A Series of Historical Sketches of Early Days in Southern Idaho

WHEN STAGE ROBBERS WERE GALLANT

The sun peeks over the eastern horizon, illuminating that monotonous desert that lies just north of the Great Salt Lake, and extends for miles, broken only by that streak of recently built Central Pacific Railway (this track in the early years crossed in the middle of this barren desert and on the line of the railroad there appears what seems a mere speck, but is in reality the town of Kelton, the shipping point for Idaho, where all mails, express, passengers and freight from eastern and California points were transferred to horse-drawn vehicles.

On this morning an observer could have noticed a stagecoach, drawn by six horses, stop in front of Wells-Fargo and Company and the office of the Idaho High Stage Coach line, where several passengers were taken aboard, and the agent, after giving the way-pocket to the driver, placed the messenger in the front seat. Then a messenger, armed with a sawed-off shotgun and two pistols, came from the driver's side and took his seat alongside the driver, who, with a crack of his whip, started to make his way to the relay station, the first fifty mile stage of that nearly six hundred miles of travel from Kelton, Utah, to The Dalles, Oregon, the main line of the Wells-Fargo and Company, where the red man in the majority and the highwayman decided the law.

Bill Winters, Aboard

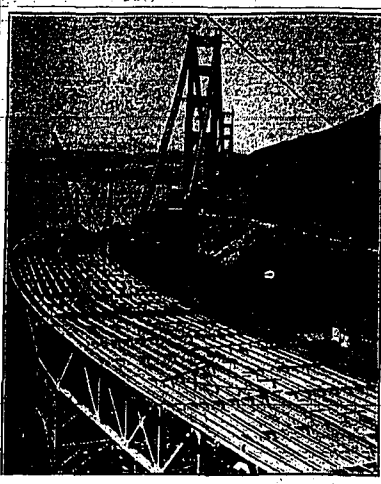

Two days later, when they were making their way from the Overland Hotel at the Capital of the Territory, the bystanders commented as they whispered to each other, "I see Bill Winters aboard that fellow doesn't carry that sawed-off shotgun over his head, just a pair of pistols, if it. They have a lady passenger. If some road agent should attempt to hold up this stage, there would be no trouble about that night give that woman an awful scare. Bill Winters was never robbed, and since he is employed by Wells-Fargo, his qualifications as a shooter. Of course a lot of boys that belong to the Wells-Fargo stage line are as quick on the trigger, just as brave and probably care less for their lives than Winters, but when they know that Winters is on stage, they usually lay off the job. Of course if they once got started, that would be another matter."

When the stage, with the human freight and treasure guarded by Bill Winters, was about to be driving through the Blue Mountains, along about daylight approached a point where the road was cut around a sharp curve, and the stage was bank on the side of the road, the team came abruptly to a standstill.

Systematic Robbery

Instantly a man came from hiding on the driver's side, and with pistol pointed toward the driver, ordered him to get down around his brakes and get down. At the same instant the cold lead of a rifle struck the cheek of Bill Winters, and, as he looked along his barrel, he saw it was in the hands of a man lying on the bank above that brought him to level with Winters' head. This man good-naturedly told Winters to get down to keep his head away from that sawed-off shotgun, and added that in order to avoid serious trouble he should unbuckle his six-shooter belt and get down on the ground by the time they had begun to comply. The third highwayman had left the horse and was setting the passengers to the ground. When all were thus up, one of the highwaymen secured the guns from the messenger and threw out the treasure box, and began research of the passengers for valuables, meaning that they were too professional to pass the driver and messenger, but ordering the passengers to get their pocketbooks and jewelry in readiness, and had each man drop them into the hat that was passed by the highwayman. The money was taken care of by one of the men passengers, and was compelled to humiliate him by taking the money back and putting it in his body. When the collector of valuables reached the lady, he hesitated but she had carried out her part of the program as ordered, and without the bat of an eye handed over the little satchel that contained her pocketbook, jewelry and even her hairpins; she really seemed to enjoy the experience. Two of the highwaymen took care of the collection, taking the money and valuables from the pocketbooks and earth, and I want you to witness our wedding ceremony tonight."

JACK DAVIS, ALIAS DIAMOND-FIELD JACK

In the spring of 1924 a young man of pleasant looks and manners rode into the Snake river valley. His rig and dress showed that he was a cowboy and about twenty-three or twenty-four years of age. He later related a story to Judge C. O. Blockacker concerning what was probably his first attempt to get employment.

"In telling this story Davis said: 'I crossed the river at Starr's Ferry and rode to the cattle ranch of Henry Schodde, who was running cattle on the north side of Snake river. I met Mr. Schodde and asked if he had work for another cowboy. Mr. Schodde said, 'What do you know about cattle?' I told him I knew all about cattle and was an experienced cowboy. Mr. Schodde asked if I had my own rig and bedding and when I told him that I had, he said that I could go to work in the morning. I thanked him and had started to put up my horses and had arranged for a place to spread my blankets, when Mr. Schodde called to me, asking what my name was and where I was from. I thought it would be impossible for them to keep the sheep off the range, they tried to establish certain allotted ground where sheep might be grazed, and finally a decline was established in the Shoshone Basin, east of the region between Deep Creek and Goose Creek. For some reason, Diamond-Field Jack rode this part of the range. The sheepman claimed that he was employed because of his gun qualifications. At any rate he took occasion to notify sheepmen who came into the vicinity that it would be well to keep off. He acknowledged that while he was in company with one Jack Gillison, a cowboy, they shot up the Dunn Brothers sheep camp, where, however, no one was injured, and Diamond-Field took the honors of doing all the shooting himself. A few days later Diamond-Field called at the Dunn camp and found Oliver Dunn alone. After a friendly greeting Diamond-Field asked Dunn what was the matter with his finger, which he had tied up. Dunn told him that sometime before he had cut it deeply with a barbed wire and that it was giving him considerable trouble, but that he could not leave his sheep to have it attended to, whereupon Diamond-Field examined the finger and found that poisoned flesh was present. For several days he made regular visits and on leaving each day warned Dunn not to come any nearer Shoshone Basin with his sheep, stating that if he did he would be made an example of, but each day he redressed the wound, having brought with him clean cloths and medicine.

Bluff Doesn't Work

About this time William Tolman, sheepman from Oakley, convinced

Idea of John into the Shoshone Basin and securing Diamond-Field

The idea of John into the Shoshone Basin and securing Diamond-Field was that of Tolman's intention he expressed himself as being pleased to meet him and to see him. Tolman was a large, resolute fellow and by no means a coward. He rode into Diamond-Field's camp one day and told him that he had in their argument Jack got the drop and shot Tolman. The wound was not fatal and when Tolman saw that Diamond-Field could not be bluffed and intended to kill him, he pleaded for his life and gained the sympathy of the other men. Some sheepmen who were headed, with their sheep, into the restricted district met the parties coming out with Tolman as a stretcher. This they headed their sheep north and left a streak of dust as they hurriedly drove them away. Everything was quiet in the restricted district until some time later, when two young men, Cummings and Wilson, who were heading sheep, drove them in and established a sheep camp, about six and one-half miles southeast of where the town of Rogers had been located. This was the present town of Twin Falls, and some thousand feet west of the Snake river, where there were many can plainly be seen a loose rock monument, intended to show the location of their wagon camp.

Shepherds Found Dead

On the morning of February 4, 1926, a party passing near this camp observed the two men apparently at breakfast. They were living in a covered wagon equipped with beds and cooking outfit. Two dogs were tied to the wheels of the wagon. Twelve days after, on February 18, 1926, Cummings and Wilson were found dead in their wagon, both having been shot. The dogs, which were still tied to the wagon wheels, were poor candidates for a meal. The bodies of Wilson and Cummings were divided into many brands in the vicinity. Some uncooked bread was in the stove oven.

The condition of the bodies of the men showed that they had been dead ten days to two weeks. The body of Wilson was covered with an overcoat, that of Cummings was uncovered—blood was found on the ground in front of the wagon, on the wagon seat, and in the wagon. Both Wilson and Cummings had been shot with caliber bullets, and the face band of Wilson were powder-burned. Apparently both had been wounded, and Cummings had assisted Wilson into the wagon and to bed and had thrown an overcoat over him. The location of the bodies indicated that the two men had been killed by a third party.

Tragically Aroused People

There was only one firearm in the camp when the bodies were found—a rifle that had been used since it had been cleaned, and Wilson was shot in the back, and one shot had struck his chin and chest, passing through his right lung and striking the heart. Cummings had been shot through the body, the bullet cutting his intestines. The condition of Cummings' body and the nature of the wound tend to show that he had lived from one to twenty-four hours after the shooting. As many as four sailing shells were found on the ground in a direct line ranging from three to twenty feet from the wagon.

This tragedy so aroused the people that great excitement prevailed and the entire affected country was kept in a state of uprising. Rumors reached the cattle country that a party of about twenty men in their cast side would invade the cattle country, with the intention of destroying the entire population. Diamond-Field's camp was suspected of this crime but could not be found. Jack Olsson, the cowboy who was known to have been in the company of Diamond-Field, was arrested, but at his preliminary examination was acquitted for lack of evidence.

Search for Diamond-Field

Every effort was put forward to find Diamond-Field. He was traced through Nevada, where he had told people whom he met that he had been "making money" up in the Arizona territory, where they identified Diamond-Field, who willingly returned to Idaho. He was charged with first degree murder for the killing of John O. Wilson on February 4, 1926. In his preliminary hearing he was bound over to the April term of the district court of Cassia county and placed without bail in the Cassia county jail at Albion.

Diamond-Field entered his prison life with a grace becoming a fearless inmate, making no mention of charge of killing John O. Wilson, not vehemently, but merely pleading not guilty to the charge. He voluntarily related his past exploits with his gun, but expressed no regret. His admission increased the admiration of his friends and the astonishment of his enemies.

Chapter 24 CIGARET CASE The constable closed his book with a snap... Mr. Fanshawe was a comic grime.

Sergeant White was just getting his supper out of the oven when the Inspector arrived with Mr. Durley. All Durley paled visibly at the sight of a blue uniform...

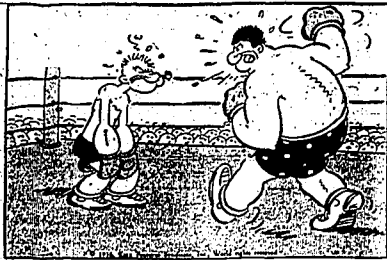

"My name's Alf Durley," he said, "and I reckon you two gentlemen are awfully nice. You've mixed up my name."

When Mr. Durley had explored the various garments to produce the notebook Hyllon's quick eyes had spotted... "What for?" "Nothing in particular—just to see if there was anything to pick up like, and when I turned round and came out of the gateway into the road I bumped into this ere young gentleman."

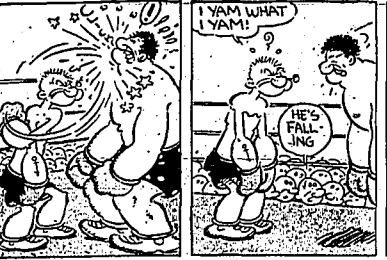

Dale Shipley from R. 1023. "How did you come by that?" he asked at length. Mr. Durley related the case to one of his many pockets and gave a wink.

Registration is Monday, July 13, from 9:30 to 5:00 p. m. in the office of the First Christian church, Sixth and Sherman.

FEDERATION SEEKS TO PREVENT SPLIT

Bitterness Marks Quarrel in Organization of Union Labor

WASHINGTON, July 11 (AP)—Hampered by bitter, personal-feeling American Federation of Labor peace-makers strove today to avert a split that would divide the federation into two warring camps of labor unions.

Secret conferences were the order of the day. The federation's executive council, slated to act Tuesday on a motion to suspend 12 national officers, met today in recess. Those members opposing suspension, however, discussed the issue with those who want to oust the president of the United Mine Workers and his allies for "dual unionism."

Board Accuses

Other labor developments included:

(1) The labor relations board charged the Goodyear tire and Rubber company with complicity in three assaults on United Rubber Workers organizers in Gadsden, Ala.

(2) An agreement was reached to end the seven-day strike at the Wheeling Steel corporation's Portsmouth, Ohio, plant.

(3) In response to a request from Edward P. McCready, assistant secretary of labor, the International Longshoremen's association voted to postpone for two weeks a strike in all ports from Wilmington, N. C., to Panama City, which had been scheduled for Monday. McCready will attempt to arrange a settlement.

(4) Labor department officials reported they had made progress toward settlement of the Remington-Rand strike. The company postponed opening its New York, Ohio, plant, set for Monday. The labor relations board charged the company with wholesale discharges for union activity and other alleged violations of the Wagner labor dispute law.

(5) McCready left for New York. Observers thought he might plan to see Remington-Rand officials, as well as Radio Corporation of America officials about the strike in the RCA plant at Camden, N. J.

The executive council peace-makers found personal antagonism developed through several years of a running scrap between the federation's craft and industrial union camps—the chief obstacle in the way of a settlement.

The romantic interest is supplied by Louise Latham and Owen Davis, Jr., among the numerous suspects in the thrill-packed feature. Twelve other favorites are in support. Nazi Laborites Claim World's Biggest Union

BERLIN, July 11 (AP)—Nazism, enrolling 25 million men and women in Nazi labor front, today claims today the world's biggest "union."

Membership is compulsory for all German workers, employes and employers. And since the organization has an estimated revenue of nearly a billion marks ($400,000,000) annually it is regarded as the national socialist party's most powerful and self-sustaining propaganda apparatus.

This "arbeitsfront" is the sole successor to the former Marxist, nationalistic and party confessional trade unions and employers' associations as well, all of which were wiped out when the Nazis "legally confiscated" their estates by an annihilating process of "de-Nazification" or coordination under pressure.

For some time it was rumored persistently, that tremendous sums from the vast income of the "arbeitsfront" probably were the financial backbone of Reichsbanner Hitler's rearmament program.

That, however, was denied officially.

Since a strike is regarded as high treason and would be treated accordingly, and salary increases now are impossible, according to Robert Ley, stout, little leader of the organization, the labor front has turned its efforts toward "beautifying life" for its members.

Little, Fat Man Tells All About Weight Lifters

By PAUL MCKELSON (Associated Press Sports Writer) NEW YORK, July 11 (AP)—Dietrich Workman is a little, fat, red-faced man. He gurgles his words and he makes you feel like a happy king on a firm throne as he grips your hand and talks of all things—about weight lifters.

Workman, native of Germany, looks like a man who's spent much of his time in a garden guzzling steins of chilled lager but the folks working for the success of America's participation in the 1936 Olympic games unhesitatingly call him the live champion of the lift.

Three Lifts So, we couldn't help but listen to Workman about weight lifters. We learned that the lifters are the "military grade," which call upon the strong man to lift the Anker or his own best lift, his best while standing as erect as a West Point cadet; the "anach," which demands the lifter squats like a bell off the floor and hoist it grandly overhead, and the "clean and jerk," a lift that starts chest high and ends with arms extended overhead.

LAST HOUR SHAPES ELECTION CONTESTS

Republicans Complete County Ticket; New Democratic Races

The Republican county ticket was completed and new contests for Democratic nominations for Twin Falls county offices developed during the few hours immediately preceding the expiration of the filing period at Twin Falls county recorder's office yesterday.

Candidates filed for all nominations on the Republican ticket, except coroner, all but one waiting until the last day to make their filing. Everett M. Sweeley, candidate for prosecuting attorney, had filed several days before. None of the contests for Republican nominations faces a contest at the primary election next August 11.

An interesting contest for nomination on the Democratic ticket which materialized yesterday brought V. K. Barron, Buhl chief of police, into the field to oppose Sheriff E. P. Prater who seeks re-nomination and reelection for a fifth consecutive two-year term.

H. E. Delsa of Twin Falls is the Republican candidate for sheriff. Mrs. Bertha Noel, a former Twin Falls resident, is the Republican candidate for public instruction, entered the lists yesterday to oppose Mrs. Grace G. Gill of Kimberly who previously had filed for the Democratic nomination to succeed Mrs. Maud F. Kleinkopf, who was not a candidate for reelection as county superintendent.

Mrs. Doris Bradley of Thometz filed for the Republican nomination.

MASTERSON WITHDRAWS TO GIVE MIX SUPPORT

J. P. Masterson, former WPA field engineer, yesterday announced here his decision to withdraw as a candidate for the Democratic nomination for lieutenant governor, and to "devote my time and efforts to nominate and elect Lieutenant Governor O. P. Hall for governor of the state of Idaho."

"My association of the past few years with government, state and county officials and closer contact with the less fortunate citizens of Idaho," Masterson said, "has taught me that the spirit of self-sacrifice, helpfulness and courage still abides in the hearts of our citizens. This knowledge has inspired ideas and ideals which led me to seek a larger field of activity. After I announced my intention to run for lieutenant governor, I talked with Lieutenant Governor Mills who had announced his intention to run for governor, and I found that he had practically the same ideas and ideals, that he had a larger vision of what was necessary for the farmer, that his long experience with practical affairs fitted him to cope with the business problems, and that his four years administrative contact with the rise from despondent depression to security and happiness eminently fitted him for the great office of governor."

Appraisers named by the court were: Rex E. Thibault, John J. Leonard and N. O. Johnson, all of Twin Falls.

O. O. Hall of Twin Falls, is the petitioner's attorney.

OUR HOME TOWN

THE TRAINED NURSE
What a woman she was—that young thing, in whose great heart, moved by the horrors of the Crimean war, gave to the world its first conception of nursing.

And how worthily her followers have carried out her ideals of ameliorating human suffering!

There is a good deal of the child in all of us, when we are ill and so we turn instinctively to that Eternal Mother, which is in every Trained Nurse. She does not disappoint us.

She has been surrounded by tendering shifts but she has not become hardened. She knows only too well the fragrance of the life-giving, Death, whom she has set herself to fight unceasingly.

She brings to her work intense understanding, sympathy, untempered by training and judgment.

Her starched cap is her crown. And now she is to design costumes, striving with all their resources to create beautiful garments for womanhood. She has been able to design a costume as supremely becoming as her plain, white uniform.

SANITATION PROGRAM PLANS RECONDITIONING
Reconditioning of the 400 sanitary toilets constructed in this county under federal regulations through the WPA is now underway. Lynn Overmyer, county supervisor, announced.

Third district supervisor of the project is Hester Frost, with headquarters at Boise.
