FIND NO TRACE OF YOUNG BOYS LOST AT FALLS

River and Falls Dynamited in Hope of Finding Bodies—Search Still Continues

All efforts to find trace of Herbert and Harold Bourdelle, the two boys believed to have gone over Shoshone Falls Sunday evening, have so far proved unavailing, although a constant search has been maintained by their fathers and others.

Somewhere in the cavernous depths back of the great wall of water that drops over the falls the bodies of these two lads are believed to be held. No one saw them start to cross the swift channel between the island and the main bank but no other theory can account for their disappearance than that they accidentally fell into the water and were carried over the falls. No hot or cold traces of clothing has been found to verify the theory but it is considered that the boys' hats would have fallen into the stream and gone over the falls, in which case they would have been recovered also.

Searchers dynamited the falls and the river below last night in an effort to make the water give up the victims, but without results.

Proof of Power of Advertising.

"Advertising is a great art," said one of the greatest of writers of our age. "Let me give you an illustration: Who should be the best-known son of man? The answer is, of course, Bill Hays. Do you need of remember most easily? Why Joseph? Because he advertised. He was a man of many talents, whilst the rest of the family went about in the ordinary humdrum of their lives. So you hear of Joseph and his brethren. Such is the power of advertising!"

—Emerson's "White Plague"

Although Ralph Waldo Emerson just paid the allotted three score years for his health was undermined by tuberculosis, and so a rough sea voyage saved him at one time from either of the deaths. His wife and two of his brothers died from it, and his life was a struggle against it. However, it paid his Salmagundi, gift of genius, and made him America's greatest essayist.
