New Deal's Chief Hailed At End Of Party's Conclave

Giant Outdoor Mass Meeting Hears Roosevelt Accept Renomination With Declaration Of War on 'Tyranny'

Fights For 'Survival of Democracy'

(By The Associated Press) PHILADELPHIA, June 27.—President Franklin D. Roosevelt accepted renomination tonight with a declaration of war against "economic tyranny."

His words, perhaps sounding a keynote in his 1936 campaign, attacked a 24-hour period in American political history.

Garner Accepts

John P. Garner, speaking before the mass meeting, accepted his own renomination as vice president. Only this afternoon was Garner renominated by acclamation at the closing session of the Democratic national convention; as had been Roosevelt in the early morning hours, never before in American history.

Mr. Roosevelt's acceptance speech was carried not only to those thousands immediately before him, but also to more than 5,000 rallies staged by the party from coast to coast, changing a campaign slogan.

Strikes At 'Tyranny'

As had been expected, the president accepted "heartily" the "brave and clear platform" adopted by the party last night, pledging anew his allegiance to Franklin D. Roosevelt and sounding a clarion call in support of the New Deal.

Speaking of the economic "tyranny" which has become a modern civilization was attained, he said:

"The hours men and women work, the conditions of their labor—these had passed beyond the control of the people and were imposed by a new industrial dictatorship. The savings of the average family, the income of the small business man, the investments set aside for old age—other people's money—these were the tools which the economic royalty used to die itself in."

Refers To Constitution

And in giving his answer, the president made his own only reference to the Constitution. In the platform which he "accepted" tonight, he called for a declaration for amendment of that document if necessary to attain the aims of the New Deal.

"The economic royalty is complaining," he said, "that we seek to overthrow the Constitution. They really complain of it that we seek to take away their power. Our allegiance to American institutions is not lessened by a word of this kind of power."

"In vain they seek to hide behind the flag and the Constitution stand for now, but the flag and the Constitution stand for democracy, not tyranny; not subjection, and against a dictatorship by a few men over the majority of the people."

Robinson Notifies

The president was notified of his renomination by Senator Robinson of Arkansas, permanent chairman of the Democratic convention, who hoped new praise upon the new deal chief, predicted "overwhelming victory in November," and Garner, vice president.

Garner, in a brief acceptance speech, declared that "I am a soldier and my duty is to follow where the president leads."

Gavrilo Prnzip Started World War 22 Years Ago

(By The Associated Press) Twenty-two years ago today a man named Gavrilo Prnzip in Sarajevo, Bosnia, shot and killed the Austrian Archduke Francis Ferdinand, assassinated on June 28, 1914, by a patriotic schoolboy in Sarajevo, capital of Bosnia, then a part of the old Austro-Hungarian empire.

For decades today remember the name of the mad assassin. He was Oswald Elzard, who broke through the defenses of the archduke's automobile and fired quickly, killing Francis Ferdinand and his wife.

Although millions of men marched to fight the war, Prnzip lived longer than most of them. He was not executed, but died in prison.

Roosevelt Lashes Out At 'Economic Royalty' (Continued From Page One)

today, my friends, we have won against the most dangerous of all enemies we have ever known. But I cannot, with candor tell you that all is well with the world.

Liberty requires opportunity to make a living as a laborer according to the standard of the time, a living which gives men only one chance to live but sometimes two.

Against economic tyranny such as this, the citizen could only appeal to the government for relief.

Since that struggle, however, since that time when the forces in our land which re-ordered the lives of our people, the age of machinery, of radio, of the telephone and the radio; mass production, mass distribution—all of these combined with the power of the machine and with it a new power for those who would remain free.

There was no place among this royalty for my thousands of the common men and merchants who sought to make a living in the American system of initiative and profit. They were no more free than the worker and the farmer.

But the resolve never within our hearts to let this system of economic tyranny stand.

There is a mysterious cycle in human events. To some generations there is a burden to be borne.

But the resolve never within our hearts to let this system of economic tyranny stand.

It is not an accident that the early days of the New England town meetings have the affairs of government been so widely discussed and so freely debated.

RURAL LONGING By Harvey Blackthaupt

I find no consolation through these nights
Of roaring traffic and of city lights,
I'm sick of night clubs and the flow of wine
Through endless evenings that I Above this sham my weary thoughts shall lift.
To valleys green where locust blossoms drift.

Out there where streamlets beckon
as they run
Through fields of grain that glisten
in the sun
My longing spirit carries me afar
Where sudden dawn-flame burns
the morning star:
There where the breeze whispers to the oak
My restless thoughts shall leave this earthly nook.

So I shall batten down these city bars
And hold a rendezvous with fretting days
Out there where snow-clad mountains
cool the breeze
And flaming sunsets light the shadowed trees:
Where solitude is luring I must go.
For it is summertime in Idaho.
Burd, June 22.

GUNPLAY VICTIMS LEAVE HOSPITAL

Women Discharged and Detention Taken to Oklahoma State Prison

BURLEY, June 27 — Mrs. Nina Moore and Miss Opal Runnels, victims of a shooting affray in a hotel here about a month ago, are sufficiently recovered from gunshot wounds to be discharged from the Fremstad hospital. Bullets from a .45-caliber revolver penetrated the abdomen of Mrs. Moore necessitating an operation when surgeons, Drs. Joseph Fremstad and Ben Shultz found the bullets inflicted wounds in the intestines. Shot through the neck and lungs, Miss Runnels has made slower recovery and while threatened with pneumonia her condition took a turn for the better. She will go to her home in Collinsville, Oklahoma, in about a week and at the same time Mrs. Moore will leave the hospital for her home here.

Taken To Oklahoma
Grover Tillingsworth, alias Richard Dodson, who it was alleged did the shooting and turned the gun on himself, a bullet passing through the frontal part of his head and permanently disabling him, left this week in the custody of guards for the Oklahoma state prison at McAlester, Oklahoma, from which he escaped four months before completing a five year sentence for theft of an automobile.

Behind the Tillingsworth car was Chester Iron, who was arrested at Tucson, Arizona, for armed robbery, but released to Oklahoma officers on a kidnapping charge. Handcuffed with his feet secured by steel cuffs to the car floor, he will return to Oklahoma to face the death penalty recently deemed by the Oklahoma state legislature to be the punishment for kidnapers in that state.

Miss Leaves
Mrs. Ruth Irons, sister of Grover Tillingsworth, returned to her home in Missouri. Before leaving, Mrs. Irons stated that every effort was made to secure her brother's release and both Mrs. Moore and Miss Runnels signed statements refusing to prosecute Tillingsworth, declaring the shooting to be accidental when Tillingsworth and Miss Runnels scuffled over the gun which he threatened to kill her.

Local officers agreed to the man's release, on condition that either of the women died as a result of the bullets fired by Tillingsworth that he be returned here to stand trial on a murder charge.

OUR HOME TOWN

What a wonderful brave thing they did—those far-seeing forerunners who declared themselves a nation on this date. What courage it gave their independence in the face of what must have seemed insurmountable obstacles—the might of England, the divided loyalty of their own people, the conflicting interests of the widely scattered colonies, the vast unknown continent at their backs.

But they dared and acted! And while we may suffer temporary set-backs in our progress, let us take a moment to realize that—in the span of ONLY TWO fairly long lifetimes, that little group of colonies has grown into the nation which, today—has as much purchasing power as ALL of Europe, which harvests 40% of the world's foodstuffs, with less than 7% of its acreage, which has 20% of the world's railroads, half its electrical energy and 40% of its wealth.

Rain Clouds Lift

Some of those who cheered loudly were still soaked by a rain that fell before sundown. But as the new deal chieftains arrived, a thin mist came through the clouds.

Senator Barker of Kentucky, the convention keynote, who was mentioned by Garner, called for Europe this afternoon. His name was taken by Senator Pat Harrison of Mississippi. He cut Barker's speech to a few words.

Texas Lead

Led by a band of shrill-tying Texans, colorful in their tall white sombrero, the convention nevertheless rallied in a 20 minute session of shouting, marching and banner waving when Garner's name was placed in nomination. Appropriately by unanimous consent the responding speeches were cut to a shadow of yesterday's.

On the motion to forego a roll call vote and rename Garner by acclamation, a single dissenting voice was sounded.

William B. Rubin, of Milwaukee, chairman of the Wisconsin delegation, boomed out the single "un" Senator Robinson heard the vote he ignored it. The nomination of the vice president, he announced, was "unanimous."

Five-Day Sessions End

Garner remained away from the convention that acclaimed him. Sitting in his room at a downtown hotel, the Texan listened to the proceedings over the radio.

Tonight's show ended a five-day convention dominated as has been in no other in recent years by a single man—Roosevelt. Only once in the nine long sessions that ended with

A Series of Historical Sketches of Early Days in Southern Idaho

VIGILANTE VS. MOB LAW

We often hear the vigilantes of the early west compared with the mob law of some of our southern states and sometimes placed in the same category.

This, in the writer's opinion, is wholly wrong. Mob law is to be distinguished from vigilante law in that there are overt acts of shock to be ascribed that the people become greatly excited, and under the influence and spur of this excitement take the law out of its regular course and deal hastily punishment to the accused, without trial and often to the regret of the entire community.

The early vigilantes were the outgrowth of a demand for justice against organized crime when and where law enforcement did not exist. The miners of the different mining camps held the balance of power and were engaged in their private affairs that the power that was theirs was wrested from them. They were unorganized, but realized that some form of government was necessary, and in the larger camps they elected sheriffs who were known as military sheriffs. In some cases, notably that of Henry Plummer, the miners' sheriff used his office on the interior of the organized body of criminals which has far parallels in the annals of crime. These men, when not employed in the pursuit of robbery, followed the pursuit of gambling, where invariably the gambler won and the sucker lost.

It was impossible for men who had accumulated wealth by hard labor from their claims to get out of the country with their lives, and they were with their families. The rough, unsettled country through which they had to travel was full of robbers. The organized murderers easier, and they invariably committed the robberies with a feeling that "dead men tell no tales." The robber followed the order mysteriously disappeared, and others were warned to hold their tongue.

Conditions reached a point where it was necessary to either make a desperate attempt to clear the country of crime or deliver it bodily to the hands of the law. It was necessary to speak of this even to the miner on the adjoining claim. An organization would have to be organized, if at all, in complete secrecy, or the organizers were doomed. At first the men were fearless. They talked together with their most intimate friends. The movement was carried along with great secrecy and care until it was evident that a majority of the miners, even in those rough camps, were in favor of law and order.

The existence of one of the vigilantes became known to the criminal gang, who definitely made threats against its members until the gang was arrested, tried before a miners' court, convicted, and hanged with dispatch. Then the outlaw realized that the power that had created them would destroy them and terror attacked them. They found, in attempting to escape, that the vigilantes were men that had to be traveled and had been to their advantage in their murderous exploits. They were captured and either executed on the spot or taken back for miners' trial, as the case might merit. This was cleared up. The vigilante crime became unknown; miners could travel unmolested; miners were allowed to travel their claims down and back to their homes in the morning; they found them unharmed. So perfectly had the work been done that when miners left their gold dust or return on the outside of the cabin door.

The effect of this crusade against crime was felt for years and no other criminal organization existed until the building of the Oregon Short Line Railroad in the early '30's. It was known that the building of this railroad through Idaho was the fastest railroad building in the United States. The Denver and Rio Grande Railroad was the only one that employed a great number of men who flocked to the C. & N. railroad camps. Among them were many "burning gamblers" and men of bad repute.

Railroad Brings Back Crime
The nature of the desert country through which the O. & N. passed made the construction camps a law unto themselves. The lawless element took the law into their own hands and road workers who visited the camps for recreation were relieved of money by being drugged or kidnapped. This condition reached its highest point at the crossing of Snake River at the town of Fair. On account of the sparseness of Snake River at this point and the heavy rock work, considerable camp had sprung into existence. Collins and Stephens, the main contractors, who furnished supplies to the camps, had an immense stock of goods at the Boise sometimes pretty tough, no overt act was committed that justified speedy punishment.

STAGE ROBERBERIES OF SIXTY YEARS AGO

It was in the fall of 1878 when the stage from the west arrived at Rock Creek station, one hundred and fifty miles east of Boise City, that the first stage robbery had been robbed at the Ridenbaugh bridge in the suburbs of the village of Boise.

The driver bringing the news was unable to give detailed account further than that the stage had been held up, the treasure-box taken, and the driver freed. The driver of the Black's station before any alarm could be given. (The stage at that time left about seven or eight miles before daylight, and traveled to Black's station some ten or twelve miles distance before breakfast.)

On the following day the driver brought a detailed account of the holdup. It was accomplished by a party of five men, who succeeded in getting the treasure contained in the Wells-Fargo treasure-box, which was reported as being very little. The mail was not molested and no clue could be found that would reveal the identity of the robbers.

There was nothing very unusual about this, for stage robberies were frequent in those days, but they were usually committed in some lonely spot and the scene of the robbery, but in this case the robbers had chosen a place almost at the door of the capital of the territory.

Repeated Robbery

Then, after only a few days, another robbery was reported in almost the same place and by whom it seemed the same men; and at intervals of only a few days the stage was robbed six or seven times at almost the same place and under the same conditions, indicating that the same men had committed all of the robberies.

In no case did the robbers get any reward or distance, and they were not given any clue as to their identity. After a time, a young man, the name of Miller made a faint attempt to give himself up, and was captured. He was willing to give state's evidence, but the authorities did not accept this. Miller implicated a man by the name of Scott, and divulged his hiding place. Scott was soon taken and he and Miller placed in the county jail. For some time there was quite a lot of emity between these two men, as Scott blamed their capture on Miller's efforts to make them escape. In time, however, this wore off and they seemed congenial company in the jail.

Miller was quiet and made few friends during his confinement, while Scott, as he came to be known, was lively and jovial, and among other accomplishments he was a good banjo-player. Arch-criminal that he was, he had a faculty for his entertainment, and pleasant smiles for getting into the good graces of those with whom he came into contact.

Trial Sensational

The trial, which was rather a sensational one, was held with great interest as it was chronicled in the Idaho Statesman and the Silver City Avalanche. The writer says he was for at that time he was working in a trader's store on the Oregon Trail at Rock-Creek station, and boarding at the station. It is reported during the trial that Miller was branded the bad man of the two, and public sentiment and most of the good-ladles of the village of Boise were in favor of and smitten with the good looks and manners of Scott. There were several indictments against these two men, and they were given a sentence of something like forty-five years.

During the time that they were in jail, after their trial and before they had received their sentence, that Scott, with the steel hoop from his banjo converted into a saw, cut the bars of the jail and escaped, taking Miller with him. They went into hiding in the high mountains northeast of Boise, and it was some time before they were recaptured.

This so clarified the air that during the continued construction of the Oregon Short Line, while it was

Newspaper Account

"After a whole night's search, running to noon yesterday, Sheriff Agnew's posse were utterly worn out, and as it was known that Agnew had the jailbirds surrounded, Mr. Morris and Joe Oldham got up a crowd of five others, who proceeded to the scene of action at the head of Ruby Gulch, some eight or ten miles northeast of town. On the road thither the posse met Mr. Harding in a rut, and post haste from the seat of war an order to obtain some necessary food was dispatched.

"After traveling over two hours, the party reached the summit in the midst of a dense chaparral mountain country. There they found Sheriff Agnew and one or two men, tired out by their exertions. After scouting through the underbrush two hours, they adjourned to a good camp to eat a little preparatory to a more thorough search.

"After a few mouthfuls, a sudden shot from the hills back of the cabin caused every mother's son of them to seize his rifle and proceed to the spot indicated by the rifle report; arriving there they found Joe Oldham, who had been doing some scouting on his own hook. Hearing a movement, he had fired and caught Miller. Shortly afterward Scotty was discovered, and seeing that his chance for escape was annihilated, he cried, 'Well, boys, you've got me. I've got to give up.' Marching him off to the wood camp, the crowd mounted their horses and arrived here at six o'clock with their prisoners."

Reputation Changes

On bringing the prisoners back to jail, they were given their sentences and placed in the penitentiary. Scotty again blamed Miller for their capture and swore vengeance against him, threatening to kill him if ever opportunity afforded itself. Scotty's true nature soon asserted itself and he was called "Scotty the Terrible." Shortly after these men were placed in the penitentiary, my sister, Mrs. Trotter, received a letter from Miller, asking if his people in Iowa knew he was in the penitentiary. They dawned on us that Miller, the villain and stage robber, was a neighbor boy of ours in Iowa, and from one of the best families in our county. We all felt very badly about it, and it was decided that I take the stage, which I did the next morning, and go to Boise to visit Miller.

Equipped with a letter from my brother-in-law, C. D. Trotter, who was quite popular on the stage road, I had a very pleasant trip. The warden at the penitentiary was especially nice to me, allowing me to visit with Miller two hours each afternoon during my stay. Each day, Miller would be brought out into a room or hall some twelve or fourteen feet square. There we were seated, with him, and he proposed that we were to be in the room with cobbles shoes and seemed to pay no attention to anything but his own work.

Prisoner El-el-Ease

The beginning of our first meetings was a little strained. Miller, I believe, was more composed than I was. He was a little different; he was laid out fat in all his friends' ships. I noticed that he kept looking into a mirror, and when he saw his face, which was covered with wild eyes in our direction. Miller proposed that he move to the other side of the hall, which we did, and then he told me his story, which under the circumstances seemed pathetic. Miller told me that those were from that cell were in the head of Scotty the Terrible, the man whose influence had brought him (Miller) before a prison door. He said he could stand to spend the rest of his days in prison if he was never compelled to get within the range of vision of Scotty.

Miller's Story

"Then he told me the story: 'Four years ago I came to Boise valley, and I had a little money. I was young, in my twentieth year, stout, and ambitious. I met a man some seven or eight years older than I; we were going together and formed a friendship, and concluded to take up a ranch in the valley. I was not of age, and the father was made in his name. He was a good worker, staying on the ranch and making improvements and keeping things in first class shape while I worked on the ranches or wherever I could get employment, and with my wages bought farm implements, horses, cows, chickens, et cetera. Between the two of us our ranch looked prosperous, and, by the time we were ready to prove up it was mostly fenced. The last dollar of my wages was given to my partner to make final proof, and after the government deed was secured, he coolly informed me that I had no interest in the ranch and that there was no room for me there. I had no friends to appeal to for help or advice. I felt very badly, for I had placed every confidence in this man, and he had turned on me. I had confidence in no one then, and came to Boise, thinking that I would get employment and earn money to get back home. 'The first man to whom I told my story in Boise was this man

Scotty; he pretended to be interested in my story and invited me to the ranch with him, and he proposed that we rob the Overland stage and secure a large amount of money, and that then I could go back home and settle down. Scotty made the plans as to how we would make the haul, and where we would hold-up the stage. (Continued Next Sunday)

Washington Proud of Huskies

THERE'S no question about Washington's pride in the Husky warriors, for even on the Democratic convention floor the Washington delegates proudly displayed a sign bearing the record of the crew's prowess.

Texas delegates, on the other hand, seem to have a penchant for dancing, and the one in the foreground clapped his Centennial hat on a feminine conceit and executed a few steps.—(7) Photo.

"What's The Name, Please?"

Are you a "all-over" when it comes to pronouncing proper names? Do you tackle with confidence the names of the great, the near-great, or the about to be great of our times? names that you encounter in the newspapers, the magazines, technical journals—yes—and even the talking picture billboards? Or do you tetter over them fumblingly, hoping you're right and that your neighbor is wrong?

If you want to be as "right as a right" about proper names, consult "What's The Name, Please?" a neat compilation by Charles Earl Funk, at the Twin Falls public library.

When you listen to Father Coughlin, Detroit radio priest, you are hearing a man who pronounces his name "Coughlin" as in "log." You probably have read "numerous articles" by Hendrick W. Van Loon, noted historian and educator, whose name times with "loan" and not "moon." The last name of the dramatic critic and journalist, Heywood Brown, rimes with cron and punns, as say nothing of June and moon, or spoon and swoon, as they used to sing about in the Gay Nineties.

Do you approach your favorite bar and order a bai-CARR-dee? If so, you probably get it; the steward will understand what you mean. But the makers of Cuban rum say, "please, oh, please, put the stress on the last syllable, 'bah-shah-DEE!'"

Claudette Colbert, motion picture actress, approves the pronunciation for her as the bob office reveals it, but she wants to be called "Cole-beer." If your favorite actor happens to be Franchot Tone, you'll do him the favor of calling him "Fran-shoo" with accent on neither first nor last syllable.

Colorado Athlete Establishes World Decathlon Record

Glenn Morris Heads 1936 Olympic Team With 7,880 Points

Robert Clark of San Francisco Club and Jack Parker of Sacramento Junior College Complete Squad

MILWAUKEE, June 27 (AP)—Glenn Morris, the 24-year-old Denver automobile salesman who competed in his first decathlon last April, broke the world record for the event today in qualifying for the United States Olympic team.

The six-foot native of Simla, Colo., amassed 7,880 points in the ten difficult track and field events, surpassing the mark of 7,824.5 points of Hans E. Glerow of Germany in 1934.

Morris' record total was achieved by his taking first among the field of 15 contestants in the discus, the shot put, tying for first in the high jump, 100 meters, the 400 meters and the 150 meters hurdles, and ranking second in the javelin, third in the 1,500 meters, fifth in the broad jump and a tie for eighth in the pole vault.

Throng Expected At Softball Tilt

The two others who made the United States decathlon team were Robert Clark of San Francisco and Jack Parker of Sacramento Junior College. Clark's point total was 7,568 and Parker's was 7,290.

Kenneth Carpenter of the University of Southern California and Alvin Gault of the University of Michigan are also expected to compete.

Largest crowd of the season is expected to assemble at Lincoln Field in Twin Falls at 2 o'clock today for a doubleheader softball tilt that will feature a clash between undefeated leaders of Twin Falls and Idaho Falls clubs.

The powerful 20-30 club team from Idaho Falls will mix with the Twin Falls club in the second game, scheduled to start at three o'clock this afternoon, to be preceded with a clash at 1:30 between Brunauwick and Ford-Vico teams of Twin Falls softball league's National division.

'Also Ran' Of 1935 Heads Parade Of Distance Men

Coach Billy Hayes' Pupil Burns Up Cinder Path

By CHARLES GRUNDICH
 NEW YORK, June 27 (AP)—A man now can feel quite smug about his 3,000- and 10,000-meter races at the Olympic games in Berlin, for another "Also Ran" has been added to a crisp over the longer stretches.

Donald R. Lash, who was no better than an also-ran in the Princeton invitation 2-mile race, competing fourth, behind Ray Sears, Joe McCluskey and Harold Manning—and a bad runner at the right hand of the head of the long-distance parade now.

This pupil of Indiana University's Coach Billy Hayes, who produced the 1935 "Also Ran" at the 400-meter hurdles and was passed by Benke of Washington State. The Cougar was the only runner to make the final in the 400-meter hurdles, Benke was timed in 52.2 seconds, only 2 of a second above the Olympic record of B. Y. U., with a time of 50.6 seconds.

High Canon of B. Y. U., with a time of 100 feet, 8.2 inches, took third in the discus.

John Johnson of Idaho university, with a throw of 193 feet, 34 inches, was fifth in the javelin, failing to qualify.

Moody-Chandler Team Triumphs

Unexpectingly Strong Opposition Gives Helen and Partner a Score

BERKELEY, Calif., June 27 (AP)—Featured by unexpectingly strong opposition which gave Helen Willis and her partner a score in mixed doubles, California's "home guard" tennis players emerged as the final victors in the state tournament here today.

One of the matches most counted on—that of Mrs. Moody and Edward (Bud) Chandler, Berkeley, in the mixed doubles, was in the doubtful column for a time when Jacques Virgil, 18, and Joe Hunt, 20, of Los Angeles stroked their way to a 2-1 lead.

Mrs. Moody double-faulted, drove into the net, missed the ball line and lost two serves, while Hunt and his partner played inspired tennis.

NEW DECATHLON CHAMPION

Glenn Morris shown in the act of putting the shot, became the 1936 decathlon titleholder yesterday when he amassed a total of 7,880 points, a new world's record. The Colorado sensation established his mark in qualifying for the United States Olympic team at Milwaukee military stadium, Milwaukee. The shot put was one of the events in which Morris annexed first-place honors. The two others who made the American decathlon team were Robert Clark of San Francisco and Jack Parker of Sacramento. Open Golf Title Of Britain Goes To Alf Padgham

Gene Sarazen Finishes Play With Total of 291 and Tie for Fifth Place; Scottish Champ Second

By GAYLE TALBOT
 (Associated Press Sports Writer)
 HOYLAK, England, June 27 (AP)—Alf Padgham, who broke into the professional's shop shortly after daylight to get his golf clubs, burgled the British open championship right under the eyes of Henry Cotton, Gene Sarazen and an assorted body of golfing stars from two continents today.

Daily resorting to window smashing when the Hoylake golf shop key was lost, Padgham calmly separated himself a pair of 7's and then withdrew to the clubhouse veranda and watched the others vainly try to equal his total of 287.

Gallery Ecstasied
 Sarazen, making one of his famous last-ditch hits, blazed around this morning's round in 70, and went out in 35, one under par, this afternoon. He had a huge, unwieldy gallery mad with excitement as he turned home needing a 34 to tie, but he was four under par for that nine, and hole by hole he dropped strokes to Hoylake's vast distance. He finished the nine in 34 for a 72, a total of 291, and a tie for fifth place.

Cotton, requiring only a 33 on that last nine to catch Padgham, also found the strain too great and finished with a 74 for 389 and a tie with Marcel Emilienque of France for third place.

The honor of pushing the new champion hardest went to Jim Adams, the Scottish open champion, who wound up only one stroke behind.

Makes Strong Bid
 His nervousness on the greens cost him the title. He three-putted the second- and the fifth- and was out.

Little Georgian Beats McGrath; Australian Star

WIMBLEDON, Eng., June 27 (AP)—Bryan (Bitsy) Grant, the Australian, defeated Vivian McGrath of Australia to capture the 6-3, 6-4, 6-0 in the fourth round of the all-England tennis championship today.

Grant treated a capacity gallery of 20,000 to one of the greatest displays of court-covering ever seen at Wimbledon's historic center court. McGrath is one of the foremost placement artists in the game, but he couldn't keep the ball out of Grant's range.

Mrs. Perry's victory tucked under his belt and an earlier triumph over Helen Hanzel, young German Davis cup star, Grant found himself in the quarter-final round where he will meet Fred Perry, twice champion of the All-England tennis championship. Three others, including Bobbi Locke, an English amateur, finished in the top eight at 294. Reginald Whitcomb threatened this morning when he shot a 71, but he took a 74 this afternoon for his 294. Arthur Lacey, the other Briton in the top eight, shot a 72 today.
