Babson Declares Recent Advances In Farm Prices Mean Addition of $500,000,000 to Previous Value

Statistician Calls Attention to Wheat Rise in 1896

By ROGER W. BABSON

BABSON PARK, Mass., Nov. 21.—The recent rise in wheat, corn, and cotton has in four weeks' time added $100,000,000 to the value of these crops. What farm legislation and the farm board failed to do in

THEATRE MAGNATE OBTAINS ACQUITTAL

Jury Returns Verdict of Not Guilty of Assault After 65 Hours' Deliberation

LOS ANGELES, Nov. 27 (AP)—Amid tumultuous scenes in which court spectators joined in the joy of a family, Alexander Panagiotis, a 37-year-old millionaire, was acquitted today of charges of a criminal assault against Duke Pringle, 19-year-old dancer.

The verdict of the jury, announced at 10:33 A. M. after nearly 65 hours of deliberation, came two years after Panagiotis had been convicted at the original trial and was granted a second trial by the state supreme court. The jurors, joining in an opinion of acquittal, found that Panagiotis, who had arrived at the hotel last night, had decided to "sleep on it."

As John Williams, foreman of the jury, read the verdict, Panagiotis and his wife broke into tears. Spectators, shouting wildly, leaped on their seats and a storm of hats flooded the air. The court rapped loudly for order and it was several minutes before the jury could return to the courtroom.

The 50-year-old showman was overpowered by emotion and for several minutes he could not speak, but his wife, turning to the spectators as they surged about the couple, said:

"This is the happiest moment of my life. The mills of the gods grind slowly, but truth will out. I'm too happy to say more."

Panagiotis, finally regaining his composure, commented: "I am very happy that my name has finally been cleared of the charges brought against me two years ago. I have suffered much during these two years. My fullest gratitude and appreciation go to the fair-minded ladies and gentlemen of the jury who saw the truth and spoke it."

The verdict was reached by a 12-0 vote. The jurors, including J. Morehouse, one of the jurors said, by "eliminating witnesses we believed had not told the truth until we finally got the testimony we felt was acceptable." He said the jurors never believed the story told by the girl who had accused Panagiotis.

From the day of his arrest, August 9, 1929, Panagiotis claimed that the girl's dancing partner, and Miss Pringle had conspired to blacken his character because of his refusal to buy their act.

The first vote Tuesday night, after a case went to the jury, was 10-2 for acquittal, and it remained at that count until the ballot last night.

Miss Pringle, who had remained at her home, said when she learned of the verdict:

"The verdict goes to show quite clearly the value of the state of California places on its girls. The verdict shows me that a person who gives up the best years of her life for justice is lost. I am glad to give me the state will not protect its women."

After the acquittal, she said she planned to prosecute a $100,000 damage suit filed against Panagiotis shortly after the first trial.

The alleged assault occurred in a private office of Panagiotis' theatre building in the downtown district. As Panagiotis left the courtroom, he announced he planned to embark again on an extensive business venture in vaudeville showbusiness. Shortly before the alleged assault, he sold his holdings at a reported price of $100,000. Since then he has established several new theatres and he said today that he planned a circuit of about 20 houses.

Only the Pringle damage suit faces Panagiotis now out of a long series of court actions begun about two years ago.

Mussolini Now Enjoys Speedboating But Makes Errors in Close Quarters

(By The Associated Press) ROME, Nov. 27—Mussolini's love for motorboating keeps him pole and oar on the Tiber river, but he makes errors in close quarters.

For with the coming of fall he took to driving a small speedboat on the river.

Good Pilot At Sea

A good pilot on the open sea, he is sometimes erratic in close quarters—and there are a number of scraped landing stages and battered fenders along the Tiber as a result.

When the Fascist chieftain goes for a spin he is followed by a police launch, which is in his wake as he scoots under bridges and roams past the many club landing stages.

The secretary of one of these clubs, composed largely of English and American residents of Rome, got the surprise of his life one morning.

Sideboard Landing Stage

Clad in rowing clothes he was putting a shell into the water when a fast travelling speedster sidestepped the stage.

"What do you think you're doing, driving a horse?" he yelled at the boat's pilot.

And then he had a bad 20 minutes waiting to the policeman that he meant no disrespect to the head of the government.

Mussolini may be a good pilot on the open sea, but there are many scraped landing stages on the Tiber to indicate that his speedboating there is erratic.

SYNOPSIS: New York society, welcome Venice, after years of pestering her, when she returns from Paris with a dazzling reputation. Venice has planned years of adventures abroad, and is reported responsible for a marriage. She especially hopes to meet Drake Farrelly, and may follow him to his home in the West.

Chapter 32
PENNY THRILLS
"I simply can't understand you these days, darling," Lolo said. "Do you remember how hard I used to work on your prospects?"

"Yes," said Venice. "The cocaine is a metamorphosis. Is that the word?"

"It's a swell word, whether it's the right one or not. Wait'll I tell Jerry. He informed me the other day that you're the most intriguing looking of the batch of females that came out of your pen."

Venice quite gravely reflected that the actual football Venice enjoyed the human sea, wave on wave up the tiers of the bowl. All at once the whole ocean was a line and gesture and scream. Cries hung heavy as something tangible on the air. Down the tiers the small figures made formations, scattered, stopped, huddled. Some one lay flat on his ground. Lolo and Venice had dinner at Rollo's club. Rollo's arm, were seen coming driving back. Venice felt toward him "in some unbecomingly" checked. Venice had to eagerly hoped to see Drake Farrelly. The envious eyes of the girls she knew, taking her in his hollow arms, were seen coming driving back. Venice felt toward him "in some unbecomingly" checked.

"Venice is going to the Yale-Princeton game with Roland Wainwright," Lolo told him. "I didn't mean that," protested Venice. "I was thinking of that lunch some, darling young man, picking Venice."

"It's too good for him," "Why?" said Venice defensively. "It's a paper doll. Pretty damn good, but not expensive paper." "You're always bitter about society's gods," Venice could not resist suggesting.

"You're always bitter about four other sets." "What other sets?" asked Lolo. "I'm intensely interested at this time of year."

"The grave, my self Venice is, Lolo, her best to another. Venice, gazing at his wide, solemn eyes behind his glasses, liked him, but wondered how any one could be so bold with him. Like coming with a vivaciousness. This idea seemed as they rose from the table and he subtly yet helpfully aided Lolo to find her stick and shove back her chair. She doesn't realize how he's helping her, thought Venice. He's kind and good—and knows. This last adjective came back to her with its import. She admitted her shame. Momentarily she admitted to herself that she had been wrong when she actually agreed with him perfectly. They were leaving the dining-room. He bowed her elbow. She started.

"Never mind, Venice," he said kindly. "You can be honest with me one of these days." She blushed. He was uncanny. Mr. and Mrs. Wainwright drove with Venice and Rollo to the city. Venice was alone. The conversation was desultory and unimportant but being four-sided it saved her the mental effort of keeping the train in his rascally com amuse. She slanted the responsibility to his parents and enjoyed looking out of the window, watching the steady stream of cars crowded with gay faces. A car came to a stop. She saw a blue ribbon on a lapel there. They lunched at Rollo's club and everything was crowded and noisy and exciting. Venice found herself looking here and there everywhere for Drake Farrelly. It was Lolo. There was no particular reason why he should be at the game. They ran into Lolo and Jerry on the street, running along with the crowd, a gay, turbulent train of human souls flowing toward the bowl. At the gate they bumped into Lolo. Drake Farrelly had been color into her face that was almost purple. She looked heavy and indifferent but her cheeks were eagerly bending down towards her to catch anything she might choose to utter. Venice observed that she and Rollo walked close in their wake that her words seemed quick and quiet.

"Do you know Ann Duray?" she asked. "You met her at Lolo's." "Do you think she's attractive?" "She has that certain something. You know what it is. She's through all sorts of harrowing experiences." "Yes," Venice smiled to herself. "You know what it is. She's through all sorts of harrowing experiences."

"It was an exciting game. More than the actual football Venice enjoyed the human sea, wave on wave up the tiers of the bowl. All at once the whole ocean was a line and gesture and scream.
