We are spending much time on something that will not secure the support of the majority of the people. It is a waste of time to talk about prohibition when the people are talking about boom.

The prohibition debate was launched by Senator Walsh, Massachusetts, who started most shouting when he said: "The Eighteenth amendment is doomed from this day."

The immediate question, he said, was whether we were to have a dry or a wet country. For 13 long years we have witnessed a vain attempt to make a people miserable by the enactment of a law which has done almost nothing, but has cost the country millions of dollars.

His thinking has fallen over his face, as he elbowed his fists and roared a finger and a foot at the audience. He said: "I am not a politician, but I am a man of letters. I have studied the history of the world and I have found that the only way to get a people to do what is right is to make it pay for it."

He declared that he was not under the spell of the magic of prohibition, and added: "It is not my duty to say anything which will bring a man to his knees. I am not a politician, but I am a man of letters. I have studied the history of the world and I have found that the only way to get a people to do what is right is to make it pay for it."

The "Happy Warrior" continued his attack on the prohibition amendment. He said that the amendment was a failure and that it had done nothing to solve the problem of alcohol.

HOOPER PLAN CHANGES IDEAS OF FRENZIED

WASHINGTON, June 20 (AP)—American delegates to the disarmament conference were greatly encouraged today by the news that France, which had been strongly opposed to President Hoover's proposal for a one-third cut in armaments, was becoming more and more favorably disposed toward them.

There was one break on their encouragement. The position of Great Britain remained uncertain, and the United States delegation prepared to enter the Hoover plan before the general assembly of the conference if the British delay continues for any great period.

LINDBERGH SMILES AT CURTIS' TRIAL

(Continued From Page One) He actually had been in touch with the kidnapers and typed the hoax confession "just to get some sleep." The statement and the testimony of a federal operative about an interview he had with an unnamed man on information that Lindbergh by Curtis were high spots in the trial's third day.

Frank J. Wilson, the federal investigator who checked-up on some of Curtis' stories, declined to give the man's name, saying he had not intended talking to him the time he did and he feared the interview jeopardized the chance of capturing the kidnapers and murderers of the baby.

The man suspected of being implicated in the kidnaping drama, Judge Adam Robbins upheld Wilson's refusal to give the man's name. Wilson was one of the revenue department's special agents who gathered the evidence which placed Al Capone in Atlantic penitentiary, Chicago, Illinois, New York, friend of Curtis, who was present when Curtis was negotiating with the newspaper executives for sale of an exclusive story of the return of the baby, told him he had taken pictures of Lindbergh.

Yesterday Bruce testified he had taken no picture of Lindbergh on the boat, meaning it "would not be good taste."

A few days before the baby's body was discovered in the woods near the Lindbergh home, Haskell said Curtis told him: "Alex and I are going to drop a bomb on you that will startle the world in a few days."
