MEDALS GO TO LARGE NUMBER OF FRENCHMEN

Holders of "Legion" of Honor Awards in France Would Equal in Numbers America's Standing Army.

(By The Associated Press)
PARIS, May 8.—The holders of French Legion of Honor awards, if multiplied, would constitute an army just about equivalent to the number of men in America's standing army.

At present, the number of military establishments, it is shown by figures just furnished by the government.

According to the figures, there were 131,231 legionaries on the rolls of the grand chancellery, and more have been elevated since that date. There are 15,000 Grand Crosses of the order.

One hundred and twenty-four eminent soldiers, both French and foreign, former presidents of the republic and others are included. The grand officers include regiments, which numbered 2,652, while there are 15,755 officers of the legion of honor entitled to wear the little red rosette, the chevrons of which are worn on the front of the 150,000 best legionaries.

For possession of the legion's diploma have been awarded by a recent decree. It now costs 100 francs for a chevalier, 100 francs for a knight, 200 for a commander, 300 for a grand commander and 500 for a grand cross.

Only private and non-commissioned officers in the French army, who have won the chevalier's cross in service, are exempted from the new decree.

The same decree has also enlarged the Legion of Honor, and enlarged its prestige to the point of giving it the right of using its wings through poetry and poster contests. The modern writer is to be held in high esteem for his patriotic and what he has done," a saying that may have originated in France, where a bush hung over the doorway is often the sign of the village's chief.

The house of chateau主人 who offered a prize for the best song in praise of its unique product. Then the leading wine-growers of central France compete to be the best.

One pair of wings, thousand francs for the best work raising the value of which yields 100 francs extra.

New fine arts association of Rothesay organized a competition for posters and paintings. To the "principles of the blood of the vine," Retired is in the southern corner of France.

A prize of 100 francs is offered for the best poster, and several "in-kind" prizes ranging from banknotes to single bottles of wine will be given to posters propagating the ideals of a "sound tobacco basis, absolute honesty, uprightness, and all other virtues." The committee, regarding the effects of smoking, has decided to charge up to 10 francs for each effect of smoke.

Although the average French smokes only one cigarette a day, the effects of the "Swing" are readily observable, the sport of Savoie is sterner in France. With great indignation, the senate has passed a bill requiring the manufacturers and importers of the French tobacco to submit to a modus operandi, for the sale of their tobacco.

"Hunting is a pleasure only for the rich," says the Parisian socialists' leader, Robert, socialist. "The sport of fishing is the sport of the most humble. To impose a tax upon them would risk depriving them of a modest pleasure and a day in the open air."

When Sabbath Was Day, of Rigid Observance

In Connecticut, perhaps more than anywhere else, Sunday was a sort of popular idol, nor did the rigor of its observance escape perceptively until after the Revival.

There was something about Sabbath keeping that distinguished the hunting man of the building of the "Sabbathday house"; these were the sumptuous structures on the meeting houses, each intended to accommodate a dozen or more families.

Some Sabbathday houses were built with a stall at one end to shelter the horse, while the family took refuge in the other, where there was a chimney and a special fireplace for such a family.

Here on arrival before the first service the owners lit a fire in the fireplace, the horses were harnessed, and to the simple place they came had to eat horse-chowder and have themselves out after their first long sitting in the Arctic climate of the meeting house. Sometimes two families had a Sabbathday house together.

But some parishes in New England, and particularly in Boston, had a custom of having all churchgoers to rest in "prelate-assemblies" on Sunday, whether in the personage of the noon-day house, were in danger of proving the fidelity to those who were poor in money, and hence the pavers were given them their best contributions, and the people who were the most generous were the ones who gave the largest amount.

CAVE-DWELLING HERMIT SAVED FROM STARVATION

PAONI, Colo., May 8 (AP)—H. J. Davis, cave-dwelling hermit, who has not been seen for 20 years, was saved from probable death by starvation by a rancher who discovered him lying weak and helpless, unable to move from his craggy bed of boulders in a mountain cave.

Davis told his rescuer that he was taken ill with a fever in February and that he was too weak to move after it had passed, and lay down. He existed for several weeks on scraps of food that he could reach from his pallet with a long stick, and was forced to drink snowmelt when there was no water. He said he was saved by being pushed to the edge of his cave and which served to guide the Indian into a trap.

Old Festival Rites in Honor of Ceres

The sacred rite with which the annual festival of Ceres was celebrated at Eleusis were called the Eleusinian mysteries.

Many traditions were absent in ancient time, says Chambers, as to the origin of this festival. Of these, however, he found the most interesting the effect that Ceres, vanishing about the earth in search of Proserpine, had lost daughter, arrived at Eleusis where she rested on the famous "Snowy Stone" beside the well of Callithous. In return for some small act of kindness and in order to come home again, she gave the secret Tripolitanians to the Eleusinians, and the cereals on the plains of Bharat, near the city, and instituted the mystic rites peculiarly known as belonging to this goddess of agriculture.

The festivity which she inaugurated consisted of two parts—the greater and the lesser mysteries, the less important feast serving as an interval between the two.

The cereals began on the fifth day of Brundunum, but history finds no exact record of the proceedings. That they were most important in the life of the time is evident from the pronouncements given to them—H. Thigley, in Chileno Journal.

Many and Various Are "Graveyards" of Books

When a book language, instead of the dialects of the Blarney, one of its life has passed and it is destined soon to enter on a new one. But what is the next stage in its career? That, to the man in the street, is the question of literature.

Most libraries have a sort of rare books room, where old volumes are kept for a time, and then disposed of. Sometimes they find their way to second-hand bookstores; sometimes they are required to supply paper for other books with all the world before them.

Librarians often give those which the public library desire to dispose of to people who have no bookshelf, and who are not wealthy enough to buy a new one. They are sent out to the Philippines Islands, where one book is as good as another, and the date of a volume's publication has no influence on its chances of popularity.

Adventurous books, those that go racing out to the Indian ocean. But there is a price to pay for this. Some are so well written that they will be sold, and when these voluminous documents of literature are done with, there will be nothing left for ordinary readers!—London Mail.

QUAKE MENACE IS NEGLECTIBLE

Wyoming State Geologist Declares Little Need for Worry Regarding Tremors.

CHEYENNE, Wyo., May 8 (AP)—"Faults" in the earth's crust cross one of the largest oil fields in the United States—the Salt Creek field—and the Teapot Dome, the natural gas field, but little danger of earthquakes occurring in those regions, in the opinion of A. B. Bartlett, Wyoming state geologist.

The faults are described by him as "cracks" in the earth which are about 15 miles long.

At the east end of the Salt Creek field and another three miles long between the Teapot and Salt Creek fields. Three faults have been located.

"Wyoming is not in a region of present earthquake activity, although slight tremors do occur," Mr. Bartlett said. "The 1925 tremors increased the flow of oil wells and in some cases the tremors caused water to flow with the oil."

Largest Fault

The largest "fault" in the state is the Casper mountain, six miles south of Casper. It has a displacement of 10,000, 11,000 feet and is 21 miles long and was formed during the same period as one of the 3,000-foot peaks of solid rock now known as the mountain, according to geologists. A geological survey of the mountain showed pre-cambrian granite on the mountain top, which means the rock strata under Casper placed this rock formation 3,000 feet below the city.

The other large fault is in the western part of the state running north from Casper through Wyoming. It is believed that the dislocations of this fault are small and have been made over a long period of years.

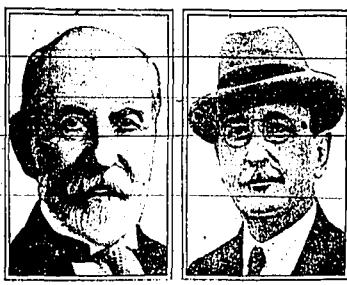

Prediction of another landslide now is in the Teton mountains in the Green River region where a mountain peak toppled over into the Green River river bed, was made by Mr. Bartlett. "The hundred-mile path of the falling rocks of mud and dirt into the river. It's safe to assume that by a slight earth tremor, the alluvium on the limestone formation having been saturated by spring flows, would have caused it to move," he said. "It would have been a 'tremor shake' to be sent tumbling into the river valley."

R. W. BABSON MORE OPTIMISTIC ON MAIN STREET THAN WALL STREET

Noted Statistical Authority, in His Weekly Talk, Discusses Relationship Between Stock Market and General Business.

BABSON PARK, Fla., May 7 (UPI)—To the New York—Roger W. Babson was today interviewed as to the stock market and business. Many believe that when the market goes down, so does general business. Mr. Babson believes this is fallacy. Statistics, however, do seem to show that there is a relation between the stock market and general business. This is what Mr. Babson today discussed as follows:

A Fallacy

"The prevalent idea that the stock market always discounts general business is fallacy," said Mr. Babson. "We know that the stock market may be the barometer of business, but it is only one of several and surely is not more important than bank clearings, unemployment statistics, crop reports and other economic factors. Money rates and commodity prices are probably more important factors in determining business conditions than the stock markets of the world. The stock market is not the only barometer of business."

Judging the stock market, Babson thinks business is decline and soft stocks. If business does decline, they keep selling stocks; but if business does well, they buy stocks and there are no soft stocks, and there is no decline." That is all there is to the idea. Main street should determine what happens on Wall street. Wall street should depend upon what happens on Main street.

"Wall street is as necessary to this country as a country store is necessary to a community. Wall street helps to create wealth at home and to spread it throughout the world, to forecast business conditions. I never go to Wall street, but I go to the great central west. There I can talk with the farmers, who are still half-breeds, who are still half-breeds, who not only feeds Wall street but most of the manufacturers and merchants of the nation as well. We give too much thought to spectacular Wall street, and too little to the great values are not justified either by assets or earnings. This statement, however, does not apply to general business. Many sectors and industry must be sold out and given up from the recent stock market collapse, yet feeding, clothing and sheltering thousands of people in any nothing of value is a good investment. There still should be plenty of business for those who deserve it. On the other hand, while the volume of general business is not as abnormal as normal, the trend in activity, price, production, etc., is now advanced. Compared with a year ago, a number of basic industries appear increasingly unfavorable. Practically all groups of commodities, excepting wheat, corn, cotton, tobacco and building materials, notwithstanding that construction is preceding near record levels. Farm produce, power, coal and timber factor, is lower in a result of the decline in agricultural prices. This certainly will not help the growing power of the country as a whole. This is well illustrated in the lumber industry which, notwithstanding a 10 per cent above normal compared with a high point of 15 per cent in January.

"There are, however, no justification for such a statement. All we are plotting into the depths of depression. Business has been good and in only a few instances has inflation predominated. What is going on in business is not healthy inflation. Many stock prices, however, in the mad upward whirl of the past year, far out ran the business improvement. This is especially true of individual stocks.

Expectation of recovery was great. Recovery was great expectation. What ever the financial leaders and railroad officials may think of William G. McAdoo, they all know him well. He is a good man. He wants the American people to buy bonds, especially after these financial interests told McAdoo that it could not wait. Well, it was done, and we today see that good bonds are great investments. It is wise to have some of one's egg in another basket. But there are great opportunities in building, marketing that new house or store which they had planned to build with their savings plus their Wall street profits.

Most of them believe that businesses should avoid margin accounts. A business man is wise in actually withdrawing cash every year a portion of his profits, as a safety valve. This action since the panic securities, shall both good business and good insurance.

Avoid Margin Accounts

"I am today trading certain disadvantages from the beginning of stocks and bonds because the more people interested in Wall street, the more pessimism everywhere. The last few weeks Wall street has written and telegraphed to every city and town in the country for money to make good margins. When this money has been loaned, the loans are to be used for purchasing labor, raw materials and merchandise." When the margin money has not been sent, then the local farmer or merchant has been "expelled" to worry and greatly reduces his efficiency in other ways. In this age of competition and specialization, it is most important that business must concentrate their energies on working along fine lines or distractions.

Immediate Outlook

"The outlook for the stock market is not good. Prices of most stocks are abnormally high and they will not and have thus suffered a real loss. Naturally such men are not interested in losing money.

Moreover, business has lost face, particularly in the last year. This is well illustrated in the lumber industry which, notwithstanding a 10 per cent above normal compared with a high point of 15 per cent in January.

"There are, however, no justification for such a statement. All we are plotting into the depths of depression. Business has been good and in only a few instances has inflation predominated. What is going on in business is not healthy inflation. Many stock prices, however, in the mad upward whirl of the past year, far out ran the business improvement; but before the year is over I believe investors will have further opportunity to buy at still lower prices."

Focus on Southwest

Most tourists are in the cold zones of the dry Southwest. They are hunting bodies of brown branches and many striking brown or white pines, more like a low gooseberry bush. The fruit is all prickles, like the prickly gooseberry of our swamps. The flowers are purple, rose or white, the leaves are smooth, rounded, thin, and green. In fact, they are not very attractive. As the bushes are built for heat rather than for frost, they are not very attractive in Northern gardens though they will live and bloom.—Nature Magazine.

now you get a bonus with your favorite 1 gasoline

JUST apply to the Conoco man—wherever you see the sign of the Continental soldier. He has a bonus for you—a bonus of extra miles which are packed into Summer Conoco Gasoline.

You'll be surprised at how much of the country you can see this summer on a tankful of Summer Conoco. Your pocketbook will last longer, too, because you won't have to use it so often. But you will have to revise your ideas as to when to refill the tank—for you'll keep going for miles farther on one filling than you expect.

Of course, Summer Conoco Gasoline is not an experiment. It is a product developed by this old-established Company to give motorists what they want in the touring season—high mileage. Tests have proved that Summer Conoco will deliver extra miles. Expect them. Enjoy them!—just as thousands of busy motorists are doing.

But be careful. Be sure that you are getting Summer Conoco—and the only "extra miles" to buy where the Conoco sign is displayed. That is the bonus sign for motorists—the sign of the gasoline of all-around performance—startin, pickup, power and economy.
