WHO PAYS THE BILL?

Nobody has ever been able to refute the philosophy that all of the wealth of the earth comes from old Mother Earth. The farmers who work, digging in the soil for raw materials, and the folks who take these raw materials and make them into useful and ornamental things are the "only ones who, really produce wealth." The rest of humanity, including the bankers, merchants, newspaper men, managers, scientists, doctors, teachers—everybody except the producers—live by doing more or less useful work in the world—a work upon which is based the progress of civilization.

There is room for discussion as to whether producers get the full product of their toil. There is none upon their backs, rests the whole burden of the world. As a man-produced portion of what is entitled to recompense. But if he wants his services, the economic trouble in the world are due to the fact that there is demand for a readjustment of the recompense for useful labor. Further trouble lies in the fact that there are too many profits between the products of labor and the economy of those producers who really do more work than that is either essential nor useful, and getting a good living out of it.

There are a thousand and one remedies for this condition, ranging from suggestions for government control and government ownership to schemes to alter the incentive of humanity in its upward striving. The great animating influence today is to grab something. It is the same principle that animated the great central empires of Europe.

Efficiencies of the efficiency in public office, and lack of assurance that the choice of railroad managers and managers of every other corporation by public election or appointment by public authority, are sufficient to dislodge hope that industrial ownership or control will furnish relief. The scheme of pure human nature, so that each of us may live to day to day without laying up treasures on earth, seems slightly utopian. It is the same principle that can be found, seems to lie in a greater spirit of co-operation—a desire to help others just a little bit more. And co-operation, like charity, begins at home. A good example of co-operation with his wife in wiping the dishes. A good example of co-operation with her husband by spending less than he makes. The same principle extended into neighborly affairs may vulgarize the spirit of co-operation, or win the would-be-benefactor a reputation as a snobbish old-honey.

So the world wags on, and everybody who works pays the bill.

ADVERTISING RATES

A newspaper is a business institution, designed to furnish the people with news and advertising with nobility. It is a sort of public justification, in which progressive people have a personal interest, and progressive towns have a town interest. The rates to be charged for advertising are properly based on the number of subscribers, and the paper's ability to pay. The Times has fixed its price at one cent an inch for each one hundred subscribers. Under this schedule, The Times is charging 30 cents an inch, but will advance the rates to 35 cents because the subscription list of the paper shows more than 3000 subscribers. The Times is the only paper in Southern Idaho which bases its advertising rates on its circulation. Other papers followed this equitable method of adjusting rates, so advertising one with 250 subscribers would charge two and a half cents, another paper with 1000 subscribers would charge about six cents. And so on. Advertisers should take into consideration the amount of publicity they are buying when they buy advertising. The Times circulation is guaranteed more than 3500 readers.

BEER AND BACCHUS

An announcement comes from Great Britain that in order to pay the expenses of war laid upon the country, the financiers of the nation will exact a tax on beer and bachelors.

Whether this decision is based upon the proposition that luxuries should bear a heavy proportion of the burden, in an effort to relieve the poor man's labor from excessive taxation, or whether it is just a public defiance for bachelors, is not clear, but it appears evident it is certain that Great Britain will make life miserable for the bachelors because by taxation or by forcing them into matrimony. The result will be watched with interest.

THE CITY ELECTION

The forthcoming city election does not seem to be agitating the souls of the several candidates any more than it is disturbing the quiet tranquil conditions of life in Twin Falls. What's the matter? Have all the old slogans of graft and corruption and dishonesty lost their power? Have all the appeals to prejudice and passion lost their power? Are we to have an election wherein several citizens may measure their candidates for public office without a scowl, or a snarl? We are indeed fallen upon evil days in the going times of peace.

STREET REPAIRS

It's a good thing the lousy train came to Twin Falls. One effect was to get the street department busy filling up the chinks in the paved streets with a lot of loose material. Yet a fast shave and the street fasher will wash the dirt into the gutters and the street department will be kept busy hunting it away again. There is nothing like keeping busy in a busy community.

SYNOPSIS.

CHAPTER I.—"Lorraine E. Barnes, a young woman of twenty, is through New England, where she has been in the same place. What she did there, she doesn't care to tell. She arrives at the station, where she is given a ticket to her destination, which she tells the conductor is "the hollow of her hand." CHAPTER II.—"The lawyer came to see me this morning," said Mrs. Barnes, "and he said it was a 'grave storming,' after he had told him about the accident."

CHAPTER III.—"The storm grew, Barnes fled himself worrying over the monotonous road, what he considers dangerous, regarding a house of mystery."

CHAPTER IV.—"The 'I'

Liquor May Be Shipped Through Dry Territory

WASHINGTON, April 15.—The law, now not prohibiting the transportation through a prohibited territory, which it is against the law of the state to bring into the United States, the supreme court of the United States decided today. The case involved a man who had brought in, from Oregon, Maryland, through Virginia, into North Carolina. It was held that it was legal to transport the liquor through Virginia where it was made, and then ship it to North Carolina.

"It is most mysterious," said Mr. Justice Holmes, "but the man could not have got down there ahead of him, that's sure. Did anybody go up to Green Tracy?"

"I guess they got what was coming to 'em," said another of the men.

"What's that? Why, they was riding in a car, and the police stopped them?"

"They were riding in a car, and the police stopped them?"

"Spanish Falls! Spanish Falls! They wasn't in Spanish Falls, they were in Green Tracy!"

"Spanish Falls! Spanish Falls!"

Gates Half-Soles—Going on All Tires

"What is home without a mother," and likewise what is a tire without a Gates tire. At least that is the way Jim Hendahl, manager of the Twin Falls Vulcanizing Works figures it.

Hendahl's plan is still striving manfully to cope with the demand for Gates half-soles. Although perhaps not exactly keeping up to par, however, making them is a job that is well done.

AMERICAN DEAD WILL SLEEP IN HALLOWED SPOT

GREAT FIELD OF HONOR IN FRANCE WILL BE
BEAUTIFIED

Maintained By United States

Families May Have Bodies
Brought to America if Practicable, Otherwise They will Sleep
Forever in Soil They Buried in France.

PARIS, April 16.—The American
hero dead, who perished in the war,
and whose relatives do not insist upon the return of the bodies to the United States, will be interred in a hallowed spot in France, which will be beautified and kept in order by the United States government, it was announced today by Secretary of War Baker.

Asked whether a permanent army
of occupation would hold the banks of the Rhine, Secretary Baker said that this had not yet been definitely determined, but if the decision is made to keep such an army the American forces would be made up of volunteers.

Present plans of the American war department call for the returning home of 150,000 soldiers from France this month, but there will probably be fewer next month,

owing to the lack of shipping.

Secretary Baker expects to remain in Paris during the month, he is here on a special mission.

Speaking of the final disposition of the American dead, Secretary Baker said many families
had written to him to express the hope that they were willing that their sons,

who had perished in the war,
might remain beneath the soil they had sanctified by their blood. However, he said, while for the return of the bodies will be carried out wherever practicable.

The secretary said he had heard nothing of the reported bounty of $100,000 given on the Archangel
front by Russia.

As to the return of troops and supplies the American official said
that "a considerable amount" of war material is to be sent home in Europe so that it will not have to be transported to America.

We cordially invite you to attend
our Second Annual Victory Loan Meeting this day Saturday April 26. We will have a beautiful display of wall decorations and wood fixtures which will be of interest to all home owners.

Factory representatives will be in attendance to speak on other subjects and will explain the various uses of paints and finishes for all purposes.

Souvenirs and flowers for the ladies.
