Biographer Calls Eastman Pioneer in Industrial Research

INTEREST IN LIFE ENDED WITH WORK, OPINES EDUCATOR

Journalist Terms Industrialist Who Took Own Life "Man of Action"

"ILLNESS CAUSED MENTAL SUICIDE" Manufacturer Quit Going to Church Because of Unfriendly Attitude Toward Science

By R. R. BRACKETT (Associated Press Staff Writer) NEW YORK, March 29—George Eastman, who killed himself because his life work was done, was probably the first American industrialist to make chemical research a permanent part of his business.

And from chemical research sprang all scientific industrial research. Pioneered Industrial Technique Thus, in a sense, George Eastman was responsible for the industrial technique, with its astounding continuous development of mass manufacture that has helped America lead the world along a new economic path.

Who was the man who did this? Why did he, apparently one of the most successful men in his time? Part Ackerman, dean of the Columbia school of journalism and Eastman's biographer, believes it was because he had no work to do. He was a man of action. When he was to be withdrawn from all activity, he became ill.

Life Became Unbearable The action of any man is impossible and life was unnecessary, it was a mental, not a physical, suicide. A picture of George Eastman's life from the time he was a boy to the time he died is given in a book "The Life of George Eastman" by H. R. Knickerbocker.

At the right of one entered was an orchard and he made them his life. Next was a rare flower, always a painting. Mr. Eastman often had a painting on his wall, a collection, changed as he decided what he might like to look at that day.

Kept Thoughts to Himself In this case, George Eastman had a habit of keeping his thoughts to himself. "And no man or woman knew him well enough to know what George Eastman thought about as he looked into that flint as he looked at that day."

Perhaps when he was younger, his thoughts were spoken, but in the few years that he had retired from business, it would be difficult to gain from what he said. His friends an explanation of his suicide.

The late George Eastman found application of a new research technique to industry so all-absorbing that when he retired from its administration a lessened interest failed to sustain his living beyond the completion of his work. Here are photographs showing him at various periods in his active career, the largest and most recent showing him as he appeared in his library.

GARNER UNITES HOUSE IN DRAMATIC ATTEMPT. TO PASS REVENUE BILL

The chief executive's face was stern as he arose from his desk at the start of his press conference.

"I do not believe any such legislation can become law," he said. "Such action is a complete repudiation of the American Legion convention months ago at Detroit."

Senate Republicans, Pennsylvania expressed this opinion publicly yesterday.

Explaining he always had opposed a sales tax and always would oppose it, Mr. Garner said he had no objection to a sales tax.

"I think more of my country than I do of a theory of taxation that I may have, and the country at this time is in a condition where the work of the country expects of congress at this time."

"Babe" Herman, Brooklyn "Astro" Goes To Reds

Rejection Of Pay Slash Figures In Loss Of Favorite

New "Quiet Efficiency" Rule of Dodgers Takes Note of "Hoiman's" Drop in Batting Average in 1931

By LOREN DISNEY (Associated Press Staff Writer)

NEW YORK, March 29.—Well, Babe Hoiman is gone. A "Quiet Efficiency" rule has taken its toll. "Hoiman" is no longer a favorite. It is hard to figure out just what the trolly-car riders over in Flatbush are going to talk about come the steamy August days.

"Babe" was an institution over in Brooklyn. He knew it, and the fans knew it. You needed only to see the putout manner in which he flung down his bat after grounding out with the winning runs on base, a thing which happened with lamentable frequency, to know that he carried the load of the Dodgers.

It is easy to see then why Herman refused a contract calling for $15,000 when it was generally reported that "Hoiman" had been offered $10,000 by the Cubs. He thought his .303 batting average of 1930 dropped to .213 last year.

Old Days Over

"Babe" should have sensed the new ambition of the club management for quiet efficiency—an ambition made clear when the general manager, Wilbert, was discarded as manager in favor of Max Carey. If he desired to remain at Brooklyn, he should have known that "Babe" did not desire to be made clear by his statement in Los Angeles when he said that he was being kept from the club by "Hoiman" and Ernest Lombard to the Cincinnati Reds for Joe Stripp, Tony Cuccinello and Clyde Sikeforth.

"Brooklyn was my spot," Herman said after he regained his complete control of his life. "It doesn't matter where I go, I never will forget the loyalty of the fans at Ebbets Field."

"Babe" Hardly Efficient

But "Babe" never was good at this efficiency business. Last year he returned his first contract unpaired with the fans of the club. If he was the property of the club it was up to the management to get him out of the club. He didn't, but a long wrangle followed. That didn't help his case, and President Frank York in his recent hold out.

Indeed, it was this very disdain of the commonplace that made "Hoiman" the idol of Brooklyn for the six years he was with the club. He came to the Dodgers from Seattle in 1925 as a first baseman. He was the star of the team. He was the first baseman. He was the star of the team. He was the first baseman. He was the star of the team.

"Babe" flied and base running antics coupled with his sharp bat and hitting ability. He was the star of the team. He was the first baseman. He was the star of the team. He was the first baseman. He was the star of the team.

Stories were even dug up from the points "Babe" had covered in the trail of 12 clubs in his career. He was the star of the team. He was the first baseman. He was the star of the team. He was the first baseman. He was the star of the team.

The Reds can be sure of one thing, however. "Hoiman" is not coming to an agreement on his salary. They'll get a lot of hitting out of him. "Hoiman" is not coming to an agreement on his salary. They'll get a lot of hitting out of him.

NEW YORK, March 29 (AP)—His right leg broken and smashed in an automobile accident, Francis T. Hunter, Western newspaper publisher and former Davis cup player, tonight appeared at the end of his long and hard playing career.

Hunter is expected to recover but still was in a serious condition at the New Rochelle hospital where he is being kept. He was 37 years old.

Hunter's leg was broken in a fall from a horse while playing tennis. He was a member of the 1927-28 United States Davis cup team, competing in the doubles with "Big Bill" Tilden. He was a thirty-year-old tennis player.

Survey Director Advocates Deer Hunting in Idaho

BOISE, March 29 (AP)—Warning that hunting must be permitted to reduce the increasing number of deer on the Payette game preserve in the vicinity of Lownan was given today by T. L. Murray, director in Idaho of the biological survey.

Returning this morning from a week's investigation of red and white deer in the vicinity of Lownan, Murray said there was much evidence of over use of the browse in the forest by deer and elk. This results in a decline in the amount available, he said, and will soon leave the animals in more serious condition than at present.

Dr. Spears Goes To Wisconsin As Football Mentor

PORTLAND, March 29 (AP)—The Morning Oregonian in a copyrighted story today will say that Dr. Spears, who has been named as Oregon football coach, has decided to accept a position as head coach of the University of Wisconsin.

The decision was made tonight, the Oregonian will say, after a conference with Artie Mucka, associate professor of the college and director of the football team at Wisconsin. Mucka was sent here by Wisconsin officials in an effort to persuade Spears to accept the post, the paper will say. Mucka is a personal friend of Dr. Spears. Dr. Spears said he would like to be the Oregonian, that it was with "altruistic regrets" and only after long study that he decided to leave Oregon.

Ellsworth Vines Loses At Tennis

HOUSTON, Texas, March 29 (AP)—The American tennis champion, Ellsworth Vines, was eliminated from the second annual Houston tournament last night in a match by a 20-year-old Texas university sophomore, Martin Buxby.

The score was 6-4, 6-2, 7-5.

The upset left Buxby to enter the third round tomorrow playing against Artie Mucka, Dallas.

What happened to Vines, national singles champion and seeded number 1 in the tournament, was not clearly clear. Many times, it was said, his placements were inaccurate, and he seemed shaken and lacking the vigor which won the North-South court from the North, may have had something to do with his game. The court, however, was rather wet from a slight rain.

KITTY FREW

by JANE ABBOTT

SYNOPSIS: Memory that her husband-in-law is plotting to "un-dermine her marriage" determined Kitty Frew to persuade her husband to take her away from the parents' home. She has not been happy staying there, but Gar's money and the fact that she has a "good job" at the bank, she works. Her small-town background prevents her from fitting in with Gar's friends, and she is estranged especially by Mrs. Crosby, who wants to annex Gar. For some time Gar has been busy with Mrs. Crosby's affairs, and she has been neglecting her duties as a wife. One day during his absence Kitty took Gar's half-worth-while car and is estranged from the family, and whom she likes and trusts. Gar is young and in-teresting, and falls in love with Kitty's disconcerted and his mother's friendly attitude toward her. He would like to see her warmer to his friends, but says he will work.

Chapter 13

Found was taking Mrs. Frew that Griffin was at the door with the key. They went away. Kitty heard the door opening and the drawing room with the tea things.

She went upstairs to the stairs; she had the door open and saw Gar's room—behind her, standing against it, she started about her for a moment, as if the familiar things in the room had taken her by surprise. Gar's things, for the most part, her own few possessions were scattered about the room. She bathed, running the water to almost scalding heat, yet so hot was she still with anger that the hot water cooled. She dressed, her fingers moving mechanically.

Before her mirror she suddenly put down her brush. Why? That girl facing her wasn't Kitty Brandon! She gave a short gasp. "What a chance—it was funny—thrust out! And then she remembered what David had said about her. "If you have a chance—"

And now she had her chance. He was in her hair. She and Gar could go to a hotel for tonight and tomorrow they'd find a furnished apartment. She'd have to get that woman's scheming.

"She put on the dress she had traveled in, coming from the city. She dragged her suitcase out from the depths of Gar's clothes closet and began to pack her things. She was a little headachy. She had just taken the new yellow chiffon from the trunk when she heard her step on the stairs outside. She dropped it to open the door.

"Gar! She clung to him. Oh, he was so big, so dear, so good to feel you!"

Then she straightened a little and took up her hat. She held the light hold of his hand as she drew him into the room. "Now tell me all about it. How did it happen?"

"It's quite great. Kit. Decker caught Marge's idea right off. He's going to keep the barn effect. The rafters and things—"

"But, Gar, I mean—your father? He was so big, so dear, so good to feel you!"

Gar was taking off his coat. He did not notice the pleading on Kitty's face. "Oh, that's her money, really. I didn't see Dad. I talked it over with the Mother, and she advised against it. She thinks I ought
