APPEALS PURPORTED TO COME FROM TWO FLIERS CAUSE DOUBT

Radio Experts Skeptical Regarding Source of Messages; Relatives and Friends of Two Sweden-Bound Airmen Hope

(By The Associated Press) WASHINGTON, Aug. 24—The coast guard cutter, Marston, radioed headquarters here last night that it had abandoned search for the missing plane, Greater Rockford, because of lack of definite information that the plane had been seen in the waters near Piskernes, Greenland.

CHICAGO, Aug. 24—Although amateur radio operators in Chicago, Toledo and Brooklyn have been busy last night purporting to come from the missing Rockford-to-Stockholm fliers, radio experts tonight were frankly skeptical of the messages that came from Bert Hassell and Parker Ormer, the missing aviators.

Despite the doubters' radio, relatives and friends of the fliers in Rockford, Illinois, believed the messages genuine and that they gave added evidence that the aviators who left Rockford eight days ago, are safe.

The messages picked up last night and signed "Rockford fliers" said they were from a small island about 50 miles off the coast of Newfoundland, adding messages that the Associated Press and the fliers' families be notified.

While there was no doubt that such a message was sent, skeptics pointed to many reasons for doubting its authenticity. They said on a different wave band than that assigned the Greater Rockford, the messages came from a different area, and that the messages said they were down in a village in southwestern Greenland where villagers said the plane passed Sunday morning.

Heavy Penalty A heavy penalty is provided for an operator attempting to operate such a hoax as radio experts said it would be almost impossible to detect such a person if the messages are fictitious. The penalty is a fine of $100 and many direction detectors would have to be employed and there are 20,000 such detectors in the country.

Last night's messages said the senders would be back on the air tonight and the government is keeping its ears close to the air for any opportunity to listeners to try for other messages.

ment would hasten his death, but his return to freedom found his recovery in health complete. Without suggesting the moral that a sure road to health is through the gates of a prison, the advantages of prison life as contrasted with the nerve-racking routine of a business man or high public official are apparent.

If the average person takes a hint as to the health-diminishing capabilities of the human stomach, then all can see compensations from what seemed to be a very sad adventure. That term of imprisonment, while it may make life less worth the living, doubtless prolonged McCray's life some years.

Obviously, prison life isn't what it used to be. Prisoners are no longer placed in dark, damp cells to die of disease. Their health is better guarded than that of the average person with complete liberty. They do not work too hard, they play enough, they sleep and food in healthful quantities and live in sanitary quarters. A healthy man has supplanted the prison pallor.

"Your father sat on the bridge Sunday afternoon," she related. "We stopped, my father and I. So long we hung, and he gave me the look of a painter. Norman, 'that boy is not my son! He seemed to be out of the picture. He cried out you must never come back to me!'"

Norman, following her gesture, saw an Unpainted House and Barn. "It is a wet business, Norman. Not like the farms, 'em 'n' meant for the wet lakes. You told me once your mother made a mistake. 'In marrying a sailor?'"

"No, Norman, no. You haven't found your place yet, Norman. Once when you were here you told me you never were at peace in a storm. 'I said on water, Julie. It's the lightning is water.'"

"You don't argue further. A new tendency had begun to glow in his sturdy face and she turned abruptly from him. 'I am not meant for the sea, my father. I am not meant for the sea, my father. I am not meant for the sea, my father.'"

"I don't like it, Norman admitted flatly. 'I've observed the glow in her face. Sue was friendly tonight. It was easy to talk to her. 'I was born in a thunderstorm,' he confessed."

CHAPTER V

"The Captain's Dog" Norman walked rapidly the last mile of beach. The black cloud that had been visible only from the lighthouse less than a half-hour before now loomed over the lake, nullifying out his day's check threatening.

"'Any there, first night,' she cried, 'My time you came! She was in high spirits. 'I began to wonder. Have you no sense at all? Same men with their heads tied up in bandages don't walk so long in the heat. Sit down! Rest a minute.'"

"Norman pushed back his plate. "There's more fish," Sue said. "No, I have had enough," he spoke defensively. Sue looked amused. She would look into amused, Norman reflected, if he told her all the pop-taste, hideous thoughts that popped into his head as he sat at the wind-began to blow."

JAIL AS AN AID TO LONG LIFE

When Warren McCray, once governor of Indiana, went to prison for a year in 1879, the shadow of death was upon him. He was a pitiful spectacle, emaciated and broken health. It was feared imprisonment would hasten his death, but his return to freedom found his recovery in health complete.

ORCHESTROPE PRESENTS NEW SCIENTIFIC ADVANCE

A marvelous instrument that combines rhythm of art and science and surpasses in potential volume of sound and in endurance any human orchestra, was placed in operation yesterday at J. H. Umbaugh and Company jewelry store, 124 Main avenue south. The Orchestrope which combines possibilities of modern radio amplification with perfected processes of phonographic reproduction.

Entirely automatic, it requires only electric current drawn through a lighting socket to place it in operation for an indefinite period. It plays automatically 28 records on both sides, affording a program of 56 numbers covering a period of three hours and 50 seconds. Interval between selections is approximately 10 seconds. Volume of sound, is regulated by means of radio amplifier controls so that it may be modulated to a mere whisper, or increased in volume to fill a large auditorium or dance pavilion. In either case the sound is reproduced without trace of distortion. The instrument, displayed here is suitably housed in a handsome cabinet of seven-ply walnut with inlay of satinwood, presenting a masterpiece of the cabinet maker's art. The instrument has been on the market only since last May. It is built by a new concern, and orders for it are said to be in excess of the available supply. Mr. Umbaugh and his company are to be distributors of the instrument in this territory, and Roland S. Browning of Ogden, factory representative, who supervised its initial performance here yesterday, is to remain here for some days.

BLACK LOCUST WOODLOT PROFITABLE IN IDAHO

Propagation of black locust woodlots is profitable in southern Idaho, especially in the irrigated sections, it is shown in a bulletin published recently by the University of Idaho school of forestry. The bulletin is entitled "Black Locust and How to Grow It" and Dean F. G. Miller of the bulletin Dean Miller studied a large school of forestry is the author. In gathering material for this number of established woodlots, the average of which was 13 years and the net return per acre above five per cent compound interest was $31.88 per year. For the most part the land used for the growing of these trees was not the best land on the farms, it being rocky, sandy, or otherwise off-color, explains A. M. Sower, extension forester with the university, now in the southern part of the state assisting farmers with their woodlot and shelterbelt problems. The greater returns accrue to the farmer after his woodlot is about twenty years old or when it has been growing long enough to produce large trees. This bulletin on black locust, which may be obtained by writing the school of forestry, University of Idaho, gives the best cultural methods, harvesting suggestions and other pointers necessary to proper development of the crop. Black locust seedlings, if purchased from the university nursery at Moscow, can be obtained at half the cost of production when they are for planting on the farms of Idaho for woodlots, shelterbelts or windbreaks. Mr. Sower is advising farmers interested in tree culture. News Want Ads reach the people you wish to attract.

When Caesar was a boy

The Forum was the common market-place for all of ancient Rome. Today a few crumbling columns stand as mute reminders of its former grandeur. In our present-day complex civilization, market-places have become scattered. It is no longer possible to visit them all in a morning—or even in a day. Advertising, instead, has become the convenient Forum, of modern buyers and sellers. If you are considering the purchase of a new car, you scrutinize the automobile advertising. Or if it's a razor or a talking machine that you want, you turn again to the advertising. Here is the national market-place for merchandise. Furthermore, as you leaf over those same pages of products, your mind is storing away for tomorrow a compact and valuable fund of information. Instinctively, you will remember those facts when you make your future purchases. Increase your store of knowledge by reading the advertisements regularly.
