

HAYS DISCLAIMS BAN ON PICTURE

Germany, Italy Pleased
by Decision Against
Lewis' Story

CHICAGO, Feb. 18 (AP)—Will Hays' denial that he had disapproved the filming of "It Can't Happen Here" caused the crest of the international ripple raised by Senator Lewis' story of an American traitor.

The head of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, applied of the report he had barred the screening of the novel, told reporters:

"It's all phony. It never happened."

"The association took no action to prevent this picture," he added. "The decision respecting the production of the picture was made by the producing company."

Cost Called Excessive

Metropolitan-Goldwyn-Mayer officials have announced they had abandoned plans to produce the movie for the present, "because it would cost too much."

Lewis' book concerns a New Englander and a German who, during the "storm troopers" of fascist dictator, who seized control of the nation in a political revolution. The author charged his work had been shelved through fear of international complications. He said he had been informed, "I have heard it because he didn't know which way the election might go, and he certainly didn't want to offend the Republicans."

Hays denied the quotation and said:

"The statement reported to have been made by Mr. Lewis is full of inaccuracies. If it is correct, he has been misinformed. There never was any question of this story affecting the Republican party in any way. No one, including myself, ever made any statement to that effect."

Previously, both German and Italian governments had professed pleasure that the picture had been banned.

HERE ARE THE REAL FACTS ABOUT BRAN

Brought Out by Tests with Kellogg's All-Brans

Some years ago, there was considerable difference of opinion regarding the use of bran. So to discover the actual facts of the case, the Kellogg Company asked for a series of laboratory tests at leading universities.

Experimental studies on a group of healthy women showed that the continued use of bran was thoroughly satisfactory. Unlike cathartics, it did not lose its effect.

Other independent tests on men indicated that, with certain people, the "bulk" in bran was more effective than that found in fruits and vegetables.

Laboratory analysis proved that Kellogg's All-Brans supplied vitamin B and iron as well as plenty of bulk. This "bulk" in All-Brans is gentle in action. It absorbs a great deal of moisture, and changes the intestinal tract.

All-Brans corrects constipation due to insufficient "bulk." It is the natural way—far better than using pills and tablets.

Serve as a cereal, or use in cooking. Sold by all grocers. Made by Kellogg in Battle Creek.

SACRAMENTO, Feb. 18 (AP)—A California boy who went to Florida to seek his fortune sent out an SOS to his native state today.

He asked Governor Merriam to send over a couple of thousand of California's imported lady beetles or lady bugs and help him save his pepper crop.

The request came from "R. H. Chapman, of Pompano, Fla."

The governor mentioned a minute and called in one of his secretaries.

"We may be able to help Mr. Chapman, I remember when I was in the legislature some years ago that California was infested with aphids and the legislature appropriated $10,000 to send an expert to Africa and round up these beetles which feed on the pest. Ask the department of agriculture what can be done about it."

The department set to work to locate the beetles and help save Chapman's pepper crop.

GOVERNMENT IN BUSINESS

Residents of towns in Southern states danced in the streets and otherwise celebrated Monday's Supreme Court decision which legalized the sale of power developed by means of government dams and the acquiring of transmission lines for the distribution of the same. The decision constitutes a victory for the New Deal although it is noteworthy that the Court specifically stated that the decision applied only to the case before it. Which may or may not mean the establishment of law applicable to all such government power projects.

No matter what may be said of the decision itself, it would have been unfortunate had the finding been otherwise. Heaven knows how many millions or billions have been spent on the project and to have wiped out in its entirety the value which the expenditure represents would have added seriously to the existing confusion in government finances engendered by the unfavorable A.A.A. decision of a few weeks ago.

Tennessee, Alabama and other States which share in the benefits of the huge Federal expenditures are perhaps justified in celebrating the Court's finding. Whether the country as a whole will gain or lose by the Tennessee Valley experiment will take some years to determine.

UNCLE WILL COLLECT

The Federal Housing Administration, finding that there is a "general mislender-stand" of how defaulted loans will be handled, and too much tendency on the part of borrowers to slide into default, makes this statement:

"It will be the policy of the FHA to be just as rigid as the Treasury Department is in the collection of taxes. The collection machinery is well organized; and while every reasonable consideration will be given to borrowers in default, the public must not get the impression that the Housing Administration will be lax."

Uncle Sam has been generous in providing funds and low interest rates on these loans. It is unreasonable now for the borrowers to expect more consideration from him than they would from responsible private bankers in their own communities. With a lax collection policy, the government as a lending agency would soon be sunk.

IDLENESS AND CIVILIZATION

The current topic for general conversational confusion seems to be leisure. J. P. Morgan started it with his statement that civilization would fall if there were no leisure class. Since then the argument has become complicated to such an extent there will have to be a show-down on definitions.

Some of the arguers think of a leisure class as the group of people with income enough to do as they please without working for their living. They may work, but it is by choice, not necessity. Other mean only people with some time regularly free from business routine. That might be stretched to include the millions of unemployed, who have no business obligations but whose tragic leisure is actually enforced idleness. Civilization is hardly benefited by their situation.

HEARTS AND HEADS

That frenzied struggle to save the life of the fox terrier at Landburg, Pennsylvania, when it slipped into a deep crevice in the Hills was that sentiment of sentimentalism?

For two long weeks those men toiled up the mountainside in the deep snow and bitter cold, and chiseled and dynamited their way toward the place where the little victim was caught, or seemed to be caught, in the crack of the rock. Then when they finally reached the spot, the dog was gone.

If the animal was really there for any length of time, it must have suffered bitterly, and the most merciful thing, surely, would have been a bullet to end its misery. And that heroic labor might have been more profitable if applied as energetically to the relief of human needs which exist in every community.

If this observation is critical, it criticizes not hearts but heads. True sentiment uses both.

ENCOURAGING WORD TO THE JAPANESE

(One Moscow Register)

It is so pitifully seldom we hear any portrayal of the Japanese as other than a race of greedy and unprincipled materialists that the comments of Marlen Pave are distinctly refreshing.

"Mr. Pave, who is editor of the newspaper industry organ, 'Editor and Publisher,' recently returned from the Far East with the conviction that Japan is going to experience a definitely liberal movement before long, and furthermore that the emperor secretly welcomes such a revolution."

"We have nothing to fear from the educated Japanese," he added. "They love us and look to us as the nation farthest advanced in the world. They copy everything we do and cannot understand why there is so much misunderstanding between the people of Japan and the United States."

While we may not feel that this quote "liber" with the recent pronouncement of a Japanese admiral that his navy will be prepared to lick the American and British navies combined, it needs to be remembered that we, too, have our noble and brilliant jingoists who occasionally make not only tactless but also impossible boasts. And some of them in just as high places, governmentally, as the Japanese admiral, too. Our own resentment toward these outbursts at home ought to forearm us not to judge the whole Japanese people by the blarney of some of their ostensible "spokesmen." Furthermore, Japan has not enjoyed nearly as much of a democratic tradition as we have, and the military department of government still have an unwarranted stranglehold on even the civil branches. We need to remember that, and to recall that actually the liberal sentiment, and often even the civil division of government, have as yet no adequate facilities for expressing themselves.

All of this is a misfortune of how governmentalism is added. "They love us and look to us as the nation farthest advanced in the world." This thing requires time, however impatient we of one generation may become.

After all, with our splendid traditions of democracy and civilization, our rabid nationalists still get out more educationally and a large part of our population still view the international relations along pretty narrow channels.

AN ADEQUATE NATIONAL DEFENSE

(Moscow Star-Mirror)

Strategists recognize that one of the best defenses is a good offense. So among those who sincerely wish the policy of continued peace, adequate military preparations.

One of the principal duties of the American government is set forth in the preamble of the federal constitution is carried in these words:

"To form a more perfect union, establish justice, insure domestic tranquility, provide for the common defense, promote the general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves."

We are now observing national defense week. As a week, it means little. It will soon be over and another "week" be observed. But national defense—adequate defense—is something else.

We have been bombarded in the years since the world war with the idea of peace by disarmament. We have been told to believe in arbitration of international difficulties. We have been told that uniform disarmament between nations is the most practical way to insure peace.

But the United States, in its relatively short history of 150 years, has had 10 wars. We were never actually prepared for any of them. The Controversy, without any arms and armaments, without any preparation for war, accepted war to defend its liberties of slavery.

Proponents of a policy of adequate national defense have back to the wisdom of George Washington, who in 1793 declared:

"If we desire peace, one of the most powerful instruments of our ruling principle, it must be known that we are at all times ready for war."

The history of the world during the last four years we believe is adequate proof that being unprepared for war is about the surest way of inviting war. There was China—perhaps the most unprepared of nations on earth for war. She got it—and lost a large slice of her territory to Japanese control. There was Ethiopia, basing upon the false security of her league of nations membership. She is vainly trying to repel the fascist invaders today.

New York Day by Day

By O. O. McIntyre

NEW YORK, Feb. 19.—Harry Hunsicker is by long odds most persistent of the bandwagon riders. He has been scarcely an evening in 10 years he has not either preached or made a speech at a public dinner.

O. O. McIntyre

As founder of the Cheese Club, a nebulous luncheon organization, he is given a public dinner himself every year and twice in the last decade of banter and bathos. There usually is a telegram from the incumbent of the White House and a touching talk by his guest, Jimmy Walker.

Hunsicker is a prematurely white-haired enthusiast of many talents—a comedian, actor, quondam columnist, novelist and collector—of paintings. One of his intimates is Albert Einstein, with whom he has long walks through the Jersey meadows and always escorts on his appearances in public.

The crack-up of the marriage of the beautiful actress, Jean Harlow, and her actor husband, Jay Gould, followed by her marriage to a man who is actually a box office "pull" to Argentine aristocrat, ends another of the celebrated Broadway romances. The marriage to the big actor followed his appearance as her leading man in a vehicle in which she was the particular star.

They quit the stage and began a migratory life that swung from Palm Beach to the Riviera, to their stoneware white decorated apartments.

WASHINGTON
ERBAST—Oscar Norris doesn't know it yet but his recent denunciation of "Parisian" was one of those things which came at the wrong time. It probably means that Mr. Parley will stay on as Postmaster General longer than he wants to, for he can't quit under fire.

Both the President and the Postmaster General agree on one point: so that it was time for him to step out and take charge of the reelection campaign. They have been sitting up nights trying to persuade Frank Walker to take the job. But the modern man from Montana and Manhattan has solemnly refused. He doesn't enjoy the limelight of a Cabinet post and he says that private business is the only thing he wants to live at Washington.

Although he is still first choice, the President is looking for a more astute. None appears to be in sight that it none with the right qualifications. Frank Murphy, Resident High Commissioner of the Philippines, could have it, but he's saving to run for Governor of Michigan.

NATIVES—Our diplomats don't expect the London agreement to seep information of naval construction. The British are expected to reveal the details of the new "United States" fleet, Britain, France and Italy.

Without Russia as a member of the international league of nations will be in the dark on her policies affecting Eastern Europe, the Balkans and the Orient.

There was no knowledge of her preparations for a possible thrust against France and England. In short, the figures won't add up unless Hitler and Stalin—two dictators who have been in the news for a "battleground, battle, who's got the battlement."

It is shown on the inside that Russia will publicize the tonnage of her ships, the size of her guns and future building plans if Germany

Woman Rebel Leader Again on War Path

GUADALAJARA, Jalisco, Mexico, Feb. 18.—(P) The woman leader of the "Cristero" movement in this state, has again been in arms, said dispatches received here today.

Leading a band of men, she is said to have robbed the "Las Bolas" hacienda in the state of Jalisco. The only candidate without a prohibition tag is Colonel Frank Knickerbocker. He is said to be a "battleground, battle, who's got the battlement."

The woman, widow of one of the "Cristero" leaders, started her revolutionary career in 1929 in the rebellion and fought until 1931.

Then she laid down arms and lived at her father's home until she decided to renew her militant activities—his protest against "socialist education."

Guiding Your Child

By ALICE CLARIBBA RICHMOND

INDICATION

"May I have a piece of candy, mother?"

"No."

"Please, mother, just one little one, please—mother."

"Well, just a little one then. But don't ask me for any more. And don't do this again, for this is the last time."

But it is not the last time and Joe knows it. When he wants forbidden fruit of some kind, he has only to tease enough and his mother finally will give in.

Such inductive training is definitely for children. It is not a mine discipline and, far from making the child happy, ends by making him a nervous, whining little creature. Children prefer a sense of ability to a vacillating system on which they cannot rely. The child knows that "no" means "not now" and for all gives up the idea of teasing and turns to other things without waiting time and nervous energy on the unobtainable.

Never should an order, once given, be reversed unless, of course, new evidence is produced. When the situation has changed, Joe can be told to say, "You promised me a piece after luncheon and I forgot to come for it. OMAHA MAN FALLS TO DEATH IN SALT LAKE

SALT LAKE CITY, Feb. 18.—(P) A man identified as W. P. Danab, 41, Omaha, Neb., was killed in a fall from a high story building in Utah hotel here this afternoon.

Two persons were hurt but not seriously. The man was identified by cards and documents. He was believed to be an electrical equipment salesman for a Chicago firm. He had entered at the hotel yesterday, after having left a Denver hotel the day before.

Such inductive training is definitely for children. It is not a mine discipline and, far from making the child happy, ends by making him a nervous, whining little creature. Children prefer a sense of ability to a vacillating system on which they cannot rely. The child knows that "no" means "not now" and for all gives up the idea of teasing and turns to other things without waiting time and nervous energy on the unobtainable.

FARMERS, BANKERS DISCUSS PROBLEMS

Leaders in Agriculture and Finance Meet in Conference

Dean E. J. Tidings of the Idaho college of agriculture, addressing a farm conference at which Twin Falls bankers were held here yesterday, listed five "fundamentals" of Idaho agriculture. These, he said, are maintenance of credit, soil, quality and quantity production to compete with growers nearer the market, greater effectiveness of distribution, balance between production and demand, and lively and effective farm leadership.

He had "nothing to suggest" as a means of balancing farm production and demand, he said, after outlining methods already proposed or used, and showing farm production was reduced only 6 per cent during the four-year period of 1929-1933 while farm prices declined 53 per cent.

On Speakers' List

Other speakers were Dean Dan W. Otis of Madison, Wisconsin, director of the American Bankers Association; agricultural economist Frederick P. Champ of Logan, Utah, member of the American Bankers Association; director of the United States forest experiment station at Ogden; Harvey S. Hale, Twin Falls county agent; J. N. Dayley of Piler, director of the National Beet Growers' association; J. R. Hunt, director of Twin Falls county bureau of noxious weed control.

One hundred and twenty farmers, four county agents and 12 bankers were guests at the conference and the dinner which preceded it.

Presiding at the conference, Ramsey Walker of Coeur d'Alene, chairman of the Idaho Bankers Association, declared that bankers are actively interested in all farm problems, and in all phases of farm activities there is no clash of interest or viewpoint between banker and farmer.

Stress Cooperation

Need for cooperation was stressed by Mr. Champ, and Dean Otis told of bankers' activities in relation to farm problems, and urged cooperation with county agents, future farmer instructors and various federal agencies.

Director of the Ogden Forest Experiment station used slides and charts to illustrate the importance of conservation of soil on water sheds to prevent floods and filling of irrigation reservoirs by erosion.

Twin Falls county agent urged conservation of farm soils and warned against erosion incident to irrigation.

J. P. Hunt, director of Twin Falls county bureau of noxious weed laws, and J. N. Dayley invited county commissioners to attend a beet growers' meeting proposed on March 2 to assist in furtherance of the beet sugar industry.

A member of the Idaho Bankers Association's agricultural committee, Roy Painter of Twin Falls, had
