Discovery of Kidnap Hideout Spurs Hunt For Four Abductors

Caleb J. Milne, Fourth, Recovering From Narcotic, Furnishes 'G-Men' With Description Of Quartet

(By The Associated Press) DOYLESTOWN, Pa., Dec. 19.—Caleb J. Milne, fourth, gave federal agents tonight a description of four men who kidnaped him in New York and through his description enabled them to find the hideout where he was held prisoner for four days.

Milne, scion of a wealthy Philadelphia family was abandoned by his abductors last night on a highway near Doylestown. Government authorities said today no ransom was paid. Federal agents and a stenographer who sat about his bedside in a hospital took his story.

They said they had found the hideout—a dilapidated house on a farm—about 10 miles east of the spot where Milne was thrown out of a car last night—on an accurate description of movements made by the kidnapers given by Milne.

Descriptions sent out. The agents said they sent identification orders on the four kidnapers to every federal bureau in Washington office in the country.

Near the hideout, they said they found a hypodermic syringe and needles, which indicate the kidnapers used to keep Milne in a condition bordering on unconsciousness during the four days and nights he was held.

The agents said they also found heavy doses of a narcotic drug in the house. They believe the abductors obtained their drug, Milne said, when he was given only once during his imprisonment.

The British government, although admitting it erred in backing the Anglo-French peace plan, won a decisive victory in parliament Thursday.

After long hours of debate, the house of commons rejected a labor motion of censure, 397 to 165. The house of lords earlier had upheld the government.

The victory was expected in view of the overwhelming conservative majority following the recent general elections.

Fear Break In League Sir Samuel Hoare fearfully walked out of commons, the "captain" of the government, Earl St. Helens, who resigned Wednesday as foreign secretary, contended he had done so in drawing up the peace formula with Premier Laval.

But Prime Minister Stanley Baldwin, who admitted he had made an error, maintained that the honor of commons would uphold him, because of the tremendous conservative majority.

Baldwin said there was a lack of contact with Hoare when the latter was in Paris and that when he returned to London he was told he should have recalled Hoare from London. Instead, the cabinet voted approval of the peace program and then the storm of opposition broke.

The house of lords, after debate on the crisis, upheld the government.

Peace Plan Dead Issue The opposition made bitter attacks upon the government, charging that the peace plan was a "sell-out" and that Hoare was being made the "scapegoat" to save the cabinet.

1935: THE STORY OF A YEAR
4. Scientists Explore Cold Realms, Discover New Medicines

By STEPHEN J. McMONAGHAN

WASHINGTON (AP)—Explorations into unknown realms of natural and unnatural cold temperatures featured the progress of science during a year which brought significant advances in hundreds of fields.

While physicists at Leyden, Netherlands, achieved a new record in studying matter at the lowest temperature ever achieved, 1.9 millionths of a degree above absolute zero (491 degrees Fahrenheit) below freezing point of water, members of the second Byrd Antarctic expedition were conducting their year's work on a 22-point scientific program in the intense cold of the Antarctic continent.

Late in the year, two United States army scientists, Captain Albert W. Stevens and Cyril A. Derron, explored a "third frontier" of intense cold in setting a new altitude record of 23,233 feet in the national geological survey's balloon Explorer II. That expedition, like the Byrd venture, brought back new and mysterious data on ozone rays, resistance and meteorology.

Goddard Peretta Roellett, M.D., of the University of California, San Francisco, perfected his "rocker," capable of moving into any part of the body, and prepared to build larger space machines to explore the earth's outer atmosphere.

In the field of disease prevention and cure, mankind was greatly enlightened by the year's discovery in medicine, ranging from new use of vitamin of the deadly cobra to relieving cancer pain, to the synthetic insulin, to the discovery of the virus regulators, and the new approach to synthesis of vitamins.

Medical research advanced in many directions, such as the discovery of the virus which causes the disease, the discovery of the virus which causes the disease, the discovery of the virus which causes the disease.

The record-breaking scientific ascension of the Explorer II (upper right) was one of the highlights of 1935. Scientists the nation were making discoveries in their varied fields. In his study of cosmic rays, Arthur H. Compton (above) of the University of Chicago built a new concept of their composition.

A new estimate of the heat of some stars at 2,000,000,000 degrees Fahrenheit was offered by the Harvard Observatory. In the study of cosmic rays, Arthur H. Compton (above) of the University of Chicago built a new concept of their composition.

University of Virginia developed a new method of separating the isotopes, or "twins" of elements, which differ only by having different masses.

At Harvard university, Dr. P. W. Bridgman and his associates prepared entirely new forms of matter with pressures of 1,000,000 pounds per square inch and a slight twist of the compressing piston. Soft graphite became diamond-like, paper became hard and heavy, common minerals became violently explosive, and five new forms of ice, one of which will enrich water, were a few of the results.

GOVERNMENT RAIL OPERATION URGED
Labor Executives See Only One Way Out of Morass: Bankers Blamed

WASHINGTON, Dec. 19.—Government ownership of railroads was urged tonight by the railway laborers' national association as the only way out of the morass in which the roads have been placed by the bankers.

In a circular sent to all congressmen the association asserted that the present roads are used as a ploy in a financial power game. The cards being stacked against the public, there can result only increased difficulties for the railroads and a continuation of practices which were said to endanger the nation's welfare.

A bill pending for government ownership of the carriers is building in the senate. It was introduced last session by Senator Wheeler (Mont.) who said he would not press for immediate action.

Wall Street Blamed. Wall street financiers, the labor chiefs charged, were shown by a court investigation this year as having "wrecked" the St. Louis and San Francisco railroad, a once prosperous enterprise for the railroads and a continuation of practices which were said to endanger the nation's welfare.

COUNTY AGENT PUTS AAA PROGRAM FIRST

Crop Control Activities Make Heavy Demands on Office

Harvey S. Hale, Twin Falls county agent, during the past six years, has completed an 86-page report covering the activities of his office the past year and concluding with the observation that:

"The demand for services from the county extension agent in 1936 will be greater than any year since the work was established in this county 20 years ago. The county agent will be required to supervise the present agricultural adjustment programs and put in operation the new county program. The livestock marketing and livestock grading projects will require about half the agent's time. The many other projects such as soil conservation, soil correction, dairy improvement, poultry husbandry, rodent and coyote control, and other projects will demand a considerable portion of the year's activities."

Calls for Assistance

Under these circumstances, and in view of the fact that "Twin Falls" is a diversified agriculture is a big field for extension activities," the county agent has made a recommendation for an increase in the personnel of his office which is maintained by the county in cooperation with federal government departments of agriculture. The county last year appropriated $2485 for the county agent's office.

Most important of the county extension service activities, according to the county agent report, are the agricultural adjustment programs and livestock marketing projects. These, the report says, "must necessarily take first precedence, though there are many other educational projects that should be promoted."

A summary included in the report shows that the county agent spent 3475 days last year on AAA programs, of which 3875 were in the office, and 16 days in the field.

Production Control

AAA programs operative in this county last year were the wheat program which was credited with distribution of $185,000 among 1000 wheat growers; sugar beet production control which distributed $212,338.20 among 859 contract planters; corn-hog production control which distributed $57,729.20 among 32 contract planters; and the drought purchase of cattle and sheep which paid $136 to 29 owners for 97 head and $102 to eight owners for 311 head ewes.

Twin Falls County Livestock Marketing Association for which the county agent is secretary, handled for its members 57 cars of lambs, 29 cars of hogs, 5 cars of cattle and 4972 pounds of wool. Total lamb new done by this association was $151,875.46. Members of the association also were aided in purchasing 4750 good-type, white-faced yearling ewes at reasonable prices.

County agents have also advised livestock owners by supplying information on zoning regulations on the public domain in national forests and in putting in applications for grazing permits, the report says.

Altogether, the report shows, the county agent spent 91 days in the office and 225 days in the field; received 17,219 office calls and 1234 telephone calls, and made 1,016 farm visits. His car was driven 47,880 miles during the year.

During the year, also, the county agent held 70 meetings attended by 5303 persons, and sent out 1622 printed letters and 32,305 circular letters.

Eight hundred farmers were reported to be keeping cost of production records.

BEET MEN QUIT NATIONAL GROUP

Mountain States Association to Withdraw From Organization

CHICKLEY, Colo., Dec. 19 (AP)—Directors of the Mountain States Beet Growers Marketing association voted last night to withdraw from the National Beet Growers association.

Although directors failed to state, most explaining their action, discussion of the move centered upon their contention the mountain states group does not have sufficient voice in the affairs of the national association.

The withdrawal would become effective next January 2. Action on it will be taken at the national association's annual meeting here January 7.

Several leading beet growers, who declined to be quoted pending the national meeting, said they looked with apprehension upon the proposed withdrawal, fearing that it would result in beet growers possibly would be disrupted.

Growers Unhappy

Unhappiness among growers has been increased by the forthcoming decision of the United States Department of Agriculture to increase the tax on beet sugar, including the Jobs-Cosigano sugar production control act.

But leaders previously had expressed the probability of starting a national beet protective program in the future if the A.A.A. is declared unconstitutional.

The national association is composed of representatives of beet growers in the eight important Western beet producing states—Idaho, Utah, Nevada, Wyoming, Idaho, Utah, South Dakota, Nebraska and Colorado.

Charles M. Kearney, of Morrill, Nebraska, president of the national association, appeared before the mountain states board during the meeting.

LONDON HOSPITAL HELPS WOMEN REDUCE 12 TONS

LONDON (AP)—How 12 tons of human fat has been removed from women patients in the East End district of London in nine years by dieting is discussed in a current issue of "Lancet," British medical journal. The London hospital, it is reported, has had 247 cases of gross overweight registered with its dietetic department since 1926. Women "nearly interested in obesity" are not welcomed. Patients are women who must reduce slowly to continue working. "The real problem of fat people," it is stated by hospital authorities, "is that they find it tremendously difficult to forego indulgence."

DEATH RIDES ON OPEN HIGHWAYS

State Records Show Saturday and Sunday Fatality Peak

BOISE, Dec. 19 (AP)—The automobile accident fatality peak comes on Saturdays and Sundays in Idaho. T. P. Graham, assistant chief clerk of the state department of law enforcement, declared tonight. During November 11 persons were killed in 10 accidents, and eight of the persons died as a result of injuries received Saturday and Sunday, Graham said. Thirty-one persons were injured in the 10 accidents. Three were during the month; 43 happened on state highways four on rural roads and seven on streets of cities and villages. Property damage was estimated at $10,000. "In other words, taking the links out of the highways has resulted in more accidents as I see it," Graham concluded.

Recklessness Figures The records showed that, during 1935 up to December 1, there were 413 persons injured in traffic accidents compared with 301 during 1934. In 1935, 132 persons have been killed in accidents on highways during 1935 up to December 1, compared with 114 during the first 11 months of last year. Some form of recklessness contributed to many of the accidents. 10 of 12 persons lives in November, Graham said. His records include only accidents that occur on Idaho roads and highways and do not correspond exactly with those of Mrs. Pearl C. Dillingham, director of the state bureau of vital statistics, whose records include accidents off the roads and show a total of 168 fatalities up to December 1 this year.

IDAHO MAPS PROGRAM OF ROADS REBUILDING

From Kama Hill to Hills some 10 miles will be rebuilt to eliminate curves, and in Bannock county are being eliminated as rapidly as possible. No figures on the estimated cost of the work are available, Stenmer said.

NEVER MIND THE LADY

by David Garth

SYNOPSIS: By accident Terry Willett finds out that Allaire West is in Washington, and gets off the New York train there with a girl he has met casually in a private car, the "Debatante II." Allaire and he have met for one week day in the tropics and neither has been able to forget the other since. Allaire, however, has the uncomfortable feeling that Terry has run one of those in her manner. Willett held it, unresponsive, in his. Her dark eyes, capable of saying so much, seemed to pity him.

Chapter 21
STOVEN

Ray West's rather rapid name of "Debatante II" for his private car had been a polite nose-thumbing gesture on the part of the girl. It was no secret that he had named the car after her.

Allaire was in Washington's gay social and diplomatic circle. She had been possessed of a cultivated beauty and had been a member of the faculty, and when she reclaimed the position that had been hers before she married Rayburne West, she was older in years, but in reality she was still the same.

She still cultivated her beauty assiduously and the refinement and intelligence which had been her forte. Her grace, her exclusive finishing schools, and delicate coiffures was still the foundation of her charm. She blended the mode of life of two generations. She patronized the arts, gave elaborate balls and led fashionable drives to payette-starring Zulus with collar buttons.

On the other hand, she held gay youthful cocktail soirees, attended promptly with handsome young men, and followed occasional affairs to their logical conclusion.

"You must enjoy it all," Puff told Terry darkly as they had a bite of supper in a smart little restaurant near Dupont Circle. "You can have a lot more fun sitting alone with me tonight. I have a small party—lots of fun."

"This just a stovener, Puff. I have business in New York, and all my luggage is in a hotel up there."

"What hotel?" Willett didn't see what difference that made, but he told her.

"Well, we can have a lot of fun in New York, too. I can take you to the palm of my hand."

"I'm not looking for fun exactly," said the girl. "This time you were getting on to yourself."

"They went out on the sidewalk and called taxi. In the door of her Puff's car."

"If you don't find Allaire," she said, "I live at the Mayflower, big boy." She smiled at him. "You can be in person, or send out thought waves. We can have a lot of fun."

She was gone. Terry looked after her a moment. Puff sat with dark hair seeming to endow her eyes with that violet color—and so what? Good-bye to her. He had a lot of fun tonight. He had a small party—lots of fun.

"The West house was a stone mansion on Massachusetts Avenue with four stories guarded by a wall and two large black drawbridge-like doors, one labeled "In" and the other "Out."

Terry got up before the lighted portfolio and regarded the place curiously a moment. He never would have guessed by a wall and two large black drawbridge-like doors, one labeled "In" and the other "Out."

Willie came into a broad hall lit by great crystal chandeliers shining down on a parquet floor. He sat down in a chair and looked at his hat around solemnly in his hands.

There was a warm lounge all about the kind of a place that reminded one of a corner of a smoking room on a luxurious ocean liner—the small sailing ship model on the mantelpiece, the dark rug, and an imperceptible feeling of vibration that emanated from the solid frames of the furniture, the flicking brass-bound clock, and the variously spaced dimmed lights supported by little rods of bridle iron.

"Miss West will receive you here, sir," said the butler.

"Thank you very much," said Willett politely.

He lit a cigarette, looked around him curiously, and noticed that his "business" was quite evidently an ornate function.

It seemed a long time before Allaire finally appeared. She came in a clear, blue dress, and she made him think of a shimmering object, closely about her. For a moment he looked at her. He had a feeling that she was being inspected like a prize bull. The girl made no move. "Surprised to see me?"

"The girl nodded her head gracefully.

"You didn't believe it all," she said calmly. "Of all people—the seginner. What are you doing in a civilized part of the world? Why, I'd rather imagine you'd be in the desert, fighting for Allah by now."

"That's quite a distance from South America."

"Pretty far," she agreed, "to run a diplomatic hand. And here you are, Terry, with your nose-thumbing gesture."

"Yes," she said, withdrawing her hand. "I had thought of you in a dark street, in a dimly lit, slugging whiskey from a demijohn over your shoulder and romantically defining the jungle to put up a sign that says 'TERRITORY OF THE BUREAU WAIST GARMENT COMPANY, Incorporated. Do sit down.'"

"I'm disappointed," she said, "that there was something vibrant and lively missing here. Surprise, he could have understood. But not this total lack of spontaneity."

"I can across your trail today," she said, finally. "Let your father on the Washington train."

"He often uses the 'Old Dominion' title," she added.

There was another silence. Willett thought that her father often called the "Old Dominion." Good thing that was settled.

"Did you? I'm very gratified, but why?"

"Why? Perfectly natural question of course, but this barrier of coolness was beginning to annoy him. He seemed a part of the cold reserve that surrounded her. "I wanted to see you again. After all," he pointed out, with a brief, surprising smile, "you saved my life."

"He'd had his life saved and saved lives himself five or six times in the course of his hectic career, but he hadn't been anything particularly noteworthy until this girl had covered him."

"Did you get off all right?" he asked abruptly.

"Very well, thanks. Mr. Fox saw to it admirably. Use to hold your breath. "George is good at that kind of thing."

"I don't know what I would have done without him. He's a very devotedly," she waved a hand to dismiss the subject. "Well, Mr. Willett, what is before you now?"

He didn't answer immediately. He was trying to figure out this strange behavior.

"I'm going to see my little girl for Christmas!"

"And he's going to see his little girl for Christmas!"

"I'm going to see my little girl for Christmas!"

"And he's going to see his little girl for Christmas!"

"I'm going to see my little girl for Christmas!"

"And he's going to see his little girl for Christmas!"

CHRISTMAS WITH DOT AND DICK

Dot and Dick and Old Pete, the prospector, were sitting in the cabin, talking about Christmas and making things for it.

"Goodness," said Dick, "I didn't have any idea you could make such fine things just from paper and tin cans."

"And it's been fun, too, hasn't it?"

"Just think, Dot, he's going to go in a real train!" exclaimed Dick. "Well, bless your heart!"

"Yes," said Dot, "but he won't be coming for Christmas, your mother said to spend Christmas with us, with me, you, and tomorrow—"

"Oh, Pete, we wanted you to evening, then I could see how you come to our house for Christmas, have arranged your plans."

"Mother said so, and we were going, 'Oh, yes,' both children expect to wait till the very last day to tell claimed. 'Please come and see what you, so you'll be surprised.'"
