New Deal Chiefs and Supporters Of Contenders For Republican Nomination Find Encouragement

(By The Associated Press)
WASHINGTON, April 18—Affirmations of encouragement, both within the new deal and among the leading contenders to oppose President Roosevelt in November, stood out for tonight as consequences of the Illinois and Nebraska primaries. Supporters of Colonel Frank Knox of Illinois, Governor Al M. Landon of Kansas and Senator William E. Borah of Idaho, said the Republican presidential nomination campaign alike that their causes had been helped.

Latest tabulations gave Roosevelt over 450,000 more votes than any other candidate in the Illinois primary, over 27,000 more than counted for the Republican candidates in Nebraska, and over 175,000 more than Borah got earlier in Wisconsin.

A few miles higher up the river the Twin Falls plant was operating at full capacity, releasing a larger amount of water than usual, so that water six inches deep was flowing over the dam at Shoshone falls last evening.

DOOMED MAN'S FATE RESTS WITH BOARD

Session Adjourns Without Action on Green's Plea for Life

BALT LAKE CITY, April 18 (AP)—The state parks board adjourned tonight without action on the application of Delbert Green for commutation of a death sentence to life imprisonment.

During a long executive session, board members talked with Green and heard a heartfelt plea from his father, Mrs. May Alexander of Oden, not to take her son from her.

The board is the last hope Green has of escaping death before a firing squad for the murder of six years ago of his uncle, James Green.

Through long litigation, attorneys were secured for Green. At the time Green was sentenced to die, twice after trials and twice after legal appeals, he was represented by defense lawyers admitted last week they had exhausted every legal recourse.

Should the board refuse to commute the sentence, Green will be taken to an execution site at the death date set for a fifth time. As in the past, he is expected to choose the firing squad as the way out of his predicament.

Green also is accused of slaying his wife and her mother on the same night he killed James Green.

The "write-in" demonstration in the caucus, extending to some 10,000 ballots, pleased them. They expected the delegation of 14 to be a record.

Moral Victory for Borah

Borah backers saw their best news in the majority he won over Leland in the caucus. It was called a "moral victory" by Borah supporters.

Following the caucus, Borah's managers said 27 of the delegates could be counted for him on top of the 21 he already has from Wisconsin.

C. Bachmann, head of the Borah for president committee, announced late today that the senator would not enter the Maryland presidential preference primary.

Borah's aid, led by the senator, said he did not need sufficient money to make the race for the state's 10 delegates, and felt also it would interfere with his Ohio campaign.

Wanna of Bill

The possibility of a Republican rift was illustrated by Representative Fish of New York, a Borah leader, who warned that any attempt to thwart farm sentiment would amount to "political suicide."

He joined the Borah demand for an investigation of campaign funds donated by big interests.

The extent to which Democratic unity would be preserved remained a question. While the president kept having an easy time toward re-nomination, comment on his campaign address to Young Democrats at Baltimore ran across party lines.

The suggestion for limiting working years to between the ages of 25 and 35 raised the possibility of an attempt to revive NRA principles.

LAST OF DILLINGER-TERRORISTS KILLED

Desperate Attempt to Escape Costs Life of Convict

WAUPUN, Wis., April 18 (AP)—Leslie Dillinger, one of the last of John Dillinger's gang of terrorists, was shot off the wall of the Wisconsin state prison today while attempting to escape.

A companion, Alvin Karpis, 19, was shot in the back and may die.

Homer, sentenced to 20 years for participation in the $20,000 robbery of the American Traders and Savings bank of Racine, Wisconsin, in 1933, was wounded in the right leg near the hip.

The five convicts, employed in the prison kitchen shop with others of the more recalcitrant inmates, apparently had made careful plans.

Overpower Guard

Armed with lengths of gas pipe and a hatchet, they overpowered a guard and seized a prison truck.

Homer threatened the driver with his hatchet and ordered a fellow convict, Albert Stephens to take the driver's place. The latter threw the hatchet into the truck and fled.

The three other convicts were working. There the convicts seized a ladder and climbed out of the prison wall.

The convicts hoisted the ladder to the top of the truck and Homer started up. Lelkam followed.

Homer had nearly reached the top when two guards in lookout towers spotted the escape. The bullets knocked both men from the ladder. They fell among their companions, who stood at the bottom waiting for their turn to mount.

The three other convicts surrendered to guards.

boys, Douglas Nelson, Lester Hiltz and Vincent Davis, found Wilkerson's body as they were climbing on the south wall of the canyon about a quarter of a mile above the Twin Falls-Jerome bridge, and about three miles northeast of Twin Falls.

The body was lodged on a rocky point protruding out of the canyon wall between two ledges, and about 10 feet below the canyon rim. There was a sheet drop of 400 feet below the second ledge to the canyon floor.

On the higher ledge, about 35 feet above the rocky point on which the body was caught, a hat identified as belonging to Wilkerson, and his canteen were found. He had been weighed down under a rock.

This circumstance, Coroner J. L. Gosue and Sheriff E. P. Prater said, led the authorities to believe Wilkerson had fallen to his death from the highest ledge with suicidal intent. The skull had been fractured, examination disclosed.

Members of the sheriff's force and a number of volunteer assistants lifted the body from the canyon floor, and the sheriff's force then took it to the home carrying word of the discovery to Mrs. Wilkerson and her two children, a son and a daughter.

A Series of Historical Sketches of Early Days in Southern Idaho

WHEN THEY STARTED TO HANG DAVE SIMPSON

Dave Simpson was a blacksmith. He hailed from Oregon and settled on the Oregon Trail at Rock Creek station in 1876, where he engaged in the blacksmith business. He was a single man about thirty-five years of age, a large, ruddy fellow with a rather pleasing disposition and manner which enabled him to extend his acquaintances to include people all over the country, far and near.

After a time it became rumored by the small cattlemen that Dave Simpson was a home thief and that his blacksmith shop only gave him an excuse for existence. Dave Simpson had it that Simpson was a big leader of a gang of horse thieves who operated throughout Nevada, Idaho, and Montana. If these rumors were true, Dave Simpson must have been, in fact, a peculiar man, for his reputation for honesty, truth, and veracity among the people with whom he transacted business was excellent. But still it was known that Simpson made many night rides. However, he could always explain his absences and, from the fact that he was accused of horse stealing only by the small cattlemen, the two-cattleman at the trader's store and along the stage road thought lightly of the cattlemen's accusation, and were, in fact, disposed to give Dave Simpson a lot of latitude. Under the existing custom and ruling established by the cowmen there was a big distinction between horse stealing and the taking of the other fellow's calf, in a measure legalizing one and making the other punishable by hanging without trial at the hands of the small cattlemen. Large cattlemen were rarely reported to such measures. By a rule of the Cattlemen's Association, calves without mark or brand that were not following their mothers were termed mavericks and could be branded by anyone having a registered brand. It was supposed that the calf should be at least a month old, but custom soon ignored the law. If it so happened that a cowman accidentally stole a calf, he was expected to vent the brand, but if a man accidentally put his saddle on the other fellow's canyon, he was hanged him by the neck until he was dead as a cured maverick.

As time went on, Dave Simpson's habits seemed always the same. Each day he could be heard pounding red-hot irons in his little blacksmith shop. Some nights he was missing from the picket rope or pasture, but daylight the next morning usually found Dave in his shop and his horse and saddle ready for any place. It was a sure thing that no one could "personally" accuse Simpson of horse stealing, for he was sure that he had the drop on him, for Simpson was a good shot and anything but a coward, and his shooter was just as much a part of his dress as his shirt.

Small Herds Increased Easily

The stock business, especially the cattle industry, at that time was in a peculiar position in the Snake River Valley. The "horse" brand, owned by Barley Herald consisted of considerably better than 100,000 head of cattle, which ranged in the Goose Creek Mountains in the summer time and the lowlands of the Snake River Valley in the winter. This made it possible for the small cattlemen to augment their herds very rapidly and still keep within the law.

A story is told on Uncle John Hiley that illustrates conditions at that time pretty well. Uncle John Hiley was the owner of the stage line running from Kelton, Utah, to The Dalles, Oregon. On one of his trips over the road, he and his division agent stopped at Rock Creek crossing, situated about a quarter of a mile below the present Twin Falls sugar factory, to try to buy a few tons of hay for a desert station. The owner, Mr. Butler, refused to sell any hay, telling the agent that he would need to feed his own cattle. The agent said how the cattle business was and how much he had heard of the Rock Crossing ranch two years before and at that time had one of the best and most successful sugar factories in the valley. Management had increased his herd to thirty-five head, whereupon Uncle John Butler told him that he would buy his hay but would very much better like to buy that milk cow.

Mysterious Warning

It was along in the fall of 1878 and the writer had gone to Dry Creek to attend stage stock. This is where the Frank Terrill ranch now is. The ranch was then owned by a man named Harrington, a very good man. He was in the horse business. I boarded and roomed with Mr. Harrington and had been invited to use his deer. I wanted to write. One evening when I was opening the door I found lying before me a sheet of paper with these words boldly written across it: "Be careful, you are watched." I put the top of the desk down and wondered what that meant. Was it in-brought to trial, and I doubt if any of these men would have appeared against him. He escaped during a jail-break, and I understand that some time later he was killed when he resisted an officer who arrested him for a crime committed in Washington Territory.

HUNTING DEER WITH "BUTTERMILK" JOE

No one seems to know how this man became known. Buttermilk Joe, I always thought that he should have been called Sourdough Joe, for he was an artist with the touch of an artist, and besides there was not a nation of buttermilk with a hundred miles of where to find him in the early '70s at a trader's store on the Oregon Trail in southern Idaho.

I was telling him my experiences in the only deer hunt I had ever been in. It was with an Indian, and we were hunting in the lava beds of Snake River. I found him and my commiseration on the eastbound stage. A few hours' drive landed us at Buckhorn where my friend, Buttermilk Joe, was waiting. It was about the middle of October. The weather during the day was like summer, with nights and mornings just little bit crisp. The snow on the mountains lay high up.

More Snow Promised

Joe told me we would have to go up on the snowline for a successful hunt, but as he scrutinized the heavens he said: "We will likely have snow tonight that will drive the deer out of the high hills and give us good hunting and tracking soon lower down."

The balance of the day was spent sharpening our hunting knives, cleaning guns, and preparing for the start next morning to the hunting grounds. Joe had killed a couple of snappers and was cooking them in a Dutch oven. As we waited for the start, Joe told me that he had a stipulation with Bacon he said: "Now, Iowa, those birds will be ready to serve the time I make a mess of sourdough biscuits that will make your mouth water."

And, say, that fellow was an artist with anything pertaining to a Dutch oven. With warm appetites we ate a meal that could not be more interesting. After lighting our pipes, we went hunting. After a while, Joe had the best of me. I knew that I was just a tenderfoot, and I was compelled to confine my efforts to shooting squirrels and prairie chickens in Iowa. Joe was a big game sportsman, relating hundreds of bear hunting which in one case had cost him his leg. After traveling some distance we discovered that we were not on our trail. We had taken the precaution to pick up their tracks at the beginning. There were no deer in sight. Where had they gone?

We were traveling close to the edge of a canyon whose walls were ing our camp outfit, and traveling in the deer must have entered the canyon above, near the point where we were. When we had as we looked down into the canyon we discovered the three deer, one buck and two does, about a hundred feet below us and over an almost perpendicular bank. It was then that the shooting began. Joe was using a muzzle-loading rifle while I carried a Remington carbine, carrying twelve shots in the magazine and one in the barrel. Joe fired one shot and I fired three. To Joe's excitement in reloading he got a ball stuck fast in the barrel and before he could ram it home I had fired thirteen shots, and all three deer were dead or so badly crippled they could not get to their feet.

On the following morning when we looked out our blankets we discovered about eight inches of new snow, and we were soon out of our camp. After traveling quite a distance and finding no tracks and the snow unbroken wherever we looked, Joe was sure that the storm and driven the deer down into the foothills.

While we were debating what to do, the numbers of a six-point buck came into sight over a little ridge close by. We were both excited. The deer discovered us at about the same time and before they had crossed their bodies over the ridge they miraculously disappeared with Joe and I following in the direction in which they had gone. After traveling some distance we discovered that we were not on our trail. We had taken the precaution to pick up their tracks at the beginning. There were no deer in sight. Where had they gone?

Another Tenderfoot

I had seen my Indian hunting companion dress deer in the aspen-forest but this method did not suit me. I remembered how my father dressed hogs in Iowa and I thought that his method could be adapted in dressing a deer. It was still quite early in the morning when I started the chore, but it was just a little before sundown. When Joe arrived with the horses, he was compelled to cut his way through the timber and brush to get down the gulch, and I had only finished cleaning and dressing the three deer. I had them all gambled and hung up in trees but it had taken me all day.

We soon had the deer on the pack-horse, and reached camp some little time after dark. Joe skinned out some of the things we roared on the coast. This, accompanied by sourdough biscuits and coffee, made a meal that any hunter would appreciate. After the pipes were lit, we seated ourselves comfortably for the evening story-telling. I watched the leaping flames of our camp fire as they illuminated the stately pines and aspens. Our three deer were arranged nicely in the foreground. When the echo of running water from a mountain stream reached my ears I was thrilled with delight and my mind was in a receptive mood to listen to the stories of the big game hunt, of which Joe had a complete new repertoire. It was the end of a perfect day, and I had killed my first deer.

I learned later that it was the first big game that Buttermilk Joe had ever attempted to shoot!

"See the Norge

The average Norge owner looked at more than three makes of refrigerators before selecting Norge.

The same survey that disclosed this fact also proved that the majority of Norge owners found Rollator Refrigeration, in all its essential qualities, better than they expected.

Whatever you expect of an electric refrigerator, expect more of Norge. Expect more time-saving convenience, more money-saving economy, more dependable performance, more years of faithful refrigeration service. The enthusiastic Norge owners who pro-

Washington's Mighty Fleet Trounces California Crews

Track Records Bettered As Colorado Athlete Wins Decathlon

Huskies Break Three Course Records To Score Clean Sweep

Seattle Varsity Shell Streaks To Three-Length Victory, Over Bears In Feature Race Of Regatta

SEATTLE, April 18 (AP)—Riding on the tail of a stiff south-west wind, the University of Washington rowing fleet scored a smashing, triple triumph over the Bears of California here today, breaking the Lake Washington course record in each race.

The mighty Huskies trounced the California varsity by three lengths, the junior-varsity by five and a half and the freshman by five, to repeat their victory of last year.

The way the smooth-stroking Washington-oarsmen-left all three Bear crews in their wake, made them look as though they were rowing straight for Berlin and the Olympic games.

Sixth Clean Sweep

It was the sixth time in the 33 years of the Pacific coast intercollegiate regatta that Washington had scored a clean-sweep in the three races.

The Washington varsity stretched over the grueling three-mile decathlon bench course in 15 minutes 56.4 seconds, compared with the old mark of 16:33.4 hung up by the Huskies in 1934.

Washington won the Junior-varsity three-mile event in 16:14.2, to put a big slice off the former mark of 17:46 established by California in 1932. The Bears trailed along in 17:35.3.

Fresh Break Record

In the two-mile skitumish, the Husky frosh cut through the early choppy water in 13:11.4. California's time was announced as 13:31.4. The old record made by the Huskies in 1934 was 13:11.4.

Competition with the records established years ago over the Leach to Madrona course and the Leach to the Point course, the powerful crews were sailing today. The old varsity time was 15:58. In 1932, the junior-varsity 16:30.2 and the freshman 20:44.4 in 1935. All were established by Washington.

Marshall Field's Horse Triumphs

'Tingtagel' Scores Easy Victory Over 'Hollywood' At Jamaica Track

NEW YORK, April 18 (AP)—Marshall Field's hopes of winning the Kentucky derby soared today when 'Tingtagel' came through with an easy victory over three other local colts, including 'Hollywood' in the highly regarded Hollywood stakes.

Although the race was run over Tingle's favorite distance, the victory indicated the leading two-year-old money winner of 1935 might yet be a serious factor in the one mile, quarter mile, test at Churchill Downs, May 2.

At the finish, 'Tingtagel' had a length and a half margin over 'Hollywood', second choice to 'Tingtagel' in the derby future book, was another four lengths back, a third horse in this three-year-old debut, Mrs. Dodge Blaine's 'Clock' was fourth and Paul Junior, the only non-eligible in the field, brought up the rear.

Two Veterans May Fill Gap In Hurting Staff; Infielders Plentiful

WENDELL, April 18—An intensive practice session is scheduled Sunday for the newly organized Wendell baseball team, which, according to backers, is rated as the fastest turned out here in many years.

According to Norval Rutherford, manager, the whole trouble lies in the hazing department, but a pair of performers of former years, Bruno Kraft and Bill Von Weller, have been working the kinks out of their arms and are scheduled to fill the gap. Behind the plate will be Rutherford and the veteran, Don Heilmann.

A wealth of infield material has reported with Wendell. Barret, Bob Harrell, Marvin Prince, Ralph Van Weller, Ben Goekner, Merrill Summers and Orant Zollinger heading the list. In the outfield the candidates are Blair Smith, Bill Von Weller, Zip Weinberg, Doc Buey, Don Requa and Ole Prince.

PINEBURST, N. C., April 18 (AP)—Donald Budge and Gene Mako, youthful California combination, defeated Wilmer Allison and John Van Ryn, national champions for the north and south tennis title today in a match which carried added significance because of its possible effect on selection of the doubles team for the Davis cup matches with Australia.

Bitterly fought from the opening set, which the veterans won 6-0, the match saw Budge and Allison each carrying the burden for his side, though only supported by Mako and Van Ryn. Allison appeared somewhat tired while Budge was near his peak and was hitting beautifully as he and Mako captured the second, third and fourth sets by scores of 6-2, 6-3, 6-3.
