FRANCE'S PREMIER SCORES IN CONTEST OVER HOOVER PLAN

Chamber of Deputies in All-Night Sessions Votes 386
to 189 to Sustain Counter Proposal to Offer

(By The Associated Press)
PARIS. (Saturday Morning) June 27 — French government after a stormy all-night session, was upheld in the chamber of deputies this morning by a vote of 386 to 189 on its counter-proposal to the Hoover moratorium plan.

The vote was held after the government had accepted a motion by Deputy Fougères, approving its answer to the United States with qualifications, and had made it a question of confidence.

With this unexpectedly large majority of 197 votes, Premier Laval won one of the most brilliant victories in the history of parliament and obtained

A government victory was forecast in the lobbies before the vote was checked in view of the last-minute support offered by the Moderate and Socialist groups. A majority of 80 votes was forecast but even the most sanguine did not believe the margin would be so great.

The attack against the cabinet's reply was led by Deputy Louis Marin, Deputy Franklin Drouillon and former Premier Herriot, representing the extreme radical and Nationalist wings, each arguing that the Hoover plan and the French reply was inimical to the interests of France and signified the passing of the Young plan as a method collecting reparations from Germany.

- Premier Laval, Finance Minister Poincaré and Foreign Minister Briand replied with heat that the French counter-plan, while upholding in principle the Hoover proposal, safeguarded French rights and was essential to the economic welfare of Germany and, in the long run, of France.

The "chamber" approving the French government's answer to the proposal of the president of the United States, counts upon it to assure at the same time intangibility of the unconditional annuity accepted at The Hague by the power signatories to the Yugo plan and the necessity of a policy of peace and economic cooperation and rejecting all additions to the next business on the agenda."

The Paris government's counter-proposal was hailed by Secretary Stimson as expressing a "gratifying cordiality," but as involving action which would not meet fully the purposes of the president. He emphasized the necessity for further discussions and predicted an early and successful conclusion would attend negotiations now in progress in Paris.

Late in the day, Mr. Stimson left by airplane for New York. He will sail on the Conte Grande for Naples tomorrow and the ensuing weeks will see him in conferences with Europe's leading statesmen. Secretary Mellon is now in Paris discussing the issues of the moratorium with French leaders.

The obstacles to an agreement narrowed tonight to three points. These were:

- (1) America's insistence on postponement of all inter-governmental debts and France's demand that Germany pay the unconditional annuities under the Young plan;
- (2) The French proposal that these payments be made the

(3) The fact that the support which the president received from members of congress for the members of congress for the assumption there would be no reservations.

One suggestion advanced tonight in diplomatic circles, contemplated concessions on each side on the three points at issue. The United States would concede, under the suggestion, to France's unconditional credits system plan. France would agree that no interest be charged on the credits and that they be available only to Germany and not to other powers.

The acting secretary of state, William R. Castle, Jr. took up the Afterward a state department officer carried a long telegram from the White House to the department or coding.

Navy Prepares To Test Rescue Device For Submarine Crew

NEW DIVING BELL LOOKS AS AID TO TRAPPED SAULORS

Lieutenant Commander Allen R. McCann Invents Device—Aimed—for Safety

COMPARTMENT HOLDS CAPACITY OF 18 MEN

Chamber Provides Aid, Light, Telephonic Service and Self-Contained Motors

(By The Associated Press)
WASHINGTON, June 25.—In a pear-shaped chamber of steel the navy sees hope of a dependable submarine-rescue device with capacity for 18 persons.

This new aid for water-trapped sailors soon is to be tested off New London, Conn., at a depth of 100 feet, or more, with conditions simulating those of actual diving.

The rescue chamber, embodying principles of the diving bell, has been designed to correct inherent defects of former types. Experts express the opinion that it can be attached readily to a sunken submarine under very adverse conditions, and bring passengers safely to the surface.

No matter how successful the tests, it is not proposed as a substitute for the "tuna" which is to remain the primary escape contrivance for American submarines.

The new device has been developed by the navy as a means of escape, or when members of the crew of the disabled vessel are incapacitated from sea poisoning or injuries.

Stable

New attributes of the design are that the diving chamber is controlled from within, it is independent of the motion of the surface chamber, and is believed stable at all stages of depth.

As evolved under supervision of Lieutenant Commander Allen R. McCann, the chamber has self-contained motors for drawing it to the deck of a submarine on a steel cable, or to the surface of the water.

It is operated by a crew of two men in an air-tight compartment, supplied with air, light and telephonic service through cables from a tender.

Water-tight Hatch

With the lower compartment open to the sea, when danger threatens the rescue chamber is taken about the surface to open a water-tight hatch, located to the rear of the submarine, and the sunken vessel is closed to enter the bell.

When the rescued persons are safe in the bell, the hatch is closed and the submarine is refilled to the surface by a turn of a lever. The buoyancy of the bell causes it to break away and rise to the surface.

At the surface the chamber is hauled partly out of the water by a crane and a small hatch on top is opened for the rescue persons to be taken aboard the tender. The bell then may return immediately for another load of passengers.

The rescue chamber has searchlights to illuminate the murky depths.
