Babson Issues Figures to Support Contention Aviation Industry Will Continue to Grow, and Yield Profit

Statistician Answers Queries About Future Of Airplanes With Data Showing Gains of 18 Per Cent In Passengers, 14 Per Cent In Mail and 200 Per Cent In Air Express

By ROGER W. BABSON BABSON PAPER, May 26— I am often asked: "How about aviation? Do you still think it has a great future or has the depression ruined its prospects?" My answer is that the figures speak for themselves. Eighteen per cent more passengers, 14 per cent more mail and 200 per cent more express were carried in 1931 than in 1930. In 1932, judging by the increase for the first four months, at least 20 per cent more passengers and mail will be flown than last year. This year a total of over 50,000,000 miles will be flown on regular domestic airlines, the number of active planes making airplanes is about 50 per cent less than it was in 1928. The number of great surplus production over sales in 1928 and 1929, production is and receive more and more of their revenues from passenger service. Whereas the year ago passenger revenues were an insignificant part of the transport lines' income, in the year ago they were at least one-fourth of the total receipts. Even though the income from air mail will be lower than in the year ago, the prospective gain in passenger revenues should more than offset this loss. Total payments to air carriers increased in 1932 than they did a year ago. It is the conviction of the industry that the method of fostering the development of commercial aviation. It has grown tremendously. Air mail revenue last year was $2,281,042, a gain of 10 per cent over 1931. Owing to lower contract rates, however, total payments to air carriers increased only half as much.

With a smaller government appropriation for the next year, the average payments to individual operators will probably be around $50 a mile against $100 in 1931. Hence, $100. While the air mail business affords a backbone of revenues, the greatest opportunity for aviation expansion lies in passenger transport.

As in the case of the railroads and steamships, the growth of mail by air will ultimately reach saturation point and maintain a steady level of revenue. Air express is rapidly increasing, but still amounts to only about 1 per cent of the gross revenues. As the business develops, extra traffic offers an opportunity for aviation expansion. It is in personal travel.

I am optimistic on the long term future of the aviation industry because it is meeting a fundamental economic need—the need for speedy transportation. To provide speed in any form of transportation costs money, but it costs more on the steamships and railroads to increase their speed than it does the airplane.

In fact, regardless of cost, there are other forms of transportation can never approach the speed possible by airplane. To build a steamship that will make 24 knots an hour costs twice as much as to make one capable of 41 knots an hour. The railroads, in order to meet the need for speed, have increased their speeds to the limit of safety. Heavier tracks, heavier locomotives, and other large capital expenditures are necessary. Even with these the railroads can never seriously compete in speed with the airplane. In fact present air transport speed, it is estimated, can be doubled or tripled with safety and with moderate additional cost. Conservation of time in travel particularly for business men, is now recognized as a factor in lower costs. Not only airplanes have got rates down to where they are approximately equal to railroads, but Pullman fares, the volume of traffic will steadily increase.
