also has charged that approximately 4,000,000 barrels of oil had been disposed of in this way—the trading company made its living from the purchase of 4,500,000, which it invested in bonds, and that some of these bonds were loaned to the government.

The question of connection of Fall with Sinclair was not in the courtroom when the verdict was rendered.

RURAL COLORADOAN SENDS $635 OUT OF $1635 TO COLLECTOR

Income Tax Return Proves Too Deep for Citizens Who Think Government Ours All Above $1000.

DENVER, March 13 (AP)—A single farming man, Colorado farmer, district earned $1657 last year and today he sent $635 of that amount to F. W. Howbert, Internal revenue collector in Denver, to pay his income tax.

"What the income taxpayer should have sent to Howbert was a check for a sum slightly more than $1 to pay the required tax on his earnings above $1000."

Howbert will return $624. "It seems pretty hard," the taxpayer wrote to Howbert, "that a man should have to give every penny to the government of what he earns above $1000 a year, but I guess I'll have to do it."

The jury returned a verdict for the government in the annulment of the lease, but the government's case was not as strong as it appeared.

Weather Affects Business Says Noted Statistician

Roger W. Babson Tells Why Conditions Seem to Have Slowed Up; Several Reasons Are Given.

BABSON PARK, Ph., March 12.—"Has the business improvement that started last November run itself out? This question was put today to Roger W. Babson, world famous statistician, who is working out several economic problems at his winter home here. "Many people are asking me substantially the same question," replied Mr. Babson. "They want to know why will this winter be so different from the previous one? I would like to refer to the following figures which reflect general business conditions, as given at a recent meeting of the National Business Bureau, held at New York last year and compared with a year ago as compared with 1925 per cent above normal total. Yet many industries are quiet and the business men of many communities are still doing no better than they were a year ago.

Several Reasons
"There are several reasons for this apparent lack of progress at the close of the current period of business improvement. The first is in the view point of the business men. "They are tired of the business by the yard stick of 1919, or, worse than that, rather than by a 1925 yardstick. The war has been a life-forever life—especially business life—and it will be many years before we again enjoy the quiet of those days. Hence I have an sympathy with either employers or workers who expect to enjoy the same kind of work or wages as in 1919.
"Business and living expenses must both be cut down to the 1919 to 1920 average before we can be said to be working on a normal basis. We have not yet completed the readjustment which necessarily follows the end of war such as was witnessed from 1914 to 1919. The abnormally active conditions of these years and the activity be followed by abnormally quiet conditions. The law of action and reaction is absolute and can not be tampered with. When you get one thing else you get a normal figure, a corresponding reaction is inevitable. Hence it is not surprising that in 1920 to 1923 was only normal. The correct, however, was turned last year and that should be a balance over the 1924. The main difficulty today is that our manufacturing capacity is much greater than needs. Hence we must wait until consumption catches up with production. This development may take some years.
"The rapid recovery that people expect a too rapid recovery. Even though the corner has turned, it should be remembered that we were five years in the process of inflation. Hence it would not be surprising if we are to be five years or even a year in the process of readjustment which must follow. Every severe illness is accompanied by a latent period of inactivity. It is the same with the business body as with the human body. A mother-of-death is surprising that business has recovered as well as it has. The great upheaval which it revealed during the world war, and the enormous quantities of goods which in some lines is the direct result of bad weather which certain sections of the country have suffered in the winter. The weather was generally good everywhere until about the middle of January when a tremendous cold wave hit the north with heavy snow storms in many sections. New York state was hit up worse than it has been for years. The snow on the north was accompanied with rains in the south where railroads were washed out and business operations almost stopped. Then in February the weather and daily turned warm everywhere. The seas and ice melted, shipping and transportation of all kinds was helped by fogs; and the rivers swelled. It rained for three days with an average temperature of 60 degrees.

Weather Control
"Weather affects business in several ways. First, it makes it difficult for people to get out and buy. We talk about 'quarantine of industry' and 'big business' but the fact is that people are in the hands of the ultimate consumer. When the women of the country stop buying, within 30 days the merchandise, the bolts and the manufacturers must stop. Retail buying was greatly retarded the past month and this has had a reaction upon business. Bank clearings, cut loadings and other important business transactions show a dent into this month of unseasonable weather. "Not only is buying retarded by bad weather, but transportation and distribution are likewise checked. Everything is delayed from the mills to the freight. Prices get down in referring with telegraph and telephone communication; while both papers and freight rates are left unchanged. The delivery of passengers and finished merchandise, but causes shut-downs of factories for want of coal, raw materials or other supplies. Added to all this is the cost of handling snow, clearing away roads and repelling dangers to property.

Industry Suffer
"In addition to general retail trade being retarded by unseasonable and bad weather, certain industries are especially affected. First of all, the weather affects power, automobile and truck purchases; while the demand for tires, oil, gasoline and other accessories declines sharply. The building trade as well, of course, always had a very winter weather, and the building which in one way or another must be completed in the north during such a period. Even the vegetable trade is not so active. The weather is not so good but that people do not get out to buy; then it became so warm that there did not want to buy.

"Thus we see there is a good reason why general business has not been so good in the few weeks as many thought it would be. It is true that the winter turned for the better with the clearing of the weather. Yet the weather even played a part in selecting him. The good crops of the United States and the poor crops of Europe result in giving our domestic farmers a new hope just before election which helped the republican party. This same weather has not helped so well since, and, in fact, went on a gloomy spring for a few weeks in January and February, from which we are now suffering. "In addition to giving these reasons for the disappointing business which is the result of unseasonable and bad weather Babson concluded with these words: "This study of weather and business conditions must clearly have dependent we are on our neighbors. We are workers, employers, retailers, shopkeepers and producers, and we must live together. No group can have glorious success without it hurting all."

GIVES METHODS FOR CONTROL OF WEED NOISANCE

Quack Grass Yields to Drought Says Ed S. Larned, County Director, Recommending Tactics in War on Pest.

Suggestions for combating quack grass, which is one of the most noxious weeds against which a county-wide campaign is to be directed this season, was contained in a series of articles dealing with the weed, which in this region was written by Ed S. Larned, county director. The county director was in charge of the article follows:

Quack grass is fast becoming a serious weed pest throughout the county. As a pasture grass it has a certain merit but in fields that have to be plowed or cultivated it has become a nuisance.

Quack grass or quitch grass as it is sometimes called forms a tightly matted sod. Early in the season the leaves should be mistaken for young wheat leaves. Later the plant "shoots up a several inch stalk, half to three foot high, on which a single bloom or head is produced. This head or spike is four to six inches long and narrow. Its seed kernels are borne on the stalk as are wheat kernels and the seed is somewhat, somewhat, a poorly filled out.

The root system is made up of root stalks which are in fact underground stems. These root stalks have buds at their tips which are capable of growing in all directions from beneath the surface of the ground and at close intervals along their length—produce new shoots to the surface.

The plant propagates itself by planting seed, by the extension of its root stalks and by fragments of root stalks being transported into clean ground by cultivating tools.

Probably the most necessary condition to a successful eradication of quack grass is keeping the patch dry. When soil moisture is present the minute root hair is able to maintain a sufficient vitality to re-establish itself.

On large areas the following method has proven effective: If carefully laid out, a trench can be made to prevent any irrigation water from reaching the infestation. Such growth as is under the plant during the spring and early summer is either mowed or removed. This tends to bring the root stalks close to the surface. In mid summer, about the middle of the month, the plant through lack of moisture is in a weakened condition. The ground is then plowed and the surface is allowed to cut just under the mat that the roots have formed. This operation, repeated, the field is gone over with a disc, preferably a cat-scraper, several of ten days or two weeks throughout the balance of the season. The following year the surface should be put into a cultivated crop and it an occasional plant puts in an appearance it can be removed by hand before it can become established.

Smothering Method
On smaller areas the paper or black covered smothering paper can be applied over the infestation and by denying the access to light and air the plant can be killed out. If this method is chosen, the ground should be leveled off so there will be no air spaces between the paper and the surface of the ground. It should then be left until the spring moisture in the soil has evaporated which time, whatever ever leaf growth that has formed should be cut and raked off and the paper applied. The strips should be allowed to lay four or five inches and be weighted down so as to form a tight joint. The paper should extend at least four or five feet beyond the outside edges of the patch. Leave it for the remainder of the season, plowing it occasionally so that there has been no break in the paper, and that the wind has not loosened it. Where the patches have just started and are still small, digging-out-by-the-stem method is the most practical. Break the ground with a shovel, knocking an inch dirt from the sods as possible, removing them from the field and burning when dry. This will leave the surface of the ground loose and will allow any new growth that appears above the surface to be pulled out, root and all. Frequent visits should be made thereto so as to prevent any new plants from establishing a root system. Never, under any circumstances, sow or cultivate through a patch of quack grass. By so doing you have lost next year's crop by having to summer follow the ground. Watch for it along your entire farm and when found prevent it from forming seed. That seed may be carried down to your neighbor's field is the cause of his losing a part of his crop.
